This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. Examination of foreign societies, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 26.

¶ 1. Sections 7607-7617, 2 Comp. Laws 1897 authorizing the incorporation of a fraternal society composed of a supreme lodge and subordinate lodges, provide for more than one corporation, hence are not in conflict with Const. 1850, art. 15, § 1, prohibiting the creation of corporations by special act. —People v. Wilson, 157 Mich. 659.

¶ 2. The general statute authorizes the amendment of articles of association of a fraternal benefit association under Comp. L. 1897, § 8533.—Great Hive, Ladies of the Maccabees v. Supreme Hive, Ladies of the Maccabees, 129 Mich. 324.

¶ 3. A fraternal benefit society organized pursuant to How. St., §§ 3949-3955, amendatory of Pub. Acts 1869, No. 104, has no power to issue certificates providing for endowments payable at a fixed time.—Calkins v. Bump, 120 Mich. 335.

¶ 4. By virtue of section 10025, 3 Comp. Laws (Act No. 175, Pub. Acts 1907), benefit orders organized under 2 Comp. Laws 1897, chap. 212, may sue and be sued.—Golden Star Lodge No. 1 v. Watterson, 158 Mich. 696.

§ 2. Constitution and by-laws.

Power to make constitution and by-laws, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 12.
Articles of incorporation, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 12.
Amendment of constitution and by-laws, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 22.
Amendments to charter or articles of incorporation binding on members and beneficiaries, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 8.

¶ 4a. The clear provisions of the constitution of the Schiller Bund of the City of Detroit, which is a mutual insurance society are its fundamental law and if provisions of its by-laws conflict therewith the fundamental law must govern.—Roulo v. Schiller Bund, 172 Mich. 557.

§ 3. ——Changes or amendments.

Amendment of articles of association, see ante ¶ 2.
Amendments after insurance contract, see post § 18.
Necessity of amending by-laws to meet statutory changes enlarging classes of beneficiaries, see post ¶ 35.
Assent to change in constitution or by-laws as question for court or jury, see post § 76.
Burden of proof as to amendments, see post § 72.
Power to amend constitution and by-laws, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, §§ 12, 13.

¶ 5. Amendments to the constitution of a society, in order to be valid, must be adopted in substantial accordance with the provisions of the constitution relative thereto and in force at the time.—Dick v. General Assembly Order of the Amaranth, 150 Mich. 215.

§ 4. Ritual and name.

Construction of contract to sell ritual and abstain from use of same, see Contracts ¶ 889.
Pleading in bill to establish title to ritual, see Equity ¶ 313.
Bill of peace to protect rights in ritual, see Equity ¶ 996.
Names of corporations in general, see Corporations, III.
Similarities in corporate names and infringements, see Corporations § 18.
Corporate name in articles of association, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 12.

¶ 6. As against a participating member the New Era Association of Grand Rapids is a fraternal beneficiary society and as such is entitled to the general exemptions provided for in its organic act, Comp. L. 1897, chap. 212, though it has no lodge or ritualistic work; even if Pub. Acts 1901, No. 226, which contains a proviso exempting such association from ritualistic work, is pro tanto invalid as class legislation. The member could not assail it for that.—Monger v. New Era Ass'n, 145 Mich. 683.

¶ 7. While members withdrawing from a fraternal society are not at liberty to associate themselves under a name so like the name of the parent order as to be calculated to deceive ordinary persons proceeding with ordinary care, they may, subject to this limitation, use any derivative of such name that they may see fit to employ.—Supreme Lodge K. of P. v. Improved Order K. of P., 113 Mich. 133.

¶ 8. In a bill by one secret benevolent society originally organized for operation in this state only, against another secret benevolent society of like name organized for operation in all states except Michigan, the only material difference being the number of assessments made by each, to restrain interference with a proposed extension of complainant's business into the territory occupied by defendant, complainant was enjoined from competing with defendant in the field occupied by it, by using substantially the same ritual, secret work, badges, etc., used by defendant, where it appeared that complainant not only permitted but encouraged defendant to make use of its original ritual, secret work, badges, etc., and that defendant expended very large sums of money in establishing its business on the foundation of such ritual, etc.—Great Hive L. O. T. M. of Michigan v. Supreme Hive of L. O. T. M. of the World, 135 Mich. 392.

§ 5. Officers and agents.

Local officers of subordinate lodge as agents in receiving dues and assessments, see post ¶ 78.

Ratification of act of officer in giving notice of assessment, see post ¶ 73.

Authority of officer or agent to waive provisions as to remedies within the society, see post § 65.

Officers and agents of corporations generally, see Corporations, XVII.

Form of remedy, law or equity, against officers for misdoing or default, see also Corporations § 176.

Provisions in articles of association as to names and residences of officers and directors, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 12.

Personal liability of officers and agents, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 19.

Penalties against officers and agents, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 31.

¶ 9. Where the prothonotary or secretary of a fraternal society has broad powers of management and promotion, it is within his apparent authority to make contracts to pay commissions out of the general fund of the society to agents appointed to organize local bodies, and such appointments are ratified when known to, and acquiesced in, by the premier, or head of the society.—Duford v. Parliament of the Prudent Patricians of Pompeii, 152 Mich. 151.

¶ 10. Where the laws of the Ancient Order of Foresters, an unincorporated association, provide that the funds shall be placed in the treasurer's hands, and that no money shall be drawn except by an order of the executive council, signed by certain officials, no provision being made for turning over funds to a successor, an action for the funds will not lie against a retiring treasurer merely because he refuses to pay money in accordance with a resolution, no order being drawn or signed.—Smith v. Pinney, 86 Mich. 484.

¶ 11. Whether the board of control of the Odd Fellows Home acts as agent of the Grand Lodge so as to bind it for materials furnished a contractor, held, under the evidence, to be a question for the jury.—Lake-Ulricksen Co. v. Grand Lodge I. O. O. F., 182 Mich. 653.

Compensation and reimbursement of agents generally, see Agency § 100.

¶ 12. Where there is evidence that an agent of a fraternal society is entitled to commissions on members secured at the end of the year, and on June 30, and where a witness has made a statement as to the number, it is a question for the jury to decide.—Duford v. Parliament of the Prudent Patricians of Pompeii, 152 Mich. 151.

¶ 13. In a suit for commissions for gaining members by a plaintiff appointed as agent to promote a fraternal society, the official report of membership of the society is admissible to show members secured by the plaintiff, despite the fact that such report might include certain honorary members.—Duford v. Parliament of the Prudent Patricians of Pompeii, 152 Mich. 151.

Liability for injury to member during initiation ceremonies, see post § 14.

Certificate of membership, see post § 16.

Rights of suspended member, see post ¶ 23.

Misrepresentations as to age, health, etc., of applicant for insurance, see post § 49.

Effect of statutes as to membership enacted subsequent to organization of the corporation or making of the insurance contract, see post ¶ 64.

Waiver of provision that member be initiated see post ¶ 68.

Burden of proof as to number of members, see post ¶ 252.

Presumptions as to member's good standing, see post § 72.

Qualifications for membership, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 7.
When society may begin to solicit members, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 12.
Examination of applicants for membership, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 12.
Transfer of membership to other society, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 14.
Personal liability of members, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 19.
Reports to members of the condition of the society, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 23.

¶ 14. It is contrary to the general legal rules to allow membership in a corporation to depend on the will or action of an unincorporated outside society.—Allnutt v. Subsidiary High Court of A. O. F., 62 Mich. 110.

¶ 15. A member in good standing of a mutual benefit order will be presumed to have continued such unless the contrary is made to appear.—Petherick v. Order of Amaranth, 114 Mich. 420.

Expulsion for breach of by-law defining membership qualifications, see post § 8.
Forfeiture, suspension or cancellation of benefit or insurance contract, see post, V.
Loss of membership as affecting insurance contract, see post § 51.
Right of withdrawing members to use name of parent order, see ante ¶ 7.
Reinstatement of member, see post § 56.
Expulsion of members from nonbenefit associations, see Associations § 4.

¶ 16. A rule that a member may be disciplined for a libel of another member can only apply where the libel is without just cause. The mere fact of defamation of another member is no ground of discipline, and no one can be called on to meet vague and uncertain charges.—Allnutt v. Subsidiary High Court of A. O. F., 62 Mich. 110.

¶ 17. In the absence of direct provisions to the contrary, power to give an alternative sentence in disciplining a member does not authorize a double one.—Allnutt v. Subsidiary High Court of A. O. F., 62 Mich. 110.

¶ 18. A fine cannot be imposed upon a member of a benevolent corporation, nor can he be suspended for nonpayment of such fine, where there is no provision in the constitution or by-laws defining his offense or providing for the infliction of a pecuniary penalty therefor.—Erd v. Bavarian Nat. Aid & Relief Ass'n, 67 Mich. 233.

¶ 19. Tender of payment of a fine to avoid expulsion from a fraternal beneficiary society is not shown by evidence that the delinquent went to the lodge to pay it and, being refused the password on the ground that he was already expelled, could not get in to make payment to the secretary.—Simek v. Lodge No. 86, Bohemian Slavonian Benevolent Soc., 118 Mich. 81.

¶ 21. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 8258, giving to voluntary benevolent societies power to make rules governing their affairs and to decide as to the qualifications of members, a by-law excluding from membership any member of any society not approved by the Roman Catholic Church is not unreasonable, and a member may be expelled upon refusal to resign from another society disapproved by the pastor of the local church acting under his power of guidance given by such by-law.—Mazurkiewicz v. St. Adelbertus Aid Society, 127 Mich. 145.

¶ 22. A provision in the constitution of a fraternal society that a member may be expelled for the "offense" of not having "paid all of his dues and fines at the monthly meeting" covers the offense of not paying a fine of one dollar specifically imposed by a by-law for not preserving order during a meeting and not obeying the warning of the chairman, where the record shows such disobedience, the imposition of the prescribed fine, the recordation of it in a book for that purpose, a notification of the member to pay it given in writing, and a vote of expulsion at the next meeting for having failed to pay it; and the constitution also commits to by-laws of the subordinate lodges "the fines and reprimands by the president."—Simek v. Lodge No. 86, Bohemian Slavonian Benevolent Soc., 118 Mich. 81.

¶ 23. A suspended member of a fraternal benefit association has no rights or standing in the society until actually reinstated.—Edgerly v. Ladies of Modern Maccabees, 185 Mich. 148.

§ 9. ——Procedure within the lodge or fraternity.

Procedure to vacate order of grand lodge revoking charter of subordinate lodge, see post § 13.
Proceedings to effectuate forfeiture of contract, see post § 55.
Proceedings for benefits or to determine rights thereto, see post § 67.

¶ 24. A member of a benevolent corporation, unless he has waived or forfeited the right, is always entitled to a copy of the charges preferred against him, and to an opportunity to give testimony in his own behalf.—Erd v. Bavarian Nat. Aid & Relief Ass'n, 67 Mich. 233.

¶ 25. When the constitution of an incorporated voluntary society makes "slander against the society" by a member an offense for which he may be fined or expelled, it will be held to intend an offense somewhat analogous to the common-law offense of slander as applicable to indiviuals. In a proceeding to enforce such a provision it cannot be known whether there is any jurisdiction to make the inquiry unless the words charged to be slanderous are set forth; and as corporations are bound to keep records, the proceedings necessary to authorize action against an accused member must appear of record. A written charge upon the records of the society showing an offense within the meaning of the constitutional provision is necessary to sustain the jurisdiction to proceed upon it.—People ex rel. Roehler v. Mechanics' Aid Soc., 22 Mich. 86.

¶ 26. Under a by-law of a voluntary benevolent society providing that its members cannot belong to any society not approved by the Roman Catholic Church, an expulsion is legal where the pastor of the church acting under his power of guidance, given by by-law, requests all members who are also members of a certain other society, to leave a meeting and subsequently those remaining adopt a resolution requiring the expelled members to renounce membership in the other society within three months or stand dismissed and afterwards the dues of the expelled members were refused and they were excluded from the rooms of the society.—Mazurkiewicz v. St. Adelbertus Aid Society, 127 Mich. 145.

§ 10. Property and funds and application thereof.

Power of secretary to pay agents commissions out of general fund, see ante ¶ 9.
Action for funds against retiring treasurer, see ante ¶ 10.
Conflicting rights of grand and local lodges in funds, see post § 14.
Property of corporations, in general, see Corporations, XIII.
Creation, maintenance, and disposition of association funds, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 9.
Provisions in laws of society as to meeting deficiencies in benefit and other funds, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 23.
Crediting fees of initial five hundred members to mortuary or disability fund, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 12.
Duty to keep disability benefit fund separate from other benefit and expense funds, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 23.
Distribution of funds, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 11.
Securities in which funds may be invested, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 10.
Right to use mortuary or disability fund for expenses, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 11.
Transfer of funds between societies, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 14.
Report required to be filed with Commissioner of Insurance, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 23.

¶ 27. Where an aid society organized under Comp. Laws 1897, sections 8258-8263, concerning the incorporation of benevolent societies, deeds certain rights worth $500 in lands to all its members in consideration of one dollar, the word "benevolent" as used in such act permitting a conveyance for benevolent purposes will be construed to mean a benefit conferred on a member in need as distinguished from a charitable purpose, and hence the express consideration cannot be aided by construing the deed to be a conveyance for benevolent purposes, and it is so inadequate as to justify the setting aside of the conveyance on a cross-bill by the society on a suit of the grantee of the members to quiet the title.—German Corporation v. Negaunee German Aid Society, 172 Mich. 650.

¶ 28. In determining whether the object of a deed given to its members by an aid society organized under Comp. Laws 1897, sections 8258-8263, concerning the incorporation of benevolent societies, was a "benevolent" purpose within the charter powers, the court may not stop upon recourse to a dictionary, but must go to the statute and determine from the context whether its meaning is narrowed down to "charitable."—German Corporation v. Negaunee German Aid Society, 172 Mich. 650.

¶ 29. Where members of a mutual benefit society have put money into a fund the purpose of which is found to be illegal, the fund becomes a trust fund in which each member who has contributed is beneficially interested pro rata according to his contribution.—Calkins v. Bump, 120 Mich. 335.

¶ 30. Where a fraternal society provides by its rules that 50 per cent of the dues from the local orders should go into its general fund, in the absence of a state body, it is held that the society has authority to make contracts to pay commissions from this fund to agents appointed to organize local bodies.—Duford v. Parliament of the Prudent Patricians of Pompeii, 152 Mich. 151.

¶ 31. A trustee for holders of certificates in a beneficial society to whom a sum of money has been paid by the society for distribution among the certificate holders cannot be held liable for diverting a trust fund in an action by the receiver, on the theory that such payments were not authorized by the law of the company's organization, where the trustee had no knowledge of the insolvent condition of the society before distributing the fund.—Calkins v. Beekman, 127 Mich. 249.

Winding up assessments upon dissolution, see post § 28.

Dissolution and winding up noninsurance associations, see Associations § 12.

Mode of voluntary dissolution, see Corporations § 248.

Right of receiver of insolvent association to recover sums paid out to insured, see also Corporations § 241.

Remedy to require rendition of assets to receiver of foreign association, see also Foreign Corporations ¶ 78.

Suit in state court on certificate pending foreign receivership of insurer, see Abatement ¶ 51.

Proceedings to dissolve and wind up the association, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, §§ 24, 25.

Merger with other society, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 14.

Applicability of after enacted statutes in respect to membership and beneficiaries, see post ¶ 64.

[Note. The general subject of insurance has been regulated by Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, with a special chapter, IV, devoted to fraternal benefit associations and insurance by them. For its details see that statute.]

Exemption of fraternal associations from general insurance law, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 4.

¶ 32. Fraternal beneficiary societies are under Act No. 119, Pub. Acts 1893, exempt from the provisions of the insurance laws of the state.—Knights of Modern Maccabees v. Commissioner of Insurance, 155 Mich. 693.

¶ 32a. The words "such business," used in Laws 1893, Act No. 119, § 3, entitled "An act to define what shall constitute fraternal beneficiary societies," etc., and which provides that all associations coming within the description as set forth in § 1 of the act, organized under the laws of this or any other state, and now doing business in this state, may continue "such business," provided they comply with the provisions of the act regulating annual reports, etc., mean such business as was legally authorized under the act under which the association was incorporated.—Walker v. Commissioner of Insurance, 103 Mich. 344.

Right of local camp to waive provisions of the insurance contract, see post § 54.

Notice to member of suspension of his lodge, see post § 55.

Suspension of subordinate tent as suspending membership, see post ¶ 187.

Rights of bona fide purchaser of property standing in name of member of local lodge and sold by him, see Notice and Record of Title, I, C.

Lodge system and form of government, defined, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, §§ 2, 3.

Right to hold meetings in state or district of subordinate lodge, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 18.

¶ 33. A local society of a mutual benefit association cannot withdraw from the state society of which it is a member and assume the payment of the benefit certificates issued to its members by the state society where such action impairs the obligation of the contract entered into by the society with its members.—Kern v. Arbeiter Unterstuetzungs Verein, 139 Mich. 233.

¶ 34. A provision in the constitution of a state mutual benefit society that, "This union cannot be dissolved as long as fifteen associations belong to it, and each association which steps out of it * * * gives up all claim, to" its property, when read in connection with a further provision that local societies may be suspended or dropped for failure to pay its pledges, does not authorize a local society to drop out at its pleasure and assume the payment of the certificates issued to its members by the state society.—Kern v. Arbeiter Unterstuetzungs Verein, 139 Mich. 233.

¶ 35. Where a subordinate lodge is given no right of appeal to the grand lodge, and such appeal is given only to a member, it may apply directly to the courts to have an order of the grand lodge revoking its charter vacated without attempting further to exhaust the remedies given to individual members within the lodge.—Golden Star Lodge No. 1 v. Watterson, 158 Mich. 696.

¶ 36. Relator, a local lodge, brought mandamus to compel the respondent, an officer of the grand lodge, to vacate an order revoking relator's charter. The constitution of the grand lodge provided that its grand mistress might revoke the charter of a local lodge for misconduct. One Amy Downing, a member of relator, had been treasurer of the grand lodge and had been convicted by it of embezzlement of its funds. The local lodge acquitted her of the charge, and some one without its authority published its finding. The respondent revoked the charter of relator for this alleged offense. Held, the writ should be granted, since no ground existed for such revocation.—Golden Star Lodge No. 1 v. Watterson, 158 Mich. 696.

Liability of local lodge for dues and assessments not transmitted to home office, see post ¶ 78.

¶ 37. A subordinate lodge which secedes from the head lodge and joins another lodge is entitled to retain receipts for initiation fees and dues which have been raised by voluntary contribution and placed in a general fund to pay sick and funeral benefits, salaries of officers, etc., where the revenue of the head lodge is obtained from other sources, although the constitution governing all the lodges provides that any lodge may be dissolved for bad conduct and any money belonging to such subordinate lodge shall be forfeited to the head lodge and placed in its sick and funeral fund.—Grand Court Michigan Foresters v. Court Germania No. 1, German-American Foresters, 192 Mich. 380.

¶ 38. Where an applicant for membership in a fraternal lodge is injured during initiation ceremonies into a local lodge the grand lodge cannot be held liable therefor where it appears that plaintiff as an applicant for membership agreed to be bound by the laws and rules of the grand lodge, and these rules provide that the local or subordinate lodge and its officers shall be the agent of the applicant and that the grand lodge shall not be liable for any fault or negligence on the part of the local lodge or any of its officers, it being further provided that the local lodge shall decide whether an application must be initiated, shall select the men and paraphernalia for the initiation, there being nothing in the ritual suggesting an intention that the ceremony shall be conducted in such a way as to do physical hurt to the candidate.—Kaminski v. Great Camp Knights of the Modern Maccabees, 146 Mich. 16.

¶ 39. A local benefit society voted to withdraw from the state society and suit was brought by some of its members to restrain its officers from paying out of its funds a death claim under a certificate issued by the state society. No request had been made to the officers of the local society relative to action in the matter, but it was alleged that it was their duty when notified of the death of a member to give notice thereof to the state society, which they had neglected to do but had instead passed a resolution to pay it out of the local funds. Held that no request was necessary before suit might be begun.—Kern v. Arbeiter Unterstuetzungs Verein, 139 Mich. 233.

¶ 39a. The title to the reserve fund retained by the local branches of the Order of the Iron Hall is in the supreme sitting; the twenty per cent of the assessment retained by each local branch differs from the eighty per cent transmitted to the supreme sitting mainly in this, that the possession and supervision of it, subject to the laws of the order, remain with the local branches; and the reserve fund is essentially a part of the benefit fund, although it may be in the nature of a safety fund to insure payment of maturing certificates.—Baldwin v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 101 Mich. 119.

Control over membership of domestic society, see ante § 7.

Injunction to prevent use of same name, ritual, badges, etc., by foreign society, see ante ¶ 8.

Conclusiveness of judicial construction of foreign association's charter, see post ¶ 65.

Effect of failure to pay assessments made by foreign lodge, see post ¶ 160.

Investment of funds of foreign societies, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 10.

Examination of foreign societies by Commissioner of Insurance, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 26.

Revocation of license of foreign society, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 28.

¶ 40. A society organized under a Michigan incorporation act cannot subject itself or its members to the jurisdiction of an authority existing outside of the state and beyond the control of the Michigan laws.—Lamphere v. Grand Lodge of United Workmen, 47 Mich. 429.

¶ 41. A grand lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, incorporated under Comp. L. 1871, chap. 94 (How. St., chap. 118), cannot compel its members to pay assessments made under the orders of a supreme lodge incorporated under the laws of Kentucky and not subject to Michigan courts. Nor can it suspend members from their privileges as such for refusing to pay such an assessment.—Lamphere v. Grand Lodge of United Workmen, 47 Mich. 429.

¶ 42. A fraternal secret order affiliated with an Illinois corporation, and which cultivates social relations among its members, and furnishes aid by voluntary subscription to such members as are sick or disabled, but which requires no annual dues or premiums, is within the exception of How. St., § 3960*e*4, and has a right to do business in this state uncontrolled by the Commissioner of Insurance.—Rensenhouse v. Seeley, 72 Mich. 603.

II. BENEFIT OR INSURANCE CONTRACT AND INSURED RISKS OR CAUSES.

Validity of restriction against membership in other societies, see also Contracts § 88.

Withdrawal of local society from the state society as impairing the obligation of the contract, see ante § 13.
Application for certificate as part of contract, see post § 19.
Obligation to pay dues and assessments as contract, see post ¶ 69.

Increase in rates of assessments, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 23-A.

¶ 43. The issuance of a certificate of membership by a beneficial association and forwarding it to the local lodge for delivery to the member completes the contract of insurance.—Wagner v. Supreme Lodge Knights and Ladies of Honor, 128 Mich. 660.

¶ 44. Under Act No. 119, Pub. Acts 1893, fraternal beneficiary societies are expressly made exempt from the provisions of the insurance laws of this state, therefore Act No. 180, Pub. Acts 1907, providing that every policy of insurance issued by any company within the state shall contain the entire contract between the parties has no application to policies or certificates issued by such societies.—Knights of Modern Maccabees v. Commissioner of Insurance, 155 Mich. 693. (Grant, C. J., and Hooker and Moore, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 44a. A beneficiary society incorporated under Laws of 1869, Act No. 104 (How. St., chap. 118), which provides only for the payment by the society of a certain sum in case of death and for periodical payments in case of the sickness or other disability of the member, is not authorized to conduct the business of endowment insurance; that is, insurance payable on the expiration of a fixed period should the insured live so long.—Walker v. Commissioner of Insurance, 103 Mich. 344.

¶ 44b. Where in a suit to enjoin the prosecution of an action at law upon a fraternal benefit insurance certificate, it appeared that the insured passed a medical examination, was initiated and paid his dues, but was stricken with general paresis before the certificate was delivered to him. Held, there was no valid contract of insurance.—Court of Honor v. Hering, 178 Mich. 377.

See also post ¶ 138.
Constitution and by-laws in general, see ante § 2.
Provisions as to remedy within lodge to recover benefits, see post § 64.
Judicial construction of charter as conclusive in subsequent action, see post ¶ 65.

¶ 45. One who participated in the organization and in drafting the constitution of a mutual benefit society is deemed to have notice of a provision in the constitution forbidding its members from belonging to any other sick benefit society, so as to prevent recovery of benefits where he was a member of another society at the time of joining the one in question.—Bretzlaff v. Evangelical Lutheran St. John's Sick Benefit Society, 125 Mich. 39.

¶ 46. A by-law of a mutual benefit society that is reasonable and valid, not oppressive or against public policy forms part of the contract between a member and the other members of the society, and binds each member by its terms.—Van Poucke v. Netherland St. Vincent De Paul Soc., 63 Mich. 378.

¶ 47. Where a contract of mutual benefit insurance is made with the great camp, and the insured subscribes to the by-laws of the order, he is bound by a by-law providing that a local camp may not waive a provision relative to who may be a beneficiary under the certificate.—Sowiczki v. Modern Woodmen of America, 192 Mich. 265.

¶ 48. One who was a charter member of a mutual benefit association, and had his attention called to the constitution and laws thereof, and especially to a section prohibiting payment of benefits in cases of suicide, and who had some weeks afterwards a certificate conditioned upon his complying with all laws, etc., issued to him, is bound by the section relating to suicide which was a part of the contract between him and the association.—Sabin v. Senate of National Union, 90 Mich. 177.

¶ 48a. Rules made regulating the manner of doing business between the subordinate and the superior lodge of a benefit association, in which rules the applicant does not participate, cannot be made to take away the rights of a beneficiary.—Lorscher v. Supreme Lodge Knights of Honor, 72 Mich. 316.

¶ 48b. A rule of fraternal benefit association requiring medical examiners to reject women applicants unless they signed a waiver in case of pregnancy held binding though not in writing nor promulgated, the application being made subject to all laws, rules and regulations governing the association.—Clark v. North American Union, 179 Mich. 131.

¶ 48c. Where the foreign statute under which a mutual benefit association is organized, and its articles of incorporation, entitle its members to devise the death benefit fund to any person, although not of any of the classes named as beneficiaries, a provision of the constitution of the association which attempts to restrict members in their choice of devisees cannot be sustained. —Wolf v. District Grand Lodge No. 6, I. O. B. B., 102 Mich. 23.

¶ 49. Parties to a mutual benefit certificate may expressly agree to be bound by after-enacted by-laws.—Wineland v. Knights of the Maccabees of the World, 148 Mich. 608.

¶ 50. An agreement by one becoming a member of a mutual benefit association to be bound by all subsequent amendments to the constitution and the by-laws of the order, especially those relating to the rates of assessment, is not against public policy, and does not infringe any vested rights.—DeGraw v. Supreme Court, I. O. F., 182 Mich. 366.

¶ 51. At the time insured became a member of the defendant beneficial association he was not engaged in the sale of liquor. He afterwards became engaged in the sale of liquor, which was a prohibited occupation, and at the time of insured's admission to the order it was provided that in case a member should after admission engage in such occupation, he might be suspended by the executive committee of the order. Subsequently the by-law was amended so as to make the prohibition self-executing. Held, that such by-law was binding on the member and operated to forfeit his insurance.—Brown v. Great Camp Knights of Modern Maccabees, 167 Mich. 123.

¶ 51a. Where a certificate in a fraternal benefit order provides that it shall be subject to subsequently enacted laws of the order, and a law of the order forbidding a beneficiary to sue in the courts on a claim is passed, the prohibition contained in such law is valid even though the law is passed after the issuing of the certificate.—Monger v. New Era Ass'n, 171 Mich. 614.

¶ 52. Though a member of a benefit society agrees to be bound by by-laws subsequently made, no such by-law is effective against him which infringes his vested rights. —Monger v. New Era Ass'n, 156 Mich. 645.

¶ 53. A mutual benefit society which issues a certificate to a member providing for payment in case of total disability resulting from a specified cause cannot, without his express consent, change his contract by the adoption of a by-law excluding such cause of disability, although the member has agreed in his certificate to observe "all the laws, rules, and regulations of the society." —Starling v. Supreme Council Royal Templars of Temperance, 108 Mich. 440.

¶ 54. The adoption of by-laws by a mutual benefit association, prohibiting the assignment of certificates, and giving the association ninety days after maturity in which to make payment thereof, cannot affect the rights of members as to certificates previously issued, unless they expressly assent thereto.—Wheeler v. Supreme Sitting of Order of Iron Hall, 110 Mich. 437.

¶ 55. Where a member of a beneficial society agreed to be bound by and conform to by-laws to be from time to time made by the governing body, such member cannot claim the right to a disability benefit payable yearly after attaining a certain age, as provided by an amendment to the by-laws since repealed, where his certificate contains no such provision and the whole matter of assessments was one of management to be from time to time amended as the experience and necessities of the society demanded.— Wineland v. Knights of Maccabees of the World, 148 Mich. 608.

¶ 56. A by-law passed by a benefit society, requiring beneficiaries to resort to a tribunal established within the order to settle disputed death claims, may apply to members entering the order before its passage where the intent to have it so apply is clearly indicated.—Monger v. New Era Ass'n, 156 Mich. 645.

¶ 57. The articles of association of a mutual benefit society provided that the benefits to which members were entitled should be paid "at such times" as might be provided by the laws governing such payment, or in the certificate of membership. After the issue of a certificate which provided that if the member to whom it was issued should for seven years pay his assessments punctually, and maintain himself in good standing in the order, he should be entitled to a sum not exceeding the principal amount named in the certificate, less the amount which he might have already received as benefits, etc., a by-law was adopted providing that final benefits should, when found correct, be adjusted within ninety days from the date of the expiration of the certificate. Held, that the by-law applied only to such certificates as, by their terms, made the benefit payable at the time fixed by the by-law and not to the certificate held by plaintiff.—Cohen v. Supreme Sitting of Order of Iron Hall, 105 Mich. 283.

¶ 58. Where parties to a mutual benefit certificate have agreed to be bound by after enacted by-laws, after the lapse of ten years it is too late for one who was a member when reincorporation took place to insist that the certificates then in existence shall be treated as if they had been issued by the defendant before such reincorporation, especially when the member is insisting that a provision of his contract, ultra vires under the laws before reincorporation, is binding upon the society because of increased powers given by the laws under the reincorporation.—Wineland v. Knights of the Maccabees of the World, 148 Mich. 608.

¶ 59. Where there was a provision in the benefit certificate of a member for paying him a benefit upon his reaching the age of 70 and there were amendments to the laws in 1899 and 1901 whereby the old age benefit feature was eliminated unless there was total disability arising from old age and the member was 70 years old, the fact that a member continued his membership without protesting and paid his assessments after these two changes in the law, did not operate as a waiver of his right to protest in 1904 against the entire elimination of the old age benefit from his certificate, where this last law contains the first demand upon him to agree that the society's construction of the effect of its earlier action shall bind him; for the amendment of 1899 applied to existing contracts.—Wineland v. Knights of Maccabees of the World, 148 Mich. 608.

¶ 60. The defendant benefit order, four years after the disappearance of the insured, and while his policy was in force, adopted a by-law providing that absence should create no presumption of death. 1 Comp. Laws 1897, § 1225, creates such a presumption. Held, that the insured, in agreeing to abide by by-laws to be adopted, did not contemplate the enactment of one in direct derogation of a statute, and the plaintiff, his wife, in a suit to recover the insurance, was entitled to the statutory presumption.—Samberg v. Knights of Modern Maccabees, 158 Mich. 568.

¶ 61. Where a member insured in a benefit society designates as beneficiary one having no insurable interest, and later a by-law is passed forbidding such a beneficiary, it is held that the by-law has no application so as to invalidate the previous transaction in the absence of an expressed intent so to apply.—Dolan v. Supreme Council Cath. Mut. Ben. Ass'n, 152 Mich. 266.

¶ 62. The issuance of a certificate of membership either estops a beneficial association from denying that the application for membership was filed or shows that such application was in fact filed.—Wagner v. Supreme Lodge Knights and Ladies of Honor, 128 Mich. 660.

¶ 63. Where the certificate of a benefit society makes no reference to the application for membership, nor does the constitution, except to provide that an applicant must sign the application prescribed by the supreme council, and where the members agree in the application to comply with the laws and rules of the society, the application is, nevertheless, a part of the contract of in-

¶ 64. How. St. § 3960*d*5, providing that certificates of membership issued upon the lives of persons more than sixty-five years old, or upon any life in which the beneficiary has not an insurable interest, "shall be void as to the beneficiary therein named, but the amount thereof shall in case of death be payable to the heirs of the member," does not apply to corporations not organized under Laws 1887, Act No. 187, or to insurance contracts made prior to its enactment.—Smith v. Pinch, 80 Mich. 332.

¶ 65. Where a contract of a foreign beneficiary society is in terms made subject to the terms of its charter, the construction of such charter by the highest court of the state in which the society is organized is conclusive, in an action to determine the distribution of the proceeds of benefits in Michigan.—Knights of Columbus v. McInerney, 153 Mich. 574.

¶ 66. Courts will not read into a fraternal insurance contract a promise not contained in the contract itself, to pay an assessment, where it expressly provides a penalty of forfeiture of insurance for a default in the payment without action of the society for its enforcement.—Faurot v. Swan, 155 Mich. 284.

¶ 66a. When the constitution of a mutual benefit association contains two inconsistent provisions, that most favorable to the insured will be adopted.—Wolf v. District Grand Lodge, No. 6, I. O. B. B., 102 Mich. 23.

In life and accident insurance generally, see Insurance, VII.

¶ 67. A provision in a certificate of insurance of a beneficial association that the insurance shall not cover injuries, sickness or death resulting from surgical operations not necessitated by injury does not bar recovery of sick benefit for illness subsequent to an operation for appendicitis performed after the insured had been ill for ten days.—Lord v. National Protective Society, 129 Mich. 335.

§ 22. Conditions precedent and restrictions.

Waiver of conditions and restrictions, see also post § 54.

Conditions precedent to reinstatement, see post § 56.

Instruction as to what constitutes intoxication, see post § 79.

¶ 68. A provision of the by-laws of a beneficial association requiring a member to be initiated before being entitled to the benefits is waived by the issuance of a certificate without such initiation.—Wagner v. Supreme Lodge Knights and Ladies of Honor, 128 Mich. 660.

¶ 68a. A membership certificate issued by a fraternal benefit society never became a binding contract where it was issued to a person who waived all rights to any benefit until initiation, and it is undisputed that she was never initiated, as required by a rule of the society before delivery of the certificate should be made; and was not in sound health after the date of the application, so that she could have been initiated.—Kolosinski v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 175 Mich. 684.

III. DUES AND ASSESSMENTS.

Annual report of officers to Commissioner of Insurance, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 23.

¶ 69. The obligation of a member of a mutual benefit society to pay assessments rests, if it exists at all, in contract relations, express or implied, or is imposed by the statute incorporating the society.—Faurot v. Swan, 155 Mich. 284.

¶ 70. One who joins a mutual benefit society and agrees to pay all assessments levied upon him, is liable for all assessments made while he is a member although his rights have since been forfeited; but he is not liable for assessments made after his membership has expired.—Faurot v. Swan, 155 Mich. 284.

¶ 71. A member of a beneficial association is not shown to have waived his right to personal service of notice of assessment so as to make it error to refuse to so instruct where the messenger serving the notice testifies that if the insured was present he handed the notice to him and if not he left it with the clerk in the insured's store without stating how many notices he left with the clerk and is unable to say to whom he gave the notice in controversy.—Wallace v. Fraternal Mystic Circle, 127 Mich. 387.

¶ 72. The requirements of the constitution of an unincorporated voluntary insurance association that, upon the death of a member, an assessment shall be ordered in writing by the president addressed to the financial secretary as a basis for the latter's action, are not met where the secretary, upon the death of a member, acting on his own initiative, gives notice of an assessment, and such assessment is consequently invalid.—Zender v. Detroit Lodge No. 1, Knights of Royal Ark, 198 Mich. 624.

¶ 73. Ratification of the unauthorized action of the financial secretary of an unincorporated voluntary insurance association in giving notice of an assessment upon the death of a member without an order of assessment having been previously given by the president is not established by proof of an entry in the minutes of a subsequent meeting of the lodge which makes no reference to an assessment theretofore made, and which simply gives the name of the deceased member, the date of his death, and the amount of the benefit.—Zender v. Detroit Lodge No. 1, Knights of Royal Ark, 190 Mich. 624.

¶ 74. Where a mutual benefit society has the right to increase the number of its assessments it is lawful, and not violative of contract rights, to increase the number of assessments to meet the demands arising from the death of members. Fewer assessments at a greater rate may be levied so long as the increase in rates is proportional, young and old members alike contributing. Whether such action be a mere detail in management, aimed at procuring for distribution the same sum of money in a different way, or intended to actually increase the contributions and accumulate a fund, it may be so long as it is proportional and reasonable, supported as against a protesting member, by his agreement in his application to conform to and be governed by laws to be from time to time enacted by the governing body of the association.—Wineland v. Knights of Maccabees of the World, 148 Mich. 608.

¶ 75. Plaintiff, a member of a benefit society, agreed in his application for membership to subscribe to the laws and rules of the society in force or afterwards to be enacted. A law of the society provided that members should be assessed at a certain rate according to age, which rate was not to be increased. The certificate made no reference to the application, nor did the constitution, except to provide that applicant must sign the application prescribed by the supreme council. The council by amendment of the laws and rules increased plaintiff's rate of assessment. Held, that the increase was valid.—Williams v. Supreme Council Cath. Mut. Ben. Ass'n, 152 Mich. 1.

Tender of payment of fine, see ante ¶ 19.
Construction of terms of the contract or certificate in respect to payment of assessments, see ante § 20.
Right of one paying assessments to protest change of beneficiary, see post §§ 34, 35.
Payment of fees upon change of beneficiary, see post § 39.
Payment of assessments as entitling to benefits, see post § 45.
Forfeiture or cancellation for failure to pay dues and assessments, see post § 50.
Waiver of payment of assessments, see post § 54.
Acceptance of dues and assessments as waiver of cause of forfeiture, see post § 54.
Deducting unpaid assessments from payments to beneficiary, see post § 63.
Presumptions as to payment, see post § 72.
Province of judge and jury as to payment of dues, assessments, see post § 76.
General law of payment and tender, see Payment.

¶ 76. A legal tender of assessments of a member of a beneficial association is not necessary where a tender of assessments for a previous month has been refused on the ground that the person is not a member.—Wagner v. Supreme Lodge Knights and Ladies of Honor, 128 Mich. 660.

¶ 77. One who was a member of an order which is social as well as beneficiary, until his lodge broke up for want of members, and whose transfer card is refused by another local lodge, is not bound, in order to retain the benefits conferred by his certificate of membership, to unite with a foreign lodge, but by sending his assessments direct to the supreme body continues his membership.—Starling v. Supreme Council Royal Templars of Temperance, 108 Mich. 440.

¶ 78. A by-law of a beneficial association to the effect that the local officers of the subordinate lodge are the agents of the members in receiving dues and assessments is not binding upon the members and will not operate to excuse the association from liability for moneys paid but not transmitted to the home office.—Wagner v. Supreme Lodge Knights and Ladies of Honor, 128 Mich. 660.

¶ 79. Presumption of payment of the first assessment referred to in a benefit certificate, arises from the delivery of the policy. —Taylor v. Supreme Lodge of Columbian League, 135 Mich. 231.

§ 27. ——Extension of time for payment.

Instructions as to waiver of prompt payments, see post ¶ 293.

¶ 80. The action of a lodge in directing the financial secretary to give notice of an assessment, of which notice had previously been given upon the death of a member, operates as an extension of the time within which the assessment may be paid, so that a tender of payment within the time provided by the constitution after the ordering of an assessment prevents a default.—Zender v. Detroit Lodge No. 1, Knights of Royal Ark, 190 Mich. 624.

¶ 81. The home office of a fraternal benefit association may waive its requirement that the dues be paid on the first of each month, and evidence that the dues were accepted by the local agent and subsequently sent to the home office and retained by it and that both the solicitor taking the application and the local agent had stated to the insured that the dues could be paid later in the month, is sufficient to show a waiver of such a provision notwithstanding a notice of suspension received by the insured two days after he had paid his dues where the dues for several months subsequent were retained and the association had never enforced a suspension for failure to pay on time against any of its members.—Lord v. National Protective Society, 129 Mich. 335.

Charging receiver with amount of assessments not collected, see Receivers, V.

¶ 82. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 5718, providing that receivers for mutual benefit associations may continue the business by order of court for the purpose of paying all death claims which have accrued at the time of their appointment, the receiver may be compelled to levy an assessment to pay a death claim accruing after a petition for the voluntary dissolution of the association but prior to an adjudication and the appointment of the receiver.—Taft v. Kent Circuit Judge, 129 Mich. 312.

IV. BENEFICIARY, CHANGE OF BENEFICIARY, AND RIGHT TO BENEFITS.

Benefit or insurance contract, see ante II.

Effect of after enacted by-law requiring insurable interest, see ante ¶ 61.

Effect of after enacted statutes as to beneficiaries, see ante ¶ 64.

Change of beneficiary, see post § 33.

Validity and efficacy of change of beneficiary, see post § 42.

Effect of improper or defective designation of beneficiary, see post § 46.

Failure to designate beneficiary, see post § 47.

Accrual and amount of benefits, see post § 57.

Beneficiary and change of beneficiary in life and accident policies, see Insurance, IX.

Estoppel of beneficiary to urge want of insurable interest to defeat liability based on insurance, see Contracts § 95, ¶ 376.

Who may be beneficiary, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 6.

Right of member to designate beneficiary, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 6.

§ 30. Eligibility, interest and relationship to insured.

[Note. What constitutes an insurable interest in the life of another does not ordinarily involve anything but what is common to all life insurance, and on that subject the topic Insurance, IV, should be consulted.]

Public policy as to certificate to persons in supposed but not in legal marriage relation, see Contracts § 64, ¶ 264.

¶ 83. No person not of the class for whose benefit a mutual benefit association is authorized can be a beneficiary.—Wolf v. District Grand Lodge No. 6, I. O. B. B., 102 Mich. 23; Supreme Lodge Order of Mutual Protection v. Dewey, 142 Mich. 666.

¶ 84. Where the by-laws of a mutual benefit society provide that "a benefit may be made payable to any one or more persons of any one of the following classes only" and enumerates in the first grade twelve classes, the laws authorize a member to select his beneficiaries from any one of the twelve grades regardless of the existence of members of the preceding grades, and the enumeration in the twelfth grade of "members next of kin who would be distributees of the personal estate of such member upon his death intestate" the words "next of kin" mean those who would be next of kin on the failure of the eleven preceding grades.—Mathewson v. Supreme Council Royal Arcanum, 146 Mich. 671, per Blair and McAlvay, JJ., concurring.

¶ 85. A member of a mutual benefit association organized under a statute which was later amended by adding classes of persons as beneficiaries, and which statute provided that no corporation organized under the original statute need reincorporate but could continue to exercise all powers not inconsistent with the amended act, could designate a member of the added class by surrendering his original certificate and having a new one issued even though the beneficiaries named were not those provided for by the by-laws, and the society had not changed its by-laws to conform to the amended statute.—Mathewson v. Supreme Council Royal Arcanum, 146 Mich. 671.

¶ 86. The fact that the proceeds of a beneficial certificate are to be put into the hands of a trustee who is not a blood relative, for the use of the trustee for life and the remainder to the grandsons of the insured, does not preclude the grandsons from being proper beneficiaries under a by-law limiting such beneficiaries to blood relatives.—Grand Lodge of Ancient Order of United Workmen v. Fisk, 126 Mich. 356.

¶ 87. The word "heirs" as used in a statute authorizing fraternal societies to issue certificates payable to members' heirs has reference to those who would be entitled to the member's property were he to die intestate.—Hosmer v. Welch, 107 Mich. 470.

¶ 88. Where the insured himself rather than the insurer designates as beneficiary one having no insurable interest, the policy is not void as being a wagering contract.—Dolan v. Supreme Council Cath. Mut. Ben. Ass'n, 152 Mich. 266.

Eligibility of one who cohabits with her supposed husband, see post ¶ 137.

¶ 89. Where the laws of another state under which a mutual benefit society is organized forbid such corporations from paying benefits to any but the member's family or dependents, persons who are not actual relations or standing in the place of relations in some permanent way, or in some actual dependence on the member, cannot become beneficiaries.—Supreme Lodge Knights of Honor v. Nairn, 60 Mich. 44.

¶ 90. A. is not a member of B.'s "family"—so as to entitle him (A.) to be named as beneficiary in a certificate issued to B.—merely by reason of army comradeship, intimate friendship, and living for some time in B.'s house.—Supreme Lodge Knights of Honor v. Nairn, 60 Mich. 44.

¶ 92. The term "family" in statutes providing for death indemnities for members of beneficial societies is a term of great flexibility, and may apply to blood relatives, even though living apart from the applicant and having families of their own. It may apply to those who are neither relatives by consanguinity or affinity, provided they are of the household of the applicant and maintaining the relations usual in families united by ties of blood.—Supreme Lodge Order of Mutual Protection v. Dewey, 142 Mich. 666.

¶ 95. On a bill by a fraternal beneficial association to interplead the claimants of the proceeds of a certificate and to determine the title to the proceeds, where the by-laws limited the beneficiary to one or more "members of the family," held that a foster son of deceased, who had never been legally adopted, who had his own home, separate from that of the deceased, was not a member of the family and that his designation as a beneficiary was invalid under the by-laws of the order.—Grand Lodge of Ancient Order of United Workmen v. McKay, 149 Mich. 90.

¶ 96. One who has been made the trustee of a benefit certificate under a trust to pay all but $100 thereof to a named aunt of the insured, she being incapable of becoming a beneficiary under the certificate and the trust being expressly for the purpose of compensating the aunt for care bestowed on insured during his last sickness, is not estopped to assert that the aunt has otherwise been fully paid and thereupon to claim the entire proceeds of the certificate; since under the trust her only interest is that of compensation.—Knights of Modern Maccabees v. Grice, 148 Mich. 422.

¶ 97. A person who is made a beneficiary of a fraternal benefit certificate under an arrangement whereby she is a trustee of the proceeds for certain purposes, cannot, upon a second certificate being issued to her in substitution for the first, repudiate the trust on the ground that she was wrongfully designated as a beneficiary when the first certificate was issued, not at that time having sustained the proper relation to the member to become a beneficiary.—Grand Lodge Ancient Order United Workmen of State of Michigan v. Beath, 150 Mich. 657. (Ostrander and McAlvay, JJ., dissenting.)

Modification of contracts generally, see Contracts, VIII.

Assignment and transfer of insurance policies, see Insurance, XI.

Member's right to change beneficiary, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 6.

¶ 98. The holder of a mutual benefit certificate has the right to change his beneficiary at pleasure, and such right will not be denied unless it is plain that the beneficiary named in the certificate has by contract and by performance acquired a vested interest in the certificate and funds.—Modern Brotherhood of America v. Hudson, 194 Mich. 124.

¶ 99. A member of a mutual benefit association who accepted a certificate naming his sister as beneficiary, and limiting his right thereafter to name other beneficiaries to such person or persons as the rules and regulations of such association should determine, and agreeing to comply with all regulations of the society thereafter to be enacted, could not substitute a creditor and strangers for his sister as beneficiaries, after such association had so amended its constitution and by-laws, under the statute, as to limit beneficiaries under a certificate of membership to relatives of or persons dependent upon the member; since the right of such member thereafter to nominate another beneficiary was not a vested right, but subject to the reasonable action of such association.—Brinen v. Supreme Council, Catholic Mut. Ben. Ass'n, 140 Mich. 220.

¶ 100. After the death of a member, a beneficiary society has no power to change the disposition of a benefit fund from the beneficiaries in whom it vested at the time of the member's death.—Knights of Columbus v. McInerney, 153 Mich. 574.

¶ 101. The fact that a benefit certificate was in possession of the insured's wife, who was the beneficiary, and that she paid the assessments for a time, did not give her the right to protest against a change of beneficiary and particularly so where the new beneficiary under similar circumstances kept up the payments.—Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. v. McGrath, 133 Mich. 626.

¶ 102. Under a by-law of a mutual benefit association permitting the changing of a beneficiary upon the signing of a waiver of the original certificate and paying a certificate fee, the insured, upon complying with such requirements as to waiver and payment, may change the beneficiary at any time, and obtain a new policy without the consent of the beneficiary.—New Era Ass'n v. Kuyat, 191 Mich. 646.

¶ 103. The mutual promises of a father and mother, who each hold the certificate of a beneficial association in which the other is named as beneficiary, never to change the beneficiaries so named, create no legal or equitable interest of the children in the fund derived on the death of the surviving parent, although, if no such change had been made, they would have been the legal beneficiaries, and although the mutual promises of the parents contemplated that in such case they should be the legal beneficiaries.—Knights of Modern Maccabees v. Sharp, 163 Mich. 449.

¶ 105. A husband and wife each took out benefit certificates in favor of each other, their children to be the contingent beneficiaries. Held, that in determining whether they contracted with each other that the beneficiary in the certificates should not be changed from the children to some other person, the fact of such a contract could not be established merely by the testimony of friends that they had heard the husband and wife make remarks indicating the existence of such a contract.—Knights of Modern Maccabees v. Sharp, 163 Mich. 449.

¶ 106. An agreement by a married woman named as beneficiary in a certificate of fraternal insurance on the life of her husband, with the latter to pay from her own earnings subsequent assessments thereon, is not based on a sufficient consideration, although performed by her for a number of years, to give her a vested interest in the certificate which will prevent the insured making a subsequent change of beneficiary under the by-laws of the society, without her consent.—Schiller-Bund v. Knack, 184 Mich. 95.

¶ 107. Where a membership in a mutual benefit association can be had only by payment of both assessments and dues, the consideration moving to the insurer from the insured for the benefit promised by the certificate and the laws of the association is the payment of both dues and assessments, and consequently a promise of a third person to pay assessments and dues and the payment of them is insufficient to create in such third person a vested interest in the certificate and funds, and does not limit the right of the insured to change the beneficiary at his pleasure.—Modern Brotherhood of America v. Hudson, 194 Mich. 124.

Validity and efficacy of change, see post § 42.

Application, surrender, payment of fees, and issue of new certificate, see post §§ 37-40.

¶ 108. The beneficiary named in a certificate of membership issued by a mutual benefit society can be changed only in the manner prescribed by the laws of the association and the certificate's terms.—Supreme Lodge Knights of Honor v. Nairn, 60 Mich. 44.

¶ 109. "May" as used in the charter of a benefit society providing that a member "may" change his beneficiaries in a prescribed manner is construed "must," where the context reads that he "shall" do so in a manner pointed out.—Grand Lodge of Ancient Order of United Workmen v. Fisk, 126 Mich. 356.

¶ 110. Under the rules of a mutual benefit association providing that a member may change his beneficiary by indorsement upon his certificate and surrender of the same for reissue, such change may be effected by will, where the certificate was delivered for safe keeping only to the beneficiary named therein, who afterwards refused to surrender it, and the local body declined to permit the change to be made without its production.—Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. v. Kohler, 106 Mich. 121.

¶ 111. A will made after the death of the beneficiary leaving all the personal property to another, does not change the beneficiary under a certificate where the constitution of the association provides that the change may be made by surrendering the certificate and the issuance of a new one, and where no obstacle to such proceedings on the part of the insured is shown to have existed.—Grand Lodge of Ancient Order of United Workmen v. Fisk, 126 Mich. 356.

¶ 112. Where the by-laws of a mutual benefit insurance association provide that any person desiring any change of beneficiary in a certificate must forward a certain fee to the state secretary with an application for the same and that death benefits shall be paid to such persons as the deceased member shall ordain, otherwise to the administrator or executor of the estate of such person, such by-laws must be complied with, and the marriage of the member and the birth of issue does not constitute a revocation of designation of beneficiaries.—Ladies' Auxiliary, A. O. H. v. Flanigan, 190 Mich. 675.

¶ 113. The widow of a member of a mutual benefit society is not entitled to a policy of insurance taken out by her deceased husband before marriage in favor of his mother, on a bill to determine the rightful ownership thereof, where the by-laws and rules of such society provide among other things, that no change of beneficiary named in the certificate shall be binding upon the order, unless application therefor is made in writing by the member together with the delivery of his certificate; where it appears that the deceased never requested such society to transfer the insurance to his wife; even though the complainant made some payments of such policy, relying upon a statement of her husband that he would give or assign or will the certificate of insurance to her.—Coston v. Coston, 145 Mich. 390.

¶ 114. It is immaterial that there was no valid request for the change of a beneficiary in compliance with the by-laws of a mutual benefit association, because such application was not personally signed where a new certificate is in fact issued and the insured ratifies the change by personally signing his name on the bottom of such certificate as required.—New Era Ass'n v. Kuyat, 191 Mich. 646.

See also ante ¶ 102.

Effect of refusal of depositary of certificate to surrender, see also ante ¶ 110.

¶ 115. While it is possible that when a member of a mutual benefit society has executed and delivered to the proper officer his attested surrender, in favor of a competent beneficiary, such member's death, before a new certificate is rendered, may leave his power of designation so far executed as to enable a court of equity to relieve against the accident, yet a surrender not meant to be made until after the member's death is of no force.—Supreme Lodge Knights of Honor v. Nairn, 60 Mich. 44.

¶ 116. Where a change of beneficiaries is required to be made by the member surrendering his certificate, and receiving a new one payable as he shall have directed, said surrender and direction to be signed and attested, a conditional surrender not to take effect until after the member's death, and not attested, is of no force.—Supreme Lodge Knights of Honor v. Nairn, 60 Mich. 44.

¶ 117. A member of a mutual benefit society caused his certificate to be made payable to his betrothed. She married another, and the member made application to the society, stating the loss of the certificate and asking that his son be substituted as the beneficiary. This was denied on the ground that the first certificate was not surrendered, as the rules required on changing the beneficiary, to which rules he had bound himself. He thereupon gave a power of attorney to another to collect the amount that should accrue under the certificate. This was done on suggestion of his lodge officers. Held, on bill of interpleader, that the son was entitled to the fund.—Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. v. Child, 70 Mich. 163.

¶ 118. Where a member of a beneficiary society requests that the beneficiary in his certificate be changed but does not present for surrender his old certificate as required by the constitution of the society because it is in the hands of the beneficiary who refuses to give it up, and the society issues a new certificate naming the new beneficiary as requested, the latter may recover thereon, since the surrender was waived by the society and the old certificate became void.—Allgemeiner Arbeiter Bund v. Adamson, 132 Mich. 86.

¶ 118a. When permitted by the by-laws of a fraternal insurance society a member may change the beneficiary named in his certificate as often as he chooses, notwithstanding that the certificate may be in possession of a prior beneficiary who may have paid assessments thereon.—Schiller-Bund v. Knack, 184 Mich. 95.

See also ante ¶ 102.

¶ 119. The constitution of a benefit order provided that a member desiring to change the beneficiary of his policy should make a written request therefor and deliver same with the certificate fee of twenty-five cents to the secretary of the local lodge, to be forwarded to the supreme secretary, who should thereupon, if the requested change should be within the rules of the order, issue a new certificate. An insured member made out such a request and delivered the same to the local secretary, who promptly forwarded it to the supreme secretary, but said member did not pay the fee. Said member died before the request was forwarded by the local secretary. Held, no change of beneficiary was effected.—Ancient Order of Gleaners v. Bury, 165 Mich. 1.

¶ 120. The issuance of a new certificate and its retention by an officer of a beneficial association under an agreement as custodian for the member is sufficient delivery to change the beneficiary.—Supreme Court, Order of Patricians v. Davis, 129 Mich. 318.

¶ 121. A mere purpose on the part of a decedent to change the beneficiary in an insurance policy will not give the intended new beneficiary any claim to the fund.—Franken v. Supreme Court Independent Order of Foresters, 152 Mich. 502.

¶ 122. An unexecuted intention to change the beneficiaries in a mutual benefit insurance policy will not deprive the designated beneficiaries of their rights to the proceeds of the policy upon the member's death where the by-laws of the association provide that beneficiaries may be changed upon fulfilling certain requirements.—Ladies' Auxiliary, A. O. H. v. Flanigan, 190 Mich. 675.

§ 42. Validity and efficacy of change.

As to mental competency of insured to substitute a new beneficiary, see also Insane Persons, I.

¶ 123. Where an attempt to change the beneficiary in a benefit certificate is made and fails because of the want of mental capacity on the part of the insured, the original designation remains in force.—Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. v. Frank, 133 Mich. 232.

§ 43. ——Who may question change.

¶ 124. A beneficiary in a benefit certificate, had such an inchoate interest in such certificate, as entitled her in a bill of interpleader, to raise the question of the mental incompetency of the insured at the time of the change of beneficiaries.—Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. v. McGrath, 133 Mich. 626.

¶ 125. Although the beneficiary in a benefit certificate had no vested interest in the certificate, she had a contingent interest which enabled her to raise the question of the mental capacity of the insured, in a bill of interpleader to determine the right to the certificate in question which had been issued in lieu of the former.—Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. v. Frank, 133 Mich. 232.

¶ 127. The insured changed the beneficiary of his policy from his wife to his brothers and sisters. The society admitted its liability and interpleaded between them. Held, that the society could raise the question whether its by-laws had been so amended as to permit the said change of beneficiary, but not the original beneficiary.—Grand Lodge Ancient Order United Workmen v. Brown, 160 Mich. 437.

ciaries cannot complain that the substitution of beneficiaries was not made in strict compliance with the rules and by-laws of the order, since such objection is open only to the insurer.—Ladies of Modern Maccabees v. Daley, 166 Mich. 542.

¶ 129. The arrangement for insurance between a beneficial association and a member is a contract between the parties, and it is unnecessary for the member to comply with the letter of the by-laws as to a change of beneficiary if the company accepts the change and issues the new certificate.—Supreme Court, Order of Patricians v. Davis, 129 Mich. 318.

§ 45. Person entitled to benefit payments or share therein.

Waiver of provision that member be initiated to be entitled to benefits, see ante ¶ 68.

Right of trustee of certificate to claim proceeds thereof, see ante § 32.

Rights as between beneficiaries under old and new certificates, see ante ¶ 118.

Rights of intended new beneficiary where change not effectuated, see ante §§ 41, 42.

Power of society to change disposition of benefit after insured's death, see ante ¶ 100.

Interpleader to determine rights to benefits, see ante ¶ 95, § 43.

Effect of forfeiture, suspension or cancellation of the contract, see post, V.

Accrual and amount of benefits, see post, VI.

Exemption of insurance benefits from levy, see Exemptions § 25.

Immunity of benefit from attachment, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 21.

¶ 130. The fact that under a mistake of fact as to whom a beneficiary certificate was payable, the assessments were paid by a daughter of the supposed beneficiary, will not entitle such beneficiary to the proceeds as against the widow and children of the deceased member.—Knights of Columbus v. McInerney, 153 Mich. 574.

¶ 131. Where the amount of a benefit certificate remains in the hands of the beneficiary society, a release by the person legally entitled to such fund, executed to the society, will not affect her rights to subsequently claim such fund, where other claimants of the fund assumed no rights and lost nothing by the release, and the society did not act upon it, and makes no claim under it.—Knights of Columbus v. McInerney, 153 Mich. 574.

¶ 132. A change of the beneficiary of insurance certificates from the wife of the insured to his sister is to be regarded as for security and not as a gift excluding the wife, where it appears that at the time he was sick, dispirited, deeply in debt, and that the raising of money was proposed by his sister as a way out of his difficulties, and where after he died she offered a compromise and on trial testified that she intended to reimburse herself and turn over the surplus for the benefit of the daughter of insured, and where there was other testimony corroborative of an intent to give security only, though the sister claimed an outright gift and offered evidence that he desired to cut off his wife.—Great Camp Knights of the Modern Maccabees v. Deem, 143 Mich. 652.

¶ 133. A person insured in a benefit society may, unless prohibited by the terms of his certificate or the rules of the society, charge the beneficiary by will with the payment of a debt out of the proceeds of the insurance, and make the debt a lien on the proceeds.—Woodruff v. Tilman, 112 Mich. 188.

¶ 134. One who without gaining any beneficial interest in a certificate voluntarily pays sums of money for dues and assessments for a member in a mutual benefit association is, upon the death of the member, entitled to reimbursement at most on being interpleaded with another who was the nominal beneficiary.—Modern Brotherhood of America v. Hudson, 194 Mich. 124.

¶ 135. A beneficiary fund payable on the death of a member of an association to persons named by him is not to be treated as part of his estate, subject to his debts, and does not go to the administrator, but should be paid directly to the beneficiaries or to their guardians.—Catholic Mut. Ben. Ass'n v. Priest, 46 Mich. 429; Catholic Mut. Ben. Ass'n v. Firnane, 50 Mich. 82.

¶ 136. Where a mutual benefit association is organized for the purpose of providing a benefaction for the member's family or dependents, the fund cannot be appropriated to the payment of his debts.—Supreme Lodge Knights of Honor v. Nairn, 60 Mich. 44.

¶ 137. A woman who entered into a contract of marriage under the belief that she was divorced from her former husband, and who in good faith lives and cohabits with her supposed husband, may take under a benefit certificate naming her as beneficiary, in a fraternal benefit society whose by-laws provide for payment to wife, husband, mother, etc., as against the mother of insured who had for 18 years treated the parties as husband and wife.—Supreme Tent Knights of the Maccabees v. McAllister, 132 Mich. 69.

¶ 138. Where a policy in a beneficial association provided that the rights of the beneficiary shall be determined by the laws of the order in force on the date of the death of the member, and the law provided among other things that should a member die without designating a beneficiary or the beneficiary designated prove to be an unlawful one the wife or husband shall be recognized as the first claimant for the benefit, the by-law is a part of the insurance contract; and the husband of a deceased member is entitled to the amount of the policy in case a stepfather named as beneficiary was decided not to be a member of the deceased's household, even though the association was willing to pay the amount to the designated beneficiary.—Supreme Lodge Order of Mutual Protection v. Dewey, 142 Mich. 666.

¶ 139. Where the charter of a beneficiary society provides that beneficiaries must be such person or persons of the immediate family of the member as are designated by him, or, in default of such family, such blood relative or relatives of such member as are designated by him, and the certificate provides that the beneficiary must be the lawful beneficiary of the member at the time of his death, the mother of the member, who is named in the certificate, cannot claim the proceeds thereof as against his wife and children by a subsequent marriage.—Knights of Columbus v. McInerney, 153 Mich. 574.

¶ 140. Where a certificate of death, under the endowment laws (Art. 1, § 6) and the constitution (Art. 2, § 4) of the Great Camp of Knights of Maccabees, runs to the member and he dies without any direction as to its payment, it can be collected by his legal heirs, especially where such heirs belong to the classes of persons to whom he might have directed it to be made payable. —Peet v. Great Camp of Knights of Maccabees, 83 Mich. 92.

¶ 141. Where a member of a mutual benefit association fails to designate a beneficiary, and dies intestate, his heirs will take the death benefit.—Wolf v. District Grand Lodge No. 6, I. O. B. B., 102 Mich. 23.

¶ 142. Where a by-law of a fraternal insurance association provided that benefits should only be paid or certificates transferred to certain persons named in such by-law, held that, where the beneficiary named in a certificate was not living at the time the insured died, the benefits should be paid to the persons named in the by-law in the order given therein, although the by-law did not so provide.—Switchmen's Union of North America v. Gillerman, 196 Mich. 141.

Adjustment of property rights upon divorce, see Divorce, X.

¶ 143. Under section 7740, Comp. Laws 1897, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 9022, a decree of divorce terminates a wife's interest as beneficiary in a certificate of fraternal insurance on the life of her husband, except where she has a vested interest therein.—Schiller-Bund v. Knack, 184 Mich. 95.

¶ 144. Where the by-laws of a mutual benefit association provide that divorce will ipso facto annul a designation in a benefit certificate in favor of the wife, and where a member of such association has, after obtaining a divorce, revoked the directions in his certificate making his wife the beneficiary, the divorced wife cannot recover the insurance under the statute (section 1, Act No. 119, Pub. Acts 1893), providing that payment of death benefits shall be made only to the widow or other near relatives of the insured, since a divorced wife is not the widow of her former husband after his death.—Dahlin v. Knights of the Modern Maccabees for Michigan, 151 Mich. 644.

¶ 146. A by-law of a mutual benefit society prohibiting a divorced beneficiary from taking under a certificate, held applicable, although not in force when the certificate was issued, where the by-law was adopted previously to the reinstatement of the insured under an application declaring that his contract with the society was subject to the constitution and by-laws then in force. —Knights of Maccabees of the World v. Brown, 186 Mich. 284.

V. FORFEITURE, SUSPENSION, AVOIDANCE, OR CANCELLATION OF CONTRACT.

§ 49. In general; misrepresentation or breach of warranty.

Discipline, fines and expulsion of members, see ante § 8.

Construction of provisions in contract as to forfeiture, see ante § 20.

Failure to observe after enacted by-laws, see ante § 18.

Forfeiture for engaging in sale of intoxicating liquors, see ante § 18.

Defense of fraud set up by the general issue and notice thereunder, see post § 71.

Burden of proving fraud in application, see post § 72.

[Note. The general doctrine, that a material falsity or a breach of warranty or condition in the policy or the contract of insurance will defeat recovery on it, is a part of the general insurance law. For further cases on the subject, see Insurance, XII.]

Fraud and deceit in general, see Fraud.
Fraud vitiating contracts, see Contracts, III, D.

¶ 147. A life insurance policy is void because of false statements in the application where the applicant stated to the examining physician that he did not know whether he had been rejected by any other company, when in fact he knew that he had been rejected.—Genrow v. Modern Woodmen of America, 151 Mich. 250.

¶ 148. The representation as to age in an application for membership in a benefit association is a material warranty where the person's age determines the risk and measures the membership dues, and where misrepresentation is made a ground of forfeiture.—Hunt v. Supreme Council of the Order of Chosen Friends, 64 Mich. 671.

¶ 149. The by-laws of defendant benefit order provided that no insurance should be paid on a member following the trade of metal polisher. The plaintiff's insured stated in his preliminary application to defendant's local lodge that he was a polisher. A local committee investigated his standing and he was duly elected to membership. In his formal application he stated that he was working as a dirt hauler and that he had no regular employment, which statement was true at that time. The insured after becoming a member followed the occupation of metal polisher. Held, defendant could not on these facts maintain its contention that it was not liable for the insurance on the ground that the insured had practiced fraud upon it.—Lessnau v. Catholic Order of Foresters, 163 Mich. 111.

¶ 150. An answer in the application that applicant never had asthma or spitting of blood and had not been rejected by any other medical examiner is not materially false, so as to vitiate the insurance, as matter of law, where the fact was that about eleven years before that insured had been sick of an illness which temporarily caused blood spitting, and had intended to apply for insurance but desisted on being told by the examiner that it would be useless because he had asthma and no examination was made to ascertain the fact, and where all these facts were disclosed to the medical examiner of insurer, who wrote the answers accordingly.—Pudritzky v. Supreme Lodge Knights of Honor, 76 Mich. 428.

¶ 151. Where a mutual benefit insurance certificate provides that such certificate shall be void in case of untruthfulness of any answer, and the insured makes a false answer in his application for a new certificate as to whether he had ever been married, whether he had within the last 7 years consulted any physician with regard to his health, and as to whether he had ever been treated for certain diseases, the beneficiary may not recover on such certificate.—Sowiczki v. Modern Woodmen of America, 192 Mich. 265.

¶ 152. A mere rumor as to the use of liquor and drugs by an applicant for mutual benefit insurance which is communicated by a local officer of the society to a deputy supreme oracle of the head camp after the application is signed and before the policy is signed is not such knowledge as can be made the basis of an estoppel of the insurer to claim fraud in the making of false statements in the application as to the use of liquor and drugs.—Cameron v. Royal Neighbors of America, 197 Mich. 173.

¶ 153. To the question in an application for membership in a mutual benefit society, "Has any examining physician for a life insurance company or order declined to recommend your application?" the applicant answered, "No." The answer was untrue. The application in terms and emphatically made the truth of each answer a condition precedent to the validity of the certificate of insurance issued thereon, and neither the company nor its agent was advised of the falsity of the statement at the time the risk was accepted. Held, that the certificate was void.—Finch v. Modern Woodmen, 113 Mich. 646.

¶ 154. Where the medical examiner of an insurance company, acting as its agent, assumes to write out answers to questions upon his own knowledge of the facts, rather than from the answers of the applicant, the company is not in a position to claim that such answers were untrue and annul the contract.—Pudritzky v. Supreme Lodge Knights of Honor, 76 Mich. 428.

¶ 155. A question in an application for fraternal insurance, whether any member of the applicant's household had been affected with consumption within the previous two years is not limited to living members only, but includes as well such as may have died within that time from such cause.—O'Brien v. Brotherhood of American Yeomen, 183 Mich. 86.

¶ 156. The right of a member of a benefit society to sick benefits, or to sue for them, cannot be evaded by expelling the member upon the theory that his claim is fraudulent.—Wuerthner v. Workingmen's Benevolent Soc., 121 Mich. 90.

§ 50. Failure to pay dues and assessments.

Dues and assessments, see ante, III.
Failure to pay assessments made under order of foreign association, see ante ¶ 41.

¶ 157. The constitution of a mutual benefit society provided that "each member shall pay the amount due, on the notice of the financial secretary, on or before the following 28th day of the month in which he receives the notice. The financial secretary shall notify the president when a member has failed to pay the amount assessed in the required time, and the president shall announce the fact to the assembly, and the member shall stand suspended from the order and all benefits thereof. It shall be the duty of the subordinate secretary to notify the general secretary of such suspension, and also notify the member suspended." The constitution of the local chapter provided that "any member failing to pay his dues * * * within the first month of the quarter shall be declared in arrears, * * * and, if his dues for the quarter are not paid on or before the last meeting night of said quarter, the fact shall be announced by the financial secretary in open assembly, and, if the dues are not paid on or before the next meeting, he shall be declared by the assembly suspended from all benefits of the order." It was further provided by the general constitution that "if a member is delinquent for one or more assessments already called to the benefit fund, or three months or more in arrears for dues, at the time of death, * * * the beneficiary * * * shall not be entitled to benefits from said fund." Held, that the mere failure to pay assessments and dues did not, ipso facto, work a forfeiture of the benefit certificate.—Petherick v. General Assembly of Order of Amaranth, 114 Mich. 420.

¶ 158. Where the by-laws of a fraternal benefit society provide that nonpayment of monthly dues shall defeat recovery, it cannot be urged that such failure should not defeat recovery from a fund which was not derived from monthly dues.—Houle v. Societe St. Jean Baptiste, 153 Mich. 357.

¶ 159. Where a son, charged with a duty to pay the dues of his father in a mutual benefit society, was informed by the secretary of the society that the dues for certain months were paid, such fact will not justify a failure to pay dues for subsequent months.—Houle v. Societe St. Jean Baptiste, 153 Mich. 357.

¶ 160. A grand lodge of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, incorporated under How. St., chap. 118, cannot compel its members to pay assessments made under the orders of a supreme lodge incorporated under the laws of Kentucky and not subject to Michigan courts. Nor can it suspend members from their privileges as such for refusing to pay such assessment.—Lamphere v. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W., 47 Mich. 429.

§ 51. Loss of membership or local charter.

¶ 161. The due suspension of a subordinate tent of the Knights of the Maccabees, though without fault on the part of a particular member and without any notice to him, operates as a suspension, and as a forfeiture of his rights, unless within thirty days he applies for a special certificate.—Peet v. Great Camp of Knights of Maccabees, 83 Mich. 92.

¶ 162. Where a member of a benefit order is suspended, and neither he nor his beneficiary prosecutes an appeal as provided by the by-laws, the beneficiary cannot recover the insurance money.—Conley v. Supreme Court Independent Order of Foresters, 158 Mich. 190.

Effect of crimes on civil and property rights, see Crimes, I, F.

¶ 163. The right of a member of a benefit society to sick benefits cannot be defeated on the ground that the sickness was caused by the member's violation of the laws of health, and his own vice and immorality, where the by-laws of the society provide broadly for the payment of sick benefits, and do not prohibit payment when the illness is due to indiscretion or vice.—Wuerthner v. Workingmen's Benevolent Soc., 121 Mich. 91.

¶ 164. Under a benefit policy containing a provision against self-destruction or suicide, death of the insured by taking carbolic acid, not with the intent of causing death, but to frighten his wife into giving him money, was covered and the beneficiary was not precluded from recovery.—Courtemanche v. Supreme Court, I. O. F., 136 Mich. 30.

¶ 165. The mere fact that an insured procured an abortion upon herself is not conclusive as a defense to a life insurance policy making such policy void for violation of the criminal laws of the state, as the word in its primary meaning is equivalent to miscarriage, and the causing or procuring the same, under Comp. Laws 1897, §§ 11502, 11503, How. 2nd Ed., §§ 14555, 14556, may under certain circumstances be innocent, and even necessary to preserve life.—Gilchrist v. Mystic Workers of the World, 196 Mich. 247.

¶ 166. Where a fraternal society sees fit to recognize the validity of a policy by payment to the beneficiary, an heir of the insured cannot maintain an action against such beneficiary to recover the money so paid, on the ground that the latter had no insurable interest in the life of the deceased, and that the policy was therefore void. Whether the rule is the same in a case where the beneficiary named in a mutual benefit certificate, though a legal beneficiary at common law, is not competent to take under the statute, quære.—Hosmer v. Welch, 107 Mich. 470.

Waiver of proofs of loss, see post § 60.

Failure to instruct as to waiver of forfeiture, see post § 79.

¶ 167. Where a contract of fraternal insurance is made with the general camp of the society, the local camp of which assured is a member cannot waive provisions of the contract on behalf of the society, but such waiver must be by the general camp.—Showalter v. Modern Woodmen of America, 156 Mich. 390.

¶ 168. Forfeiture of fraternal benefit insurance certificates is not favored by law, and if evidence of a beneficiary shows that officers of a lodge, by a long continued course of conduct waived strict compliance with rules and regulations as to the payment of assessments, a forfeiture would be inequitable and unjust.—Wallace v. Fraternal Mystic Circle, 121 Mich. 263.

¶ 170. A beneficial society cannot be held to have waived the defense of forfeiture of the policy through the fact that the member has engaged in the prohibited occupation by reason of the fact that it has failed to return the assessments paid, where an offer to return has been made conditioned that it should be in full of the certificate, the amount thereof to be determined.—Brown v. Great Camp Knights of Modern Maccabees, 167 Mich. 123.

¶ 171. Where a fraternal insurance policy excepted the risk of death resulting from engaging in certain prohibited occupations, but left the policy in force as to death occurring from other causes while insured was so engaged, the acceptance of assessments from one engaged in a prohibited occupation does not constitute a waiver of the exemption from liability, as the society may assume that such payments are made to continue the policy in force according to its terms.—Showalter v. Modern Woodmen of America, 156 Mich. 390.

¶ 172. Failure of the officers of a fraternal insurance society to return the amount of an assessment to the representative of assured, upon learning of the fact of his death while engaged in a prohibited employment, does not amount to a ratification of a waiver by the local body of assured's act in engaging in such business, where no demand for such return was ever made upon such officers.—Showalter v. Modern Woodmen of America, 156 Mich. 390.

¶ 173. A benefit association which by a by-law prohibits members from belonging to a society not approved by the Catholic Church, waives such provision by accepting dues from a member known by its officers to belong to an unapproved society.—Dorff v. St. Adalbert's Aid Society, 157 Mich. 516.

¶ 174. The collection of an assessment from a member of a mutual benefit society does not constitute a waiver by the society of a provision in the benefit certificate that it should be void if the statements contained in the application for membership were untrue, where the officers were not aware of any false statements when they accepted payment.—Finch v. Modern Woodmen, 113 Mich. 646.

¶ 175. The acceptance of a past due assessment and the continued receipt of dues by a local agent of a beneficial association and his subsequent forwarding them to the association, is held to constitute a waiver of the condition in the policy that the membership would be terminated and reinstated only if the member were in good health and that no waiver could be claimed unless specifically authorized in writing.—Lord v. National Protective Soc., 134 Mich. 357.

¶ 176. The right to expel or suspend a member of a mutual fraternal society for nonpayment of assessments, held waived, where for many years he had been habitually slow in making payments, without action for his expulsion or suspension being taken by the local body, and at the time of his death, the amount of his arrearage had been paid by that body to the grand lodge.—Homann v. Allgemeiner Arbeiter Bund of Michigan, 184 Mich. 417.

¶ 177. The dues of the insured in defendant benefit society had not been paid for January and February. The defendant had printed a supply of cards to be sent by the local secretaries to delinquent members. On March 13th the local secretary sent one of these cards to the insured, who immediately paid the dues to the secretary. Held, the act of the company in supplying these cards did not amount to holding out on its part that it would waive delinquencies in payments so as to excuse the insured for the aforesaid delayed payment. — Koehler v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 160 Mich. 180.

¶ 178. A statement by a member of a mutual benefit society to some of his fellow members, to the effect that he is unable to keep up the assessments, and will be compelled to drop the insurance, will not bar him or the beneficiary named in the membership certificate from asserting a claim for death benefits, where the general constitution and the constitution of the local chapter provide for formal proceedings before suspension and forfeiture can be declared.—Petherick v. General Assembly of Order of Amaranth, 114 Mich. 420.

¶ 179. Where a mutual benefit association, with full knowledge that a deceased charter member had at the instance of an organizer misstated his age in his application for membership, bases its refusal to pay the death benefit solely upon the failure of the member to designate a beneficiary, the association is estopped, in a suit afterwards brought to recover said death benefit, from asserting such misstatement as to age as a defense.—Wolf v. District Grand Lodge No. 6 I. O. B. B., 102 Mich. 23.

¶ 180. The refusal of a benefit society to pay a death claim on the distinct ground that the assured had never paid an assessment, waived the defense that the assured made false statements in relation to prior illness in his application; where the society knew of such misstatements at the time of said refusal to pay.—Taylor v. Supreme Lodge Columbian League, 135 Mich. 231.

¶ 181. The defense that insured was pregnant when she applied for membership and had stated in her application that she was not, is not waived by the failure of the officers of the association to attend at the appointed time and place for hearing an appeal after inferior officers had totally denied the claim for death benefits.—Clark v. North American Union, 179 Mich. 131.

¶ 182. Letters from an insurance company to a beneficiary under a certificate of fraternal insurance, relating only to proofs of loss necessary to present the claim, do not amount to a waiver of the defense of misrepresentation by the insured as to the state of her health.—O'Brien v. Brotherhood of American Yeomen, 183 Mich. 86.

¶ 183. A fraternal insurance society is not estopped from contesting the payment of a claim on the ground that an expense has been incurred in preparing proofs of loss, where on furnishing blank proofs it expressly states that it denies liability and in furnishing the blanks waives no rights to deny such liability.—Showalter v. Modern Woodmen of America, 156 Mich. 390.

¶ 183a. It cannot be urged that the grand lodge of a fraternal benefit society waives the provision that no certificate shall be issued to an applicant until he has been initiated where dues of a person not initiated are received and retained by the lodge under the mistaken belief that such person is a member and are tendered back upon discovery of the mistake.—Kolosinski v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 175 Mich. 684.

¶ 183b. Where a by-law of a fraternal benefit society states that officers do not possess the power to waive by-laws, a provision that a benefit certificate shall not be delivered to an applicant until he has been initiated, is not waived though an officer issues a certificate to one who has not been initiated.—Kolosinski v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 175 Mich. 684.

§ 55. Proceedings or acts to effectuate forfeiture or suspension.

Proceedings to discipline, fine or suspend member, see ante § 9.
Proceedings for benefits, see post § 67.
Conclusiveness of internal proceedings and decision in respect to benefits, see post § 68.

¶ 184. The provision in the constitution of the Order of the Amaranth to the effect that a failure to pay assessments and dues on a mutual benefit certificate issued by such order works a forfeiture of the certificate, is of no force by itself; some affirmative action is necessary to work such forfeiture.—Dick v. General Assembly Order of the Amaranth, 150 Mich. 215.

¶ 186. Where the by-laws of a fraternal benefit society provide that no member can pretend to the benefits of the society if he has neglected for three months to pay his monthly dues, a member cannot contend that, until the society has taken action suspending him, or until his name has been erased from the registry, he is entitled to benefits.—Houle v. Societe St. Jean Baptiste, 153 Mich. 357.

¶ 188. A letter notifying a member of a fraternal benevolent society of his expulsion from the society which was received and acted upon by him, although not registered as required by the by-laws of the society, was sufficient to warrant expulsion.—Simek v. Lodge No. 86, Bohemian Slavonian Benevolent Soc., 118 Mich. 81.

¶ 189. The objection that a bill to cancel a benefit certificate for fraud is unnecessary because the bill alleges that the society assumed to cancel and annul the certificate, is unavailing where the binding force of the attempt at cancellation is denied.—Mactavish v. Kent Circuit Judge, 122 Mich. 242.

¶ 189a. Where the constitution of a mutual insurance association provides that members forfeit their rights to benefits by failure to pay assessments, and that notice of delinquency must be given by the secretary within a certain time after which a specified time for payment is allowed, a positive duty is imposed on the society to give such notice and in the absence thereof the member's rights are not forfeited.—Roulo v. Schiller Bund, 172 Mich. 557.

¶ 189b. Where the constitution of a mutual insurance association provides that it is the duty of the secretary to notify members of delinquency in the payment of assessments before a certain time and the by-laws which closely follow another article of the constitution specify that dues must be paid within a certain time or the member loses all benefits but such article further provides that members delinquent in the payment of dues and assessments are to be treated alike before rights are forfeited, the by-laws and the constitution may be construed to be in harmony and notice by the secretary must be given as required in case of delinquency in either the payment of dues or assessments before the rights of the member to benefits are forfeited.—Roulo v. Schiller Bund, 172 Mich. 557.

Suspension or expulsion of member, see ante § 8.

Mandamus to compel reinstatement, see Mandamus.

¶ 190. A suspended member of a fraternal benefit association can be reinstated only in strict conformity with the laws of the order.—Edgerly v. Ladies of Modern Maccabees, 185 Mich. 148.

¶ 191. A suspended member of a fraternal benefit association has only such rights to reinstatement as exist at the time of his application therefor; and he cannot complain of changes that may have occurred in the order during the time of his suspension.—Edgerly v. Ladies of Modern Maccabees, 185 Mich. 148.

¶ 192. A member of a fraternal benefit association who voluntarily and deliberately drops out of the order, and who receives notice of suspension for nonpayment of dues, does not, in the absence of a law of the society, automatically acquire any rights under a special dispensation issued during his suspension, relating to the reinstatement of suspended members; and he may be reinstated only by making application to the local body of which he is a member, in the manner required by such dispensation.—Edgerly v. Ladies of Modern Maccabees, 185 Mich. 148.

¶ 193. Failure of a member of a fraternal insurance association, who has been suspended for nonpayment of dues, to furnish a certificate of good health at the time of reinstatement, as the laws of the society required, renders the reinstatement nugatory.—Edgerly v. Ladies of Modern Maccabees, 185 Mich. 148.

¶ 194. The dues of the insured in defendant benefit society had not been paid for January and February. By the by-laws, his policy was void for lapse. On March 14th the local secretary, in ignorance of the fatal illness of the insured, received the premium. The by-laws provided that good health was a prerequisite to reinstatement. Held, even if the local secretary might waive the lapse, he could not do so while in ignorance of the illness of the deceased.—Koehler v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 160 Mich. 180.

VI. ACCRUAL AND AMOUNT OF BENEFITS.

Risks and causes insured against, see ante § 21.

Instruction as to what constitutes total disability, see post ¶ 292.

¶ 195. The beneficiary named in a certificate issued by a benefit association has no present interest, during the member's life, either in the certificate or in the fund from which payment is to be made.—Lorscher v. Supreme Lodge Knights of Honor, 72 Mich. 316.

§ 58. Amount payable and changes of amount.

VII. NOTICE PROOFS AND ADJUSTMENT; PAYMENT AND DISCHARGE.

Presumptions as to proof of death, see post § 72.

Admissibility in evidence of certificate of death, see post § 74.

Questions of law and fact as to cause of death, see post § 77.

Notices generally, see Notices.
Notice and proofs of loss in life and accident insurance, see Insurance, XV.

¶ 197. The constitution of a benefit society provided that further proofs of death might be required if deemed necessary by the supreme commander, who might prescribe a form therefor. After proofs had been furnished, the treasurer of the society demanded further proofs, and the payment of the death benefit was resisted on the ground that such demand was not complied with. It did not appear that the supreme commander ever acted upon the subject. Held, that the constitution only justified the society in demanding further proofs when deemed necessary by the supreme commander, and that this discretion could not be transferred by that officer or vested in another.—Tessman v. Supreme Commandery of United Friends, 103 Mich. 185.

¶ 197a. It is competent for a mutual benefit association to provide a by-law to which all parties assent, which makes a finding of liability by the duly constituted committees of the order a condition precedent to a right to receive benefits.—Hembeau v. Great Camp of Knights of Maccabees, 101 Mich. 161.

Waiver by making proofs of loss, see post ¶ 210.

¶ 198. A benefit society which denies all liability, thereby waives proof of loss and limitation of time for bringing action provided in the certificate to run from time of proofs.—Phillips v. U. S. Benevolent Society, 120 Mich. 142.

¶ 199. Where a mutual benefit association has expressly waived the right to require that the beneficiary in the certificate of insurance shall submit proofs of death in the form prescribed by the regulations of the association, it cannot subsequently demand that formal proofs be furnished as a prerequisite to a consideration of the claim.—Fillmore v. Great Camp Knights of Maccabees, 109 Mich. 13.

¶ 201. It is reasonable that the sick committee of a mutual benefit society should be vested with authority to determine whether a member claiming to be sick is entitled to the benefit provided by the by-law, and also when such benefit should cease.—Van Poucke v. Netherland St. Vincent De Paul Soc., 63 Mich. 378.

Personal liability of officers and members for disability or death benefits, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 20.

¶ 202. A provision in the constitution of a local mutual benefit society authorizing it to provide for the widows and orphans of deceased members does not authorize it to pay a benefit certificate issued to one of its members by the state society of which the local was a member.—Kern v. Arbeiter Unterstuetzungs Verein, 139 Mich. 233.

§ 63. Deduction for unpaid assessments.

¶ 203. On the nonpayment by a member of a mutual benefit association of an increased rate of assessment, the amount thereof may be deducted from a payment made the beneficiary on the death of such member.—DeGraw v. Supreme Court, I. O. F., 182 Mich. 366.

¶ 204. The beneficiary in a benefit certificate was bound by the contract made by the insured in relation to the trial of claims before a tribunal provided by the articles of association and by-laws.—Derry v. Great Hive L. O. T. M. M., 135 Mich. 494.

¶ 205. Plaintiff in joining a benefit society agreed to abide by by-laws subsequently made. The society passed a by-law requiring beneficiaries to apply to a tribunal established within the order to settle disputed death claims before resorting to the courts. Held, such a by-law was reasonable. —Monger v. New Era Ass'n, 156 Mich. 645.

¶ 206. Plaintiff in joining a benefit society agreed to abide by by-laws subsequently made. The society passed a by-law requiring beneficiaries to apply to a tribunal within the society to settle disputed claims before resorting to the courts. The said by-law did not in any way repudiate plaintiff's contract. Held, it was not invalid as infringing a vested right.—Monger v. New Era Ass'n, 156 Mich. 645.

¶ 207. Where the by-laws of a benefit order specify that a beneficiary shall exhaust all steps provided in the by-laws to obtain the insurance money before bringing suit, recovery cannot be had until such steps are taken.—Conley v. Supreme Court Independent Order of Foresters, 158 Mich. 190.

¶ 208. Where a by-law of a benefit society requires beneficiaries to apply to a tribunal within the order to settle disputed death claims, such a course must be pursued to the end before resort may be had to the courts.—Monger v. New Era Ass'n, 156 Mich. 645.

¶ 209. The certificate in a benefit order contained a provision that no suit could be brought on the policy until the claim had been submitted to and passed upon by the board of directors of the order. Held, no suit could be maintained until this provision had been complied with.—Larkin v. Modern Woodmen of America, 163 Mich. 670.

¶ 210. A claimant against a beneficial association not satisfied with a denial of liability but insisting upon making proofs of loss, waives any claim of fraud in the denial of the claim occurring before the submission of proofs and the hearing before the trustees, and may not sue until such hearing has been had as stipulated.—Hoag v. Supreme Lodge of International Congress, 134 Mich. 87.

¶ 211. Constitutional provisions or by-laws of benefit societies rendering the determination of questions, such as the right to sick benefits, final, and prohibiting recourse to courts of law, should be strictly construed, as they abridge common-law rights. In the absence of such provisions, it will not be held that a member is precluded from resorting to the courts.—Wuerthner v. Workingmen's Benevolent Soc., 121 Mich. 90.

¶ 211a. An action on a matured relief-fund certificate will not be dismissed upon the objection, raised for the first time at the trial, that the suit is prematurely brought, because the association is entitled to time within which to levy an assessment for the purpose of raising money to meet the claim, where it does not also appear to support such defense that the funds on hand are insufficient to pay the same, or that an assessment is necessary.—Wheeler v. Supreme Sitting of Order of Iron Hall, 110 Mich. 437.

¶ 211b. The constitution of a mutual insurance society furnished a forum to determine the rights of disputed claims. The attorney for a beneficiary under a death certificate attended a meeting, but did not present any proof or make avail of a subsequent invitation to take the matter up with the supreme council, and the administrator of the beneficiary took no steps to present the claim to the council. Held, there was no fraud or oppression practiced by the society, the remedy of their forum was not exhausted and a verdict should have been directed.—O'Neill v. Ancient Order of Gleaners, 176 Mich. 628.

¶ 213. A decision by local lodges and officers that the purchase of brewery stock was an engagement in the manufacture or sale of malt liquors, when made in an honest belief that it was correct, and a rejection of a death claim accordingly, does not show fraud which will allow the certificate holder to resort to the courts in the first instance without submitting to the decision of the ultimate tribunal within the society as provided in the by-laws binding on the member. —Fillmore v. Great Camp of Knights of Maccabees, 103 Mich. 437.

¶ 214. Resort to the ultimate tribunal within the society is not excused on the ground that the case had been prejudged without a hearing, where the primary tribunal, an executive committee empowered thereto, had decided that a certificate was forfeited by purchase of brewery stock by insured—supposed by the committee to have constituted an engagement in the manufacture or sale of malt liquors—and no appeal was taken to the ultimate tribunal, the "Great Camp," but one of the Great Camp's officers had previously advised the executive committee on its request that the certificate was invalid.—Fillmore v. Great Camp Knights of Maccabees, 103 Mich. 437.

¶ 216. Plaintiff, a beneficiary under a benefit society certificate, notified the society by letter of the death of the insured, and asked for proof of death blanks. The society replied, inclosing the preliminary death notice, directed plaintiff to fill in the same, and stated that it would upon receiving it back, send a full set of blanks. Plaintiff sent in the notice, and defendant replied, declining to send the blanks, and assigning as a reason that the insured had ceased to be a member before his death. Held, this conduct of the society did not relieve plaintiff from the obligation to submit further proofs and appeal to the tribunal established by the by-laws, within the society, for settling disputed claims before resorting to the courts.—Monger v. New Era Ass'n, 156 Mich. 645.

¶ 217. The by-laws of defendant benefit order provided that the clerks of local camps should be agents of the local camp, and not of the head camp, and also that no local officer should have authority to waive conditions in the membership contract. Held, the clerk of a local camp had no power to release a beneficiary from the duty of exhausting his remedies within the order before bringing suit on a certificate of insurance.—Larkin v. Modern Woodmen of America, 163 Mich. 670.

¶ 218. An agent of a benefit order told a beneficiary claiming insurance that if she would pay a part of the insurance money to her daughter-in-law, the order would pay the claim. The beneficiary did not act on this suggestion, nor incur any expense in reliance upon it, but in fact declined it. Held, the language did not amount to a waiver of provisions requiring the beneficiary to exhaust remedies within the order before bringing suit.—Larkin v. Modern Woodmen of America, 163 Mich. 670.

¶ 219. Where a beneficiary of an insurance policy in a benefit order fails to appeal to the tribunals of the society because of an omission of its officers to notify him of the decision of his case, the fact that he thereafter seeks to have the higher courts of the order voluntarily hear his case does not prevent his resorting to the law courts.—Ruterbusch v. Supreme Court Independent Order of Foresters, 162 Mich. 213.

¶ 220. Where a clause in a certificate in a benefit order provides that no suit shall be brought thereon until the claim shall have been filed and passed upon by the board of directors, but fixes no time within which they must act, they are required to act within a reasonable time.—Larkin v. Modern Woodmen of America, 163 Mich. 670.

¶ 221. The board of directors of a benefit order investigated a claim on an insurance certificate and had good reason to suspect that the insured had violated the by-laws and invalidated his insurance by over-indulgence in intoxicating liquors. They delayed nine months in passing on the claim. Held, the delay was not so unreasonable as to relieve the beneficiary from the duty of waiting until such claim was passed on before bringing suit, as required by the by-laws.—Larkin v. Modern Woodmen of America, 163 Mich. 670.

¶ 222. A beneficiary in a fraternal insurance organization is entitled to a full hearing on a benefit claim before the board, provided by the association for that purpose, and a preliminary investigation with ex parte affidavits against the claim and without any opportunity by the beneficiary to examine the affiants at the hearing is not a bona fide hearing.—Rose v. Supreme Court, Order of Patricians, 126 Mich. 577.

¶ 223. Where by the by-laws of a fraternal insurance organization the beneficiary must take an appeal to the supreme court of that organization, he is entitled to a hearing before the entire supreme court and a hearing before a committee of the supreme court is not in compliance with this provision.—Rose v. Supreme Court, Order of Patricians, 126 Mich. 577.

¶ 224. A beneficiary in a benefit certificate was not denied the hearing to which he was entitled upon an appeal to the great hive, because the affidavits and other proofs were not read to the delegates, where the claimant was represented by counsel and the affidavits were not in fact read, but where the hearing proceeded upon the assumption that the affidavits and an unverified physician's certificate which indicated the invalidity of the claim, constituted the record and were referred to as such in argument.—Barker v. Great Hive L. O. T. M. M., 135 Mich. 499.

¶ 225. Delegates of the "great hive" of a benefit association, who heard the appeal from a benefit claim, complied with their duty to acquaint themselves with the case before them, either by reading the affidavits or by listening to counsel's statements; it also being the duty of counsel to present the case.—Barker v. Great Hive L. O. T. M. M., 135 Mich. 499.

¶ 226. A beneficiary in a benefit certificate, who upon the hearing of an appeal to the great hive, asked the delegates to consider his evidence upon ex parte affidavits, could not object to the consideration of opposing evidence of like character.—Barker v. Great Hive L. O. T. M. M., 135 Mich. 499.

¶ 227. Where the rules of an insurance lodge provide that an injured person must appeal from a decision by the supreme executive as to his claim within twenty days after the decision is rendered, and that the parties interested shall be notified at once whenever a decision is made, a party not duly notified until more than the twenty days have passed, is deprived of any opportunity to comply with the rules, and has exhausted all the remedies of the order before bringing suit at law, according to a further requirement of the rules of the lodge, though he made no appeal after the decision was finally made known to him.—Steiner v. Supreme Court Independent Order Foresters, 149 Mich. 567.

¶ 228. Where no notice is given to a beneficiary of a certificate of a decision adverse to him by the supreme chief ranger, the by-law requiring an appeal to be taken within twenty days is waived.—Ruterbusch v. Supreme Court Independent Order of Foresters, 162 Mich. 213.

Conclusiveness of decisions of quasi-judicial bodies, see Former Adjudication, II, A.

¶ 229. A provision in the laws of a mutual benefit association making final the decision of a tribunal created by the constitution to pass upon death claims, and barring any suit at law or in equity, was sustained against objection that it was contrary to public policy as ousting the courts of jurisdiction.—Canfield v. Great Camp of Knights of Maccabees, 87 Mich. 626.

¶ 230. A member of a mutual benefit society can only recover sick benefits according to the provisions of the by-laws, and if they provide for a committee to determine the question whether he is sick, its decision is final.—Van Poucke v. Netherland St. Vincent De Paul Soc., 63 Mich. 378.

¶ 231. A good faith determination by the superior body of a beneficial organization of questions submitted to it, is binding.—Barker v. Great Hive L. O. T. M. M., 135 Mich. 499.

¶ 232. A beneficiary in a benefit certificate, who without objection acquiesced in the mode of submitting evidence in the form of affidavits, provided by the articles of association and by-laws of the association in question, in relation to the trial of claims, and who participated at the hearing upon appeal to the great hive and made no demand that witnesses be produced, was concluded by a finding adverse to the claim, made in good faith and in the usual course.—Derry v. Great Hive L. O. T. M. M., 135 Mich. 494.

¶ 233. The finding adverse to a claim, upon an appeal to the superior body of a benefit association, was not invalidated by the fact that the medical examiner at the hearing before such body referred to statements made to her by one of the decedent's neighbors, where the defendant's attorney promptly told the members that it was their duty not to consider such reference.—Derry v. Great Hive L. O. T. M. M., 135 Mich. 494.

¶ 234. The validity of a decision by the great hive of a beneficial organization, after legal and fair hearing, could not be affected by such an irregularity as not affording counsel for the claimant an opportunity of being present at the announcement of the decision by the first committee, where such counsel had been theretofore fully heard.—Barker v. Great Hive L. O. T. M. M., 135 Mich. 499.

¶ 235. The determination of the delegates of the great hive of a benefit organization, adverse to a benefit claim, was not invalid because there was read to them an unsworn physician's certificate, where counsel's objection was not based upon the lack of verification, nor on the ground that it was not a part of the proofs taken before the executive committee, but upon the ground that he had a right to cross-examine.—Barker v. Great Hive L. O. T. M. M., 135 Mich. 499.

¶ 236. The inference necessarily to be implied from the submission of a controversy regarding a claim under a benefit certificate, to the great hive of the organization, consisting of several hundred lay delegates, was that the only rule for the admission and exclusion of testimony was that of common fairness.—Barker v. Great Hive L. O. T. M. M., 135 Mich. 499.

¶ 236b. The conclusive character of a determination of a beneficial association's supreme tribunal on a death claim provided by the insurance contract may be assailed when such determination is set up as a matter of defense to an action on the claim, without proceeding in equity to set it aside. —Dick v. Supreme Body of the International Congress, 138 Mich. 372, Hooker and Grant, JJ., dissenting.

¶ 236c. The laws of a mutual benefit association confined beneficiaries to widows, relatives within the first degree of kinship, and dependents, and provided that the executive committee should have power to pass on all death claims, and that its decision should be final unless appealed from to a higher body, the decision of which body should bar any suit at law or in equity by the beneficiary to recover the insurance. A member named as beneficiary an alleged dependent, and the executive committee rejected the claim of the beneficiary on the ground that he was not such dependent, and the higher body affirmed the decision on appeal. The beneficiary sued to recover the insurance, and alleged that, at the time decedent became a member, the agent of the order assured him that plaintiff was a dependent, within the meaning of the policy. There was no averment of any facts tending to show fraud on the part of the executive committee or the higher body. Held, that, this being so, one of the very questions which they had to determine was the effect of any alleged statements which plaintiff was able to prove had been made by the agent; and that the determination being adverse, there could be no recovery in an action at law.—Hembeau v. Great Camp of Knights of Maccabees, 101 Mich. 161.

¶ 236d. A provision in the by-laws of a mutual benefit association that a tribunal created thereby shall have power to pass upon all death claims, which decision shall be final, and bar any suit at law or in equity, does not so far contravene public policy as to permit members who contract with reference to it, or their beneficiaries, to seek relief in the state courts, rather than in those of the order.—Fillmore v. Great Camp of Knights of Maccabees, 103 Mich. 437.

¶ 236f. Where the constitution and laws of a fraternal benefit order, made a part of the policy of insurance, provide that the beneficiary must appeal to the tribunals established within the order and shall file no suit at law or equity against the order on a claim, the beneficiary cannot take the judgment of such tribunals, and thereafter, the judgment being adverse and no fraudulent conduct being charged or relied upon, pursue his remedy in the courts of the state. —Monger v. New Era Ass'n, 171 Mich. 614.

¶ 239. A notice under the general issue setting out the provisions of the application, certificate, and by-laws is sufficient to admit the defense that the member engaged in a prohibited occupation after his admission to membership.—Brown v. Great Camp Knights of Modern Maccabees, 167 Mich. 123.

¶ 240. Under subdivision d of Circuit Court Rule 7, a life insurance company cannot avail itself of the failure to furnish proofs of loss as required by the policy as a defense unless it adds to its plea a notice indicating the facts relied upon.—Gilchrist v. Mystic Workers of the World, 188 Mich. 466.

¶ 241. In an action upon a benefit certificate defendant gave notice under the general issue that he would show that the certificate was procured by false statements in the application and to the medical examiner, and that material facts concerning the applicant's health were concealed. Held, that under such notice evidence of a particular disease from which the member was suffering was admissible.—Briesenmeister v. Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias, 81 Mich. 525.

¶ 242. In a suit on a policy of insurance in a benefit order, the only defense set up by defendant's plea of the general issue and notice thereunder was that the insured practiced fraud upon the defendant by misrepresenting to it in the application the nature of his employment. Held, that under this plea plaintiff did not have to show that she furnished proofs of death or that the deceased was a member in good standing.—Lessnau v. Catholic Order of Foresters, 163 Mich. 111.

Presumption of death, see ante ¶ 60.
Presumption that member in good standing continued such, see ante ¶ 15.

¶ 243. A certificate of membership in a mutual benefit society is proof of the good standing of the member at the time the certificate was issued, and such good standing will be presumed to have continued unless the contrary is made to appear.—Petherick v. General Assembly of Order of Amaranth, 114 Mich. 420.

¶ 244. In an action on a policy of life insurance the payment of the premiums by the assured is presumed until the contrary is proven.—Rousseau v. Brotherhood of American Yeomen, 186 Mich. 101.

¶ 245. An unanswered question in an application for a benefit certificate raises no inference for or against the applicant.—Briesenmeister v. Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias, 81 Mich. 525.

¶ 246. It must be presumed that an insured who is questioned by the principal officer of a local camp through an interpreter was fully advised, and understood the nature of the questions as to whether he had been married, whether he had within the last 7 years consulted any physician in regard to his health, and whether he had been treated for specified diseases, and his answers in the application signed by him.—Sowiczki v. Modern Woodmen of America, 192 Mich. 265.

¶ 247. If the subordinate lodge has the duty of reporting a member's death to the supreme lodge, which refuses payment on the ground of fraud in the application, it will be presumed that the requisite proofs of death were made.—Loscher v. Knights of Honor, 72 Mich. 316.

¶ 248. In an action against a mutual benefit society on a certificate issued by it, the burden of proving fraud in the application for insurance is on defendant.—Lorscher v. Supreme Lodge Knights of Honor, 72 Mich. 316.

¶ 249. In an action on a mutual benefit certificate the burden of proof is on plaintiff to prove such knowledge on the part of the insurer of the habits of deceased as to constitute an estoppel to set up the defense of false statements in the application as to the use of liquor and drugs.—Cameron v. Royal Neighbors of America, 197 Mich. 173.

¶ 250. The burden of showing that the order did not amend its articles so as to permit the insured to substitute his brothers and sisters in place of his wife as beneficiary of an insurance policy, is upon the party who asserts it, and it must be shown by affirmative and not negative proof.—Grand Lodge Ancient Order United Workmen v. Brown, 160 Mich. 437.

¶ 251. Where the defense of suicide is relied upon to defeat an action on an insurance policy, the company has the burden of proof to establish the fact of suicide.—Ruterbusch v. Supreme Court Independent Order of Foresters, 162 Mich. 213.

¶ 252. As the burden of showing a particular facts rests upon the party within whose knowledge such fact peculiarly lies, a mutual benefit society the by-laws of which restrict its liability to the amount realized from one assessment upon its members, has the burden when sued for benefits, of showing the number of its members in order to establish that the amount to be realized would be less than plaintiff claims.—Gnau v. Masons' Frat. Acc. Ass'n, 109 Mich. 527.

Edgerly v. Ladies of Modern Maccabees, 175 Mich. 28.

¶ 253. Where, under defendant's association's laws, the contract is complete upon examination of an applicant, approval of the application by the supreme lodge, signing of the certificate of membership, and forwarding such certificate to the subordinate lodge for delivery to the member, the beneficiary who sues for the benefit fund is excused from producing the certificate upon the trial, if the subordinate lodge retains the certificate because of fraud in the application.—Lorscher v. Supreme Lodge Knights of Honor, 72 Mich. 316.

¶ 254. The duty of producing the certificate is on the insurer, where there is sufficient testimony to enable the jury to determine what the contract of insurance was, and the certificate contains special provisions or limitations which do not appear from the constitution and regulations and other evidence in the case.—Lorscher v. Supreme Lodge Knights of Honor, 72 Mich. 316.

¶ 255. In order to show false statements and concealment of material facts, evidence of a particular disease afflicting decedent is admissible.—Briesenmeister v. Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias, 81 Mich. 525.

¶ 256. That part of a death certificate of a woman containing the words "contributory abortion" is a proper part of the certificate required by statute (Comp. Laws 1897, § 4616, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 1579, which requires certificates of death from the attending physician, stating the immediate and contributory causes of death); and such certificate is admissible to prove the cause.—Gilchrist v. Mystic Workers of the World, 188 Mich. 466.

¶ 257. The words "said by deceased to have been performed by Dr. ———," relating to an abortion performed by him are not a proper part of the certificate of death of a woman required by statute (Comp. Laws 1897, § 4616, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 1579), and accordingly are not admissible to prove the cause.—Gilchrist v. Mystic Workers of the World, 188 Mich. 466.

¶ 258. The recital of age in a certificate of membership in a benefit society would perhaps avail plaintiff to make out a case on such certificate had no inquiry been made as to age; but it is merely the decedent's own statement, and could avail nothing against testimony.—Hunt v. Supreme Council of the Order of Chosen Friends, 64 Mich. 671.

¶ 259. The presumption of good standing is not overcome, in an action for death benefits, by the introduction in evidence of a book of the deceased, which contains a printed statement of quarterly dues, with spaces for the entry of the date of payment and the name of the financial secretary, showing no entry of payments as to two quarters' dues; especially if the same book fails to credit assessments proved to have been paid.—Petherick v. General Assembly of Order of Amaranth, 114 Mich. 420.

¶ 261. The finding of a jury that a certificate in a beneficial association was issued to the deceased is sufficiently supported by undisputed facts that she signed the original petition for a charter for the local lodge, that she made application for medical examination, that in that application reference was made to her application for membership, that she paid to the proper officer of the defendant the dues necessary to become a member, that she was examined and approved by the medical examiner, that she tendered the first assessment which was received under protest, testimony by the presiding officer of the local lodge that he signed a certificate issued to her and gave it to the recording secretary, testimony by the recording secretary that there was a certificate issued to her, that he left it in a drawer in his possession, that it disappeared from there, that he did not know what became of it, that it was in the same form as certificates issued to other members, and testimony by another charter member that she had seen the certificate issued in the name of the member in question, although evidence on the part of the defendant shows that the name of the alleged member did not appear upon the association's records, and that there was no record of any fees or assessments received from her.—Wagner v. Supreme Lodge Knights and Ladies of Honor, 128 Mich. 660.

¶ 263. In an action on a life insurance policy, in which the defense was that insured was guilty of having procured a criminal operation upon herself in violation of the terms of the policy making it void for violation of the criminal laws of the state, evidence held insufficient to establish the defense that insured procured a criminal abortion upon herself.—Gilchrist v. Mystic Workers of the World, 196 Mich. 247.

¶ 264. In a suit upon an accident policy, plaintiff testified, that while washing clothes water splashed into her eye; that she rubbed the same with her hand; that her eye became inflamed; that she consulted a specialist and was treated by him, and that she lost the sight of said eye. She stated that she had no knowledge of the disease of gonorrhea being in her family; and that the clothes washed were family clothes. Her physician testified that the eye was afflicted with gonorrhea. Defendant offered no evidence, and made no motion for a new trial. Held, a verdict for plaintiff should not be reversed on the ground that the evidence showed plaintiff lost her eye from disease and not from accident.—Sullivan v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 167 Mich. 524.

¶ 265. In a suit upon an accident policy, plaintiff testified that while washing clothes water splashed into her eye; that she rubbed the same with her hand; that her eye became inflamed; that she consulted a specialist and was treated by him; and that she lost the sight of said eye. She stated that she had no knowledge of the disease of gonorrhea being in her family; and that the clothes washed were family clothes. Her physician testified that the eye was afflicted with gonorrhea. Defendant offered no evidence, and made no motion for a new trial. Held, a verdict for plaintiff should not be reversed on the ground of the improbability under the evidence that the gonorrhea resulted from the splashing of the water in plaintiff's eye.—Sullivan v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 167 Mich. 524.

¶ 266. In an action on a mutual benefit insurance certificate where the deceased was questioned by a medical officer of the local camp through an interpreter as to whether he had ever been married, whether within the last 7 years he had consulted a physician in regard to his health, and whether he had ever been treated for such specified diseases, and the examiner testified that these questions were asked and answered through the interpreter and that he asked them correctly and recorded them as answered, evidence held insufficient to overcome the presumption that the deceased was fully advised and understood the nature of such questions so as to create a question for the jury.—Sowiczki v. Modern Woodmen of America, 192 Mich. 265.

¶ 267. Where the proof of loss stated that one cause of death of the insured was a self-inflicted wound, such admission is simply an item of evidence, to be weighed by the jury with other evidence, and it is not compulsory upon the jury to find that death resulted from suicide.—Ferris v. Loyal Americans of the Republic, 152 Mich. 314.

¶ 268. The question whether or not a member of a mutual benefit society was over 45 at the time he became a member is for the jury, upon evidence which either leaves a question of the identity of the member with the person whose age it tends to show, or which is inferential leaving a possibility of his having been less than 45 when he joined.—Reis v. Arbeiter Unterstuetzung Verein, No. 2, 111 Mich. 127.

¶ 269. Where there is medical testimony showing that at the time of making application for insurance the insured, contrary to her express warranties as to the condition of her health, was suffering from an incurable malady, testimony of laymen to the contrary does not raise an issue of fact for the jury.—O'Brien v. Brotherhood of American Yeomen, 183 Mich. 86.

¶ 270. In an action on a mutual benefit insurance certificate, where the evidence was conflicting as to the condition of health of the insured at the time he applied for reinstatement after suspension for nonpayment of dues, held that it was a question for the jury whether the insured was in fact in good health.—Sowiczki v. Modern Woodmen of America, 192 Mich. 265.

¶ 271. In an action upon an insurance certificate in which the defendant set up as a defense an alleged fraudulent statement in the medical examiner's blank as to pregnancy, held that under the evidence the question as to whether the examiner actually asked the insured if she was pregnant, and whether she answered falsely, was properly submitted to the jury.—Clark v. North American Union, 189 Mich. 589.

¶ 272. In an action upon a benefit policy, where the defense was that no assessment was ever paid, and where the certificate contained a recital that it was issued in consideration of the membership fees and the payment of dues, and where the soliciting agent had remitted the membership fee, the jury might well have drawn the inference that such dues were paid.—Taylor v. Supreme Lodge Columbian League, 135 Mich. 231.

¶ 273. Whether the evidence of the defendant in an action on a policy of life insurance, is sufficient to overcome the presumption of the payment of the premiums by the assured, is a question for the jury.—Rousseau v. Brotherhood of American Yeomen, 186 Mich. 101.

¶ 274. The question whether a member of a mutual beneficiary association had assented to changes in its by-laws increasing certain benefits and decreasing others and increasing the dues, is properly left to the jury where the evidence showed that he paid the increased dues without protest and with full knowledge of the changes, and also expressed his satisfaction with the changes to a fellow member.—Pokrofky v. Detroit Firemen's Fund Ass'n, 131 Mich. 38.

¶ 275a. The record book of a fraternal benefit order had pasted into it a printed by-law including the printed signatures or names of proper attesting officers. The passing of the law was proved by undisputed oral testimony. The law was published, circulated and treated as in force, and was filed with the commissioner of insurance. Held, in a suit to recover the amount of an insurance certificate brought contrary to the provisions of such law, the existence of the law was sufficiently established by defendant.—Monger v. New Era Ass'n, 171 Mich 614. (Moore, C. J., and Bird, J., dissenting.)

¶ 275b. The facts that an applicant for membership in a fraternal benefit society answered in the medical examination that she was not pregnant when in fact she was, that she failed to sign a pregnancy waiver, and that she examined the certificate containing the false answer and retained it for four months, all tend to establish a fraudulent intent.—Kolosinski v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 175 Mich. 684.

¶ 276. In an action on a beneficiary certificate, testimony of the death from cancer two months after the execution of the application for insurance and that the insured was seriously ill by that disease one month after the application, does not show conclusively that he had the disease at the time of the application and the submission of the question to the jury is not erroneous.—Tobin v. Modern Woodmen of America, 126 Mich. 161.

¶ 277. The questions of whether insured used intoxicating liquor at the time application was made, whether he had before that time been intoxicated, whether he had delirium tremens, or whether he died as a direct result of taking intoxicating liquor, are properly submitted to the jury.—Gall v. Sovereign Camp of Woodmen of the World, 166 Mich. 690.

¶ 279. Testimony that the insured had declared on the evening of initiation into a beneficial association that he felt pretty sick and that he had had difficulty in mounting the stairs leading to the hall of the association, that he did not remain throughout the meeting, that he had said that the reason that he was not initiated at a previous meeting was on account of illness, has a tendency to show ill health but it cannot be said to be error to leave the question to the jury.—Tobin v. Modern Woodmen of America, 126 Mich. 161.

¶ 280. Evidence that a hospital nurse, a witness for an insurance company, heard insured on the day before her death tell the attending physician, in answer to his direct inquiry, that an abortion had been performed on her the day before she was brought to the hospital, and that the deceased told the witness that the reason the act was done was that she could not afford to raise any more children, and that upon the day deceased was brought to the hospital she stated that she had suffered a miscarriage, brought on by working in the garden, held to raise the question of fact for the jury whether a criminal abortion caused her death or she suffered a miscarriage from unintentional overexertion.—Gilchrist v. Mystic Workers of the World, 196 Mich. 247.

General rules as to directing verdict, see Directing Verdict.

¶ 281. It was error for the court to direct a verdict for plaintiff in an action upon a benefit certificate conceded to be void if deceased was upwards of sixty-one years of age in 1885, when the certificate was issued, where decedent's brother-in-law, an unwilling witness for defendant, testified that he was born in 1829, and that deceased was six or seven years his senior.—Drozdowski v. Supreme Council of Order of Chosen Friends, 114 Mich. 178.

¶ 282. A verdict should be directed for the defendant in an action on a certificate of fraternal insurance, where the undisputed testimony shows that at the date of the issuance of the certificate the insured, contrary to her express warranties as to the condition of her health, was suffering from an incurable malady.—O'Brien v. Brotherhood of American Yeomen, 183 Mich. 86.

¶ 283. Where the laws of a mutual benefit society preclude a recovery of benefits where the insured commits suicide except where the executive council or supreme court of the society is satisfied that the deceased was at the time of the suicide of unsound mind, and that prior thereto he shall have been known and reported to the supreme secretary as such, there can be no recovery on a policy in the absence of a proof of these facts-and the trial court should direct a verdict in such a case.—Post v. Supreme Court, Independent Order of Foresters, 146 Mich. 666.

¶ 284. The deceased was insured in a benefit order under a by-law providing that the use of opiates as a habit, so as to be deleterious to health, would invalidate the policy. The evidence showed that the deceased began the use of morphine to relieve the pain of an injury to his back, and acquired the habit so strongly that he was twice sent to institutions to be cured. No testimony was offered by the beneficiary from experts or others that the deceased used the morphine only to alleviate pain, and in a way to prolong life. Held, the jury should have been directed to return a verdict for defendant.—Conley v. Supreme Court Independent Order of Foresters, 158 Mich. 190.

Instruction in respect to notice of assessments, see ante ¶ 71.

General principles as to instructions, see Instructions.

Instructions unduly emphasizing particular matters, see Instructions, V, C.

Instructions in actions on life or accident policy, see Insurance, XX.

¶ 285. In an action on a beneficial certificate in which the physical condition of the applicant at the time of taking out the certificate and all statements in regard thereto are made warranties, it is erroneous to charge the jury that they may find for the plaintiff, notwithstanding he is suffering from some illness provided that illness is not prejudicial to the rights of the defendant.—Tobin v. Modern Woodmen of America, 126 Mich. 161.

¶ 286. In an action on a beneficial certificate, an instruction requested by the defendant requiring the jury to bring in a verdict for the defendant if the insured was not in good health at the time that he secured the benefit certificate is not erroneous when modified by the court by words to the effect that a slight indisposition only temporary in its effects would not invalidate the policy.—Tobin v. Modern Woodmen of America, 126 Mich. 161.

¶ 288. An instruction in an action for death benefits, that if the deceased received a notice of assessment and failed to pay the same, so that he was suspended, and he not being reinstated, his beneficiary would not be entitled to recover, as he was bound by the terms of the certificate, and knew that his failure to pay assessments would work a suspension of his certificate, is erroneous as leaving out the element of waiver of forfeiture, it appearing that assessments were collected by subordinate lodges, who had full power as to such assessments, including the right to reinstate members, and that the officers of the particular subordinate lodge involved, had by a long continued course of conduct misled the deceased into a belief that strict performance of his contract would not be exacted, and that delay in payment of his assessments would not result in forfeiture of his benefit certificate.—Wallace v. Fraternal Mystic Circle, 121 Mich. 283.

¶ 289. Where the proof of death states as one cause of death of the insured a self-inflicted wound, it is not error to refuse to charge the jury to find for the company, unless such admission is explained.—Ferris v. Court of Honor, 152 Mich. 322.

¶ 290. Where the question is whether the insured died as the result of natural causes or from a wound admitted to be self-inflicted, it is not error to instruct that where a death may be attributed either to suicide or to natural causes, the presumption of law is against suicide.—Ferris v. Loyal Americans of the Republic, 152 Mich. 314.

¶ 291. Where the question of whether insured had been intoxicated prior to an application for insurance is in issue, an instruction charging the jury that the term "intoxicated" means "inebriate, made drunk, excited to frenzy" is so unfavorable to defendant as to constitute reversible error.—Gall v. Sovereign Camp of Woodmen of the World, 166 Mich. 690.

¶ 292. In an action on a certificate of insurance payable in case of total disability to follow any avocation, an instruction that the fact that a man may work continuously for a few months is not conclusive evidence that he can follow some avocation is not prejudicial to defendant, where the jury is explicitly instructed that, if plaintiff can follow any line of employment, he cannot recover, and that the question of his ability to do so is one solely for the jury.—Starling v. Supreme Council Royal Templars of Temperance, 108 Mich. 440.

¶ 293. The insured had paid seventeen assessments into the benefit society, but had paid all but five of these after the date specified by the by-laws. Held, the court properly refused to charge that this course of dealing on the part of the society induced the insured to think promptness in payment was not required so as to excuse a subsequent payment made after the date due.—Koehler v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 160 Mich. 180.

General law of verdicts and findings, see Verdicts.

¶ 294. In an action on an insurance policy, special questions as to whether at the time of insured's death he had had his checks protested for nonpayment, had collected money due his employers which he was unable to pay, and had written a letter to his son indicating an intention to commit suicide, are properly refused as not controlling.—Grimme v. General Council of Fraternal Aid Ass'n, 167 Mich. 240.

See also ante ¶¶ 95, 117.

Right to question competency of insured, see also ante ¶ 124.

General grounds for interpleader and practice in interpleader suits, see Interpleader.

Costs to interpleading complainants, see Costs § 35.

¶ 295. Where a mutual benefit society on the death of a member, interpleads his widow and a divorced wife who was named in the benefit certificate as beneficiary, the widow may show that the divorced wife, although there had been no change of beneficiary after the divorce, had no right under the laws of the society, to the proceeds of the certificate.—Knights of Maccabees of the World v. Brown, 186 Mich. 284.

§ 82. Equitable remedies of beneficiary or person interested in benefits.

Capacity of society to sue and be sued, see ante § 1.

Primary remedy within the lodge, see ante § 64.

Conclusiveness of internal proceedings and decision, see ante § 68.

Actions on the certificate or contract, see ante § 69.

¶ 296. Where a member of a mutual benefit association complies with all of its by-laws and does all required of him to effect a change of beneficiary, and dies while the necessary papers are on the way to the supreme officers for formal ministerial action, a court of equity will protect the right of the intended beneficiary.—Supreme Court I. O. O. F. v. Frise, 183 Mich. 186.

¶ 297. If a member of a mutual benefit society dies after complying with all of its by-laws pertaining to changing his beneficiary, and only formal action by the supreme officers remains, equity will protect the rights of the intended beneficiary.—Supreme Court I. O. O. F. v. Frise, 183 Mich. 186.

¶ 298. Where without fault on the member's part a certificate of membership in a mutual benefit society had been lost or mislaid so that he could not make the indorsement thereon which the by-laws of the society required in order to effect a change of beneficiary, equity will, after his death, recognize a disposition by will as a valid designation of a new beneficiary.—Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. v. Noll, 90 Mich. 37.

FRAUD AND DECEIT.

TREATS of deception by falsehood or misrepresentation injurious to the person deceived and of unfair and unconscionable practices and arts depriving another of his property or rights without his free and uninfluenced assent, also of the remedies for fraud or undue influence, the right to make defense of fraud, and the redress of fraud by act of the party. It excludes frauds upon creditors and subsequent bona fide purchasers (see Fraudulent Conveyances), criminal frauds and cheats (see Crimes, II; Indictment) and the requirements of writings to evidence contracts and conveyances as a precaution against fraud (see Frauds, Statute of). Other matters excluded are denoted by cross-references throughout this topic.

I. GENERAL NATURE AND ELEMENTS OF FRAUD, AND ACTUAL FRAUDS AND DECEIT.

A. IN GENERAL.

§ 1. Nature and definition.

Fraudulent misrepresentations, see post § 2 et seq.
Elements of intent, knowledge, reliance, and deception, see post §§ 6-13.
Materiality and falsity, see post §§ 4, 5.
Implied or constructive frauds or frauds intrinsic in the relationship of the parties or the nature of the transaction, see post II.
Effect and operation of the fraud on the rights of the parties, see post III, A.
Necessity and sufficiency of allegations of fraud and its elements, see post § 90.
Duty to instruct and sufficiency of instructions on nature and elements of fraud, see post § 61.
Libelous or slanderous misrepresentations, see Libel.
Conspiracy as tort, see Conspiracy.
Mistake on one side and fraud on other, see also Mistake.
Refusal to make transfer of stock on books as wrong distinct from fraud in sale, see also Corporations ¶ 1031.

¶ 1. By the term fraud the legal intent and effect of the acts complained of is meant.—Kirby v. Ingersoll, H. 172.

¶ 2. Equity takes cognizance of cases in which a party is deceived as to material things by means well fitted to cause the deception, and which the party using them had good reason to know actually caused it.—Match v. Hunt, 38 Mich. 1.

Representations as to matters of law, see post § 3.
Materiality of the statements, see post § 4.
Falsity of the statement, see post § 5.
Intent, knowledge, reliance and deception, see post §§ 6-12.
Opinions, predictions and promises rather than facts, see post §§ 14-18.
Fraud by suggestion, concealment or half-truth, see post §§ 19, 20.
Fraud by maps and pictures, see post § 21.
Statements through third persons or agents, see post §§ 22, 23.

¶ 3. A representation made with a knowledge that it is received in a sense that makes it deceptive is fraudulent.—Match v. Hunt, 38 Mich. 1.

¶ 4. The gist of a fraudulent misrepresentation is that it was intended to produce a false impression or belief on the mind of the person to whom it was made.—Krolik v. Lang, 187 Mich. 286.

¶ 5. A contract is not vitiated by previous statements of one of the parties unless they were statements of fact rather than opinion, and were made for the purpose of obtaining the contract, were relied on by the other party as a controlling reason for entering into it, and turned out to be false.—Berringer v. Cobb, 58 Mich. 557.

¶ 6. It is fraud for a county treasurer to represent falsely to an inquiring mortgagee of lands that the taxes on them were paid, the treasurer being the mortgagor and owner, and to let them be sold for taxes in consequence of the resulting delinquency to one in collusion.—Christian v. Soderberg, 118 Mich. 47.

¶ 7. Where a person receives information from others and believes it, repeating it, but explaining that he has no personal knowledge he is not guilty of fraud.—Krause v. Cook, 144 Mich. 365.

§ 3. ——Representations of matters of law.

Misrepresenting legal effect of instrument presented for signature, see post § 11.

Statements as to construction of by-law of corporation, see also post ¶ 80.

¶ 8. It is a fraud to obtain from an ignorant woman promissory notes upon the representation that they are only renewals of the notes of her deceased husband, on which she was surety, and that she was originally liable upon such former notes.—Holland v. Maus, 69 Mich. 180.

¶ 9. Where plaintiff claims to have been defrauded in the purchase of the note of an insolvent corporation by false representations that its receiver had arranged to pay the note in lumber, it cannot be urged that plaintiff had no right to rely upon such representations, the arrangement being one that the receiver had no right to make.—Averill v. Wood, 78 Mich. 342.

¶ 10. A vendor of land sold by contract on instalment payments filed a bill to quiet title against the contract and a quitclaim deed given by the vendee to an assignee, both instruments being recorded, claiming that through fraud and deception she was led to believe the contract was an option which expired by its own limitation. She was a woman of some business experience and had executed the same kind of an instrument before and after the transaction in question. Held, relief could not be granted on the ground of fraud.—Donnelly v. Lyons, 173 Mich. 515.

Statements as to quality of goods inspected by other party, see also post ¶¶ 59-61.

Disavowal of personal knowledge as invitation to inquiry, see post ¶ 67.

Representation that stock was treasury stock when it was worthless in any event, see also post ¶ 104.

Question for jury, see post § 58.

Instructions on materiality, see post § 61.

¶ 11. False representations, if not material to the transaction at issue, will not avoid an agreement even if relied on, where the person to whom they are made is of ordinary intelligence; where he is not, the fact should be shown.—Hall v. Johnson, 41 Mich. 286.

¶ 12. Statements to a plaintiff to induce a settlement of a lawsuit, to the effect that the case might be delayed three or four years in the supreme court, and that his attorney was a scoundrel, are material, and, if relied upon as made, are important in the question of fraud.—Lewless v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 65 Mich. 292.

¶ 13. A note was procured upon the false representation that a bond of a "Bohemian oat association," given to the maker of the note and forming part of the same transaction therewith, was the bond of an incorporated company. Held, that the representation was material.—McNamara v. Gargett, 68 Mich. 454.

¶ 14. It cannot be laid down as a rule of law that value is never a material fact. And when the purchaser expressly relies upon the knowledge of the seller as to quality or value, the seller is bound to act honorably and deal fairly with the purchaser.—Ricard v. McCormick, 11 Mich. 68.

¶ 15. Before entering into a contract to convey land to plaintiff, defendant represented that he had a perfect title in fee, whereas in fact he had only an equity in peril of being foreclosed and cut off by an overdue mortgage. Held, that such representation of condition of title is material, and is ground for rescission of the contract.—Allen v. Talbot, 170 Mich. 664.

¶ 16. The statement by the vendor to the purchaser of city lots, that the improvements are all in and paid for except the paving, is a material statement of fact and, if relied upon by the purchaser and untrue, he may recover because thereof in an action for damages based thereon.—State Security & Realty Co. v. Badger, 200 Mich. 104.

¶ 17. Statements by the survivor of two joint and several makers of a promissory note, which bore indorsements of payments by the deceased sufficient to bar the operation of the statute of limitations as to his estate, made to a proposed purchaser of the paper, to the effect that it was as good a note as he, the survivor, could make, and that it would be all right to purchase it, as he intended to pay it, the payor being ignorant of his statutory defense of limitations, are not a representation that such survivor has no defense and are insufficient to warrant a recovery by the purchaser for fraud and deceit in inducing such purchase, he having been defeated in a suit on the note against said payor by the plea of the statute of limitation.—Black v. Miller, 75 Mich. 323.

¶ 18. Where the representation is concerning a condition of affairs not susceptible of exact knowledge, the assertion of knowledge is to be taken as meaning no other than the strong belief founded upon what appears to the person to be reasonable and certain grounds; in such a case the question is wholly one of good faith.—Krause v. Cook, 144 Mich. 365.

¶ 19. When defendants sued for price of milk cans bought for creamery purposes with right to use them in certain territory, seek to recoup damages for failure of plaintiff's title to such territory, they may show that plaintiff's agent who made the sale represented that as soon as defendant's creamery was completed another creamery company then operating in the territory would have to leave it, and that they bought relying upon such representation.—Davis v. Davis, 97 Mich. 419.

Admissibility of evidence of falsity, see post § 41.
Questions for jury, see post § 59.
Pleading falsity, see post § 90.
Element of falsity and deception in estoppel, see Estoppel §§ 27-29.

¶ 20. Recovery of damages for a fraud in obtaining property by false representations as to the responsibility of the maker of the note given therefor is not necessarily precluded by the fact that the maker is able to meet the particular note, especially if it does not appear that he can pay his other debts.—Daniels v. Dayton, 49 Mich. 137.

¶ 21. Where the seller of horses represents that they are sound, but they are afflicted with glanders, an incurable disease, an action of fraud lies in favor of the buyer, and it is immaterial whether the disease is in its incipient stage, or further developed.—Weinberg v. Ladd, 199 Mich. 164.

§ 6. Intent of speaker or utterer.

Knowledge of falsity by speaker, see post § 7.
Good or bad faith entering into opinions and predictions or promises, see also post §§ 14-17.
Pleading in chancery bills, see post § 96.
Necessity of proof of intent or purpose as alleged, see post § 94.
Admissibility of evidence of actual intent, see post § 41.
Repetition of statement as evidence of intent, see post ¶ 286.
Other letters as evidence of intentional statement, see post ¶ 287.
Other frauds and statements at other times as evidence of intent, see post §§ 33, 34.
Intent as jury question, see post § 58.
Instructions on intent, see post § 61.
Element of intent to induce reliance and of reliance to prejudice in estoppel; see Estoppel §§ 28, 29.

¶ 22. The concealment of or misrepresentation as to the real financial condition of a vendee need not be wilful nor intended in order to constitute such fraud as will vitiate a sale made in reliance thereon; it is sufficient if they have the effect to defraud.—Mooney v. Davis, 75 Mich. 188.

¶ 23. If the conduct of a party is such as, in its tendency and result, to operate to defraud others, it will be deemed fraudulent, although no such purpose was intended.—Sweet v. Converse, 88 Mich. 1.

¶ 24. The law has a standard for measuring the legal intent of parties, and declares an illegal act, prejudicial to the rights of others, a fraud upon such rights, although the party denies all intention of committing a fraud.—Kirby v. Ingersoll, H. 172.

¶ 25. A denial of actual intent to defraud will not avoid the consequences of an act which is in effect a fraud.—Newlove v. Callaghan, 86 Mich. 301.

¶ 26. In a civil action it is immaterial whether a false representation is made innocently or fraudulently, if, by its means, the party to whom it is made is injured.—Sawyer v. Menominee Loan & Building Ass'n, 103 Mich. 228.

¶ 27. Where defendant's agents made misrepresentations to plaintiff as to certain land, and defendant assures the plaintiff that the representations of his agents are true, thus inducing him to buy, the plaintiff may recover in an action of deceit, although defendant's false statement was not intentionally or recklessly made.—Aldrich v. Scribner, 154 Mich. 23. (Montgomery, Blair and Ostrander, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 28. If representations of fraud in the sale of horses are made and relied upon by the other party to his injury and they are false, an action for fraud may be maintained, even though such representations were made in good faith.—Weinberg v. Ladd, 199 Mich. 164.

¶ 29. The mere fact that untrue representations as to the productivity of land are made in good faith is no defense to an action for damages for fraud where such representations are relied upon by the purchaser.—Houder v. Reynolds, 195 Mich. 256.

¶ 30. One who purchases property in the belief of, and reliance upon false statements regarding it, may sue for and recover the damages occasioned thereby irrespective of whether the representations were made in good or bad faith.—Krause v. Cook, 144 Mich. 365.

¶ 31. The rule that a purchaser of property in the belief of and reliance upon false statements regarding it may sue and recover damages irrespective of the good or bad faith of the representations is applicable to equity cases as well as those of law.—Krause v. Cook, 144 Mich. 365.

¶ 32. Courts of equity cannot sustain dealings that have the effect of fraud on people who are practically helpless, even though such fraud is not deliberate and intentional.—Crips v. Towsley, 73 Mich. 395.

§ 7. Knowledge of truth or falsity by speaker.

Intent of speaker to deceive, see ante § 6.
Knowledge or belief as element in fraud by false predictions or opinions, see also post §§ 14-17.
Admissibility of evidence of knowledge of truth, see post § 41.
Other like frauds and misstatements as evidence of knowledge, see post § 33.
Statements at other times as evidence, see post § 34.
Subsequent or prior facts as evidence, see post § 34.
Instructions on knowledge, see post § 61.
Notice to agent as imputed to principal, see Agency, II, E.

¶ 33. Where the representations on which a party relies are untrue, it is immaterial whether the party making them knows them to be so or not, the effect upon him being the same in either case.—Jones v. Wing, H. 301.

¶ 34. One who, to induce another to buy, recklessly makes a false representation, of the truth or falsity of which he knows nothing, whereby the vendee is deceived and defrauded, is liable.—Beebe v. Knapp, 28 Mich. 53.

¶ 35. One is liable for false representations made intentionally to induce, and which do induce, action in reliance upon them; and it is fraud if he believes or has reason to believe them false, whether he knows them to be false or not.—Stone v. Covell, 29 Mich. 359.

¶ 36. If one obtains the property of another by means of untrue statements, though in ignorance of their falsity, he must be held responsible for a legal fraud.—Converse v. Blumrich, 14 Mich. 109; Beebe v. Young, 14 Mich. 136.

¶ 37. If one recklessly makes a false representation, of the truth or falsehood of which he knows nothing, and makes it for the fraudulent purpose of inducing another, in reliance upon it, to make a contract or do an act to his prejudice, and the other party does so rely and act upon it, the first party is as liable for the fraud as if he had known the representation to be false. This principle applies equally in courts of law and of equity.—Beebe v. Knapp, 28 Mich. 53; Stone v. Covell, 29 Mich. 359.

¶ 38. In an action based on fraudulent misrepresentation of the value of a note, the exclusion of evidence of the maker's insolvency, and of a letter from defendant to plaintiff concerning his solvency, is not error where the offer of such evidence does not include a proposal, also, to show that defendant knew the statements in the letter to be untrue.—Whitten v. Wright, 34 Mich. 92.

¶ 39. A right of action for damages for fraudulent representations arises though the misrepresentation was made innocently, if its deceptive influence was effective, and if the consequence to plaintiff was as serious as though it had proceeded from a vicious purpose.—Busch v. Wilcox, 82 Mich. 315, aff'd on rehearing 82 Mich. 336.

¶ 40. Where a partner in selling his interest to a third person falsely represents that certain accounts included in the sale are collectible, such representations, whether innocently or fraudulently made, are actionable if injurious.—Totten v. Burhans, 91 Mich. 495.

¶ 42. It is not necessary, in order to constitute fraud, that a person making a statement should either know that it is untrue, or be recklessly and consciously ignorant of whether it be true or untrue, but it is sufficient if the representation be false in fact, and the person making it is a party to the contract, and profits by the other's loss.—Power Specialty Co. v. Michigan Power Co., 190 Mich. 699.

¶ 43. One charged with having obtained a contract by means of misrepresentations may show that he was not aware of the untruthfulness of the statements imputed to him, and that he had grounds for believing them to be true.—Comstock v. Smith, 20 Mich. 338.

¶ 44. A broker and his clerk who effects the sale of a rooming house business are not liable to the purchaser for alleged fraudulent representations by the clerk as to the character of the tenants and the rent receipts unless the statements were known to be false and were made with intent to deceive.—Williamson v. Hannan, 200 Mich. 658.

Propriety of reliance, effect of notice of true facts, see post §§ 9-12.
Reliance on statements made as true without knowledge of truth or falsity, see also ante § 7.
Necessity of damage or detriment in consequence of reliance, see post § 13.
Pleading belief in truth and reliance, see post § 90.

Admissibility of evidence of reliance and inducement, see post § 42.

Evidence as to reliance by and deception of skilled person respecting land conditions observed by him, see post ¶ 452.
Instructions on reliance and deception, see post § 61.

¶ 45. An essential element of actual fraud is the fact that it is relied and acted upon. —Arnstine Brothers & Mier v. Treat, 71 Mich. 561.

¶ 46. Misrepresentation is not actionable in fraud unless there is a reliance upon the representation.—Kimble v. Gillard, 177 Mich. 250.

¶ 47. He who claims to have been defrauded must show that he was actually deceived.—Hamilton v. Billingsley, 37 Mich. 107.

¶ 48. A misrepresentation, however fraudulent, will be no defense to a contract unless it served to deceive the party at the time he became fixed by the treaty.—Whiting v. Hill, 23 Mich. 399.

¶ 49. One who is sued for false representation is estopped from claiming that the plaintiff's previous knowledge was enough to protect him in the absence of proof that the plaintiff was in possession of the truth at the time of the transaction.—Hamilton v. Billingsley, 37 Mich. 107.

¶ 50. In order to constitute fraud by a buyer on a seller it is not essential that every statement of the buyer be accepted as literally true.—Heineman v. Steiger, 54 Mich. 232.

¶ 51. To avoid a contract on the ground that one was induced to enter into it on the faith of unwarranted representations, it is essential that he should have been ignorant of the matters represented, since if before he acted, he had knowledge of the truth, he was not deceived.—DeGrasse v. Verona Min. Co., 185 Mich. 514.

¶ 52. A plaintiff may recover money invested in a corporation by him in reliance on the fraudulent representations of the officers, even though such reliance was only one of several inducements leading him to make the investment.—Massey v. Luce, 158 Mich. 128.

¶ 53. Statements to a plaintiff to induce a settlement of a lawsuit, to the effect that the case might be delayed three or four years in the supreme court, and that his attorney was a scoundrel, if relied upon as made, are important in the question of fraud.—Lewless v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 65 Mich. 292.

¶ 54. There are no fraudulent representations upon which to base a rescission of the purchase of a boat in the statements by officers of the corporation seller to the effect that they believed the boat would go 15 miles per hour, particularly where the parties were unwilling to rely on these statements but insisted on a written warranty to that effect.—H. W. Williams Transportation Line v. Darius Cole Transportation Co., 129 Mich. 209.

¶ 55. A purchaser of stock who had transferred land in payment of the stock cannot have the land reconveyed on the ground of misrepresentation in the value of the stock where in making the exchange he did not rely on the value placed upon it, inasmuch as he already owned stock and had formed his own opinion as to the value, neither can he succeed because of false representations in the annual report of the company, when such false statements had not been brought to his attention before his purchase and they had not contributed to deceive him.—Scott v. Brusse, 148 Mich. 529.

¶ 56. The purchaser of corporate stock cannot recover from the seller the purchase price on the ground of misrepresentations as to the earning capacity thereof where he knew precisely what the representations meant, and had full knowledge concerning the capital stock.—Van Cleve v. Radford, 149 Mich. 106.

¶ 57. There can be no claim of fraud by one who, in settlement of a suit, begun by capias and instituted in good faith, has agreed to a re-exchange of properties, and has assigned to the mortgagors, without recourse, notes and a mortgage securing the same given him in the original transaction of exchange, and who has not been financially prejudiced by such settlement, and who acted without reasonable care in making the settlement and took no precautions against being deceived therein.—McKinney v. Jones, 89 Mich. 26.

¶ 58. Defendant and certain other persons were stockholders in a lumber business of which defendant was the manager. Said other persons losing confidence in defendant apprised complainant of the situation and invited him to purchase stock from defendant, complainant and said other persons all acting together for the purpose of ousting defendant from control. After personally investigating the company and property interests involved, complainant then went to defendant and purchased certain shares of stock, giving his note in payment and pledging the stock with defendant as collateral. Complainant sought to enjoin defendant from selling said stock to satisfy the debt due defendant on the ground that he was induced by false representations of defendant to purchase same. Held, the circumstances indicating that, when complainant negotiated the purchase of said shares from defendant, he had little confidence in the latter and therefore did not rely on the latter's representations, the injunction should be denied. —Brooks v. Culver, 168 Mich. 436.

¶ 60. If lumber is bought because of representation as to quality, supported by perfunctory inspection, the representation is material.—Redfield v. Engel, 171 Mich. 207.

¶ 61. Complainants did not rely on alleged misrepresentations as to the value of certain furniture where it appears that they were experienced, that they made a careful inventory of the furniture, and exercised their own judgment in the purchase thereof and that the inducement of their purchase of the furniture and taking a certain lease was not the value of the furniture, but was the making of a sublease.—McKenzie v. Call, 176 Mich. 198.

¶ 62. The reiteration by the mortgagee's agent, to a purchaser from the mortgagor in a chattel mortgage, of fraudulent representations made to the mortgagor in connection with such mortgage, did not give such purchaser a right of action for fraud, as he was then already the owner of the property. —Soule v. Harrington, 135 Mich. 155.

¶ 63. In assumpsit for the balance of the purchase price of land where both parties treat a third party as owner and the plaintiff agrees to sell under an option for the price paid such owner but in fact charges $500 more which is discovered by the defendant before the price is paid, the plaintiff should be held to be bound by his representations of facts concerning the price within his knowledge but unknown to the defendant.—McGough v. Hopkins, 172 Mich. 580.

Actual deception of party by reliance, see ante § 8.

Representations as to matters of law, see ante § 3.

Neglecting available means of knowledge, see post § 10.

Notice and right to rely on representations to borrower in building association, see Building Associations ¶ 47.

Notice of title or equities under the doctrine of bona fides or the recording acts, see Notice and Record of Title.

¶ 64. What constitutes fraud so as to avoid a settlement of an existing lawsuit depends considerably on circumstances, but not all deceit or false assertion is fraud. Parties are always held to some diligence in protecting their own interests, and those dealing with them have a right to suppose they will be.—Lewless v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 65 Mich. 292.

¶ 65. The mortgagor induced by misrepresentation to give it is entitled to have the mortgage set aside as procured by fraud, unless he was, at the time, chargeable with such notice of the facts as should preclude him from complaining.—Converse v. Blumrich, 14 Mich. 109.

¶ 66. One cannot complain of false representations whereby he has been induced to buy corporation stock, if he had at the time actual notice of the facts.—McEacheran v. Western Transp. & Coal Co., 97 Mich. 479.

¶ 67. Where one used a mortgage in making payment, his statement that there was no prior mortgage that he knew of, was not a fraudulent representation, but was of a character to fairly put the vendor upon inquiry to ascertain the fact for himself.—Bristol v. Braidwood, 28 Mich. 191.

¶ 68. Where the purchaser of a mortgage on distant lands relies on and is misled by representations made to him by the seller as to the mortgagor's responsibility and the value of the securities, which representations, though honestly made, were really false, they amount in legal effect to fraud, even though the seller had suggested to the purchaser that he look at the lands himself, as their judgment might not agree, and had offered to pay his traveling expenses if they did not suit; such a suggestion implies the assertion that the seller had exercised an intelligent judgment, and would increase the purchaser's sense of security therein.—Webster v. Bailey, 31 Mich. 36.

¶ 69. Where one makes false representations of material facts, which are exclusively within his knowledge, and the other party relies upon them to his injury, liability for such false representations follows, and it does not lie in the mouth of the party perpetrating such fraud, when called to account, to say that his victim should have been more vigilant, should have been less credulous.—

¶ 70. One charged with fraud cannot escape liability because the party with whom he is dealing has confidence in him, relies upon him, and by reason of such confidence is not more vigilant.—Boston Piano & Music Co. v. Pontiac Clothing Co., 199 Mich. 141.

¶ 72. A letter received prior to the purchase of stock, stating that the corporation was prosperous, and then had $287,000 in property with only $40,000 unpaid on it, and with the expected dividend of 30 per cent at least "divided among the present stockholders and applied on their stock" would bring "their stock up to par value with what they have already paid in cash," imparts notice that the stock is not paid in full.—McEacheran v. Western Transportation & Coal Co., 97 Mich. 479.

¶ 73. A person contemplating the purchase of stock of a bank has a legal right to rely upon the published report provided for by U. S. Revised Statutes, § 5211 as a true statement of the financial condition of the bank without further inquiry, in the absence of any personal knowledge tending to show the unreliability of the statement.—Smalley v. McGraw, 148 Mich. 384.

¶ 75. An owner of land contracted to pay defendant a certain price per foot for the cutting and removal of timber. He claimed that he was defrauded by defendant, as the merchantable timber gotten out did not reach the amount paid for. Held, as the timber was poor and inferior "down timber," the rule of a "merchantable scale" could not be applied and plaintiff could not rely thereon.—Watkins v. Burdick, 176 Mich. 433.

¶ 76. One who buys a worthless bond, relying upon the vendor's representation that it is good, may recover the amount paid though the misrepresentation was innocently made and though the purchaser had opportunity for examination.—Ripley v. Case, 86 Mich. 261; Ripley v. Case, 78 Mich. 126.

¶ 77. On the issue whether the buyer of bonds was defrauded into taking them for what was supposedly an issue of another road whose bonds were not in default, where the bonds were very similar in general appearance and would have required a reading to distinguish them, the absence of past-due coupons is some indication that a coupon bond is not in default.—Ripley v. Case, 78 Mich. 126.

Opinions on matters equally open to both parties, see post §§ 14-17.

¶ 78. When the subject-matter of the representation of a fact is not particularly within the knowledge of the person making it, but is one concerning which the party to whom it is made has equally available means and opportunity for investigation, the latter cannot claim that he was misled, where he was not prevented by fraud or artifice from making inquiry or investigation.—De Grasse v. Verona Min. Co., 185 Mich. 514.

¶ 79. An assignor of a mortgage who falsely represents that it is a first mortgage, and that the property is good security, upon which representations he knows that the assignee relies in taking the assignment, cannot claim that the latter is not entitled to relief because he might have discovered the facts by an examination of the abstract of title.—Cornell v. Crane, 113 Mich. 460.

¶ 80. One who applies for a loan in a building and loan association and asks the secretary as to the construction which is and will be placed on its by-laws, does not stand on an equality of knowledge with the secretary and may rely on what he is told, notwithstanding he might have had access to them for himself and that under the law it is not allowable to do business of that kind according to the construction represented.—Sawyer v. Menominee Loan & Building Ass'n, 103 Mich. 228.

¶ 81. A prospective purchaser of national bank stock is not chargeable with knowledge of such circumstances affecting the truth of a report to the comptroller as he might have discovered by the exercise of ordinary prudence and diligence, but only with the natural inferences deducible from the knowledge possessed by him, when he relied on it.—Smallet v. McGraw, 148 Mich. 384.

¶ 82. The misrepresentation to a public board of facts which they can ascertain and are bound to know as pertaining to their own duties, but as to which they neglect to inform themselves, does not furnish any substantial ground for remedial equity.—Churchill Township v. Cummings Township, 51 Mich. 446.

Signing by mistake as to contents, see also Mistake.

¶ 83. Fraudulent representations as to the legal effect of an instrument will avoid it, even if made to one who has actually read it, if unable to judge of its true construction. But the fraud must be contemporaneous with the execution of the instrument, and must consist in obtaining the assent of the party defrauded by inducing a false impression as to its legal or literal nature and operation.—Berry v. Whitney, 40 Mich. 65.

¶ 84. A short contract of submission to arbitration between an insurer and insured cannot be set aside for fraud because the insurer neglected to read it, having had time in which to do so.—Michels v. Western Underwriters' Ass'n, 129 Mich. 417.

¶ 85. Where a party to an instrument undertakes to read it over in the presence and hearing of the other party thereto, in order that the latter may understand its contents before signing it, the party reading is bound to read it correctly, and the other has a right to rely upon its being so read, and is not guilty of negligence in signing it without further examination.—Anderson v. Walter, 34 Mich. 113.

¶ 86. One who signs without reading a deed of real estate, when fraudulently induced by his attorney to believe that it is a duplicate of a lease that has been read to him, is not guilty of negligence so as to lose his rights in the premises as against one holding under such forged deed.—McGinn v. Tobey, 62 Mich. 252.

¶ 87. Fraud in procuring the signature of a lease with a clause omitted from the former lease does not appear where it is shown that the draft was in possession of the signer for three days before he signed it and that there were other changes in it to apprise him that he was not signing a renewal on the same terms.—A. E. Wood & Co. v. Standard Drug Store, 192 Mich. 453.

¶ 88. The signing of a note by a man of mature, intelligent business experience without reading it, and in blind reliance upon the representations of another in whom, by reason of their relation, he had no reason to repose confidence, does not constitute fraud.—Northern Assur. Co. v. Meyer, 194 Mich. 371.

¶ 89. The rule that one charged with fraud cannot escape liability because the party with whom he is dealing has confidence in him, relies upon him, and by reason of such confidence is not more vigilant, applies in the case of the signing of a contract without reading it.—Boston Piano & Music Co. v. Pontiac Clothing Co., 199 Mich. 141.

Opinions and predictions as to values and possibilities, see post § 16.

Representations concerning mortgages, see also ante ¶¶ 67, 68.

¶ 90. In order that misrepresentations as to the value of land shall be regarded as fraudulent towards a purchaser who was on the ground, there must be some artifice, trust or confidence to warrant a reliance on such representations.—Walker v. Casgrain, 101 Mich. 604.

¶ 91. Statements of a seller of land in answer to an inquiry by the purchaser as to how he knew that plaster was there, to the effect that he had made an examination and had found the same rock as in a certain quarry, constitute more than mere opinions, and are positive statements of fact which the purchaser may rely upon, he not being bound to verify such statements by an independent investigation.—Morman v. Harrington, 118 Mich. 623.

¶ 92. Defendant, a real estate agent, in negotiating a sale of land to plaintiff for $1,200, represented that he was giving plaintiff the premises at the owner's price, and that the owner would not take less. Plaintiff paid defendant nine hundred dollars in cash and gave a mortgage to defendant for three hundred dollars, which sum he borrowed of defendant on the representation that it was to go with the nine hundred dollars to the owner. The owner in fact authorized defendant to sell the premises for nine hundred dollars. Defendant knew his representation was fraudulent. Plaintiff lived at a distance from the land and was unable to form any rightful estimate of its value. Held, plaintiff was entitled to recover the three hundred dollars in an action in assumpsit for fraud, under 3 Comp. Laws 1897, § 10421.—Hokanson v. Oatman, 165 Mich. 512.

Evidence as to damages, see Damages §§ 314, 352.

¶ 93. The doctrine that, to support a claim for relief for fraud, there must be damage also, does not apply to a case where one who has fraudulently obtained the guardianship of a minor sells the latter's lands without permission, even though he returns their value to the owner. One cannot be forced to submit to a sale at another's estimate of value.—Tong v. Marvin, 26 Mich. 35.

¶ 94. Depriving an infant of his title to land by a voluntary redemption from a foreclosure and then procuring a guardian's sale of the land to pay the redemption money is a detriment, even if the land was worth no more than the money incumbrance and but for the redemption would have been lost.—Tong v. Marvin, 26 Mich. 35.

¶ 95. It is not fraud on subsequent grantees and incumbrancers for one who has bought subject to a mortgage to induce a friend to purchase the mortgage instead of causing it to be discharged. It makes no difference to the mortgagor and the subsequent lienors whether one person or another owns it, and it does not change his relations with the owner of the land or the mortgage creditor. Nor does it affect the right of foreclosure.—Hall v. Harrington, 41 Mich. 146.

¶ 97. The fact that the plaintiff in an action against defendants for obtaining by fraudulent representations his note for oats, bought by him of them at $15 per bushel in return for an agreement and bond of a fictitious corporation to sell twice as many bushels for plaintiff at the same price on commission, received the oats, which were of some value, does not alter or diminish the fraud except as regards the damages.—Pearl v. Walter, 80 Mich. 317.

¶ 98. A fraud upon one's rights is actionable as such though those rights may depend upon contract relations between the same parties.—Oliver v. Perkins, 92 Mich. 304.

¶ 99. An action by a bank payee against an accommodation maker of a promissory note cannot be defeated by the defendant showing false statements of the cashier of the bank, who is the principal debtor, to the effect that he had paid one note; where the defendant has not changed his position and his rights against the cashier and the cashier's property have not been jeopardized.—State Savings Bank of Ionia v. Montgomery, 126 Mich. 327.

¶ 100. A false representation as to the value of stock is actionable though plaintiff had already invested in some stock where he was thereby induced to purchase more of it.—McDonald v. Smith, 139 Mich. 211.

¶ 101. Recovery may be had for fraud inducing the conveyance of property though the title thereto stood in another than plaintiff, where the conveyance was made in plaintiff's behalf.—McDonald v. Smith, 139 Mich. 211.

¶ 102. One is not defrauded by being induced to consent to the transfer of right in a benefit certificate by another, who at that time has the full right of disposal.—Knights of Modern Maccabees v. Grice, 148 Mich. 422.

¶ 103. A right of action accrues immediately upon ascertaining that one has parted with property in reliance on the false or fraudulent representations of another, without waiting until default in payments entails actual loss.—Merlau v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 180 Mich. 393.

¶ 104. Where a plaintiff buys shares of stock of a mining company upon the representation of the defendant owner that they are treasury shares, when in fact they were not, he cannot recover in an action of deceit, since he suffers no additional loss, the stock proving worthless, from the fact that the shares were not treasury shares.—Findlater v. Dorland, 152 Mich. 301.

¶ 106. Statements promissory in their character that one will do a particular thing in the future are not misrepresentations, but are contractual in their nature, and do not constitute fraud.—Boston Piano & Music Co. v. Pontiac Clothing Co., 199 Mich. 141.

¶ 107. A promise of something to be done in the future is not a misrepresentation of an existing fact.—Boston Piano & Music Co. v. Pontiac Clothing Co., 199 Mich. 141.

¶ 109. A representation that a worthless medicine was a sure cure for hog cholera, whereby plaintiff was induced to invest in the stock of a company, is not a mere expression of opinion but is a misrepresentation of fact and actionable.—McDonald v. Smith, 139 Mich. 211.

¶ 110. An offer to buy stock at more than its par value with a statement that "he had investigated it enough to know that he wanted some of it," made by one who was party to a scheme to induce plaintiff to invest in worthless stock, is more than a mere expression of opinion and is actionable, being equivalent to a statement of knowledge of facts giving it a greater value.—McDonald v. Smith, 139 Mich. 211.

¶ 112. The rule that a seller has a right to praise his property, and to give his opinion concerning it, cannot be extended to embrace false representations of alleged facts which may be and are relied upon by the purchaser, and become an inducing cause of the trade.—Wegner v. Herkimer, 167 Mich. 587; Pratt v. Allegan Circuit Judge, 177 Mich. 558.

¶ 113. Representations made to promote the sale of stock of a corporation, which are mere matters of opinion, are not actionable though false.—Getchell v. Dusenbury, 145 Mich. 197.

¶ 115. Where a mortgage was given by the vendee in a land contract in the full belief, induced by the mortgagee's acts and statements, that the rights of the latter were paramount to any that could be claimed under the original contract, and that he had done nothing to recognize or make himself responsible for sales by the mortgagor's vendors, which statements were untrue, the mortgagor is entitled to have the mortgage set aside as procured by fraud, unless he was, at the time, chargeable with such notice of the facts as should preclude him from complaining.—Converse v. Blumrich, 14 Mich. 109.

¶ 116. A mere assertion of value made by the seller, where no warranty is intended, is no ground of relief to a purchaser, because the assertion is a matter of opinion which does not imply knowledge, and in which men differ. Every person reposes at his peril in the opinions of others where he has equal opportunity to form and exercise his own judgment.—Picard v. McCormick, 11 Mich. 68.

¶ 117. A jeweler, knowing the purchaser's ignorance, deliberately and designedly availed himself of it to defraud him by false statements of the value of articles in his trade, which none but an expert could reasonably be expected to understand. It was held that an action would lie for fraud.—Picard v. McCormick, 11 Mich. 68.

¶ 118. A vendor's statements of his opinion as to his stock do not generally stand on the same footing as facts; but they are sometimes ground of liability in an action for fraud where they are meant and understood on both sides to be relied on.—Jackson v. Collins, 39 Mich. 557.

¶ 119. A vendor's honestly expressed but incorrect opinion as to the amount, quality and value of the goods he sells will not support an action for fraudulent representations if the purchaser sees or knows the property, or has opportunities to know it. The purchaser cannot recover unless the vendor, with superior means of knowledge, intentionally gives a false opinion as to material facts for the purpose of defrauding the purchaser, and the latter has reason to rely and does rely on it as true.—Collins v. Jackson, 54 Mich. 186.

the question of the existence of a prior mortgage, his remarks should be taken simply as the expression of his opinion, or as a matter of commendation; the other party to the trade, if ordinarily diligent, can judge of the value as well as he, and is therefore not relieved from the application of the principle of caveat emptor in regard to it.—Bristol v. Braidwood, 28 Mich. 191.

¶ 122. A contract of sale cannot usually be avoided for an undervaluation, or because a party in bargaining has sought to abate and depreciate the price by the common bantering between buyer and seller.—Swimm v. Bush, 23 Mich. 99.

¶ 123. A vendor's representation on a sale of worthless corporate stock and also a corporate bond for $1,000 worth but $500, that the corporation was prosperous and paying dividends on the stock and that it was worth par and that the corporation's mortgage bond which he was selling "was just as good as gold, and was just as good as wheat in the bin, and was worth $1,000," was not allowed to sustain a recovery for the amount of the bond in an action for fraud and deceit brought by the vendee.—French v. Fitch, 67 Mich. 492.

¶ 124. The rule of caveat emptor does not necessarily apply to representations of value made by the vendor of mining stock to one who knows nothing about the values of mining property and who relies upon such representations.—Maxted v. Fowler, 94 Mich. 106.

¶ 125. While, ordinarily, representations as to value are not evidence of fraud, yet in a case where an adult is dealing with an infant, who is presumed by law to be unfamiliar with the value of a watch which he is solicited to purchase, it is proper to submit to the jury the question whether good faith was observed towards him.—Welch v. Olmstead, 90 mich. 492.

¶ 126. If in selling his stock of goods the vendor merely states an opinion as to their value, which turns out then to be less than he supposed, the vendee is not entitled to rescind his purchase and recover the money he has paid.—Johnson v. Seymour, 79 Mich. 156.

¶ 127. The rule that a vendor has the right to praise his goods in order to make a sale does not apply to statements of value which the vendor knows to be false, and upon which the vendee, who is ignorant on the subject, relies in making the purchase.—Peck v. Jenison, 99 Mich. 326.

¶ 128. Where a person has organized a corporation and is practically its sole owner and all its assets have been acquired under his immediate supervision, it cannot be said that statements made by him as to the value of the stock were mere expressions of opinion when such statements were given to induce a traveling salesman of the corporation to invest in such stock.—Hubbard v. Oliver, 173 Mich. 337.

¶ 129. Where a corporation, in order to induce a purchase of stock and the acceptance of a position as selling agent of its product, represents that a good manager could secure sales to a certain amount per month, whereas in its experience no manager had ever been able to sell such an amount per month, such representations may constitute fraud.—Martin v. Veana Food Co., 153 Mich. 282.

¶ 130. A representation by a seller that property would readily sell in a certain market at a given price, is the representation of an alleged fact and where relied upon may be the basis of a false representation.—Pratt v. Allegan Circuit Judge, 177 Mich. 558.

¶ 132. Statements by the vendor's agent as to the amount of profits a purchaser of a threshing machine will make before the first payment thereon falls due, are no more than the ordinary "puffing" used by salesmen generally.—Truman v. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co., 169 Mich. 153.

¶ 133. Representations of the value of land by the owner to one who was thereby induced to lend money upon the land as security, held to be fraudulent statements of fact and not matters of opinion merely.—Coulter v. Minion, 139 Mich. 200.

¶ 134. False statements of value intentionally made to one who is in ignorance of the quality and value, under circumstances indicating a purpose that such statements are to be relied upon, and where the party to whom they are made has no opportunity to examine the property, may be treated as an affirmation of fact and fraudulent.—Pinch v. Hotaling, 142 Mich. 521.

¶ 135. Where a defendant seller of land represents to a plaintiff purchaser, in order to induce him to buy a parcel, that other parcels of the land have been sold and the buyers intend to settle upon and cultivate the land, such statements, if false, are actionable.—Painter v. Lebanon Land Co., 164 Mich. 260.

¶ 136. False representations by the assignor of a land contract as to the amount paid by him thereon, and as to the extent of his title thereunder, are actionable and cannot be classed as "selling talk."—Wegner v. Herkimer, 167 Mich. 587.

¶ 137. A representation by a real estate agent to a purchaser that the price named by him is the price at which the owner offers to sell the property, is not a mere statement of opinion as to the value of the property, but a statement of fact within the agent's knowledge and unknown to the purchaser, upon which the purchaser has a right to rely. —Hokanson v. Oatman, 165 Mich. 512.

¶ 138. In an action for the purchase price of a set of books and a city lot, held that representations that the lot is in a suburb of New York and in easy reach of the city by railways every hour, that such lots are rapidly increasing in value and only a few of them are for sale are more than the expression of an opinion or ordinary "puffing." —J. B. Millett Co. v. Andrews, 175 Mich. 350.

¶ 139. A representation that land was high and dry and good agricultural land, without mire, swamp or boggy portions, is a material representation of a fact.—Haener v. McKenzie, 188 Mich. 27.

¶ 141. A contract for the sale of standing timber will be canceled where it appears that complainants were not familiar with the value and that defendants induced them not to have any estimate made by assuring them that it was not necessary, and that they would deal fairly with them, whereby the contract was made for a sale for $1,650, when in fact the timber was worth $4,000.—Garr v. Alden, 139 Mich. 440.

¶ 142. A mining company held a lease on some property which it had been unable to work profitably, and its president obtained a reduction of the royalty upon the representation that it was essential in order to get the mine worked. Thereafter he negotiated the lease to another company which took it at the original royalty and worked the property. In an action against the original lessee for an accounting, held that the agreement reducing the royalty should be set aside as fraudulently obtained.—Lasier v. Appleton Land & Iron Co., 130 Mich. 588.

Necessity that representation be in writing to be actionable, see Frauds, Statute of, § 80.

¶ 143. Representations made by a mortgagee of chattels, upon inquiries by other creditors, that the mortgagor was doing a good business and would be able to meet his obligations, must be regarded as mere opinions, and cannot affect the mortgagee's rights where it does not appear that they were not made in good faith.—Chafey v. Mathews, 104 Mich. 103.

¶ 144. Representations as to the probable earnings of a corporation which the party making them desires to organize, made to induce the party to whom they are made to become a stockholder in the corporation, may be fraudulent and constitute a basis of action if made in bad faith, with a design to deceive and mislead said party, by one possessed of superior knowledge on the subject. —French v. Ryan, 104 Mich. 625.

¶ 145. Statements by officers of a building and loan association as to when shares of stock will attain their full value, and how low the rate of interest to a borrower will be, are matters of opinion merely, and are not to be treated as fraudulent representations.—Myers v. Alpena Loan & Building, etc., Ass'n, 117 Mich. 389.

¶ 147. A person may, without legal liability for results, permit another, for a consideration, to share his hopes, although the statement of such hopes may be adroitly phrased; but such rule will not permit one person to induce another, by an actual misstatement, to believe that a venture is without other risk than the usual risk of an established and prosperous business.—Martin v. Veana Food Co., 153 Mich. 282.

¶ 148. Representations made to induce the purchase of stock, such as the value of the shares, the probable life of the mine, and the probable quantity of ore defendant had seen, are no more than the mere expressions of opinions and are not actionable.—Krause v. Cook, 144 Mich. 365.

¶ 149. Representations made to induce the purchase of mining stock that the company issuing the stock owned the mine which comprised 85 acres, that they had a pipe line run, and water power enough to run the mine, that the company had paid dividends, and enough ore had been mined to pay the dividends already paid, that there was dump ore containing enough gold to pay for the working of the plant and keep it running, are clearly statements of fact, and when proved to be false are sufficient to justify the court to refuse to direct a verdict for the defendant in an action of assumpsit for money obtained by fraud and deceit.—Krause v. Cook, 144 Mich. 365.

¶ 150. Evidence that a manufacturing corporation, in securing a sale of its stock, represented that there was a constantly increasing demand for its product, that it had a plant which cost about $100,000, that the experimental stage had been passed, and that a net profit of 35 per cent could be shown, establishes representations of fact, and not merely expressions of opinion, and will sustain an action for fraud and deceit in the sale of stock.—Martin v. Veana Food Co., 153 Mich. 282.

¶ 151. Statements made by the officers of a corporation in obtaining the execution of an accommodation note for a debt owed by it, that the instrument would be cared for at maturity, that the company was doing a better business than in the past, and would soon be in a position to care for its indebtedness, and that the accommodation maker would never be called on to pay the note, are not false and fraudulent statements of fact.—Irwin v. Wolcott, 183 Mich. 92.

¶ 152. A purchase made by one who is insolvent, and with the purpose not to pay, is void even though the buyer has not made false representations.—Shipman v. Seymour, 40 Mich. 275.

¶ 153. To buy goods intending never to pay for them, and intending to mortgage them to another creditor, is such a fraud as avoids the sale; it is the same as if the buyer had made false and fraudulent representations as to his financial standing at the time of the purchase.—Ross v. Miner, 67 Mich. 410.

¶ 154. The failure of a vendee, who knows that he is in failing circumstances or insolvent, to disclose that fact to a vendor, will not make the purchase fraudulent, unless coupled with an intent on his part, at the time of the purchase, not to pay for the goods.—Reeder Bros. Shoe Co. v. Prylinski, 102 Mich. 468.

¶ 155. A chattel mortgage of a stock of goods obtained from a retail dealer under promises to extend him credit in the sale of goods for replenishing his stock is void for fraud if there was no intention to extend credit at the time of making the mortgage.—Crowley v. Langdon, 127 Mich. 51.

¶ 156. If a vendee makes no misrepresentation when he purchases goods, his insolvency alone will not make the transaction fraudulent and entitle the vendor to rescind.—Kirschbaum v. Jasspon, 123 Mich. 314.

¶ 157. A promise made in bad faith, with no intent to carry it out, and as a part of a scheme to defraud, may be received in evidence because it is connected with representations of fact, and its nonperformance may be proven, but, standing alone, statements promissory in their character are contractual in their nature and do not constitute fraud.—Barker v. Finley, 200 Mich. 166.

Evidence as to concealment of liens, see post ¶ 438.
Silence as evidence, see also post ¶ 243.
Silence or nondisclosure to person in relation of confidence as implied fraud, see post II.

¶ 158. The failure of a vendee who knows that he is insolvent to disclose that fact to the vendor will not make the purchase fraudulent unless coupled with an intent at the time of the purchase not to pay for the goods.—Zucker v. Karpeles, 88 Mich. 413.

¶ 159. A fraud arising from the suppression of the truth is as prejudicial as that which springs from the assertion of a falsehood, and courts have not hesitated to sustain recoveries where the truth has been suppressed with intent to defraud.—Tompkins v. Hollister, 60 Mich. 470.

¶ 160. In order to charge plaintiff with liability for fraudulent representations, it is not essential that the false assertions be made in express words; fraud may be accomplished by encouraging and taking advantage of a delusion known to exist in the minds of others.—Busch v. Wilcox, 82 Mich. 315, affirmed on rehearing 82 Mich. 336.

¶ 161. A settlement of a claim will not be set aside for fraud because of the refusal of the executor of the estate against which the claim is made to produce the evidence in his possession, and of his assertion that there was no such evidence.—Macomber v. Cottrell, 171 Mich. 371.

¶ 162. It seems that no fraud on an accommodation maker signing a renewal note is involved in failing to tell him of the reported losses of the principal maker, previously represented to be worth enough so that "no risk" would be taken in signing for accommodation.—First Nat. Bank v. Johnson, 133 Mich. 700.

¶ 163. Fraud may be consummated by suppression of facts and of the truth, as well as by open false assertions.—Fred Macey Co. v. Macey, 143 Mich. 138.

¶ 164. Where one fails in a duty he bears to inform another that the latter is not liable personally upon an obligation which she has signed, his neglect to so inform her being for his own benefit or for that of a bank with which he is connected, he commits a fraud that entitles her to relief in equity.—Tompkins v. Hollister, 60 Mich. 470.

Gravity or degree of the falsity, see ante § 5.

¶ 165. Every one is responsible for the belief he intentionally creates, whether by words or otherwise, and will be precluded from profiting by any unconscionable use of an obligation which he has wrongfully obtained thereby. It is no defense to fall back upon the literal meaning of the language alone.—Mizner v. Kussell, 29 Mich. 229.

¶ 167. In an action for fraudulent representations, made by defendant's agent in contracting for cutting pine on defendant's land, it appeared that such agent held two greatly varying estimates as to the quantity of the pine. Held, that the agent should have shown both estimates to the contractor, and that if he exhibited only the larger one, which was grossly incorrect, in order to induce the contractor to enter into the agreement, plaintiff was entitled to recover though the agent himself believed at the time in the correctness of the larger estimate.—Busch v. Wilcox, 82 Mich. 315, affirmed on rehearing 82 Mich. 336.

¶ 168. A bank of which inquiry has been made concerning a person's credit is not liable for simply giving a fair statement as to his credit and standing without stating that it holds against him an unrecorded mortgage. —Fifth Nat. Bank v. Pierce, 117 Mich. 376.

Superficial appearance of bonds as deception, see also ante ¶ 77.

¶ 169. A map on one side of letter paper of the agents of a landowner showing the location of lots, but incorrectly, is a representation of fact where the value of the lots depends upon their nearness to a city and a proposed plant of a great steel company as mapped.—Billig v. Goodrich, 199 Mich. 423.

¶ 171. Although representations as to value of stock and as to promised dividends are mere matter of opinion, and an action for fraud will not lie when he who alleges the fraud did not rely on the statements alleged to be fraudulent, but on statements derived from other sources, one guilty of fraud cannot escape liability by sending the purchaser to a confederate for an opinion, nor by inducing the purchaser to make an investigation which will not disclose to him, as it would to an expert, the falsity of the statement.—Barron v. Myers, 146 Mich. 510.

¶ 172. An agent was instructed to inquire into a customer's credit and to sell to him if he was satisfied with his answers. He sent an order to his principal without communicating the answers, and the order was filled. Held, that the principal had a right to assume that the inquiries were made and that the answers were satisfactory to the agent before he sent the order and to rely on that assumption even if not communicated.—Shipman v. Seymour, 40 Mich. 274.

¶ 173. One who enters a vessel on a shipbroker's books as for sale is responsible for the correctness of the data of description there appearing, if they were meant to be relied on and were relied on whoever made them.—Gilchrist v. Manning, 54 Mich. 210.

¶ 175. A merchant who knowingly makes a false report to a commercial agency of material facts as to his financial condition, for the purpose of obtaining a standing thereby, is liable in an action for fraudulent representations brought against him by one to whom the agency has communicated the report, and who, believing such report to be true, has sold goods to him on credit.—Hinchman v. Weeks, 85 Mich. 535.

¶ 176. A merchant who allows considerable time to elapse after making a report to a commercial agency without making new representations cannot be said—even though his condition has changed—to be guilty of actual fraud unless he knows, or should know, that credit is extended upon the strength of his original rating.—Cortland Mfg. Co. v. Platt, 83 Mich. 419.

¶ 177. It is the duty of a merchant who has furnished statements to commercial agencies of his financial standing for the purpose of gaining credit to give them notice of any material change for the worse, to the end that persons with whom he has commercial dealings may not be misled as to the extent of credit they may safely give him.—Mooney v. Davis, 75 Mich. 188.

¶ 178. A merchant registered with a mercantile agency need not report every variation in his circumstances; it is only when he is insolvent and is or should be aware that he will be obliged to suspend or fail that he owes a duty to creditors or to notify a commercial agency of a change of situation.—Cortland Mfg. Co. v. Platt, 83 Mich. 419.

¶ 179. F. C., an insolvent, organized the firm of F. C. & Co., with M. and H., who were worth from $50,000 to $75,000, as his copartners. M. and H. lived in Ohio, and the principal office of the new firm was located in that state. C. continued to reside at G., in Michigan, and conducted business for himself in the name of C. & Co. C. ordered certain merchandise from plaintiffs, a Missouri firm, with whom he had had no prior dealings. The order was signed "F. C. & Co.," and was mailed from G. Plaintiffs, after consulting Dun & Co.'s reports, and finding the firm of F. C. & Co. in the G. list, rated at from $50,000 to $75,000, filled the order. C. disposed of the merchandise, deposited the proceeds to the credit of C. & Co., and refused to pay the purchase price. Plaintiffs sued in an action of deceit. It appeared that C. had been for years a subscriber to Dun & Co.'s reports, that he knew just how the firm of F. C. & Co. was rated, and understood that the rating would secure credit for the firm at the hands of strangers. Held, that he perpetrated a fraud in obtaining the merchandise, and in appropriating the proceeds, on the pretense that he was doing business for himself under the name signed to the order.—Frisbee v. Chickering, 115 Mich. 185.

¶ 179a. One undertaking to furnish a statement as to the financial condition of another who refers the inquirer to his books which show a capital of $8,000 without any deductions, is under a duty to disclose the amount of indebtedness which he knows to exist.—Banner Cigar Mfg. Co. v. Treusch, 125 Mich. 265.

¶ 180. False representations made to the natural guardian of a minor, that have the tendency to induce him to abandon all care for her interest in certain property, constitute fraud against her, in the view of a court of equity, as much as if she had been capable of managing her own affairs, and they had been made to her.—Tong v. Marvin, 15 Mich. 60.

¶ 181. It is actionable fraud to procure from a remote grantor, on a pretended purpose of perfecting the title of those holding under him, a quitclaim deed to a third person, and then by working on the fears of the owner and occupant, plaintiff, to induce him to give a note and mortgage on his land to protect it against the false title so acquired.—Hanold v. Bacon, 36 Mich. 1.

¶ 182. It is actionable wrong to induce one's corporation by fraud and deceit to reject a manufactured machine, which otherwise the corporation would have accepted from plaintiff.—Morgan v. Andrews, 107 Mich. 33.

¶ 183. Procuring a quitclaim deed from the original grantor of land correctly describing such land, which he had previously transferred by a deed containing a wrong description of such land, was a fraud on the mortgagee of such land holding under such prior deed and foreclosure of mortgage, and such mortgagee was entitled to the benefit of such quitclaim deed; where, in an action to clear title, it appeared that such land had been repeatedly deeded, the wrong description being always used, and was mortgaged in the same terms, and sold on foreclosure to the mortgagee; and where the mortgagor, subsequent to the execution of the mortgage, gave a stranger a deed correctly describing such land, and the grantee again conveyed it by the same description, but such deeds were not recorded; and where the last of such grantees mortgaged the land by the right description and such mortgage was foreclosed by advertisement; and where such quitclaim deed correctly describing the land, was then procured in the interest of such foreclosure purchaser, from the original grantor, without consideration, and upon representing to him that such deed did not interfere with any title previously conveyed.—Taber v. Shattuck, 55 Mich. 370.

¶ 184. A lessor who by a second mortgage fraudulently planned between his lessee and a third person has lost his right to exercise the power, given him by a chattel mortgage clause in the lease, to seize the lessee's goods on the premises in default of rent, has a right of action against the lessee and such third person based not upon his interest in the goods, but upon the fraudulent deprivation of a right.—Crockett v. Bearce, 104 Mich. 257.

¶ 185. A party defrauded may have more than one wrongdoer, actual or constructive, to look to for redress, but the active wrongdoer is always responsible for his own frauds.—Hempfling v. Burr, 59 Mich. 294.

¶ 186. In an action for fraud and deceit, where the declaration and proof showed that one codefendant did not personally make the false representations, he may still be liable if the jury find that they were made at his instigation, since in such case he is chargeable with the acts of his codefendant.—Sudworth v. Morton, 137 Mich. 575.

¶ 187. Pursuant to a scheme to unload the business of a firm, which had become unprofitable, and its property, which was heavily incumbered, upon a corporation to be organized as a part of the scheme, one of the partners, by fraudulent representations as to the profits of the firm business and the persons who were to join in forming the corporation, induced a party to subscribe for some of the corporate stock, in payment for which he gave his promissory note, which was transferred to the other partner. In consummation of the scheme the firm property was transferred to the corporation, and, by reason of the fact that the two partners controlled the directorate, the same was credited to the partner who made the false representations, on the books of the corporation, at a figure largely in excess of its actual value and of the value of which it had been agreed to be taken. Held, in a suit upon the note that although a fraud may have been perpetrated upon the corporation, the whole scheme was none the less a fraud upon the maker of the note, for which the partner to whom it was transferred must be held liable, not only because a beneficiary, having received the proceeds of stock subscriptions, but because a participant in the final act which gave color to the whole transaction.—French v. Ryan, 104 Mich. 625.

¶ 188. An agent who makes false representations of facts which he does not know to be true and does not know anything about, is guilty of bad faith and cannot escape the consequences of making false representations of existing facts.—Bartholomew v. Walsh, 191 Mich. 252.

¶ 189. In a transaction with A., B. in good faith represented to him that a certain mortgage was properly recorded, and a primary security upon certain lands in another state, which proved untrue. B. also referred A. to his agent in such state, who assured him to the same effect. A. relied and acted upon the information received from both. Held, that B. was bound by his agent's as well as by his own representations.—Beebe v. Young, 14 Mich. 136.

¶ 190. Where in an action of deceit, a defendant has made misrepresentations, it is immaterial that he has made them in the form of a report made up by another.—Diel v. Kellogg, 163 Mich. 162.

¶ 191. Under an agreement between an owner and a contractor providing that the architect shall be the final judge as to the work of building a house, and that money shall be paid to the contractor upon the architect's certificates, a plaintiff who furnishes materials for the house cannot recover for fraudulent representations made by the architect inducing plaintiff to refrain from taking steps to secure himself on the property, where there is not sufficient evidence to show that the defendant owner authorized the architect as his agent to make representations as to payment.—Michigan Lumber Yard v. Blesch, 166 Mich. 470.

¶ 191a. Where a person desiring to secure goods from plaintiff to sell on his own account was required to procure sureties to secure plaintiff against loss, it was held in an action against such sureties on a guaranty signed by them that there was no evidence that in procuring such guaranty such person acted as plaintiff's agent, and hence plaintiff was not responsible for misrepresentations made by him as to the character of the instrument presented to defendants for their signature.—Saginaw Medicine Co. v. Batey, 179 Mich. 651.

¶ 193. Where defendant being an officer of a bank to which complainant owed a note, and also of a gas company, shares in which complainant had pledged collaterally to the note, fraudulently sold and transferred the shares and took up the note, he could not exempt himself from responsibility by claiming that the fraud was committed in an official capacity.—Hempfling v. Burr, 59 Mich. 294.

¶ 194. Where defendants, officers of a corporation, make fraudulent representations as to the financial condition of a business, with intent to deceive, and to secure money by persuading one to invest in a corporation, such person may recover from them for the

Burden of proving grounds for rescission, reformation or other like relief, see Rescission, VI; Reformation, III; Injunctions, III.

¶ 195. Fraud cannot be presumed, but must be proved, and the burden of proving it is on him who complains of it.—Miller v. Finley, 26 Mich. 249; Robert v. Morrin's Estate, 27 Mich. 306; Cranson v. Smith, 37 Mich. 309; Darling v. Hurst, 39 Mich. 765; Brown v. Dean, 52 Mich. 267; Edwards v. Edwards, 54 Mich. 347; Attorney General v. Ruggles, 59 Mich. 123; McArthur v. Oliver, 60 Mich. 605; Allison v. Ward, 63 Mich. 128; Bostwick v. Benjamin, 63 Mich. 289.

¶ 196. There is no presumption of fraud.—Beal v. Congdon, 75 Mich. 77; Johnson v. Seymour, 79 Mich. 156; Webber v. Jackson, 79 Mich. 175; Clinton v. Rice, 79 Mich. 354; Peaslee v. Collier, 83 Mich. 549; Sheldon v. Mann, 85 Mich. 265; Gilchrist v. Kelley, 85 Mich. 413; Henneberger v. Matter, 88 Mich. 396; Zucker v. Karpeles, 88 Mich. 413.

¶ 198. Fraud cannot be presumed, but must be established by preponderance of the evidence, and the burden of proving it is upon the party who complains of it.—Dorrington v. Carpenter, 171 Mich. 652.

¶ 199. Fraud is not to be lightly presumed, but must be firmly established by proof.—A. E. Wood & Co. v. Standard Drug Co., 192 Mich. 453.

¶ 201. While the law does not presume bad faith, it does presume that there may be bad faith.—Prince v. Clark, 81 Mich. 167.

¶ 202. It is an established rule of law that every man shall be credited with an honest, rather than a dishonest, motive in any transaction not suspicious on its face, or surrounded by such circumstances as would fairly lead an unprejudiced mind to the conclusion that a fraud was intended.—McMahon v. Rooney, 93 Mich. 390.

¶ 203. In an action to rescind a sale fraud is not presumed but must be proved, and the burden of proof is on the party alleging it.—Zucker v. Karpeles, 88 Mich. 413.

¶ 204. It cannot be assumed that the sale of a patent is fraudulent, or that, because it afterwards turns out to be of little or no value, that fact alone indicates fraudulent intent in the vendor.—Henneberger v. Matter, 88 Mich. 396.

¶ 205. The presumption that one knows the law is a violent one in most cases, and cannot be raised against one who has been defrauded by false representations.—Averill v. Wood, 78 Mich. 342.

¶ 206. Fraud cannot be assumed without proof, when, if it existed, it could be proved by a witness put on the stand as reliable by complainants, and not asked about it.—Beal v. Congdon, 75 Mich. 77.

¶ 207. While a particular fraud cannot be proved by presumption alone, yet, where the fraudulent act is shown to have been committed by one or more persons, presumption is admissible to show the complicity of others who have authorized or procured its commission.—Dayton v. Monroe, 47 Mich. 193.

¶ 208. The burden of proving fraud is upon the party alleging it or complaining of it.—Beal v. Congdon, 75 Mich. 77; Peaslee v. Collier, 83 Mich. 549; Blanchard v. Moors, 85 Mich. 380; Zucker v. Karpeles, 88 Mich. 413; Freedman v. Campfield, 92 Mich. 118; Bly v. Brady, 113 Mich. 176; Raymond v.

¶ 209. Fraud is never presumed, and the burden should not be imposed upon a party of showing affirmatively that no fraud exists in a transaction.—Brace v. Berdan, 104 Mich. 356.

¶ 210. It is not ordinarily necessary to negative fraud until something has been offered tending to show it.—Attorney General v. Ruggles, 59 Mich. 123.

¶ 211. Not every purchase made by a merchant whose liabilities are equal to or even in excess of his assets is presumptively fraudulent, nor will a purchase under such circumstances justify an inference that the purchaser had a purpose not to pay for the goods so purchased.—Ross v. Miner, 101 Mich. 1.

¶ 213. One signing a release of damages for personal injuries is presumed to have executed it understandingly, and prima facie it must be taken as truly stating the agreement of the parties, and the burden of proof is upon him not only to show by a preponderance of evidence that it is not true, but that he was fraudulently deceived and misled by what was done and said into believing that he was signing a mere receipt for money paid under a contract different from that stated in it.—Porth v. Cadillac Motor Car Co., 198 Mich. 501.

¶ 214. When equitable relief from a contract to purchase is sought on the ground of fraud, the burden of proof is upon the complainant.—Brooks v. Culver, 168 Mich. 436.

¶ 215. In an action upon a written lease, plaintiff, by proving the execution of the instrument and offering it in evidence, makes out a prima facie case, and the burden is upon defendant, who seeks to avoid its effect under a claim that his signature was fraudulently obtained, to establish the fraud.—Bly v. Brady, 113 Mich. 176.

¶ 216. Where a written agreement of settlement bears the genuine signatures of the parties in interest the burden is upon an executor seeking to recover in disregard of it to show that it did not embody the terms of the preliminary oral negotiations, and that his testator's signature was obtained by fraud.—Sheley v. Brooks, 114 Mich. 11.

¶ 217. In an action on a written contract for the purchase price of a set of books, defendant where he pleads fraud has the burden of proving such fraud by a fair preponderance of the evidence.—J. B. Millett Co. v. Andrews, 175 Mich. 350.

¶ 218. Where fraud is set up as a defense in a suit to determine the rights to a fund paid into court, a charge that the burden is upon the party claiming fraud is correct. —Kahn v. Minthorn, 178 Mich. 312.

¶ 219. Where a director of a bank made an agreement with the cashier for the withdrawal of a note of which he was an indorser, the cashier to carry a fictitious entry of credit of its amount until the note became uncollectible, whereupon it was returned to the bank, in assumpsit to recover from the director the amount of the note it is incumbent upon the bank to show that at the time of the alleged agreement the note was collectible and that at the time it again appeared in the files of the bank it was worthless.—Crawford v. Steel, 137 Mich. 610.

¶ 220. Where, in defense to a foreclosure suit, it is averred that the mortgage was procured by false representations, the burden of proving such representations is on the defendant.—Sloan v. Holcomb, 29 Mich. 153.

¶ 221. The burden of proving fraud alleged as a defense to a mortgage is on the mortgagor.—Perrett v. Yarsdorfer, 37 Mich. 596.

As between parent and child dealing with each other, see Parent and Child, IV.

As between husband and wife in mutual dealings, see Husband and Wife, II.

As regards dealings by representatives or trustees with those whom they represent, see Estates of Decedents, X, A; Guardianship, VI; Trusts, VIII.

Implication of fraud against grantee of heir from profits made by purchaser in transaction, see Estates of Decedents ¶ 1140.

Implication of fraud in representative's sale from fact that purchaser resold at large profit, see Estates of Decedents ¶ 812.

Burden of proof and presumptions as to undue influence in wills, see Wills, III.

¶ 222. Relationship between the parties raises no presumption of fraud, which must be proved even among relatives.—Fraser v. Passage, 63 Mich. 551.

¶ 223. All presumptions are against fraud; it cannot be lightly charged against one in whom implicit confidence has been placed, especially if a near relation; such a person is fairly entitled to a favorable construction of any conduct that is reasonably consistent with integrity, and an accusation that may seriously affect his business reputation should not be held proved by circumstances that are merely ambiguous.—Pierce v. Pierce, 55 Mich. 629.

¶ 224. Undue influence is not necessarily to be presumed from the fact that a man, when in a dying condition, made a deed of land to be immediately transferred to a woman who had been regularly married to him and had lived with him for many years as his wife, and who, unless provided for by him, would have been left without proper support.—Johnson v. Rose, 50 Mich. 334.

¶ 225. When a party deals with a man whom he knows to be of weak intellect, and the good faith of such dealings is challenged, he has the burden of proof to show that no undue advantage was taken.—Gates v. Cornett, 72 Mich. 420.

¶ 226. Where one obtains from another, with whom he occupies a fiduciary relation such as that of a confessor, a conveyance to himself, the burden is upon him to show that his grantor acted freely and with full knowledge of all the facts.—Finegan v. Theisen, 92 Mich. 173.

¶ 227. Burden of showing that grantor understood import of deed and of negativing undue influence, is upon grantee, whose relations with grantor had been confidential as her brother and only adviser in business, and where the circumstances make it apparent that it was made on his advice or suggestion.—Smith v. Cuddy, 96 Mich. 562.

¶ 228. A weak-minded old woman, putting herself into a person's hands in a transaction which especially concerned the latter's interests, gave him, without the knowledge of her family, a mortgage as security for a debt of her son. Held, that the mortgagee was bound to show in defense of the validity of his mortgage that the mortgagor had fully understood what she was doing, that she was acting freely, and that he had not abused her confidence.—Wartemberg v. Spiegel, 31 Mich. 400.

¶ 229. Where one who stands in confidential relation to one of weak intellect, and who confides and places confidence in him, takes a benefit under a deed prepared by himself, the courts ought to refuse judicial sanction to the instrument until fully satisfied of the fairness of the transaction, and that the instrument is the intelligent act of the person executing it.—Seeley v. Price, 14 Mich. 541.

¶ 230. When a man is addicted to a habit which enfeebles his intellect and his power of self-protection, a person who spends day after day in driving hard bargains with him cannot obtain their enforcement in equity if he does not make a very clear showing of open dealing.—Storrs v. Scougale, 48 Mich. 387.

¶ 231. A stranger to a deed seeking to charge the grantor with a fraud in pretending to convey more than he had, which fraud depends on knowledge communicated in the negotiation for the deed through an interpreter, must show that the interpreter communicated to such grantor what the other party said on which the alleged knowledge rested.—Highstone v. Burdette, 61 Mich. 54.

¶ 234. In cases of conspiracies or combinations to commit a fraud all evidence must be held admissible which has any tendency to prove the conspiracy or combination, and its nature and objects, so far as these can have any bearing upon the issue on trial.—Beebe v. Knapp, 28 Mich. 53.

¶ 235. Where the issues involve fraud, all facts and circumstances tending to throw light upon the transaction between the parties claimed to have been implicated are admissible.—Hyde v. Shank, 77 Mich. 517.

¶ 238. Where it is claimed that a sale made by plaintiffs to defendant was due to the latter's fraudulent representations as to his financial condition, the whole conduct of the vendee at the time in any way concerning his business and property is material, and full inquiry into all the circumstances should be allowed.—Arnstine Brothers & Mier v. Treat, 71 Mich. 561.

¶ 240. Where the defense of indorsers is that their indorsement was secured by fraudulent representations of the president of plaintiff bank as to financial soundness of the maker, evidence that another banker had told such president that the maker of the notes was in bad condition and would soon fail is inadmissible to show the fact, being an opinion then entertained by the witness.—Alpena Nat. Bank v. Greenbaum, 80 Mich. 1.

¶ 241. The vendee of an interest in a firm's business and assets who sues his vendor for falsely representing certain accounts included in the purchase to be good and collectible, may show that the other partner's interest was merely nominal.—Totten v. Burhans, 103 Mich. 6.

¶ 242. In a suit to recover the purchase price of three great gross papers of pins which the plaintiff claimed to have shipped to the defendant upon his written order, the defendant claimed that the order, as given, was for three gross of pins, but that plaintiff's agent fraudulently inserted the larger amount. Held, that it was competent for defendant to show, in support of his claim, that the order sued upon was grossly disproportionate to the business in which he was engaged and would require 75 years to dispose of.—Shrimpton & Sons v. Netzorg, 104 Mich. 225.

¶ 243. Where it is not shown that the clerk of a broker making the sale of a rooming house business knew of the reputation or character of any of the roomers, his silence on the subject is not evidence of a fraudulent design to deceive the buyer as to those facts.—Williamson v. Hannan, 200 Mich. 658.

¶ 244. In an action on a written contract for the purchase price of a set of books and a city lot, testimony as to representations made by plaintiff's agent at the time the contract was signed is admissible for the purpose of showing the contract was procured by fraud.—J. B. Millett Co. v. Andrews, 175 Mich. 350.

¶ 245. In a suit to recover money advanced for goods under a contract alleged to have been secured by fraud, the plaintiff who received the goods may testify in order to prove fraudulent inducements, that he was not invited by defendant to test any samples. —Ward v. Cook, 158 Mich. 283.

¶ 246. Plaintiff sued defendant to recover on the ground of fraud money advanced by the former for goods furnished him by the latter. Held, it was proper to admit in evidence plaintiff's statement that he became suspicious about defendant's representation as to the magnitude of his business.—Ward v. Cook, 158 Mich. 283.

¶ 247. In an action for deceit, a witness may give his conversation with defendant which tended to show, although it did not necessarily show, that defendant recognized his obligation to plaintiff.—Diel v. Kellogg, 163 Mich. 162.

¶ 248. Fraud by a buyer on a seller may be considered by the jury though it lies outside of the written financial statement by defendant buyer which he told the seller was not correct.—Heineman v. Steiger, 54 Mich. 232.

Latitude allowable in examination of witnesses, see Examination of Witnesses, I.

Scope and range of cross-examination as to fraud or good faith, see Examination of Witnesses § 53.

In garnishment proceedings, see Garnishment, VI.

¶ 249. Where the issue involves a charge of fraud, evidence tending to show fraud is freely admitted, and a wide range of inquiry into transactions between the parties is allowed.—Comstock v. Smith, 20 Mich. 338; Anderson v. Walter, 34 Mich. 113; Jacobson v. Metzger, 35 Mich. 103; Cook v. Perry, 43 Mich. 623; Fury v. Strohecker, 44 Mich. 337; Dibble v. Nash, 47 Mich. 589; Gutsch v. Pittsley, 51 Mich. 566; Angell v. Pickard, 61 Mich. 561; Burrill v. Kimbell, 65 Mich. 217; Ross v. Miner, 67 Mich. 410; Ganong v. Green, 71 Mich. 1; Hyde v. Shank, 77 Mich. 517; Stevenson v. Woltman, 81 Mich. 200.

¶ 250. Upon the trial of issues involving fraud, a large latitude of inquiry is permitted; and all facts and circumstances tending to throw light upon the transaction between the parties alleged to have been implicated are allowed to be given in evidence. —Hyde v. Shank, 77 Mich. 517; Miller v. Hanley, 94 Mich. 253.

¶ 251. Where fraud is charged, a wide range of investigation is usually permitted, but irrelevant testimony is no more admissible than in other cases.—Wessels v. Beeman, 87 Mich. 481.

¶ 252. When the inquiry upon the trial of a cause involves fraud, the court is invested with a wise discretion as to the latitude he will allow counsel in the introduction of testimony and cross-examination of witnesses. —Stevenson v. Woltman, 81 Mich. 200.

¶ 253. When the issue to be tried involves a charge of fraud, evidence tending to establish the alleged fraud is freely admitted, and a wide range of inquiry into transactions between the parties is allowed.—Gumberg v. Treusch, 103 Mich. 543.

¶ 254. In replevin of goods obtained by fraudulent representations, great latitude must be allowed in the examination of witnesses, and therefore it was error to refuse to admit testimony in such a case, that within six months of the giving of a chattel mortgage under which immediate possession had been given, the debtor's purchases had been much larger in amount than prior to such time, and that most of them had been purchased from firms he had never dealt with before.—Kirschbaum v. Jasspon, 119 Mich. 452.

¶ 255. In an action on a contract where the defendant seeks damages for false representation as to the value of land deeded to him broad latitude is given, and it is not error to permit a question as to what the plaintiff seller paid for the land.—Morman v. Harrington, 118 Mich. 623.

¶ 256. Much latitude will be allowed in the admission of circumstantial evidence when fraud is alleged.—Krolik v. Lang, 187 Mich. 286.

¶ 257. Where in an action for fraud and deceit arising out of the exchange of properties where the plaintiff was permitted to testify fully as to the representations made by the defendants, it was proper to ask him the reason why he made the exchange.—Pinch v. Hotaling, 142 Mich. 521.

¶ 258. In a suit by plaintiff vendee of land to recover damages for false representations made by defendant vendor as to the land being good for farming and capable of growing numerous crops, plaintiff was allowed to testify to the extent of the labor and effort made to produce crops and to state that enough could not be raised to support his family; that he had to go elsewhere for work; and that his family had to be assisted by others. Held, while the testimony was remote and might have been properly excluded, its reception did not constitute reversible error.—Yanelli v. Littlejohn, 172 Mich. 91.

§ 33. ——Other frauds or misstatements and collateral facts.

General rules as to admissibility of other or similar facts, see Evidence, III.

Admissibility of representations of profit realized by former corporation as evidence of damages in action for fraudulent sale of stock in new corporation, see also Damages ¶ 1169.

¶ 259. In a suit for fraudulent representations of the value of land, it is competent to show that the same representations concerning it were made on the former sale of an adjoining parcel to the same purchaser, and it is immaterial that the second sale was not then in contemplation and that the seller was not in position to make it.—Kost v. Bender, 25 Mich. 515.

¶ 260. In an action for fraud from false representations to the plaintiff, evidence that defendant made the same representations to another person after the cheat had been accomplished is admissible, not as substantial proof of the statements, but to identify the agency by which the fraud was committed, and to show that plaintiff had not misunderstood the defendant.—Cook v. Perry, 43 Mich. 623.

¶ 261. In an action for fraudulently procuring plaintiff to loan money upon land of third parties, which defendant falsely represented to be valuable and with clear title, it is proper, as tending to prove defendant's fraudulent knowledge and intent in the transaction complained of, to show that about the same time defendant had employed similar fraudulent methods upon others than plaintiff.—Stubly v. Beachboard, 68 Mich. 401.

¶ 262. Any purchase obtained by false representations as to solvency made by a firm within a period before its failure equal to the period of credit usually allowed to it upon its purchases may be shown as bearing on the question whether another purchase made within that period was fraudulent or not, in contemplation of insolvency.—Shipman v. Seymour, 40 Mich. 275.

¶ 263. It is relevant on a charge of fraud by a buyer in concert with lumber inspectors to show that the inspection was much more to the disadvantage of plaintiff than the average variance ascribable to a difference in judgment of inspectors.—Turnbull v. Boggs, 78 Mich. 158.

¶ 265. Where one who sues for false representations whereby he was induced to buy corporation stock, had actual notice of the facts, testimony that like representations were made by the same persons to other parties at the time of his purchase, becomes immaterial even if competent.—McEacheran v. Western Transp. & Coal Co., 97 Mich. 479.

¶ 266. It is competent for the maker of a note, in support of his defense that he was induced to subscribe for the stock for which the note was given by fraudulent representations, to show that like representations were made by the same party to other persons to induce them to become stockholders in the corporation.—French v. Ryan, 104 Mich. 625.

¶ 267. Evidence of the fact that fraudulent representations, made to the seller's agent on a fraudulent purchase of goods by another, were communicated to the seller, is admissible in an action to recover the value thereof, not for the purpose of corroborating the testimony of such agent that such statements were made, but for the purpose of showing that the seller knew of them, and relied upon them in selling the goods.—Banner v. Schlessinger, 109 Mich. 262.

¶ 268. Upon a charge of fraud, evidence of the commission of another and distinct fraud is inadmissible, unless there is such a connection between the transactions as to make it inferable that both are parts of a general scheme or purpose to defraud.—Thompson v. Newland, 144 Mich. 595.

¶ 269. In garnishment proceedings where it is claimed defensively that sale of goods was not made by the principal defendants to the garnishee defendants but by a third person and it is contended that such a defense is a subterfuge, testimony of other sales to other persons by the principal defendants of which the garnishee defendants are not shown to have knowledge, and which were claimed to be fraudulent is inadmissible, and the admission of such is prejudicial.—Seitz v. Starks, 144 Mich. 448.

¶ 270. Plaintiff sued defendant to recover, on the ground of fraud, money advanced to defendant. Plaintiff was led to deal with defendant by a certain advertisement. Held, that the testimony of four other persons who had answered the same advertisement, and had been similarly treated, was admissible to show fraud.—Ward v. Cook, 158 Mich. 283.

¶ 271. In an action of deceit in which plaintiff alleges he was deceived by fraudulent representations in defendant's letter of a certain date, it is not reversible error to show that the letter was shown to other persons and that they also were induced to buy stock by the representations contained therein.—Diel v. Kellogg, 163 Mich. 162.

the land was valuable and suitable for farming and for a home and that a living could be made by suitable cultivation thereof, it is proper to receive evidence not only of climatic or frosty conditions of the farm, but also of other land similar situated in the neighborhood; and to show that whole sections of land in the vicinity, including the land in question, were so poor in quality as to be abandoned for farm purposes, especially when these questions are gone into by both parties and defendant is treated impartially. —Yanelli v. Littlejohn, 172 Mich. 91.

¶ 273. In an action on a written contract for the purchase price of a set of books, testimony as to representations made by plaintiff's agent to others in soliciting their orders is admissible to show fraud.—J. B. Millett Co. v. Andrews, 175 Mich. 350.

¶ 274. In a suit by plaintiff vendee of land to recover damages for fraudulent representations by defendant vendor, plaintiff was permitted to cross-examine defendant as to his practice of advertising in the newspapers land under false descriptions which he did not have to offer for sale, and as to whether he had not in fact advertised land in the same vicinity at lower prices than that paid by plaintiff. Held, the examination was permissible as bearing upon the intentional making of false representations by defendant as part of a general scheme to defraud.—Yanelli v. Littlejohn, 172 Mich. 91.

¶ 275. In an action for inducing plaintiff, by false representations as to its value, to purchase corporate stock, nonperformance of a promise of employment made to plaintiff as a part of the inducement to such purchase is inadmissible.—Hubbard v. Long, 105 Mich. 442.

§ 34. ——Prior and subsequent communications or transactions.

To show falsity, intent or knowledge, see also post § 41.

General rule as to facts before or after time of action brought, see Evidence § 94; Pleading. IX.

Declarations out of court and admissions as evidence, see generally Evidence, VII.

¶ 276. To avoid, on the ground of fraud, a sale of goods on credit, the fraud must have existed when the goods were sold, but it may be made out by evidence of the vendee's subsequent acts, admissions and dealings; and the vendor in an action to recover the goods is not restricted to evidence of the fraud and misrepresentations made by the vendee at or before the time of the sale.—Ross v. Miner, 64 Mich. 204.

¶ 277. An agent sold goods to a firm just before its failure. He claimed to have relied on their assurance that their assets exceeded their liabilities. He had taken notes for goods sold them fifteen months before the failure, and had extended the notes from time to time, and during this period he had offered to sell them other goods, which they declined. Held, that evidence of what they said to him on those occasions was inadmissible to show that he had not relied upon their assurance in the sale last made; it was prima facie mere hearsay, and did not tend to throw light upon the later conduct of the parties.—Shipman v. Seymour, 40 Mich. 274.

¶ 278. In an action for the value of timber delivered under a contract, there was no error in excluding testimony that before the contract was made one of the plaintiffs had represented the timber as of specified dimensions, where there was nothing to show that the representation was made to any one interested.—McKay v. Evans, 48 Mich. 597.

¶ 279. On a charge of fraud in concert between a buyer and chosen inspectors of lumber, it is proper to show that after the seller ascertained that the inspection was false he asked the buyer to change inspectors for others to be chosen jointly and was refused, and that a false reason was given for not allowing a man, sent at the seller's expense and by consent of the buyer to assist and observe the inspection, to do so.—Turnbull v. Boggs, 78 Mich. 158.

¶ 280. Alleged false representations made by the president of the bank, after defendants took the notes, to induce them to indorse such notes or a renewal thereof, were inadmissible, in an action by such bank against the indorsers, where such indorsers alleged that they were induced to sell goods to the maker of the notes by the representations of plaintiff's president that the maker was solvent, and that if defendants would sell the goods and take the notes, plaintiff would discount them, relying upon the maker alone for payment.—Alpena National Bank v. Greenbaum, 80 Mich. 1.

¶ 282. In an action for alleged misrepresentation in the purchase of shares of stock, testimony showing that after the purchase of the stock, plaintiff was present at a stockholders' meeting and was elected a director and afterwards participated in its management, that he heard read the annual reports, voted to secure loans and give mortgages, and remained with the company for two years and until after its affairs passed into the hands of a receiver, tended to show that plaintiff was not misled.—Hoeft v. Kock, 119 Mich. 458.

¶ 283. In a suit to recover money advanced under a contract alleged to have been secured by fraud, it is proper to admit in evidence letters passing between the parties prior to the executing of the contract which contained representations tending to induce plaintiff to enter into the contract.—Ward v. Cook, 158 Mich. 283.

¶ 285. Where in an action for deceit, plaintiff alleges that he was fraudulently induced by a letter of a certain date, written by defendant, to take stock in a corporation, it is material and proper to show whether or not plaintiff had agreed to take the stock before said date.—Steele v. Kellogg, 163 Mich. 132.

¶ 286. In an action of deceit in which plaintiff alleges he was deceived by fraudulent representations in defendant's letter of a certain date, a letter of a subsequent date, containing a repetition of such representations, may be introduced in order to show that they were not made inadvertently.—Diel v. Kellogg, 163 Mich. 162.

¶ 287. In an action of deceit, a letter written after the transaction in question is admissible to show that in a letter written prior to the transaction defendant intentionally made false representations.—Steele v. Kellogg, 163 Mich. 132.

¶ 288. Defendant organized a new corporation to buy a proprietary food article belonging to an old corporation. Plaintiff sued him in an action of deceit for fraudulent representations by which defendant induced plaintiff to purchase stock in the new corporation, and his declaration alleged such representations to have been made by defendant in certain letters. Held, that evidence of oral representations made by defendant prior to the time of writing the letters was admissible to show the intent with which defendant made the representations in the letters.—Steele v. Kellogg, 163 Mich. 132.

¶ 289. Where indorsers sued by a bank on notes alleged that they were induced to sell goods to the maker of the notes by the representations of plaintiff's president that the maker was solvent, and that if defendants would sell the goods and take the notes plaintiff would discount them, relying upon the maker alone for payment, such representations made by the president before the bank was organized, and also afterwards at the time when defendants took one of the notes in settlement for goods previously sold to the maker, were inadmissible.—Alpena Nat. Bank v. Greenbaum, 80 Mich. 1.

¶ 291. Representations made by a merchant to a commercial agency as to the amount of his indebtedness, but not as to his assets, and not shown by any competent testimony to have been communicated to or relied on by vendors from whom he orders goods five months afterwards, have no tendency to prove an intention on his part not to pay for the goods at the time he gave the order.—Zucker v. Karpeles, 88 Mich. 413.

¶ 292. In order to show that a person was deceived in extending credit in reliance on a false financial statement, he may show previous representations of the maker, as well as their financial dealings.—Krolik v. Lang, 187 Mich. 286.

¶ 293. Financial statements made previously to the one on which credit was obtained, are admissible in an action for making fraudulent representations, as tending to show that the creditor was deceived.—Krolik v. Lang, 187 Mich. 286.

¶ 294. In an action for obtaining goods by fraudulent representations made to a commercial agency, the agent to whom defendant's statement was made may testify as to the agency's method of doing business in collecting its reports.—Hinchman v. Weeks, 85 Mich. 535.

¶ 295. In an action upon notes given for corporate stock alleged to have been sold as a result of false representations as to the financial condition and property of the corporation, held that the articles of association and annual reports of the company were admissible to substantiate such defense.—Loud v. Solomon, 188 Mich. 7.

Dishonored check as evidence of intent, see also post ¶ 335.

Letters shown to other persons, see ante § 33, ¶ 271.
Letters and written communications before or after the fraud, see also ante § 34.
Financial statement or report as evidence, see ante § 35.
Authentication and foundation of documents to admit them, see Evidence, VIII, A.
Writings as res gestæ of fraud, see Evidence § 474.
Letter to agent with intent that he should exhibit it deceptively as evidence, see also Evidence ¶ 2007.

¶ 296. Fraud may always be shown as between the immediate parties to a written agreement, and in most cases the execution of the agreement is the first step in the proof.—Towle v. Dunham, 76 Mich. 251.

¶ 297. L. bought land from F., gave his note and a mortgage on it, and after improving it persuaded the vendor to cancel the sale and discharge the mortgage. But while the mortgage to F. was yet unrecorded he had mortgaged the land again to a third person without the knowledge of F., who sought damages against him for deceit in asserting that he had not incumbered it. Held, that it was not error to admit in evidence the record of the first mortgage to F., as it would show priority of the other mortgage as well as being a circumstance in the fraud.—Lenox v. Fuller, 39 Mich. 268.

¶ 299. It will be error, in an action on a contract defended on the ground of fraud, to admit defendant's evidence of promises made to induce the contract when there is no claim that such promises were made in bad faith, with no intent to perform them and as part of a scheme to defraud, but it does appear that the contract was disaffirmed before the time for the fulfillment of the promises arrived.—Boston Piano & Music Co. v. Pontiac Clothing Co., 199 Mich. 141.

¶ 300. The fact that a contract of submission between an insurer and insured provides that the award shall be binding upon both parties while the policy provided that such award shall be prima facie evidence of loss is not evidence of fraud in the inception of the contract where the language is plain and there is testimony that the insured read it.—Michels v. Western Underwriters' Ass'n, 129 Mich. 417.

¶ 301. Where a defendant advertised for branch managers stating "experience unnecessary," the language of the advertisement, taken with the other evidence of fraud, may be taken as evidence of a fraudulent representation.—Ward v. Cook, 158 Mich. 283.

Sale or price received as bearing on intent, see post ¶ 326.
Subsequently realized price as evidence of fraud in valuation, see also post ¶ 336.
Selling under fictitious name as evidence of complicity in fraud, see also post ¶ 349.
Evidence of value as bearing on probability of agreement to rescind by trading back properties, see also post ¶ 354.

¶ 302. In an action for fraud in misrepresenting the character and value of a note and mortgage received in exchange for personal property, it was held admissible to prove the value of the chattels, both to show the extent of the fraud, and as part of the res gestæ to throw light on the probabilities of the whole transaction.—Stone v. Covell, 29 Mich. 359.

¶ 303. In an action to recover damages for defendant's false representation that the amount of a mortgage upon land conveyed by him to plaintiff in exchange for other land was $2,500 instead of $3,000, defendant's offer—made to sustain his claim that he represented the amount due to be $3,000,—of testimony as to the value of the exchanged properties is inadmissible where the difference in value is not so great as to be beyond the range of a fair difference in judgment, and where there is no claim that either party was deceived as to the value of the lands or that any misrepresentations were made as to such value.—Short v. Cure, 100 Mich. 418.

¶ 304. In an action for fraudulent representation of the value of lands traded for lands belonging to the plaintiff, the value of the latter is immaterial.—Snow v. Nowlin, 43 Mich. 383.

¶ 305. Where one party to an exchange of land sues the other for fraud, and the latter claims recoupment on the ground that he too was defrauded by the false representations of the plaintiff as to the quality of the land which the plaintiff gave in exchange, the value of plaintiff's land becomes material.—Jackson v. Armstrong, 50 Mich. 65.

¶ 306. In an action of deceit for fraudulent representations as to land exchanged, evidence of the value of the plaintiff's property is admissible as bearing upon the probability of the defendant having made the representations alleged as to condition of what he offered and of reliance being placed on them.—Aldrich v. Scribner, 146 Mich. 609.

¶ 307. Where, in an action to recover damages for defendant's falsely understating to plaintiff the amount of a mortgage upon land conveyed to the latter in exchange for land deeded by him to defendant, it appears that plaintiff took the mortgaged premises at their fair value, and as valued by defendant, testimony as to the nature of the premises conveyed to defendant is immaterial.—Short v. Cure, 100 Mich. 418.

¶ 308. In an action by contract purchasers of farm land, after rescission of the contract, to recover damages for fraudulent representations as to the productivity of the soil, evidence of witnesses who claimed knowledge of the soil and what plaintiffs did on the land and results obtained as to the value of the land when plaintiffs purchased it, held admissible only for the purpose of showing that the land had no value for farm purposes.—Houder v. Reynolds, 195 Mich. 256.

¶ 309. On a bill to set aside a conveyance for inadequate consideration the fact that the land transferred had been held under a tax title only is relevant; the purpose of the inquiry is to find out how the amount paid compares with the market value of the interest sold.—West v. Russell, 48 Mich. 74.

¶ 313. In replevin of goods claimed to have been obtained by fraudulent representations as to financial ability, where plaintiff claimed that there was a conspiracy between the defendant who purchased the goods and mortgaged them to relatives who were also defendants, the fact that the mortgages were withheld from record for some 20 days, while the mortgagor continued in business, and that instead of filing the mortgage a new one was executed, was significant and bore on the question of conspiracy, particularly where it appeared that the mortgagees had been advised when the first mortgage was given, that the failure to file it would entitle intervening creditors to priority.—Durrell v. Richardson, 119 Mich. 592.

Nonperformance of other collateral promise, see ante ¶ 275.

¶ 314. No inference of fraud can be drawn from the fact that money not yet due remains unpaid; but there is no error in admitting testimony that the purchase price of goods purchased by means of a falsehood is still unpaid.—Shipman v. Seymour, 40 Mich. 275.

¶ 315. In an action of fraud based on misrepresentations and promises which were not performed, evidence that certain promises made were not performed is admissible though the promises themselves may have been contrary to public policy and not enforceable, where the promises were connected with the scheme to defraud.—McDonald v. Smith, 139 Mich. 211.

Insolvency as evidence of intent, see also post ¶ 331.

Making of mortgage as evidence of financial resources, see also ante ¶ 312.

¶ 317. Insolvency may always be submitted to the jury, with other facts, to show an intention to defraud.—Edson v. Hudson, 83 Mich. 450.

¶ 319. Where it is claimed that a sale made by plaintiffs to defendant was due to the latter's fraudulent representations as to his financial condition, evidence that defendant was before the sale indebted to plaintiffs is relevant, and the amount of his indebtedness is also relevant, both as bearing on the truth of his representations and on the question of insolvency.—Arnstine Brothers & Mier v. Treat, 71 Mich. 561.

¶ 320. Where a fraudulent mutual aid society pretended in its prospectus to have a reserve fund in bank, evidence of the condition of its bank account is admissible in an

¶ 321. Where one who complains of being cheated in a land trade testifies to having offered defendant a certain sum to trade back, it was held proper to exclude on cross-examination the question whether he had the necessary amount of money; the fact would not fairly test the good faith of the offer.—Snow v. Nowlin, 43 Mich. 383.

¶ 322. In an action upon notes given for corporate stock, resisted by defendant on ground of fraudulent representations that it was well financed, evidence of an expert witness that if a specified tract of land for a cement plant was purchased and paid for and there was a certain amount of cash on hand for construction purposes the plant could be successfully completed and operated by the sale of stock as the work progressed, does not tend to substantiate the representation that the company was fully financed.—Loud v. Solomon, 188 Mich. 7.

¶ 323. In an action for obtaining goods by fraudulent representations as to resources and property, the records in the office of the register of deeds showing that another party instead of the defendant had a deed of the property at the time the defendant declared he owned it may be contradicted by testimony that the deed had been issued to the defendant as purchaser, by him refused as unsatisfactory, and that later after making the statement he resold and had the name changed in accordance with an agreement and the deed then recorded in the name of the other party.—Musselman Grocer Co. v. Casler, 138 Mich. 24.

¶ 324. Evidence that parties had lived together in adulterous intercourse is pertinent as a fact tending to prove the existence of undue influence in procuring a deed.—Wallace v. Harris, 32 Mich. 380.

Competency of one to testify to his own fair or fraudulent intent, see Evidence § 235.

¶ 325. In an action to recover on account of misrepresentations of the amount paid on a contract, evidence as to whether defendant intended any fraud is inadmissible; the result to plaintiff being the same whether defendant acted in good or bad faith.—Angell v. Loomis, 97 Mich. 5.

¶ 326. Where the value of the note of a third party, given by defendants to plaintiff, is in question, the issue being deceit in representing it to be good, and where one of defendants has testified that he himself has sold a horse for notes of said third party, it is admissible to ask how much he got for the horse, for the purpose of showing his own opinion of the notes of the third party, and his own animus in the transaction at issue; if not admissible for this purpose, the evidence is impertinent, has no bearing on the case, and cannot injure the defense.—Beebe v. Knapp, 28 Mich. 53.

¶ 327. When fraud is charged on an agent and made to depend on his management of a sale of lands, the condition of the title to the lands and the agent's knowledge of its condition are pertinent subjects of inquiry.—Weeks v. Downing, 30 Mich. 4.

¶ 328. In an action for fraud in substituting one parcel of land for another in an exchange of real property, it is admissible to show that before the exchange defendant had offered to the witness the land which he afterwards agreed to let plaintiff have, as this would tend to show that the substitution was not a mere mistake.—Dibble v. Nash, 47 Mich. 589.

¶ 329. On the question whether there was fraud in procuring plaintiff to loan money upon land falsely represented to be valuable and held and occupied by the mortgagors by a clear title, it is competent, for the purpose of showing the falsity of defendants' representations, to show that the land was in fact adversely occupied.—Stubly v. Beachboard, 68 Mich. 401.

¶ 330. To show that there was intentional fraud in an inspection of lumber by the chosen inspectors, it is relevant to show that defendant solicited plaintiff to consent to those chosen.—Turnbull v. Boggs, 78 Mich. 158.

¶ 331. Insolvency may always be submitted to the jury with other facts to show a vendee's intention to defraud.—Edson v. Hudson, 83 Mich. 450.

¶ 332. One who has bought a partner's interest in a firm cannot, when suing his vendor for falsely representing that the business was profitable, show how he himself conducted the business, or how his vendor counseled with him in its management; nor can he show a sale of the business back to the vendor or the details of such transaction.—Totten v. Burhans, 91 Mich. 495.

¶ 333. Evidence that one who is claimed to have made a fraudulent sale of chattels was in poor health and required a change of climate, is admissible to show the good faith of the transaction.—Vyn v. Keppel, 108 Mich. 244.

¶ 334. Where in an action for deceit, plaintiff alleges that he was fraudulently induced by a letter of a certain date, written by defendant, to take stock in a corporation, it is material and proper on the question of intent to show whether or not defendant believed at the time of sending out said letter that plaintiff had already agreed with defendant's representatives to take the stock.—Steele v. Kellogg, 163 Mich. 132.

¶ 335. Where a chattel mortgagee sells the property secured by an unrecorded mortgage, and the chattel mortgagee sues the mortgagee in fraud for fraudulently inducing the mortgagee not to record the mortgage, a check, drawn against the purchasers, given by defendant to plaintiff, in pretended payment of the debt, which was dishonored because of no funds, is admissible in evidence.—Priebisch v. Ottenwess, 176 Mich. 476.

¶ 337. In a suit for damages for fraud and deceit in the sale of motor trucks, evidence of representations by defendant corporation's officers in the course of the negotiations and testimony tending to show that at the time of making the contract of sale the cars had not reached a point where they were practicable and salable as commercial machines, is admissible where said officers have represented same to be manufactured by skilled workmen and to be beyond the experimental stage. —Hall v. Duplex-Power Car Co., 168 Mich. 634.

¶ 338. Where defendant employed plaintiff as a branch manager under the representation that he intended to establish a permanent branch, evidence that the defendant equipped the branch office with poor, second-hand furniture is admissible to show defendant's lack of such intention.—Ward v. Cook, 158 Mich. 283.

¶ 339. Where, as a moving consideration for the entering into a contract, it was represented that a certain amount of goods could be sold each month, plaintiff, in an action for fraud and deceit, is entitled to show that it is impossible or unlikely that such an amount of goods could be sold.—Martin v. Veana Food Co., 153 Mich. 282.

¶ 340. A manufacturing corporation, through false representations, induced plaintiff to purchase some of its stock. As a part of the consideration plaintiff agreed to act as district manager, contemplating the sale of three hundred cases of its goods per month. Held, in an action for fraud, that evidence was competent to show that it was impossible or unlikely that a district manager could sell three hundred cases per month.—Martin v. Veana Food Co., 153 Mich. 282.

¶ 341. Plaintiff sued defendant to recover money advanced on the latter's fraudulent representations as to the quality of goods supplied the plaintiff. Plaintiff offered in evidence a sample case containing samples of products of the defendant, which samples plaintiff had relied on and which analyzed appeared of poor quality. Held, the sample case was admissible although plaintiff had received it unlocked.—Ward v. Cook, 158 Mich. 283.

See also ante ¶ 245.

To show deception by financial statement, see ante ¶¶ 292, 293.

Competency of one to testify of his own belief and reliance on other's representations, see Evidence § 235.

¶ 342. In order to prove reliance upon false representations whereby a loan was procured upon land not owned by the mortgagors, it is proper to ask plaintiff's agent (who made the loan) whether he would have made it if he had known that the land was adversely occupied and that one of the mortgagors had only a tax title.—Stubly v. Beachboard, 68 Mich. 401.

¶ 343. In an action for obtaining goods by fraudulent representations to a commercial agency as to defendant's financial condition, plaintiffs may show that before the report to such agency was made they directed their salesman not to call upon defendant, and that they refused to sell him goods.—Hinchman v. Weeks, 85 Mich. 535.

¶ 344. In an action for fraud in passing a note, falsely represented to be good, the plaintiff may testify that he relied upon the representations and believed them to be true; this is a vital point, on which his knowledge exceeds that of any one else.—Beebe v. Knapp, 28 Mich. 53.

¶ 345. Where a patient sued his doctor for cheating him in an exchange of land, it was held admissible to ask the patient on his examination-in-chief as to what the state of his health was previous to the bargain, it being claimed that the doctor had represented the land as a healthier location than that where the patient then resided.—Dibble v. Nash, 47 Mich. 589.

¶ 347. In an action for fraud and deceit arising out of the exchange of properties the plaintiff should have been permitted to testify to the fact that he relied upon a prospective lessee's opinion as to the rental value of the property, but the exclusion of such evidence was harmless where the plaintiff had already testified that he relied upon the defendant's representations made through alleged fictitious leases, and the rental of these leases corresponded with the rental value placed by the prospective lessee, who was an alleged conspirator with the defendant in the exchange.—Pinch v. Hotaling, 142 Mich. 521.

§ 43. ——To show complicity of parties.

Evidence as to agent's silence, see ante ¶ 243.
Evidence against garnishee without knowledge of facts, see also ante ¶ 269.

¶ 349. In replevin for goods sold by plaintiffs to R., who, soon after the purchase exchanged his goods and business for defendant's farm, plaintiffs claimed that R. bought the goods without intending to pay, and on the trial they sought to show by the cashier of a bank in the village where R.'s store was, that fourteen days after the purchase of the last bill of goods from plaintiffs, and shortly before the exchange, an account was opened at the bank in the name of R. and Co., that no such partnership was in fact entered into, that defendant checked out the account, and that R., during the month before the exchange and prior to said last purchase, advertised his stock for sale, not in his own name, but by reference to the number of a certain post-office box; the theory being that the advertisement and partnership were a scheme between R. and defendant to prevent creditors from learning of the proposed deal before it was accomplished. Held, that the testimony was competent as a link in the chain of evidence to establish the fraudulent purpose and defendant's notice thereof.—Reid, Murdoch & Co. v. Johnson, 100 Mich. 445.

Investigation as rebuttal of reliance, see post ¶ 436.
Redirect to bring out knowledge of facts by defendant, see Examination of Witnesses § 97.

¶ 350. In replevin for goods sold because of defendant vendee's fraudulent representations as to his pecuniary condition, one of plaintiff vendors who went to defendant's place of residence to make inquiry may testify, as explaining why he went to see vendee, that the letter ordering the goods was forwarded to him at another place.—Arnstine Brothers & Mier v. Treat, 71 Mich. 561.

¶ 351. Plaintiff in replevin for goods purchased by fraudulent representations by the buyer in an order sent by mail, having gone a second time to the buyer's town should have been permitted to testify that information of defendant's failure a few days after the sale led him to go to see defendant.—Arnstine Brothers & Mier v. Treat, 71 Mich. 561.

¶ 352. In replevin for goods purchased in fraud of plaintiff seller, who shortly afterwards failed, an attorney who called on defendant to see him about some claims may testify that he actually held the claims, and that he found defendant making an inventory of his stock.—Arnstine Brothers & Mier v. Treat, 71 Mich. 561.

¶ 353. Plaintiff sued for the purchase price of three great gross cards of hooks and eyes, claimed to have been shipped to defendant upon his written order. The defense claimed that the order actually given was for three gross only, and that the larger number was fraudulently inserted by plaintiff's agent. As an inducement to the order, plaintiff was to print defendant's advertisement upon the cards containing the hooks and eyes. Plaintiff afterwards wrote to defendant, acknowledging the receipt of an order for "three great gross," giving a copy of the advertisement, and requesting defendant to examine the same, and, if O. K., to sign and return. Defendant signed the printed statement which followed, to the effect that he had "checked this all over carefully," and found it to be "correct in every particular," placed his "O. K." within the space containing the advertisement, and returned the letter. Held, that defendant was properly permitted to testify that he supposed the letter to have been sent to obtain his approval of the advertisement, and that he gave no attention to anything further included therein.—Shrimpton & Sons v. Rosenbaum, 106 Mich. 68.

§ 45. ——As to waiver or merging agreement.

Sufficiency of proofs of laches, waiver or affirmance, see post § 57.

¶ 354. On the question whether a defrauded vendor of land agreed to take it back from the purchaser after the purchaser had incumbered it with a mortgage to a third person prior in record to the purchase money mortgage, it was proper to show the value of the improvements made on the land and the changes in its character, since that would bear on the likelihood of having agreed to take it back subject to the other mortgage.—Lenox v. Fuller, 39 Mich. 268.

§ 46. Weight and sufficiency of proofs.

[Note. It is not possible to separate with exact assurance those cases on the substantive sufficiency of the facts to constitute a fraud from those which determine the weight and sufficiency of the evidence offered. In this and the following sections the evidentiary sufficiency is considered, while cases on the requisite facts are collected ante, I, A., They should be consulted as complementary of each other.]

[Note. In numerous cases rescission and cancellation has been decreed or denied on evidence weighed and held sufficient or insufficient to establish the grounds alleged, which alleged grounds were fraud or undue influence and incompetency and mistake. Some of these cases leave it open to doubt on reading the opinions whether it is the one or the other ground which the evidence is ascribed to. Such cases have been classified in Rescission, II, VI, because of their equivocal nature. Where it has been safe to say that the evidence of fraud or undue influence was weighed as such, the cases have been kept in topic Fraud in this section.]

¶ 355. Fraud in fact may in civil cases be shown by testimony that produces a rational belief; it need not be so "clearly and conclusively established as to leave no rational doubt."—Watkins v. Wallace, 19 Mich. 57; Hough v. Dickinson, 58 Mich. 89; disapproving for the purpose of instructing the jury the rule as expressed in Buck v. Sherman, 2 D, 176.

¶ 356. The rule of the criminal law that the proof of fraud must be so conclusive as to leave no rational doubt of its existence does not apply in civil cases, where it may be shown by a preponderance of proof, or even by circumstantial evidence.—Hough v. Dickinson, 58 Mich. 89.

¶ 357. The proof of fraud in civil cases need not be such as to be inconsistent with any other view than that the accused party is guilty thereof.—Morley v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co., 85 Mich. 210.

¶ 358. The proof of fraud in civil cases need not be so clear and convincing as to leave no rational doubt.—Sweeney v. Devens, 72 Mich. 301; Morley v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co., 85 Mich. 210.

¶ 359. The defense of fraud in a civil action need not be established beyond a reasonable doubt; a mere preponderance of evidence is sufficient.—Knop v. Nat. Fire Ins. Co., 107 Mich. 323.

¶ 360. The proof of fraud in a civil case is sufficiently "convincing" if it creates a belief that a fraud has been perpetrated.—Gumbert v. Treusch, 103 Mich. 543.

¶ 361. Fraud must be established by a preponderance of the evidence, and where two witnesses affirm, and two others, no more interested in the subject-matter, and for all that appears fully as creditable, deny the fraud, it is not proved to the satisfaction of a court of equity.—Allison v. Ward, 63 Mich. 128.

¶ 366. Fraud must be proved clearly and conclusively in a suit for relief from a contract and cannot be lightly inferred.—Brooks v. Culver, 168 Mich. 436.

notes as an inducement to secure their indorsement were false, it is not sufficient to show that the representations as to solvency of maker were made, but it must be proved that such representations were false.—Alpena National Bank v. Greenbaum, 80 Mich. 1.

¶ 368. Complainant's claim that he was induced, by the misrepresentations of the members of the board of public works of a certain town, to make bids for the construction of certain sewers, and to deposit certain checks, the payment of which he seeks to have enjoined, held not to be supported by a preponderance of the evidence.—Langley v. Harmon, 97 Mich. 347.

¶ 369. In an action for fraudulently claiming to be a sincere, honest conscientious believer in the principles of Christian Science and qualified to give instruction in Christian Science mind healing whereby plaintiff was induced to pay for a course of instruction therein, evidence that defendant some two years before had superfluous hair removed from her face by material means, does not show that she was not a true believer in, and a practicer of the principles of, Christian Science, and does not tend to show fraud in holding herself out as a teacher thereof.—Meyer v. Knott, 137 Mich. 714.

¶ 370. In an action by a real estate broker against certain of the owners of property for damages for misrepresentation as to the right of a certain one of the owners to make the sale, evidence consisting merely of hearsay testimony of the plaintiff that he had been told after the deal fell through that a party other than the defendant had to be consulted before a sale could be effected, held insufficient to show that there was a misrepresentation.—Dickinson v. Hanley, 193 Mich. 585.

¶ 371. On a supplemental bill in divorce proceedings by a wife against her husband who, when alive, was a tenant by entirety of certain mortgaged premises which had been sold under foreclosure and the mortgagee, alleging that conspiracy and fraud had been practiced upon the complainant by her husband and the mortgagee in preventing her from protecting her rights in the redemption of the premises covered by the mortgage, and seeking equitable relief, evidence held insufficient to show fraud and conspiracy.—Palmer v. Palmer, 194 Mich. 79.

Admissibility of circumstances, see ante § 31 et seq.

Latitude allowable in examination and evidence, see ante § 32.

Proof of implied or constructive fraud or undue influence, see post § 48.

Instructions on degree and sufficiency of circumstantial proof, see post § 62.

¶ 373. Fraud need not be shown by direct proof. It may be, and generally is, proved by inference from facts and circumstances that satisfy the mind of its existence.—O'Donnell v. Segar, 25 Mich. 367; Adair v. Cummin, 48 Mich. 375; Burrill v. Kimbell, 65 Mich. 217; Ross v. Miner, 67 Mich. 410.

¶ 375. When fraud is denied it is not to be inferred from slight circumstances; but a denial of it in a chancery answer does not preclude inquiry or disarm the court of its power when, from the pleadings and proofs, it is satisfied of its existence.—How v. Camp, W. 427.

¶ 376. Fraud is seldom shown by direct proof, but may be established, like any other fact, by facts and circumstances and the inferences to be drawn therefrom.—Morgan v. Andrews, 107 Mich. 33.

¶ 377. Proof of facts and circumstances is sufficiently clear if it creates a belief that a fraud has been perpetrated, and a conviction so produced is hearty enough to predicate a verdict upon.—Gumbert v. Treusch, 103 Mich. 543.

¶ 378. Fraud is not to be assumed without proof, but it is nevertheless oftener shown by circumstances than in any other way.—Webber v. Jackson, 79 Mich. 175.

¶ 380. The circumstances should be such as amount to clear proof before a party can be held liable in fraud. The inference to be drawn from the circumstances must not only be consistent with the acts of fraud charged, but inconsistent with honesty and good faith in the transaction.—Blish v. Collins, 68 Mich. 542.

¶ 382. While it is true that fraud need not be shown by direct proof, and may be, and generally is, proved by inference from facts and circumstances, yet it cannot be presumed from mere suspicion, nor from facts or circumstances which are entirely consistent with an honest purpose.—Henneberger v. Matter, 88 Mich. 396.

¶ 383. Fraud cannot be presumed from mere suspicion, nor from facts and circumstances which are entirely consistent with an honest purpose.—Island Mill Lumber Co. v. City of Alpena, 176 Mich. 575.

¶ 384. Fraud must generally be ascertained from a variety of circumstances, some of them of slight significance in themselves, but altogether forming a chain of facts which carry conviction to the mind.—People v. Rice, 79 Mich. 354.

¶ 385. Where the intent to defraud is fully and completely denied by defendant, and complainants' case rests upon wrong which must be presumed, the circumstances from which such presumption arises must be strong and irresistible to allow complainants to recover.—Krolik v. Root, 63 Mich. 562.

¶ 387. When the facts in any given case lead the unbiased mind to the irresistible conclusion that a fraud has been committed, and there is no innocent explanation of such facts, there is no necessity for weighing the facts, or examining them singly, to see whether, if standing alone, any one of them is sufficient to establish the fraud.—People v. Rice, 79 Mich. 354.

¶ 389. Upon a question of fraud in selling stock, if a material representation, known to be false, is intelligently made, a fraudulent intent may be inferred.—Roy v. Bordas, 161 Mich. 567.

¶ 390. Fraudulent influence is rarely susceptible of direct and clear proof and may be inferred from circumstances tending to show it.—Dodson v. Dodson, 142 Mich. 586.

¶ 391. Keeping secret the fact of a settlement by which a widow, coexecutrix of her husband's estate, gave her own note in composition of matters in litigation is not to be regarded as a badge of fraud when it appears after her death that it was done at her instance, that her coexecutor had declined to make any endeavor to settle, claiming no liability existed, and where it appears that other notes given by her were without his knowledge until they were presented against her estate.—Young v. Shepard's Estate, 124 Mich. 552.

¶ 392. Clear and convincing evidence is necessary to overcome the presumption that a quitclaim deed releasing mineral rights in land executed by a highly educated pastor in favor of ignorant parishioners of foreign birth who are unable to read or speak the English language was made deliberately in consummation of previous negotiations.—Mtynarczyk v. Zyskowski, 191 Mich. 213.

¶ 394. The fact that a deed effectuates a previously declared purpose of the alleged grantor goes far towards overcoming testimony that it was signed without knowledge of its contents and without assent thereto, and that the signature was procured by fraud upon the grantor then ill and almost unconscious, the relations of the parties lending credit to the deed and the fraud being directly contradicted.—Brennan v. Zehner, 97 Mich. 98.

¶ 395. A mortgage is presumably fraudulent where it was made by a surviving partner to his brother, administrator of the deceased partner and brother, several years after his death when the maker was embarrassed, where it purported to secure a loan by the mortgagee to the survivor but the lender could not on the evidence have had enough resources to make such a loan, and where the inventoried assets of the estate all came into the hands of the survivor, as such or as a claimant against the estate, and where the effect coupled with the insolvency of the survivor would be entirely to consume the estate in winding up the firm while leaving the administrator or his assignees stand as firm creditors.—Brown v. Watson, 66 Mich. 223.

¶ 397. A., an old man, wrote to B. to sell his personal property and come and live with A., which B. did, and A. conveyed lands to him upon his agreement that B. would care for him as long as A. lived. Soon afterwards A.'s daughter insisted that the arrangement should be set aside, and a settlement was made by which B. conveyed half of the lands to the daughter, taking up a note which he had previously given and making a new one with an agreement for support. Then the daughter deeded to A. the lands conveyed to her. Subsequently A. filed a bill to set aside his deeds to B. Held, that the proofs did not show that B. took any undue advantage of A., and that as the settlement was deliberately agreed to by all parties without fraud or overreaching, it must stand.—Allen v. Snyder, 100 Mich. 290.

¶ 398. Evidence that the grantor in a deed of property worth about $1,500. for a specified consideration of $1,800, was old and of weak memory, and that the grantee actually paid only $5 down, and failed to secure the balance by mortgage on the property as had been contemplated, but actually incumbered it with a mortgage to another, and that the grantor was induced to convey by fear as to the outcome of a suit brought against the grantee, who was his tenant, by a third person, to oust him from possession, justifies the setting aside of the deed, notwithstanding it rests largely on the testimony of complainant, the grantor.—Landis v. Smith, 113 Mich. 407.

¶ 399. A deed will not be set aside because it was made on the day previous to grantor's death from cancer to the son of an uncle who had been closely associated with the grantor and was with him at the time the deed was made, notwithstanding the existence of a will making other disposition of the property.—Taft v. Simpson, 125 Mich. 206.

¶ 400. The deceased being in ill health and threatened with paresis, arranged for defendant, his sister, to live with him, and take care of him. By arrangement with the complainants, brothers of the defendant, defendant was to see that deceased did not foolishly dispose of his farm. Deceased deeded the farm to defendant in consideration, according to her testimony, that she take care of him, and there was evidence from others that defendant had talked over such a plan with reference to deeding to defendant. On a bill to set aside the deed for fraud and undue influence, held, the evidence did not support the bill.—Hoag v. Allen, 152 Mich. 528.

¶ 401. Complainant was born after his mother had separated from his father. Deceased always denied that complainant was his own child. He had for many years been associated in business with one Wiggins and through the latter's patronage and advice had accumulated land and other property, Wiggins being the better educated and more capable man and the deceased being an ignorant laborer following his lead. The deceased, having lived alone for many years prior to his death, deeded his land to the wife and daughter of Wiggins, which deed complainant sought to set aside on the ground of Wiggins' fraud and undue influence. No evidence was offered of this charge except the confidential and friendly relation existing between the two men. Held, the facts were not sufficient even to shift the burden of proof upon defendants to show that the conveyances were not obtained by the means charged.—Nelson v. Wiggins, 172 Mich. 191.

¶ 403. On a bill by a daughter for recovery of an undivided one-half interest in, and cancellation of, complainant's quitclaim deed to land purchased by testatrix, their mother, out of proceeds of land she had originally devised by will to defendant but later sold, so that the devise was adeemed, where it appeared that although complainant claimed to be ignorant of the terms of her mother's will, she knew the contents of a contract executed in settlement of litigation by testatrix and herself whereby testatrix agreed to devise to complainant the land actually devised to her and to bequeath the sum actually bequeathed to her and she received a quitclaim deed from defendant to the tract devised to her and the amount of money bequeathed to her, evidence held insufficient to show fraud in the procurement of the quitclaim deed from complainant.—Kirsher v. Todd, 195 Mich. 297.

¶ 404. On a bill to cancel a deed made by complainant to his niece and her husband under an arrangement whereby complainant was to reside with defendants and receive care and support for the rest of his life, and the deed, which was in the custody of a third person, was to be delivered to defendants upon complainant's death, where it appeared that complainant's wife had died before execution of the deed; that he had no children; that he was 77 years of age at the time of the execution of the deed; and that the execution of the deed was in accordance with the desires of complainant's wife, evidence held sufficient to show that undue influence was not exercised upon complainant and that he was competent to make the deed.—Canedy v. Turner, 196 Mich. 462.

¶ 405. On a bill by a highly educated pastor to set aside a quitclaim deed releasing mineral rights in land, formerly conveyed subject thereto, in favor of ignorant parishioners of foreign birth on the ground of fraud, evidence held insufficient to overcome the presumption that the quitclaim deed contained the agreement of the parties understandingly made in consummation of previous negotiations.—Mtynarczyk v. Zyskowski, 191 Mich. 213.

¶ 406. Where a person from infirmity and mental weakness is likely to be easily influenced by others, transactions entered into by such person without independent advice will be set aside, if there is any unfairness in them. The principle upon which courts act in such cases applied to a conveyance of land obtained from a woman advanced in years, of doubtful sanity, living entirely by herself, without friends to take care of her, and confined to her house by sickness.—Allore v. Jewell, 94 U. S. 506, 24 L. ed. 260.

Sufficiency of evidence of relationship to which trust or confidence is incident, see Agency, I; Marriage, III; Estates of Decedents § 54; Guardianship, II; Trusts.

¶ 407. On a bill to set aside deeds on the grounds of mental incapacity and undue influence, evidence held insufficient to show fiduciary relations existed between complainant's father and her brother at the time her father executed such deeds conveying certain property to her brother and to her stepmother.—Noble v. Hunter, 195 Mich. 713.

¶ 408. An insurance adjuster who disputed the claims of a person insured, and occupied a hostile position throughout the negotiations, and gave his opinions falsely concerning the legal rights of the parties on questions of law and on facts, where the assured had the same knowledge or means of knowledge with himself, cannot be regarded as occupying any fiduciary relation which would entitle the assured to rely upon his representations; and a settlement hastily made with him under such circumstances, and under a threat that payment would not be made without suit, will not be set aside for fraud. The insured was bound to inform himself of his rights before acting and to stand upon them, and, failing to do so, is himself responsible for the loss.—Mayhew v. Phœnix Ins. Co., 23 Mich. 105.

Implication of undue influence or fraud from relation of parties or nature of transaction, see post II.

Of undue influence in procuring transfers, see ante § 48.

Of fraud in sales and transfers, see post § 51.

Of deeds and mortgages, see also post § 52.

Right to rely on representations as to character of instrument, see ante § 11.

Deception as to nature of the contract, see also ante ¶ 10.

Evidence of signing, delivery and acceptance of instruments, see Execution of Instruments.

Sufficiency of evidence to establish delivery of deed alleged to have been fraudulently destroyed, see Execution of Instruments ¶ 245.

Sufficiency of proofs of fraud pleaded defensively in suit to restore lost deed, see Restoration of Papers.

¶ 409. The presumption that one signing a written instrument (application for life insurance), had read it over, and was acquainted with its contents, may be rebutted by evidence of circumstances fairly tending to show that he was misled in that regard by the conduct of the other party; e. g., where an agent did not read it aloud and filled in some matters from his own supposed knowledge then requesting signature.—Van Houten v. Metropolitan Life Ins Co., 110 Mich. 682.

¶ 410. In an action to recover for personal injuries in which the defense was a complete settlement and release, where the testimony was in conflict, held that it was a question for the jury as to the terms of the contract and whether plaintiff was fraudulently deceived into signing the release, he claiming that he thought it was a receipt for money paid under the contract, as he was assured by a representative of defendant and of the insurance company.—Porth v. Cadillac Motor Car Co., 198 Mich. 501.

¶ 411. Fraud in inducing defendant to subscribe to a contract for the purchase of a horse, by causing him to believe that plaintiff had subscribed and paid for two shares when in fact he had subscribed for only one, was not proven where it appeared that plaintiff subscribed for one share and obtained another by gift, and stated that he "owned" two shares.—Valade v. Masson, 135 Mich. 41.

¶ 412. Evidence of a grantor that deeds were made to place property out of reach contradicted by the attorney and two witnesses stating that it was done after consultation to dispose of the property, shows that grantor was not induced by fraud to execute deeds to his children.—Nichols v. Nichols, 94 Mich. 569.

title, is shown by proof that she and her husband were under charge of burning the premises to defraud the insurer, that the value of the premises over incumbrances was $1,500 to $2,000 but the house had been damaged by the fire, that while in jail she authorized her attorney in writing to sell the house subject to the mortgage and to pay over to her the proceeds, keeping $250 for his fees for defending her, that he did find a purchaser to whom the premises were conveyed for $700 in cash of which he paid over $450, that she gave a receipt to him for that portion of the $700, expressing it to be in full and stipulating that none of the $250 should apply on a debt owning the attorney and a colleague for a retainer or fees, and that after her acquittal she made admissions evincive of knowledge, though there was evidence that she also since release had paid taxes and a sum towards discharge of the mortgage on the premises as though believing that she still owned it, the value received by her being a fair value of her interest.—Burchell v. Collier, 148 Mich. 248.

¶ 415. A vendor of land sold by contract on instalment payments filed a bill to quiet title against the contract and a quitclaim deed given by the vendee to an assignee, both instruments being recorded, claiming that through fraud and deception she was led to believe the contract was an option which expired by its own limitation. She was a woman of some business experience and had executed the same kind of an instrument before and after the transaction in question. Held, relief could not be granted on the ground of fraud.—Donnelly v. Lyons, 173 Mich. 515.

¶ 416. Upon arriving home from another city shortly after the death of his wife, complainant was induced to convey realty and personalty of the value of $2,000 to defendant, more than $1,000 of which was money in the bank, the consideration given by defendant being seven hundred dollars. There was evidence that defendant brought about the drunken condition of complainant; employed one of his neighbors to help him procure the conveyance to the property; that the neighbor visited a scrivener without the knowledge of the complainant and procured the papers to be drawn; and that after the transaction was completed defendant paid the neighbor seventy dollars for what he had done. Held, a decree setting aside the conveyance on the ground of fraud should be sustained.—Scanlon v. Connor, 168 Mich. 133.

¶ 417. Complainant deeded her farm to defendant grandson, with a provision that if he failed to provide a home and livelihood for her, a life estate should revert to her. The defendant gave her the support and home specified, but some unpleasantness grew up between her and defendant and his wife, and she left. She brought a bill to have the deed set aside alleging that an executory agreement was intended to vest title at her death if the agreement was fully performed. The preponderance of the evidence showed she was a shrewd woman and knew the nature of the instrument she signed. Held, the bill should be denied.—Wilson v. Wilson, 160 Mich. 555.

¶ 418. In an action to set aside a deed by a mother conveying all her property to her children, subject to a life estate, her testimony was that it was represented to be only a division of rents opposed by evidence that the deed was drawn at her suggestion by a lawyer of her own selection, including the lawyer's testimony that it was read and explained to her, that subsequently she made a will wherein such deed was referred to. Held, inadequate to show that the instrument was fraudulently obtained by misrepresenting its character.—Appenzeller v. Appenzeller, 177 Mich. 303.

¶ 418a. That a trust deed was intelligently executed by the grantor, held established by the evidence of the holder and an attorney that it was signed in their presence opposed by grantor's that they did not sign knowingly.—Curtis v. Mueller, 184 Mich. 148.

¶ 419. In a bill to cancel notes, where complainant claimed that the notes were forwarded to the corporation defendant upon the representation that the bicycles for which they were given were completed and set apart as the property of complainant, when in fact they had not been so set apart, and that thereafter it was agreed that the notes were to be surrendered, but that within a few days a mortgage was given upon all its property by the corporation to secure its creditors, the facts did not show fraud in obtaining the notes.—World Mfg. Co. v. Hamilton-Kenwood Cycle Co., 123 Mich. 620.

¶ 420. Upon the dissolution of a partnership defendant made to plaintiff retiring partner a written guaranty that one Robinson, the other partner, would pay all demands against the partnership. Defendant testified that in the statement plaintiff made to him as to claims against the partnership nothing was said about a claim for certain boom sticks. There was no evidence of false statements made by plaintiff or his partner in plaintiff's presence, in order to secure defendant's signature. Defendant stated that he read with care the guaranty he signed, knew its contents, and would not otherwise have signed it; that he knew Robinson had purchased plaintiff's interest; that the partners explained to him the guaranty was for any debts; and that the substance of what was said was contained in the paper signed. The undisputed evidence indicated that at the time of the execution of the guaranty plaintiff did not know Robinson had converted the boom sticks. Held, in a suit to recover the amount of a judgment obtained by the owner of the boom sticks against the partnership and paid by plaintiff, there was no evidence warranting the submission to the jury of the question of fraud in the securing of the guaranty.—Clark v. Clune, 172 Mich. 323.

¶ 421. A partnership agreement entered into by two business men will not be set aside in equity upon the ground of fraud and deceit in obtaining a signature of complainant except upon a clear preponderance of convincing testimony.—Lavigne v. Coyne, 188 Mich. 382.

¶ 422. On a bill in equity to set aside a partnership agreement entered into by two business men upon the ground of fraud and deceit in obtaining signature of complainant, evidence held insufficient to establish fraud and deceit.—Lavigne v. Coyne, 188 Mich. 382.

¶ 425. Verdict finding that plaintiff, an attorney, had fraudulently procured the execution by defendant of certain notes for services sued on, held against the weight of the evidence, where the testimony of defendant and her son as to such fraud was contradicted on cross-examination and by averments conclusively showing the true state of facts contained in her answer to a certain bill.—Radford v. Gaukler, 196 Mich. 94. (Moore, J., dissenting.)

Stock sales and transfers of corporate franchises, see post § 53.

Variances in proof from pleadings, see post § 93.

¶ 426. The detection of errors in weights in the case of three sales in 1885 would not support a presumption that there was fraudulent weighing over a period of dealings for the eight years prior thereto.—Reid v. Ladue, 66 Mich. 22.

¶ 427. Defendants' charge in support of a claimed rescission that their contract to furnish lumber to plaintiff corporation was procured by fraud, was held not sufficiently shown by the fact that plaintiff several months afterwards made an assignment for the benefit of its creditors, such assignment being caused by failure of a third party, and it not being probable that defendants would have lost thereby.—Dennis v. Leaton, 72 Mich. 586.

¶ 428. There is a plain case of fraud made out against both defendants, where a bill alleged that defendants, who were officers of a bank to which complainant owed a note, and also of a gas company, shares in which complainant had pledged collaterally to the note, after a parol agreement made before maturity to extend the time of payment of such note until after complainant's return from a contemplated absence, such extension being unsolicited by complainant, sold such stock and applied the proceeds to the payment of such note, no demand for the payment thereof having first been made upon complainant and no notice of intention to dispose of such stock having been given.—Hempfling v. Burr, 59 Mich. 294.

ment, that there was a secret agreement between the maker and the president of the bank whereby such president should represent the maker as solvent for the purpose of inducing such indorsers to sell the maker goods and take its notes therefor, is not supported by the evidence where the only witnesses who testified upon such allegation besides defendant were the president of the bank and the president of the maker of such notes, both of whom denied any such agreement.—Alpena National Bank v. Greenbaum, 80 Mich. 1.

¶ 430. Where three days after the last of the goods sued for were delivered, the corporation gave a chattel mortgage covering its entire plant, and two days later it suspended business, if the jury found that the annual report filed and relied on as a basis of credit was false, they were not without warrant in finding that the mortgage was given in contemplation of a suspension of business, and that, even before the mortgage was given, it must have been known to the management that the business could not proceed, and that it would be beyond the power of the corporation to pay for the goods, and hence beyond its expectations.—Silberman v. Munroe, 104 Mich. 352.

¶ 431. In replevin for goods claimed to have been fraudulently purchased on a representation of a certain net worth it cannot be claimed that there is no evidence as to what the vendee, a merchant, is worth, and accordingly that proof of fraud has failed, where the evidence is that his property consists of a mortgaged stock surrendered to the mortgagee.—Brock v. Garson, 117 Mich. 550.

¶ 432. Fraud in the purchase of goods on credit may be established by showing that the entire transaction and subsequent conduct begets a well-founded conviction of the fraud. —Clark v. William Munroe Co., 127 Mich. 300.

¶ 433. Fraud on the seller of merchandise in the purchase of it may be inferred, where it appears that one of the buyers, a firm, established a credit with the seller by making considerable payments from time to time out of funds embezzled from another, that by means of credit he overstocked their store mostly with goods purchased from such seller, that the other partner became suspicious and quit the business, and that the embezzling one then sold the stock for 50 cents on the dollar and absconded.—Pinkerton Bros. Co. v. Bromley, 119 Mich. 8.

¶ 434. In an action to recover the value of goods fraudulently purchased, evidence that the defendant purchased several times more goods than he needed on credit from several dealers, that he failed to pay for any of them taken with admissions that he purposed to raise cash by disposition of the goods without paying for them, and thereafter buy for cash, is sufficient in the absence of contradiction to require a directed verdict for the plaintiff.—Fruit Dispatch Co. v. Russo, 125 Mich. 306.

¶ 435. In an action for a breach of contract to furnish all the tin cans necessary to the plaintiff's business for a given time, the defense that the plaintiff fraudulently misled the defendant as to the number of cans used in past years and the number probably necessary for the time covered by the contract is not supported by evidence tending to show that no definite estimates were made but that the defendant was familiar with the conditions, and was asked to rely thereon.—E. G. Dailey Co. v. Clark Can Co., 128 Mich. 591.

¶ 436. Where defendants, in selling a newspaper property to complainants, misrepresented the amount of circulation of the same, the fact that the complainants examined the books of the business to verify these statements, does not show that complainants did not rely on the misrepresentations and were not defrauded, where the examination was not exhaustive.—Smith v. Werkheiser, 152 Mich. 177.

¶ 438. Under the evidence, which included the circumstances of the sale of a rooming house and furniture to an experienced man of business and the fact that he was made acquainted with the name of the holder of the indebtedness for the unpaid price, held, that defendant did not conceal from complainant, who purchased certain furniture from him, the amount due on certain piano contracts and warrant them free of liens.—McKenzie v. Call, 176 Mich. 198.

¶ 439. In an action by the purchaser of a rooming house business against the owner, his broker, and the latter's clerk for fraudulent representations as to the character of the tenants and the rent receipts, evidence held sufficient to sustain a verdict against the owner.—Williamson v. Hannan, 200 Mich. 658.

¶ 441. On a bill against executors and a bank to reopen an estate and for an accounting, there was an entire failure to establish the claim that a check by decedent of money in the bank to his stepdaughter, shortly before he died, was a collusive device to rob the decedent and lessen his estate to which the bank, through its officers, was a party; where the evidence showed that such stepdaughter, her sister and her mother had lived with decedent long and he had provided bountifully for them in life, that there was a warm affection between decedent and such stepdaughter, that there was nothing showing such a relation to the older children, also stepchildren, but of a former marriage of their mother, and that decedent left no children of his own.—Bangs v. Browne, 149 Mich. 478.

¶ 442. In an action to recover the unpaid price for lumber sold, where the defense was fraudulent representations, the testimony was clear that the plaintiff refused to sell the lumber by grade; that statements were made by and for him concerning quantity and quality; that defendant sent an agent to inspect the lumber. Held, that, having heard the statement of plaintiff, the agent must be presumed to have relied upon that if upon anything except his inspection, and plaintiff was excused from exercising his imagination upon the subject of what the agent supposed beyond or in addition to what the statement and inspection supported.—Redfield v. Engel, 171 Mich. 207.

¶ 443. The complainant bought a grocery business, giving in return therefor an equity in realty and certain promissory notes. The vendors represented that the stock was worth a certain amount and that the business was profitable, but did not tell the complainant that they were losing money and had been forced to compromise with their creditors. When the complainant took possession he found the stock worth much less than represented. Held, that the evidence justified a decree setting aside the sale for fraud.—Face v. Hall, 177 Mich. 495.

See also post ¶ 467.
Undue influence and implied frauds, see post II.
Variance from or conformity of proofs to allegations, see post § 93.

¶ 444. A deed conveying the right to flow so much of the grantor's land as would be flowed by raising the water of a stream by dam to a given height will not be canceled upon a bill for that purpose, alleging that the deed was procured by false representations of the grantee as to the quantity of land that would be flowed by thus raising the water, where the evidence shows that the parties acted on the assumption that the prospective flowage could be ascertained with sufficient accuracy by a personal inspection of the premises and vicinity; that neither of them pretended to possess any knowledge on the subject not thus obtainable, and that an agent of the grantor inspected the premises before the conveyance for this very purpose; and in the absence of any proof that the grantee, at the time of such inspection, did anything which did or was calculated to mislead such agent as to the real extent to which the land would be flowed.—Sanford v. Nyman, 23 Mich. 326.

¶ 445. Where a mortgage long past due was foreclosed, and two years after the sale the purchaser contracted to sell it to the mortgagor's administrator, who, it was claimed, though buying individually, used funds of his estate in making part payment, such facts showed no fraud or collusion between administrator and purchaser in reference to the foreclosure sale.—Harris v. Creveling, 80 Mich. 249.

¶ 446. Proofs held to establish the charge, made in complainant's bill, of fraud for which a deed executed to defendant on an exchange of farms is sought to be set aside.—Stevens v. Thompson, 98 Mich. 9.

¶ 447. Rejecting the husband's testimony as unworthy of credit because he avowed authorship of a fraud with the mortgagee as party thereto, a decree setting aside a mortgage on the property of a married woman for fraud alleged to have been perpetrated upon her by her husband and the mortgagee was reversed, the testimony of the mortgagee upon which it was rendered being more consistent with the theory that the mortgagor and her husband were conspiring to defraud the mortgagee out of his rights under the mortgage than her testimony of fraud on her.—Dooley v. Dooley, 112 Mich. 273.

¶ 448. A charge that fraud was practiced by a mortgagee in selling land to and taking security thereon from a corporation in process of formation, in which he was a stockholder and promoter, held not sustained by the evidence.—Turney v. Combination Brick Co., 184 Mich. 439.

¶ 449. An option to a corporation for a right of way for a street railway, given at a time when such a company could not condemn and on representations to the giver that if she did not give it she would be put to great expense and annoyance of condemnation, is fraudulent; where it further appears that the representations were made by a local justice of the peace and a right of way agent of the corporation, the justice pretending a friendship to the giver in order to procure it, and she being ignorant, a cripple, excitable, and dependent on the produce of a small tract through which the right of way was projected.—Grand Rapids, G. H. & M. Ry. Co. v. Stevens, 143 Mich. 646.

¶ 450. In an action by a husband against his wife to set aside a deed of their homestead alleged to have been obtained by fraud, the evidence shows by a fair preponderance that no fraud had been committed in the procurement thereof, where it was heavily incumbered at the time, they were then separated pending a bill for divorce by her, and where the attorney who drew the deed testifies that it was fully explained, and she desired the husband to return and share the home with her.—Lentz v. Lentz, 143 Mich. 190.

¶ 451. In an action by the purchaser of city lots against the vendor for fraudulently representing that the improvements were all in and paid for except the paving, held that a verdict for plaintiff was not against the weight of evidence.—State Security & Realty Co. v. Badger, 200 Mich. 104.

¶ 452. A skilled farmer, who is above the average in intelligence, has had a varied experience, and, before making an exchange of property, takes the precaution to examine the property and lives on the premises for three and a half months, and witnesses an overflow of the farm by a river bordering on the premises during a freshet, must be deemed to know or to have opportunity to know as to the falsity of representations by the seller that the farm was worth a certain value per acre, that there were no insects of any kind in the locality, except the cotton boll weevil, that were causing trouble in that section, that the gravel pits on the farm held the only available gravel in the country, that the soil was of a certain fertility and productiveness, and that there was no substantial overflow from such river.—Parkyn v. Ford, 194 Mich. 184.

¶ 453. The evidence in an action to cancel a conveyance of land made in consideration of the grantor's life support, held not to show that the conveyance was induced by fraud or undue influence.—Marsac v. De Ford, 184 Mich. 389.

¶ 454. A testator by his will bequeathed his wife three hundred dollars a year to be paid annually by the executor during her life. The remainder of the estate was given equally to his three sons. Defendant, one of the sons, contracted to purchase the interest in the estate of complainant, another son, and to pay therefor a fair valuation upon the property less complainant's share of the amount required to support the mother. Under a bill brought by complainant to cancel the contract on the ground of fraud, there was evidence that three days after the contract was executed the mother died; that at the time of the execution of the contract she was seriously ill; and that defendant was aware of such illness. The amount to be paid plaintiff for the property by defendant under the terms of the contract was based upon an expectancy of life upon the mother's part of thirteen years. Held, the decree of the circuit judge canceling the contract upon his finding of the existence of fraud should not be disturbed.—Bonz v. Bonz, 165 Mich. 45.

¶ 455. A mortgagor who had become so deeply involved that he was likely to have all his property swept away quitclaimed all to one of the three joint holders of a large mortgage on most of his land. Soon afterwards an arrangement was made between this grantee and others, looking to a continuation of the grantor's business on the land by a firm, and the payment of the incumbrances. The grantor denied that he agreed to this arrangement, and denied also that it conformed to a parol agreement contemporaneous with the execution of his deed, but in a suit by him against all concerned, based on charges of fraud and conspiracy, the court found the facts otherwise, found that there was no fraud, that the parties charged therewith made no profits, and that complainant—whose suit was therefore dismissed—had received all he could fairly claim.—Hunt v. Oliver, 118 U. S. 211, 30 L. ed. 128, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1083.

Variance from or conformity of proofs to pleadings, see post § 93.

¶ 456. Complainant failed to establish his claim that certain stock, pledged as collateral to a note and mortgage, was fraudulently withheld from him upon the occasion of his taking an assignment of the mortgage, where his case was based mainly on testimony of the mortgagor's president, intrinsically appearing to be unreliable, and requiring the court to believe that by conspiracy a note was substituted to deceive the mortgagee and that embezzlement by the witness was connived at, as against credible witnesses testifying that the collateral was not to go with the mortgage, and that there were two notes, the one in question being used to avoid the mortgagee national bank's appearing to be carrying loans on mortgage.—Woodcock v. First Nat. Bank, 113 Mich. 236.

¶ 457. Upon a review of the evidence adduced in foreclosure proceedings on an issue as to fraud in sale of a franchise, held, that the mortgagees for the purchase price were not guilty of misrepresentation as to the duration of franchises and extent of corporate assets for the purchase price of which the mortgage in suit was given.—Lewis v. Weidenfeld, 114 Mich. 581.

¶ 458. It cannot be said that the purchasers and mortgagors for the purchase price of a gas plant relied on representations made, if any, as to the duration and nature of the franchises running with the plant, where it is shown that in the negotiations the purchaser said, "that is a question we don't care to discuss here; we will leave that question to the lawyers to determine."—Lewis v. Weidenfeld, 114 Mich. 581.

¶ 459. In an action for the fraudulent conversion of corporate stock, where plaintiff claimed that such stock was obtained from him through conspiracy in inducing him to take worthless stock as part payment, testimony that the company, whose stock he was so induced to accept, passed into the hands of a trustee in the summer following the transaction in question and that at such time there was a mortgage on its real estate on which a year's interest was unpaid, and that there was a chattel mortgage running to the defendants as security for notes they had indorsed, and that at the time of the trial the property had been sold and no stockholder had been paid anything, and there was no reason to suppose that any ever would be, was evidence that the company was not paying dividends, and was not paying its debts promptly and that the stock was not worth from 75 cents to par.—McNaughton v. Smith, 136 Mich. 368.

¶ 460. Complainants conveyed a house and lot to defendant for 7,000 shares of mining stock. The complainants and two others testified that the defendant represented the stock to be worth $7,000 at the time of the trade, but that it had no present value, and none at the time of the trade. The mine was located far in the interior of Colombia, South America. In a bill to set aside the conveyance for fraudulent representations, held, the preponderance of the evidence sustained the charge of fraud and the bill should be allowed.—Keyes v. Quinn, 154 Mich. 668.

Fraud in settlement with broker, see also Brokers ¶ 137.

¶ 461. On a bill to set aside a partnership settlement between plaintiff and defendant attorneys on the ground that defendant had fraudulently concealed the true value of services rendered by plaintiff in legal matters transacted by them where the testimony of the plaintiff was supported by nothing more than his own evidence, and all charges of fraud were met and denied by the defendant, and all matters arose and were founded upon what was said and done by the parties at the time the settlement of their affairs were made, the bill was dismissed on the ground that no fraud had been satisfactorily established.—Gilchrist v. Kelley, 85 Mich. 413.

¶ 462. Evidence that plaintiff, a woman, had suffered injury as a passenger, that afterwards the defendant carrier's agents, including plaintiff's uncle, visited her when she was sick and needy and urged a settlement, telling her that if she went into court she would be "disgraced," that she was ignorant of courts and believed what was told her, and that under the stress of these things she settled for $40 for injury so severe that it caused a miscarriage and that she repudiated it next day, is sufficient to sustain a finding that it was a fraudulent settlement.—Stone v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co., 66 Mich. 76.

¶ 463. Fraud upon the maker of a note given in settlement of litigation between the payee and the estate of the maker's husband is not shown on the testimony of the payee called as a witness for the maker's estate, whereby it appears that the maker was a large beneficiary under the first named estate and had given the note to compensate the payee for losses incurred by protraction of the litigation and by a settlement made with a third person in order to release property, that the maker of the note wrote it herself and for some years recognized it and notes which it renewed as valid, and where it also appeared that by reason of her relationship the maker must have fully known all the facts; and the facts that the payee after several years could not remember all the items that went into the amount of the note, and that at the request of the maker it was kept secret from the maker's coexecutor because of his opposition, do not make out any fraud.—Young v. Shepard's Estate, 124 Mich. 552.

¶ 464. On bill to cancel a quitclaim deed and a contract releasing all of complainant's claim to certain property on the ground of fraud, held that it cannot be said that there was fraud where the instruments in question were executed when a settlement was openly made pending proceedings by defendant to set aside a deed of the property in question to complainant and complainant who was of mature age was represented by counsel who informed her as to the matter of settlement and the extent of the property.—Van Syckle v. Thompson, 176 Mich. 112.

¶ 465. On a bill by the widow of a testator against the administrator of the estate of a former wife, the administrator of estate of decedent, and the heirs of decedent by the former wife to set aside assignments of insurance policies by decedent to the heirs and a release of a claim of decedent against the estate of the former wife in favor of the heirs, evidence held sufficient to establish fraud upon the part of the heirs.—Yalomstein v. Yalomstein, 190 Mich. 615.

¶ 466. No fraud is shown in an antenuptial agreement, by the wife's testimony that the husband represented that he owned only 40 acres of land worth $3000, where it was a marriage of convenience and under these facts she was willing to take a note and mortgage for two-thirds of the entire estate and where the contract was drawn by an attorney of ability and reputation who explained to her that she would receive more property as his widow than she would under the agreement.—Koch v. Koch, 126 Mich. 187.

¶ 467. On a bill to cancel a mortgage and note upon the ground that it was procured as the result of the fraudulent representations by defendants that no contest of a will would be made by defendants or by anybody else, evidence held insufficient to sustain the allegations of the bill.—Sellers v. Perry, 191 Mich. 619.

Of responsibility for false valuation, see post § 56.

Conclusiveness of decision of scaler, inspector, or the like unless impeached for fraud, see Contracts § 185; Building Contracts §§ 11, 38, 39; Sales.

Conclusiveness of valuations made in adjusting insurance, see Insurance, XVI.

¶ 468. Plaintiff, a mill owner, contracted with defendants for the sale of 1,700,000 feet of lumber, to be inspected by their codefendants, and brought suit against all of said defendants, claiming a conspiracy on their part to defraud him in the inspection of said lumber. Held, that testimony introduced by plaintiff to show that the inspector was hired to be dishonest, that his scale was false by comparison with others, that request for another inspector was refused, and false reasons given for not allowing plaintiff's man to assist, upon its face made out a prima facie showing.—Turnbull v. Boggs, 78 Mich. 158.

¶ 469. Fraud is not shown in respect to the work of a person employed to grade lumber to be furnished to the plaintiff, if asserted by the defendants for the first time when sued for breach of the contract to furnish, and where it appears that they meantime have been employing him in carrying out other contracts.—Dennis v. Leaton, 72 Mich. 586.

¶ 470. Evidence in an action to set aside deeds and to establish title, held insufficient to show that a deed was procured by fraud and deceit respecting mineral values of the lands.—Demerse v. Mitchell, 187 Mich. 683.

¶ 471. In an action to recover the unpaid price for lumber sold, the defendant contended that the misrepresentation of plaintiff consisted in the concealment of the real quality of the lumber by piling in such a way that the quality could not be discovered by inspection. Held, that the testimony did not support this contention.—Redfield v. Engel, 171 Mich. 207.

¶ 472. Fraud justifying the rescission of a contract to furnish lumber to plaintiff was not shown in respect to the work of a certain person in grading the lumber; it appearing that defendants made no complaint that he was grading unfairly, that they allowed him to inspect other lumber outside of the agreement, and that they kept him assorting a long time after they knew he was grading unfairly.—Dennis v. Leaton, 72 Mich. 586.

¶ 473. In an action upon a fraudulent sale of mortgages, the jury could properly hold the defendant liable for misrepresentations contained in certain appraisements upon which plaintiff relied, where the testimony tended to show that defendant was responsible for the delivery of the appraisements to plaintiff, either by handing them to plaintiff's agent or by assisting him to obtain them.—Simonds v. Cash, 136 Mich. 558.

¶ 474. In an action based on the fraud of one of the defendants in obtaining produce with intent not to pay therefor and conspiracy on the part of his codefendants, officers of a bank, in aiding and assisting him in the perpetration of the fraud, a judgment for plaintiff was reversed on the evidence for insufficiency to implicate the officers of the bank.—Schofield v. Clarke, 179 Mich. 681.

¶ 475. In an action by subcontractors to foreclose a mechanic's lien, evidence held insufficient to establish a charge of collusion between the contractor and plaintiff subcontractor by which the owner got a substantially different building from that contracted for, it appearing that no fault was found with plaintiff's work and that after knowing of a change in size defendant requested that work be completed.—Zilz v. Wilcox, 190 Mich. 486.

Effect of laches or waiver or affirmance, see post §§ 82, 83.

Propriety of directing verdict on evidence of lack of diligence, see post ¶ 514.

Evidence of waiver of breach or cause for damages on contract, see Contracts § 330; Sales, VIII, IX.

¶ 476. In an action to recover the value of goods fraudulently purchased, a waiver of the fraud cannot be inferred from testimony that the defendants agreed to send a draft for $500 immediately and to pay the balance on receipt of the next carload of goods where no money was sent and no goods were shipped.—Fruit Dispatch Co. v. Russo, 125 Mich. 306.

called on the seller who lived in another state and the seller thereupon corresponded regarding the matter, and on March 12th the purchaser wrote to the seller giving the facts and offering to reassign the mortgages, and a formal tender was made on May 25th.—Simonds v. Cash, 136 Mich. 558.

Materiality as jury question, see also post ¶ 519.

Sufficiency of evidence to go to jury, see post § 59.

¶ 478. Fraud is a question of fact and not of law where there is no statute to the contrary, and where an honest construction is admissible.—State Bank of Bay City v. Chapelle, 40 Mich. 447.

¶ 481. Whether a judgment on a bond was secured by fraud and collusion is a question to be submitted to the jury under proper instructions in an action by one who signed the bond against one who had agreed to indemnify him.—Knickerbocker v. Wilcox, 83 Mich. 200.

¶ 482. In an action for fraudulent representations by the vendor on the sale of goods, it is for the jury to determine whether the opinion expressed is false and known to be so to the vendor, and to what extent it is relied on by the purchaser without negligence.—Collins v. Jackson, 54 Mich. 186.

¶ 483. Where there was parol evidence given that a party on transferring a note represented the note to be "as good as cash, and that the maker was perfectly responsible," and also that it was understood that the note was not to be presented at once, and the evidence of solvency was conflicting, it was properly left to the jury to determine the meaning and extent of these representations to ascertain whether they were true or not.—Abell v. Munson, 18 Mich. 306.

See also ante ¶ 437, post ¶ 552.

Sufficiency on particular questions of fact, see also ante §§ 46-57.

Direction of verdict, see post § 60.

¶ 484. Where the evidence as to whether an alleged settlement was or was not fraudulent is conflicting, an instruction leaving the determination of the fact to the jury is proper.—Baumier v. Antiau, 79 Mich. 509.

¶ 485. Where there is any evidence tending to show it, fraud is a question for the jury.—Morgan v. Andrews, 107 Mich. 33.

¶ 486. An issue of fraud should be submitted to the jury if there is any substantial conflict of evidence.—McMillan v. Reaume, 137 Mich. 1.

¶ 487. Fraud, like any other fact, may be proved by facts and circumstances which satisfy the mind of its existence, and it is a question for the jury when there is any evidence to warrant the finding.—Ferris v. McQueen, 94 Mich. 367; Ross v. Miner, 67 Mich. 410.

¶ 489. Where there is testimony tending appreciably to show fraud, the weight of it is a question of fact for the jury.—Redpath v. Brown, 71 Mich. 258.

¶ 490. In an action on a bond by the appellants from the probate of a will, evidence tending to show that its execution is fraudulent is for the jury, especially if the fact is not conceded or beyond dispute.—Woodin v. Durfee, 46 Mich. 424.

¶ 491. In trover for goods sold upon representations by the purchaser as to his solvency, the jury have no right to assume that the plaintiff did not rely on the representations in making sale, if there is testimony to support his claim that he did, and none to the contrary.—Heineman v. Steiger, 54 Mich. 232.

¶ 492. An action for causing worthless paper to be sold to plaintiff should not be taken from the jury if there is evidence that defendant suggested and was concerned in getting up the paper; that he purposed using it to get money; that he let the person who made the sale have it, without consideration, in order to trade it off, and that he expected part of the proceeds.—Adams v. Bowman, 51 Mich. 189.

¶ 493. In an action for trespass on the case where it was alleged that defendant had sold plaintiffs 100 pounds of peppermint oil representing it as good and genuine when in fact it was dementholized oil, the question as to whether there had been a dementholization of the oil was one for the jury on the evidence.—Durfee v. Newkirk, 83 Mich. 522.

¶ 494. Belief in a state of facts induced by the other party is for the jury, where there is evidence that no representations were made by plaintiff through his agent and an admission by defendant that he did not believe the fact but did not know and did not want to take chances, but where the fact (forgery of a power of attorney) appears from an entry of record disclaiming a deed and on an abstract of title which defendant had.—Walton v. Mason, 109 Mich. 486.

¶ 495. Where the circumstances are such as to justify an inference of good faith on the part of the owner, who claimed and received pay for goods taken by the payer's daughter without right while clerk in the owner's store, whether a recovery should be had on the ground of fraud and overreaching is a question for the jury, under proper instructions.—Francis v. Hurd, 113 Mich. 250.

¶ 496. In an action on a contract, where the defendant pleaded fraud in the sale of plaster lands, because of his reliance upon statements of the plaintiff, as to the land containing plaster rock, the evidence though conflicting warranted submission to the jury, it appearing that a large part of the land had no plaster upon it, and the presence of such rock was not ascertainable by a casual inspection.—Norman v. Harrington, 118 Mich. 623.

¶ 498. In replevin of goods obtained by fraudulent representations, testimony that in 1895 the defendant was shown by his report to a mercantile agency to have been worth over $15,000, and that in June, 1896, he stated that he was in just as good standing as in the year before, and in October of the same year made a chattel mortgage to two of the defendants for over $20,000 covering all of his property and giving the mortgagees immediate possession of the property, was sufficient to go to the jury on the question of misrepresentation as to the financial standing of the debtor.—Kirschbaum v. Jasspon, 119 Mich. 452.

¶ 499. In a suit for damages for fraud and deceit in the sale of motor trucks to plaintiffs, who were inexperienced in handling the same, the evidence indicated that defendant represented the cars to be made and assembled only by skilled workmen, and that they had gone beyond the experimental stage in making same and had produced cars capable of standing the severest tests. Defendant, in its literature shown to plaintiffs at the time of sale, stated the particulars of such tests. The cars sold plaintiffs were not properly assembled and failed utterly to meet the purposes for which they were intended. Held, the evidence was sufficient to require submission of the case to the jury.—Hall v. Duplex-Power Car Co., 168 Mich. 634.

¶ 501. In an action for fraudulent representations in the sale of city lots that all the improvements were in and paid for except the paving, where the evidence was conflicting, held that it was a question for the jury whether such representations were made and that the court erred in subsequently directing a verdict for defendant.—State Security & Realty Co. v. Badger, 200 Mich. 104.

¶ 502. In an action for damages for fraudulent representations as to the value of a business sold by defendant to plaintiff and as to an offer therefor by a third person, where such third person denied that he made any offer for the business, and defendant admitted that he did not do the stated volume of business, but denied he made the statements attributed to him by plaintiff, and it appeared that plaintiff had formerly worked for defendant, held, that the question of fraud was for the jury.—Miller v. Du Val, 191 Mich. 886.

¶ 503. In an action by purchasers of land under contract to recover damages for fraudulent representations as to the character of the farm purchased where it appeared that plaintiffs saw defendant's advertisement in a farmer's magazine in which it was stated among other things that the soil was clay and sandy loam which would produce any crop and was not sandy or rough, that one of the plaintiffs, who was unacquainted with the soil of the land, went to the land in winter when the ground was covered with snow, that defendant's agent represented that the land which plaintiff so selected was a good farm, as good as any in the state, that it was sandy clay loam, and the clay in such soil was all right for farming, and that the piece selected was, in his estimation, the best piece from the tract from which it was taken, and it further appeared that the land was worthless for producing crops due to the sandy character of the soil, held that it was a question for the jury whether the representations made by defendant and his agent were true.—Houder v. Reynolds, 195 Mich. 256.

dence that the plaintiff, being unable to read and write, has been deluded, by the defendant, the other joint holder, into signing a contract or receipt whereby he accepts, after sale, less than his share of the price paid by the purchaser, such evidence is proper to go to the jury as tending to show fraud in obtaining such contract or receipt from plaintiff.—Christmas v. Frei, 78 Mich. 386.

¶ 506. Defendant sold plaintiff shares of corporate stock, representing that the capital stock was all paid up. Defendant admitted the representation in substance and gave evidence that though when the company was formed only 60 per cent was paid in on the stock, afterwards, before plaintiff bought, 40 per cent was paid in by stock dividends or by adding the profits of the business to the capital stock, thus increasing it to its full face value. Held, that there was sufficient evidence in the case to warrant submission to the jury of the falsity of the representation.—Kryger v. Andrews, 65 Mich. 405.

¶ 507. In a suit against the receiver of an insolvent corporation to recover the value of goods alleged to have been fraudulently purchased by the corporation shortly before it suspended business, it appeared that the inventory filed by the receiver showed a shrinkage in value of $100,000 in personal property and credits from about $135,000, and of $140,000 in real estate from $201,000, the valuations placed upon such property by the corporation in its annual report having been filed eight months prior to the filing of the inventory. Held, that it was a question of fact as to whether the discrepancy could be accounted for on the theory consistent with the honesty of the representations made in the report.—Silberman v. Munroe, 104 Mich. 352.

¶ 508. In an action on a stock subscription, evidence that the defendant could not read, that he was induced to sign the subscription under the representation that it contained no such promise, and that subsequently the plaintiff's assignor gave him a paper promising to release him, is sufficient to go to the jury on the question of fraud.—Chicago Building & Mfg. Co. v. Yell, 129 Mich. 517.

Sufficiency of evidence for the jury, see ante § 59, also ante §§ 46-57.

Direction of verdict on opening statement stipulated to stand as evidence, see Directing Verdict ¶ 99.

¶ 509. Where the evidence is conflicting it is error for the court to take the question of fraud from the jury and to decide that plaintiff has been defrauded.—Davidson v. Bennett, 84 Mich. 614.

¶ 510. Plaintiff purchased a "bond" in a company, operating a banana plantation in South America, on representations that it had the title to a thousand acres of land, and that transportation facilities were good. In an action against the directors for fraud it appeared that the company held an executory contract for the land, which had been nearly paid for, and that a navigable river had thereafter been rendered non-navigable by a tornado. Held, that a judgment on a directed verdict for defendant should be affirmed.—Kelly v. Clements, 175 Mich. 98.

¶ 511. In an action on a contract, positive and uncontradicted evidence that it was obtained on a representation by the plaintiff that he had an option on certain lands involved while as a matter of fact he did not then have nor did he subsequently obtain a valid option, and that the defendant believed this representation and relied upon it and objected to the plaintiff's default, is sufficient to entitle the defendants to a directed verdict.—Sherk v. Holmes, 125 Mich. 118.

¶ 512. In an action by a bank against a former director, for fraud in obtaining the discount of a note, a directed verdict for the defendant was set aside, where the testimony for plaintiff showed that the proceeds of the note passed to defendant's principal's credit, and there was testimony tending to show that defendant represented that the maker was good and the indorser was worth $75,000, and the evidence showed that the maker was greatly embarrassed when the original note was given and the renewals were made, and that the indorser instead of being worth the amount stated, was greatly embarrassed and did not even have railroad fare.—St. John's Nat. Bank v. Steel, 135 Mich. 165.

¶ 513. Where in an action on the case for fraud, the declaration alleges that defendant purchased plaintiff's goods with the intent on his part at the time of the purchase, not to pay for them, in pursuit of a general scheme to buy fruit and defraud the vendors of their pay, and the evidence introduced tends to support such allegations, it is error for the trial court to direct a verdict for the defendant.—Longo v. Crachiola, 165 Mich. 509.

¶ 514. In a suit by plaintiff vendee of land to recover damages for false representations made by defendant vendor, the defendant introduced evidence that plaintiff was advised by his own attorney and others not to purchase the land. Held, the court properly refused to instruct as requested by defendant that as a matter of law plaintiff did not exercise due diligence and could not therefore recover, since the question of plaintiff's diligence was one of fact for the jury.—Yanelli v. Littlejohn, 172 Mich. 91.

¶ 515. Where a corporation's financial statement made as a basis for credit valued the personal property and accounts receivable at $46,024, and where in trover for the value of goods bought by the corporation from plaintiff and subsequently sold to the defendant bank, there was testimony that the sole basis for an item of $2,000 among the accounts receivable was certain goods in a third person's possession which afterwards sold for $300, and that in the personal property was an item for $5,000 for a patent which had been bought some years before for $2,000, it could not be said that there was a total lack of evidence tending to show fraud in the purchase of the goods.—Whitaker Iron Co. v. Preston Nat. Bank, 101 Mich. 146.

¶ 516. It is the duty of the court, in leaving the question of fraud or fraudulent representations to the jury, to explain to them what they can consider in determining it, and to point out what false or fraudulent representations are, and what constitutes such fraud as authorizes relief.—Klein v. Bayer, 81 Mich. 233.

¶ 517. In leaving to the jury the question of fraud in the settlement of a lawsuit, the court should explain to them what they can consider in determining the question, and what would constitute such fraud as would authorize a rescission; also what diligence is required of the party defrauded in making investigation and in complaining of the fraud when discovered.—Lewless v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 65 Mich. 292.

¶ 518. In an action for false representations, where the making of the representations necessarily involves the fact that they were made with knowledge of their falsity, the jury should be charged that, if they were found to have been made, the intent to deceive was proved and plaintiff should recover.—Hudnut v. Gardner, 59 Mich. 341.

¶ 519. The materiality of representations upon which a party claims to have relied in purchasing property is a question of fact for the jury, and it is error to instruct them to find whether the representations were deemed by the party to be essential.—Davis v. Davis, 97 Mich. 419.

¶ 521. Defining fraud, in a charge, "as a false statement or statements made for the purpose of inducing another to part with money or other valuable things, which statements are calculated to influence the person to whom they are made, and which do actually deceive the person to whom they are made, and thereby induce him to part with money or other valuable things" is sufficient as informing the jury that the statements must be material.—McDonald v. Smith, 139 Mich. 211.

¶ 523. In an action on a promissory note where defendant sets up fraud as a defense, it is not error to refuse to instruct that if defendant at the time he signed the note, "believed" he had been defrauded, he waived the fraud, where the court properly charged that if defendant "knew" at the time that he had been defrauded, plaintiff should recover.—Smith v. McDonald, 139 Mich. 225.

¶ 524. In an action of assumpsit for money obtained by fraud and deceit through the sale of mining stock, it is error to charge that if both plaintiff and defendant acted honestly yet where one of the two, neither of whom acted dishonestly, must suffer, he shall suffer who by his own act had obtained the confidence and caused the injury to the other; there being danger that a jury may misapply so broad a proposition.—Krause v. Cook, 144 Mich. 365.

that the defendant's signature was obtained by fraud. Evidence was admitted of a conversation between the parties in which defendant consented to plaintiff taking the job at an agreed price; it was also shown that plaintiff afterwards presented to defendant for his signature a paper which defendant, who could not read very well, did not read at all, but which he understood from plaintiff was a recommendation of the job, and, as plaintiff professed to be in a hurry, only a little of it relating to its being satisfactory was read to defendant. The jury was instructed that the question of fraud depends on the circumstances of each case, and they must determine whether they were such as to mislead this defendant into signing the paper when he would not have done it if he had known the facts. Held, that there was no error in the charge.—Hobbs v. Solts, 37 Mich. 357.

¶ 526. A request to charge that, if the defendant, sued for fraud in exchanging lands in Arkansas to which he had no title for lands in Michigan belonging to plaintiff, requested plaintiff to go to Arkansas and look at the lands and satisfy himself as to their value there would be no fraud, was properly refused; where the circumstances of the misrepresentations of the value of the Arkansas lands were such that an invitation to plaintiff to look at them might have been designed to allay suspicion. It was sufficiently favorable to defendant to let the matter go to the jury.—Woolenslagle v. Runals, 76 Mich. 545.

¶ 527. In an action upon a fraudulent sale of mortgages, where the value of the land had been represented to be three or four times the value of the loans, it was not error to charge that if the land was not worth three or four times the amount paid, plaintiff had the right to rescind the entire transaction; as if the land was worth materially less than represented, it materially affected the value of the security and entitled plaintiff to rescind.—Simonds v. Cash, 136 Mich. 558.

¶ 528. An instruction in an action for obtaining credit by means of a false financial statement, held to properly submit the issues to the jury.—Krolik v. Lang, 187 Mich. 286.

¶ 529. In an action by contract purchasers of farm land, after rescission of the contract, to recover damages for fraudulent representations by defendant and his agent as to the productivity of the soil, an instruction that if the jury found that the defendant made false statements as to the quality of the property to the plaintiffs and that they were ignorant of the quality of the property under the circumstances indicated and trusted that such statements were to be relied upon, and that plaintiffs had no opportunity to examine the soil, the defendant was guilty of fraud and plaintiffs could recover, held to be correct.—Houder v. Reynolds, 195 Mich. 256.

¶ 530. In an action by the purchaser of city lots against the vendor for fraudulently representing that the improvements were all in and paid for, an instruction that where fraud is used as a basis of an action the fraud should be established by clear proof before a verdict is returned against one charged with such fraud and that if the proof satisfied the jury that plaintiff was defrauded as alleged in the declaration plaintiff was entitled to recover, but if they were not, defendant was entitled to a verdict, held to be as favorable to defendant as he was entitled to have.—State Security & Realty Co. v. Badger, 200 Mich. 104.

¶ 531. In a suit by plaintiff vendee of land to recover damages for false representations made by defendant vendor, the defendant introduced evidence that plaintiff was advised by his own attorney and others not to purchase the land. Held, the court properly refused to instruct as requested by defendant that as a matter of law plaintiff did not exercise due diligence and could not therefore recover, since the question of plaintiff's diligence was one of fact for the jury.—Yanelli v. Littlejohn, 172 Mich. 91.

¶ 532. Plaintiff, a member of an association formed for the purpose of buying a stallion, sued defendant for damages for fraud and deceit in making representations about the horse and in pretending himself to be a bona fide member of the association when in fact he was secretly representing the owner as selling agent. In his charge the court did not cover the questions whether defendant in fact made the representations charged or whether they were true, but assumed that they were made and were false. He did point out, however, the defendant's liability if a secret agreement existed between defendant and the vendor, though failing to instruct that one material false representation, if made and relied on, would justify a verdict for plaintiff. Held, the instructions were sufficiently favorable to plaintiff despite the omissions mentioned.—Wilson v. Bray, 171 Mich. 685.

¶ 533. Where plaintiff bought a horse from defendant when he knew it was sick, and defendant, who withheld nothing he was asked and acted in good faith, stated that it had a cold, in an action to recover back the purchase price, it is not error to charge that plaintiff, to recover, must show false statements upon which he relied, and if he acted solely on his own judgment, knowing that the horse was sick, it cannot be said that he was deceived by representations made.—Wineberg v. Porter, 176 Mich. 120.

¶ 534. It is not error to refuse to instruct that there is no evidence of collusion between the defendant and the agent where in an action for the purchase price of a team of horses it is shown that the defendant's agent had been an employee of the plaintiff, that the unsound condition of the horses was known to both the complainant and the agent and the testimony of the agent and the defendant were in direct conflict as to the agent's authority.—Schofield v. Conley, 126 Mich. 712.

¶ 535. It is competent to leave to the jury the question whether a chattel mortgage was obtained under promises which the persons conducting the negotiations had a well-defined intention not to perform to the injury of the defendant.—Crowley v. Langdon, 127 Mich. 51.

¶ 536. In an action against a wife upon a note signed by her for a debt of her husband, where plaintiff claimed that the note was given to prevent the taking of proceedings by plaintiff to set aside a conveyance of realty by the husband to the wife in fraud of plaintiff and other creditors, and defendant claimed that the only consideration was the past due debt of her husband and that she signed the note after being importuned to do so and upon being promised by plaintiff that he would never make her any trouble, a charge which taken as a whole fairly stated the respective claims of the parties, but which placed upon plaintiff the burden of proving all of the elements of his case, was not open to objection by him.—Whelpley v. Stoughton, 119 Mich. 314.

¶ 537. Where one who had sold certain property and taken a mortgage on land in payment tendered it back and brought replevin for the property, claiming that the giver had falsely represented it to be a first mortgage and good, it was held error to charge that the mere proof of the existence of a prior mortgage describing the same land, and proof of the sheriff's deed of foreclosure, without any showing that the prior mortgagor ever had any connection with the real title, made a prima facie case that there was a prior incumbrance upon the land, and threw upon the defendant the burden of proving that it did not affect the title. The burden of proof, on the contrary, was upon the plaintiff throughout to show that it did affect the title.—Bristol v. Braidwood, 28 Mich. 191.

¶ 538. In an action for fraudulent representations the court, having been asked to charge that fraud should not be presumed under slight circumstances, and that everything should be so clear and convincing as to leave no rational doubt, repeated the request, adding, "the rule is that fraud must be clearly proven, not by lightly inferring it." Held prejudicial, as conveying the impression that the language of the request repeated in the charge was adopted by the court.—Sweeney v. Devens, 72 Mich. 301.

¶ 539. It is error for the court to instruct the jury that proof of fraud should be of such a character as to be inconsistent with any other view than that the accused party is guilty of the fraud charged; nor is such error cured by a further instruction to "deal with that question precisely as with any other question of fact, viewing it reasonably, weighing it and acting upon it upon the same testimony, and using the same reason in arriving at results, as upon any other branch of the case."—Morley v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co., 85 Mich. 210.

¶ 540. In a suit against indorsers whose defense was false representations made by plaintiff's president as to the solvency of the maker of the indorsed notes, where it appeared that the maker had good credit and was conducting an apparently prosperous business, that an unimpeached statement of its condition after the representations showed a large excess of assets over liabilities, and that during the same year the plaintiff bank and its president lent it money without security, it was error to charge that it was undisputed that the representations, if made, were untrue.—Alpena Nat. Bank v. Greenbaum, 80 Mich. 1.

¶ 541. It is error to charge that fraud may be proved by circumstances "but they must not be slight, and the inference can only be drawn from strong presumptive circumstances, which must amount to clear proof."—Ferris v. McQueen, 94 Mich. 367.

¶ 542. An instruction in a civil action that, where fraud is sought to be proved by circumstantial evidence, "all of the circumstances must point to the one thing claimed, and admit of no other reasonable explanation," is erroneous, in that it requires such fraud to be established beyond a reasonable doubt.—Knop v. National Ins. Co., 107 Mich. 323.

¶ 543. It appeared that the corporation which fraudulently bought goods had been in the habit of paying two of its directors $500 a year each as compensation for indorsing and guaranteeing its notes given to the defendant bank, which claimed to be a bona fide purchaser, and to other banks. Held, that it was proper to modify a request for an instruction that this fact should not be taken as evidence of bad faith in the purchase, by adding that the jury had a right to consider it with all the other evidence in determining whether or not the debt was fraudulently contracted with the intent not to pay for the goods.—Whitaker Iron Co. v. Preston Nat. Bank, 101 Mich. 146.

to make a letter from defendant corporation stating its expectation as to doing business and promising to accept 30-day drafts, the basis of an instruction that if at the time of the making of the contract the buyers asserted themselves to be solvent, and were in fact insolvent, the intention not to pay will be presumed.—Skinner v. Michigan Hoop Co., 119 Mich. 467.

¶ 545. In an action for the fraudulent conversion of corporate stock, a request to charge that the circumstances must be such as to amount to clear proof and that the circumstances from which a presumption of fraud arises must be irresistible before the party can be held liable in fraud, was properly refused as requiring too great a degree of proof.—McNaughton v. Smith, 136 Mich. 368.

¶ 546. In an action for damages for fraud based on misrepresentations and on promises not performed, an instruction that the jury might consider the promise and its nonperformance as evidence is not equivalent to saying that the breach of the promise, standing alone, was evidence of fraud.—McDonald v. Smith, 139 Mich. 211.

¶ 547. It is error to charge that fraud must be proved by "clear" and satisfactory evidence.—Walsh v. Taitt, 142 Mich. 127.

§ 63. ——Applicability to issues and proofs.

General rules as to application of the instructions to the issues and evidence in the case, see Instructions, IV.

¶ 548. It was error for the court, in an action based upon alleged misrepresentations, in instructing the jury, to advance the theory of possible mistake or misunderstanding between the parties, where under the testimony of the plaintiff there was no room for a mistake, and the testimony of the defendant did not tend to prove that a mistake had been made.—Hudnut v. Gardner, 59 Mich. 341.

¶ 549. Where a jury is authorized to pass upon alleged false representations made to induce the execution of a contract, an instruction based upon a part of such representations as shown by the testimony is properly refused.—Busch v. Wilcox, 82 Mich. 315, affirmed on rehearing 82 Mich. 336.

¶ 550. Where, in replevin for goods sold on credit, the testimony tends to show that the defendant firm had, up to the time of the purchase, paid all of its obligations at maturity; that its assets were equal to, if not in excess of, its liabilities; and that it was expected that one of the partners, who had just been taken into the firm, would contribute an amount in cash equal to one-third of the capital,—plaintiff sellers are not entitled to an instruction that a condition of absolute insolvency of the buyer existed.—Ross v. Miner, 101 Mich. 1.

¶ 551. Where plaintiff bought a horse knowing that it was sick, and the seller, who withheld nothing he was asked and acted in good faith, told plaintiff that it had a cold, in an action to recover back the purchase price, it is proper to refuse to charge that as the horse was afflicted with an incurable disease, the purchase was void and plaintiff is entitled to recover.—Wineberg v. Porter, 176 Mich. 120.

¶ 552. In an action to recover for the value of a new line of goods which defendant claimed were on consignment and were bought without authority and which plaintiff claimed were sold unconditionally to a clerk having authority to purchase, and that the act of the agent was ratified by the principal, held that the question of fraud in procuring the purchase was properly withdrawn from the jury.—Acorn Refining Co. v. Knowlson, 188 Mich. 123.

¶ 553. An instruction in an action where a defendant pleaded fraud in the sale of land, stating that he would not be allowed to recover unless he relied solely on the plaintiff's representations, sufficiently confined the defendant to the issues raised, there being some evidence of fraud outside of that claimed by the pleadings.—Morman v. Harrington, 118 Mich. 623.

¶ 554. Defendants in an action for deceit in the sale of mining stock, were not entitled to an instruction that the mining company in question had full and exclusive title to the property for the purpose of mining, where their own testimony showed that at the time of plaintiff's purchase, the company had but a two-thirds interest in the mining rights.—Hasse v. Freud, 119 Mich. 358.

II. FRAUD AND UNDUE INFLUENCE IMPLIED FROM RELATIONSHIP, CONDITIONS OR NATURE OF TRANSACTION.

§ 64. In general; elements and nature.

Effect and operation of the fraud on rights of the parties, see post III, A.

Undue influence by one party on other to bring about action, see post §§ 65, 66.

Dealings violative of or obnoxious to relations of confidence and trust, see post §§ 67, 68.

Abuse of official functions or process of law, see post § 69.

Unconscionable and overreaching bargains, see post § 70.

Unfair competition or trade practices, see post § 75.

Subsequent fraud or imposition, see post § 77.

Fraud recognizable in equity, see ante ¶ 2.

Suggestions and silence or equivocation and half-truth as actual fraud, see ante §§ 19, 20.
Silence in circumstances amounting to tacit representation of facts, see ante § 19.
Contractual and testamentary incapacity, see Insane Persons, I; Incompetents; Wills, II; Infants, I, III, IV; Husband and Wife, IV (disability of coverture).
Unfairness in will as affecting its validity, see Wills, I.
Fraudulent or preferential assignments for creditors, see Assignments for Creditors §§ 9-16.
Fraud in obtaining signatures to instruments without knowledge, consciousness or volition of parties, see Execution of Instruments §§ 13, 14.
Withholding evidence from arbitrators as fraud, see Arbitration ¶ 89.
Mistake on one side and fraud on other, see also Mistake.

¶ 555. That which has the effect of fraud on people who are practically helpless is subject to the same consequences as if it were deliberate and actual fraud.—Cripe v. Towsley, 73 Mich. 395.

¶ 556. A transaction that, as carried out, results in a woman's being fraudulently deprived of her dower rights in land, implies a fraudulent intent by those participating in it.—Bear v. Stahl, 61 Mich. 203.

Persuasion to fulfil duty or promise, see post § 66.
Effect of time for reflection and advice to dispel influence, see post § 76.
Cure or waiver of fraud by subsequently making voluntary transfer, see post § 87.
Burden of proof and presumptions of fact, see ante § 30.
Admissibility of evidence of relations of the parties, see ante § 40.
Weight and sufficiency of evidence, see ante § 48.
Undue influence in obtaining will or testamentary provision, see Wills, III.
Undue influence affecting gifts, see Gifts, IV.
Influence exerted by duress, see Duress.

¶ 557. In determining the question of undue influence allowance must be made for the right of every true owner, when not hindered by personal incapacity or particular regulations, to dispose of his own property according to his own free choice, whether it be guided by friendship, benevolence, gratitude or relationship.—Wallace v. Harris, 32 Mich. 380.

¶ 558. To establish undue influence there must be threats, misrepresentation, undue flattery, fraud or physical or moral coercion sufficient to overpower volition, destroy free agency and impel the party upon whom it is practiced to act against his inclination and will; motive, opportunity or even ability to control, in the absence of affirmative evidence that it was exercised, is not sufficient.—Nelson v. Wiggins, 172 Mich. 191.

¶ 559. Confidence in and respect for and the desire to please another, or the influence of long association, affection or gratitude, are neither coercion nor undue influence.—Nelson v. Wiggins, 172 Mich. 191.

¶ 560. If a person by reason of having "the blues" is considered unfit to attend to his business, and passively surrenders it to the control of others, his condition justifies equitable investigation into the justice of any bargain which those who have charge of his affairs may have made with him.—Jacox v. Jacox, 40 Mich. 473.

¶ 561. A decree setting aside a deed for undue influence, will be sustained where it appeared that the conveyance was made by a man of advanced age after persistent and unreasonable solicitation by the grantees, the consideration being an undertaking by grantees to support the grantor.—Olk v. Shugars, 137 Mich. 114.

¶ 562. A conveyance by a woman about seventy-four years old made about a week after her husband's death, transferring all of her real estate to a person not a relative in consideration of her being supported, will be set aside where the evidence shows that there was no separate agreement as to support, and where the husband of the grantee was not obligated to care for the complainant, who was so overcome by grief that she could not understand the transaction.—Thomas v. Crawford, 118 Mich. 253.

¶ 563. A sane man's oral promise to a woman to deed her a farm if she will marry him justifies the woman, after the marriage, in inducing him to redeem the promise, provided she does not resort to fraud or pressure which he cannot resist; the facts present no case of undue influence.—Manke v. Manke, 75 Mich. 435.

¶ 564. Influence obtained by arguments addressed to one's understanding, or by mere appeal to his convictions of right doing, does not constitute undue influence in a legal sense. So held with reference to a deed executed by a mother to her daughter.—Hammond v. Welton, 106 Mich. 244.

§ 67. Dealings in confidential or fiduciary relations.

Between parent and child, see Parent and Child, IV.
Between husband and wife, see Husband and Wife, II, D.
Fraudulent alienation of homesteads, see Homesteads, VI.

¶ 565. Parties in fiduciary relationship may, if both are of lawful age and sound mind, make amicable settlements of their accounts. Settlements of fiduciary matters, though scrutinized more closely than others, are not void.—Hooper v. Hooper, 26 Mich. 435.

¶ 566. Those standing in a confidential relation to a person of feeble intellect are under a clear legal and moral duty, if not to call to his attention all the considerations and details which bear upon the propriety of the transaction, at least to avoid any effort to prevent such considerations from occurring to or having their due weight upon his mind.—Seeley v. Price, 14 Mich. 541.

¶ 568. Equity will not usually allow one to profit by any instrument or conveyance which he has extorted by exciting false alarms or by threats of legal consequences, when there is such a relation of confidence as gives him a special power over the grantor. This principle was applied where one was persuaded by the grantee to make a fraudulent conveyance to avoid a liability that did not, in fact, exist.—Barnes v. Brown, 32 Mich. 146.

¶ 570. A mortgage given by a woman of feeble intellect to a person in a confidential relation as a security for a debt of her son was set aside as presumptively fraudulent on the ground that the mortgagor did not fully understand what she was doing.—Wartemberg v. Spiegel, 31 Mich. 400.

¶ 571. The sole devisee under a will executed a trust deed at the solicitation of a priest without knowing that the priest had information from an attorney that a paper accompanying the will and expressing a desire that the property be used in trust by the priest for a school, was invalid because not attested as a will. It was on the day of the testator's funeral, and the attorney drew the trust deed without advising the devisee that the accompanying paper was void as a will. The priest was the confessor of testator and devisee. Held, that the deed was invalid for undue influence.—Finegan v. Theisen, 92 Mich. 173.

¶ 572. A deed procured by a brother from his sister of her property, reserving merely a life estate to herself, was set aside on the ground of undue influence, where it was made after a separation of grantor from her husband and in order to cut him off from any interest in it, where he did not show that she understood its terms and it appeared that she thought the deed was only an instrument to protect her against the husband, and where it was made on the brother's suggestion and he was her confidential adviser and alone had influence with her.—Smith v. Cuddy, 96 Mich. 562.

¶ 573. Complainant, seventy years old, had been a servant in the Frisbee family for many years, and had been left a legacy of $2,000 by one Amy E. Frisbee. Defendants, a nephew and niece, were asked by her to invest the same. A contract was drawn up which stated that complainant had great confidence in the honesty of the defendants, and, being old and infirm, wished them to invest the money for her. The contract then went on to assign complainant's interest in the will to defendants, and provided that defendants should pay complainant ten dollars a month, and should settle all doctor's bills standing against her, and, in case of a prolonged sickness, should meet her necessary expenses. There were no such doctor bills. On a bill by complainant to set aside this contract and assignment, held, the defendants were in a confidential relation with complainant and had overreached her in not informing her of the purport of the instrument. Bill allowed.—Witham v. Walsh, 156 Mich. 582.

¶ 574. An agreement between a Michigan administrator and another party to buy for their joint benefit, and at a price agreed on, the claim of the estate to lands in Illinois, is not necessarily fraudulent and void on the ground that it places the administrator in a relation where his self-interest conflicts with his duty, for he has no control over Illinois lands.—Sheldon v. Rice, 30 Mich. 296.

¶ 575. Where A. intentionally and fraudulently leads B., whose estate is incumbered, to believe that he (A) will furnish means to enable him (B.) to redeem, whereby B. abstains from seeking aid elsewhere, while A. buys up the incumbrance himself and cuts off the redemption, A. is guilty of fraud and may not enforce his advantage. The remedy in such case is by way of redemption.—Wilson v. Eggleston, 27 Mich. 257.

§ 69. Abuse of official capacity or process of law.

When conduct of county drain commissioner amounts to such fraud as to entitle to equitable relief from assessments, see Drains § 103.

Letting public contract to highest bidder, see Public Contracts II, IV.

Public policy as to contracts affected by interest adverse to public, see Contracts, IV, B.

¶ 576. Mortgage given to avoid levy threatened by sheriff under justice's attachment to enforce claim he has undertaken to collect for part of proceeds is invalid for fraud, he having concealed his interest.—Van Dusen v. King, 106 Mich. 133.

¶ 577. It is fraud in law, whatever the intent, for a guardian to petition in a ward's name, without the latter's authority, for leave to sell lands for the payment of claims against the estate of the ward's ancestor; and to include an invalid claim; and to represent the sale, when made, as a cash sale, when no cash is paid.—Wohlscheid v. Bergrath, 46 Mich. 46.

¶ 579. Where, without the knowledge and consent of the father or friends of the child, one procures from a probate court the appointment of guardian to a minor, for the purpose of secretly obtaining title for his own benefit to the minor's lands, such probate proceedings, not being on behalf of or in the interest of the child, are a fraud upon such minor's rights.—Tong v. Marvin, 26 Mich. 35.

¶ 580. The fact that at a sale by a guardian whose appointment was fraudulently procured by the vendee for the purpose of procuring title the lands brought their full value does not affect the ward's equitable right to have the sale set aside.—Tong v. Marvin, 26 Mich. 35.

Taking advantage of necessity to exact onerous contracts or sales, see post § 71.

Taking advantage of fear to obtain bargain, see post § 72.

Want of substantial consideration, see also ante ¶ 398.

Burden of proof of fairness, see ante § 30.

Burden of proof of good faith where one party is of unequal mentality, see ante § 30, ¶ 225.

Lesser quality of proof required in cases of overreaching bargains, see ante § 46.

Validity of assignments of expectancies and distributive shares, see Assignments, I, III; Estates of Decedents, X, A, XIII, A.

¶ 582. Where one, intending to commit a fraud, practices such acts as are designed to overreach the person he deals with, and the latter, without fault or unreasonable neglect, is actually defrauded, redress will not be denied to the party injured.—Swimm v. Bush, 23 Mich. 99.

¶ 583. The law scrutinizes closely the dealings between borrowers and lenders, and refuses to enforce them where they are unjust and unconscionable.—Dorrill v. Eaton, 35 Mich. 302.

¶ 584. Where no creditors are complaining it is lawful to include in an agreement, whereby A. undertakes to indorse certain paper for B., a provision that should B. refuse to secure, on demand, the amount for which A. should become liable, such amount shall be treated as a sum due and payable from B. to A.—May v. Newman, 95 Mich. 501.

¶ 585. "Mere inadequacy of consideration, not accompanied by other elements of bad faith, is not a sufficient ground for rescission of a contract or for refusing specific performance of it, unless so excessive as to furnish satisfactory evidence of fraud."—Van Norsdall v. Smith, 141 Mich. 355.

¶ 586. Wherever a contract is entered into with an aged and infirm person to be enforced after death, to the disinheriting of lawful heirs, such contract should be regarded with grave suspicion and close scrutiny, and should be permitted to stand only when established by the strongest evidence.—Noban v. Shoup, 171 Mich. 191.

¶ 587. An alleged compromise may be contested by showing that the party relying on it had acted unfairly or oppressively, and asserted claims which he knew to be wrongful, for the purpose of getting the terms which have been nominally assented to.—Headley v. Hackley, 50 Mich. 43; and see Converse v. Blumrich, 14 Mich. 109; Sanford v. Huxford, 32 Mich. 313.

¶ 588. There is no legal fraud or duress in ordinary cases in refusing to pay or settle a just claim without litigation; and one who, in consequence of such refusal, submits to an unjust compromise, must abide by it.—Mayhew v. Phœnix Ins. Co., 23 Mich. 105.

¶ 589. A settlement voluntarily sought and made without concealment of facts or misrepresentations, and where there has been an honest difference of opinion as to the subject-matter compromised, the seller refusing to accept lumber shipped by plaintiffs claiming it was not of the quality contracted for, furnishes no ground for an action for fraud even though the sellers alleged that they accepted the money offered in compromise, because of business necessities.—Johnson v. Fisher & Wilson Co., 80 Mich. 431.

¶ 590. A sale of land for an exorbitant price may be set aside in equity even though the purchaser bought with full knowledge of its value, if the vendor had compelled the sale by taking advantage of the possession of a fictitious claim against him.—Storrs v. Scougale, 48 Mich. 387.

¶ 591. A dissolute spendthrift of twenty-five gave a mortgage on all the real estate to which he was entitled as his father's heir to a man who knew all about the circumstances, to secure the payment of an alleged loan of $5,000 for which he gave his note, and which was made up of the following items: $1,000 in cash; a former due-bill for $47, given up; $199 interest credited on a previous mortgage; $110.35 paid as premium upon an insurance policy assigned to the mortgagee; $566.75 withheld by the latter to pay annual premiums thereafter as they should fall due; and $3,200 as the purchase price of one hundred and sixty acres of land worth but little more than $1,000, and which the mortgagee required him to buy as a condition of lending him any money, though he had no use for the land and knew nothing about its value. Held, an unconscionable transaction which a court of chancery could not sustain, and that the mortgagor should have leave to reconvey the land, though his mortgage should be held good for the other amounts, provided the insurance policy were reassigned to him.—Butler v. Duncan, 47 Mich. 94.

¶ 592. A mortgage given for a large sum by a dissolute spendthrift upon real estate to which he was entitled as heir, to secure payment of small sums of money and the purchase price of lands of little value for which the mortgagor had no use, but which the mortgagee required him to buy as a condition of lending him any money, was held not sustainable in equity though colorably fair.—Butler v. Duncan, 47 Mich. 94.

See also ante ¶ 398.

Infancy or ignorance of hearer as factor in fraud by expression of opinion, see also ante ¶¶ 125, 127.

Nature and elements of duress and effect of duress, see Duress.

¶ 593. Where a conveyance of land was obtained in exchange for property of about half its value, by taking advantage of the grantor's ignorance and unfounded apprehensions that if he did not convey it would be taken on a judgment, the transaction was held to be unconscionable and the conveyance was set aside.—Wooley v. Drew, 49 Mich. 290.

¶ 594. A deed made by a woman 65 years of age, without the advice of counsel, executed in the office of the grantee's attorney, in purported settlement of a groundless claim of the grantee based on a contract with the grantor's husband, since deceased, by which the husband agreed to convey land held by him and his wife jointly, will be set aside

¶ 595. Where the simplicity and credulity of parties are taken advantage of by the shrewdness, overreaching, and misrepresentation of the other party, and they are thereby induced to do, unwittingly, something the effect of which they do not intend, foresee or comprehend, and which, if permitted to culminate, would be shocking to equity and good conscience, a court of equity may interpose.—Sorge v. Dickie, 199 Mich. 251.

Fraud on person by inducing third person to break contract or duty, see ante § 24.
Making financial statement to be relied on by general public as fraud, see ante § 23.
Persons entitled to complain of fraud, see post § 78.

Slander of title, see Libel, II, D.
Implication of trust or constructive trust in favor of person defrauded, see Trusts, IV.

¶ 596. Where the owner of land, on being applied to for its purchase, disclaims title and represents another to be the owner, with whom he encourages dealing, also giving it to be understood that the latter will convey, a court of equity will treat such conduct as a fraud on the purchaser.—Beatty v. Sweeney, 26 Mich. 217.

¶ 597. A quitclaim deed from a person of the same name as the actual owner of the land has the legal effect of a constructive fraud, and if dishonest resembles forgery.—Blodgett v. Dwight, 38 Mich. 596.

§ 75. Unfair competition or trade practices.

Relief by injunction, see Injunctions, II, F.
Trade conspiracies, see Conspiracy.
Unlawful combinations and monopolies, see Combinations.
Unfair competition promotive of monopoly, see Combinations.
Misuse or infringement of trade-marks and trade names, see Trade-Marks, III.

¶ 598. Harassing salesmen and customers of rival business concerns amounts to unfair competition.—Attorney General ex rel. James v. National Cash Register Co., 182 Mich. 99.

¶ 599. Bringing and prosecuting a multitude of infringement suits against business rivals for the purpose of harassing, annoying, intimidating, and to financially embarrass them in order to drive them from business, amounts to unfair competition.—Attorney General ex rel. James v. National Cash Register Co., 182 Mich. 99.

¶ 600. Both members of the firm are liable in an action on the case for malicious destruction by defendants of plaintiff's business, where defendants conducted under a new firm name the business which they had appropriated and where all the circulars and correspondence injurious to plaintiff were sent out in the name of such firm, plaintiff's orders being canceled and new orders substituted and filled by the firm.—Oliver v. Perkins, 92 Mich. 304.

Presumption where deed is made after long negotiations, see ante ¶ 233.
Evidence of previously declared purpose as rebutting undue influence, see also ante ¶ 394.
Subsequent conditions affecting validity of dealings, see post § 77.
Making voluntary transfer after unduly influenced one as extinguishment of the fraud, see post § 87.

¶ 601. The fact that some delay occurred between the conclusion of negotiations for a settlement procured by undue influence, and the execution and delivery of securities thereunder, does not affect the rights of the parties where it appears that the effect of such influence was not meanwhile removed.—Briggs v. Withey, 24 Mich. 136.

§ 77. Fraud or imposition after the bargain.

¶ 602. Subsequent dissensions between the parties to a contract, arising out of new facts, cannot affect the validity or fairness of the original bargain.—Van Donge v. Van Donge, 23 Mich. 321.

III. REMEDIES AND RIGHTS OF INJURED PERSONS.

A. RIGHTS IN GENERAL AND ACTIONS FOR DAMAGES.

Measure and elements of damages, pleading, evidence and instructions on damages, see Damages.
Action for fraud committed outside of state, see also Conflict of Laws § 33.
Civil arrest of fraudulent debtors, see Civil Arrest.

Nonassignability of causes of action or defenses, see post §§ 80, 81.
Right of heirs to annul conveyance, see also post ¶ 691.

Right of third person to complain of illegality in contract, see Contracts § 92.
Who may complain of frauds on creditors or have relief from same, see Fraudulent Conveyances, II, III.
Protection of bona fide holders and takers, see Notice and Record of Title, I; Negotiable Instruments, XIII; Sales, XI.
Right to have reformation, see Reformation, I.
Right to rescind for fraud or undue influence, see Rescission, I, III.

¶ 603. Only the party injured by a fraud can complain of it.—Crane v. Reeder, 25 Mich. 303; Spoon v. Gilbert, 44 Mich. 535; Richardson v. Welch, 47 Mich. 309; Lewis v. Rice, 61 Mich. 97; Waterbury v. Andrews, 67 Mich. 281.

¶ 604. An adverse claimant cannot raise a question of fraud in a conveyance to which he is a stranger.—Crane v. Reeder, 25 Mich. 303.

¶ 605. A complaint of fraud is of no significance if made by a stranger to the suit in which it is involved, and if the party acquiesces in it without any attempt to set aside the fraudulent arrangement.—Hall Lumber Co. v. Gustin, 54 Mich. 624.

¶ 606. A complainant owner of land has no right of action against a defendant for the latter's fraudulent misrepresentations in the sale of said land to complainant's predecessor in title.—Fuller v. Bilz, 161 Mich. 589.

¶ 607. Complaint of false representations can be made only by the one to whom they were made with intent that he should act on them, or by one to whom the person making them intended and expected that they would be communicated.—De Grasse v. Verona Min. Co., 185 Mich. 514.

Right to sue for fraud without restoring things received, see post § 84.
Validity of contracts in general and legality of object, see Contracts, IV.
As ground to avoid accord, see Accord and Satisfaction § 14.
Impeachment of acknowledgments for fraud, see Acknowledgments § 20.
As ground for vacation of award, see Arbitration § 17.

Treating false warranties as fraud, see Sales, VI.
Taking goods from possessor by fraud as a conversion, see Conversion § 3.
Fraud in commingling property or changing its form as affecting rights, see Accession and Confusion.
Inefficacy of fraudulent service to gain jurisdiction, see Courts § 61.
Effect of collusion to destroy conclusiveness of adjudication as res adjudicata, see also Former Adjudication ¶ 30.
Fraudulent concealment of cause of action as suspending limitations, see Limitations, III, A.

¶ 612. A conveyance obtained by fraudulent representation is not void, but voidable. The person defrauded may, if he chooses, still treat the contract as valid.—Dunks v. Fuller, 32 Mich. 242.

¶ 613. A. agreed to sell pine lands to B., a deed to be made when the purchase price was paid, no timber to be cut in the meantime without A.'s permission. B. assigned the contract to C., to whom A. gave permission to cut and remove the timber upon his guaranteeing the payment of the purchase price. Held, that false and fraudulent representations made to C. by B.'s agent (in which A. did not participate), as to the quantity of timber on the lands, would not release C. from his guaranty.—Mason Lumber Co. v. Buchtel, 101 U. S. 638, 25 L. ed. 1072.

¶ 615. A bill of sale, not absolutely void, but voidable at the will of the party defrauded, because procured by fraud, is binding upon the party committing such fraud until repudiated by the party defrauded; and if ratified by such party, upon becoming advised of the facts constituting the fraud, becomes as binding upon both parties as if it had not been tainted with fraud.—Rall v. Cook, 77 Mich. 681.

¶ 616. Where plaintiff claims in ejectment under a deed from the board of escheats, evidence is not admissible on behalf of defendants, claiming adversely thereto, to show that the state was defrauded in the board's sale and conveyance to plaintiff.—Crane v. Reeder, 25 Mich. 303.

¶ 617. A settlement of conflicting claims procured by material misstatement of facts cannot be sustained.—Converse v. Blumrich, 14 Mich. 109.

Assignability or transferability of property or right to which the fraud is incident, see post § 81.

Illegality in tax consequent on fraud as affecting assignability of right to recover taxes paid under protest, see Taxes, VIII.

¶ 618. An assignee of a contract cannot insist upon fraud used in the making of the contract on the party under whom he claims. —Carroll v. Potter, W. 355.

¶ 624. Equity will not enforce an assignee's claim of a right to sue for a fraud to his assignor if that is the sole ground of the action.—Dayton v. Fargo, 45 Mich. 153.

¶ 625. The right to sue in equity to have a conveyance or other act set aside for fraud is not assignable.—Morris v. Morris, 5 Mich. 171; Brush v. Sweet, 38 Mich. 574.

¶ 626. Equity will not permit one to buy up stale claims and then seek to establish frauds committed against his assignors.—Dickinson v. Seaver, 44 Mich. 624.

¶ 628. An action on the case for fraudulent representations whereby the owner of corporate stock was induced to part with it in order that defendants might control and wreck the corporation cannot be maintained by such owner for the use of his assignee, the right to complain for fraud not being assignable.—Smith v. Thompson, 94 Mich. 381.

§ 81. ——Fraud incident to property assigned or devolved.

Incidental right of action to reclaim goods as passing with transfer of business, see Assignments § 18, ¶ 76.

Effect of transfer of chattels as carrying right of action for fraud respecting them, see also Chattel Mortgages ¶ 325.

¶ 630. The rule that a right of action for fraud is not assignable does not apply to an assignment of something that is tangible and deliverable, and that involves a right of property.—Sweet v. Converse, 88 Mich. 1.

¶ 631. The rule that the right to complain of a fraud is not assignable does not apply where the right to enforce a claim that is in itself assignable depends upon showing fraud incidentally.—Howd v. Breckenridge, 97 Mich. 65; Hicks v. Steel, 126 Mich. 408.

¶ 632. The rule that a right to sue in equity for a fraud is not assignable does not apply to prevent an assignee of railroad bonds from enjoining the collection of past-due coupons which had been detached before the bonds were sold to his assignor.—Chicago & G. T. R. Co. v. Turner, 79 Mich. 133.

¶ 634. A foreclosure purchaser under a mortgage given by one who has no title to the lands described is not entitled to relief against a third person on the ground that the latter has obtained title from the actual owner fraudulently, notwithstanding the owner may have intended, without consideration, to put the title where it would have enured to the purchaser's benefit, but was deceived into giving it to the third person.—Waterman v. Seeley, 28 Mich. 77.

Propriety of reliance on other's statements and diligence to know truth or to follow up notice, see ante §§ 9-12.
Estoppel to impute negligence to other in placing reliance as invited, see also ante § 9, also ante ¶ 49.
Option of defrauded party to avoid or affirm contract affected with fraud, see ante § 79.
Rescission of contract or reliance on it as waiver of the fraud, see post § 83.
Merger of the fraud in subsequent agreement, see post § 86.
Instructions on laches, diligence and waiver or affirmance, see ante § 61.
General law of laches, see Equity, IV.
Negotiations for settlement as excusing delay in suing, see Equity § 52.
Limitations of actions for fraud, including effect of concealment to extend period of limitation, see Limitations.
Election of one remedy on contract or sale as waiver of inconsistent remedy for fraud, see Contracts, VII, D; Sales, VI, VIII, IX.
Statutory assumpsit for money obtained by fraud as election barring action of deceit, see Election and Waiver ¶ 22.
Laches and waiver as affecting right to rescind or reform, see Rescission, III; Reformation, I.
Receipt of dividend as estoppel to sue for fraud, see Assignments for Creditors ¶ 183.
Waiver or estoppel of minority stockholders to complain of frauds by majority, see Corporations § 309.
Estoppel of fraudulent debtor to claim fraud as against bona fide purchaser, see Fraudulent Conveyances ¶ 516.
Laches in relying on partnership settlements, see Partnership, VII.

¶ 635. A defrauded party does not owe to the party who defrauds him an obligation to use diligence to discover the fraud.—Lewis v. Jacobs, 153 Mich. 664; Yanelli v. Littlejohn, 172 Mich. 91.

¶ 636. A defense of fraud set up in an action on a promissory note is available though defendant by the exercise of ordinary care and prudence might have known of the fraud at the time he signed the note.—Smith v. McDonald, 139 Mich. 225.

¶ 637. In the case of one aggrieved by a fraudulent purchase of personalty from him, and a conversion, delay alone, while it may have some bearing on the fraud as affecting his conduct, cannot bar an action at law by him against the offending person, unless coming within the statute of limitations.—Dayton v. Monroe, 47 Mich. 193.

¶ 638. Equity will lend its aid to detect and redress a fraud notwithstanding the lapse of time.—McLean v. Barton, H. 279.

¶ 639. Parties who have been defrauded must use diligence to obtain redress within some reasonable time after discovering it.—McLean v. Barton, H. 279; Craig v. Bradley, 26 Mich. 353; Bumpus v. Bumpus, 59 Mich. 95; Merrill v. Wilson, 66 Mich. 232.

¶ 640. One who seeks redress for a fraud should not wait until all those who were cognizant of the transaction have died, and until no one is left to deny or explain the allegations, unless satisfactory excuse can be given for the delay.—McLean v. Barton, H. 279.

¶ 641. Delay in suing for fraud does not of itself necessarily bar the suit, if it does not come within the rule or analogy of the statute of limitations.—McClintock v. Laing, 22 Mich. 212; Dayton v. Monroe, 47 Mich. 193.

¶ 642. One who consents to the absolute conveyance of a legal title for trust purposes, or who finds that another has fraudulently obtained his legal title and put it in the market, cannot, after silently seeing third parties acquire rights thereon, ask for purely equitable relief. His rights are cut off by laches.—Ford v. Loomis, 33 Mich. 121.

¶ 643. A delay of eight or nine years after gaining knowledge of facts upon which complainant bases a charge of fraud in transactions between husband and wife is too great to justify relief.—Buhl v. Peck, 70 Mich. 44.

¶ 644. To obtain relief from a contract on the ground of fraud the defrauded party must have made proper complaint when the facts came to his notice.—Brooks v. Culver, 168 Mich. 436.

¶ 646. Where a party admits, by writings covering a period of three years, the existence of a contract, and acts upon it, he cannot, after the lapse of five years and four months from its execution, be permitted to raise the question of fraud in its procurement.—Sullivan v. Ross' Estate, 98 Mich. 570.

¶ 647. One who purchases stock in a corporation and after holding several years unites with other shareholders to dispose of the property is held to have waived the defense of fraudulent representations in the sale of the stock to him and cannot set it up as a defense in an action on a note indorsed by him to the sellers of the stock and several times renewed by the maker and the defendant.—Morgan v. Nowlin, 126 Mich. 105.

¶ 648. Where under a contract providing that in certain contingencies the partnership agreed to be entered into might be terminated and that in such case the money paid was to be returned, plaintiff gave notice of his desire to terminate and agreed to take a lesser sum in settlement of the controversy, whereupon part of the amount so agreed on was paid, and the jury found specially that the balance was never tendered, plaintiff acted with sufficient promptness in instituting suit, and had not waived the fraud in the original transaction.—Rambo v. Patterson, 133 Mich. 655.

¶ 649. An option procured by complainant, a go-between after the defendants had discovered he had no original option, but it was in the name of a third party, is not confirmed by the fact that the defendants after they had learned the true facts wrote the owner notifying him that his terms of sale were accepted and directing the deeds be made in the name of one of the defendants alone, nor does it amount to a waiver or forgiveness of the deceit practiced by the complainant so as to entitle him to maintain his bill to establish an interest in the lands purchased.—Barrett v. Miller, 144 Mich. 454.

¶ 650. A purchaser of farm land must be deemed to have waived whatever rights he had to complain of fraud in making false representations as to the number of fruit trees on the farm and the freedom of the fruit trees from disease, where he is aware of the untruthfulness of the representations before the expiration of the first year of his occupancy of the farm and pays the first instalment note, and makes only a mild protest at the time of such payment, places a second mortgage on the premises running to third persons, and also makes permanent improvements on the premises, and takes no steps towards the rescission of the purchase until suit is brought to foreclose the mortgage, and it appears that he would have paid the second note if it had not been for lack of funds.—Draft v. Hesselsweet, 194 Mich. 604.

¶ 651. In an action for the purchase price of a set of books, defendant not having returned the books is not precluded by laches from interposing the defense of fraud where he notified plaintiff that he would not accept the books and offered to return them.—J. B. Millett Co. v. Andrews, 175 Mich. 350.

¶ 652. Where a farmer residing on exchanged property knows or has had ample opportunity to know that the representations of the seller were untrue when he signed a receipt which purported to be a full and complete compromise settlement of all differences on the land and other trades and makes no complaint or protest, he must be deemed to have affirmed the trade and waived his right to complain of fraud.—Parkyn v. Ford, 194 Mich. 184.

¶ 653. A dealer, claiming to have been defrauded by the substitution of the term "great gross" for "gross" in an order for goods, is not concluded by an acknowledgment that the order as described in a letter of the seller is correct; where such acknowledgment is explained by the fact that it was in printing contained in the seller's letter, the written portion of which was designed to transmit a proposed advertisement, and the buyer testified that he supposed he was merely approving the advertisement and gave no attention to anything further in the letter.—Shrimpton & Sons v. Rosenbaum, 106 Mich. 68.

¶ 654. Damages may lie for an injury done by deceitfully introducing an unprofessional assistant into a sick room when its full extent is discovered, though long after the act from which it springs, and though assent was given supposing him to be an assisting physician.—De May v. Roberts, 46 Mich. 160.

land. He discovered the fraud in March, 1909, and began an action at law for damages in April, 1909. Held, he was not barred by laches from maintaining his suit.—Wegner v. Herkimer, 167 Mich. 587.

¶ 656. The trustee in bankruptcy of a firm of private bankers cannot recover from a bank in which by fraud of one of the partners a deposit was made to the credit of a corporation other than the depositary bank; where such bank was not a party to the fraud, though the deposit consisted of a draft payable to it and drawn by the private bank and the draft was originally intended to transfer a reserve fund previously kept in another bank, and though the payee passed the draft to the credit of the corporation on the partner's suggestion and his personal indorsement without the indorsement of the drawer, where also the partner immediately notified his copartners that he had caused the deposit to be made as a loan to the corporation on its notes and such action was ratified by them by renewing the notes from time to time without objecting to the diversion of the draft from its intended use.—Knisely v. People's Savings Bank of Saginaw, 199 Mich. 501.

General law of election of rights and remedies, see Election and Waiver.

Alternative rights and remedies under contract, see Contracts, VII, D; Sales, VIII, IX; Vendors and Purchasers, XII.

Right of tenant to recover for fraud notwithstanding waiver of right to surrender, see Landlord and Tenant, V, C.

Conditions on which rescission is allowed, effect of retention of benefits or reliance on contract, see Rescission, III.

¶ 657. A party cannot repudiate a contract as fraudulent and at the same time claim the benefit he has received from it.—Merrill v. Wilson, 66 Mich. 232; Pangborn v. Continental Ins. Co., 67 Mich. 683.

Right to sue without waiting until damage is complete, see ante ¶ 103.

Restoration of benefits received as condition to rescission, see Rescission, III.

¶ 662. Rescission or restitution of property acquired as the result of the owner's misrepresentation or fraud, is not a condition precedent to the maintenance against him of an action for fraud and deceit.—Merlau v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 180 Mich. 393.

¶ 663. A defrauded party need not give up the personal unsecured obligation of those who defraud him, as a condition of suit for the fraud.—Dayton v. Monroe, 47 Mich. 193.

¶ 664. The note of a third person, which may be needed as evidence in a suit to recover money alleged to have been fraudulently obtained of the plaintiff, need not be surrendered to the defendants before bringing suit.—Stubly v. Beachboard, 68 Mich. 401.

¶ 665. The doctrine that one cannot set aside part of a transaction as a fraud and insist on the benefit of the residue does not apply to transactions to which a party has not assented, who cannot, while insisting on his rights, place everything in statu quo.—Tong v. Marvin, 26 Mich. 35.

¶ 666. One who has been defrauded into giving notes need not, in order to entitle him to redress, contest the notes before payment in the hands of a presumably innocent holder, upon information received from the party who defrauded him or upon any other information short of a certainty, concerning the holder's good faith.—Knight v. Linzey, 80 Mich. 396.

¶ 667. Where the plaintiff, by an exchange of land, acquired property the defendant had agreed to sell to a third person, and took an assignment of the contract as part of the consideration for the exchange, it is not necessary, in order to permit the plaintiff to maintain an action against the defendant for fraud and deceit practiced upon him, that the vendee under such contract should be in default.—Merlau v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 180 Mich. 393.

Maxim of equity as to wrongdoers, see Equity § 5.

Denial of relief on invalid contract to parties in equal wrong, see Contracts § 89 et seq.

That one cannot urge his own fraud in avoidance of his accord, see Accord and Satisfaction ¶ 83.

¶ 668. Courts will not extricate parties from a situation in which, by their own acts, they have placed themselves in perpetrating or attempting to perpetrate a fraud on others.—In re Teller's Estate, 200 Mich. 181.

¶ 670. A chattel mortgagor may show, as a defense in a suit to recover the property by an agent of the mortgagee under the mortgage, that he was induced to execute the mortgage by the false representations of the mortgagee that the property was in danger of seizure by the mortgagor's creditors, though he could not be relieved from his own fraudulent mortgage.—Eldredge v. Sherman, 79 Mich. 484.

¶ 671. If A., acting on B.'s representations and suggestions, gives his notes in a transaction which he knows to be fraudulent and into which he goes solely to make money, and afterwards has to pay the notes to an innocent holder, he has no redress against B., even though he may not have been equally guilty with the latter.—Knight v. Linzey, 80 Mich. 396.

¶ 672. If a contract executed for the purpose of defrauding a third party is executory, it will not be enforced; and if executed, it will not be relieved against. If it has been performed in part, the law gives it effect in so far as executed, and holds it void in so far as it remains unexecuted.—Williams v. Clink, 90 Mich. 297.

¶ 673. One who by defendant's fraudulent representations has been induced to give his note for the purchase at an exorbitant price of Bohemian oats, the only consideration being an agreement and bond of a fictitious corporation to sell a larger quantity of oats for plaintiff at the same price on commission, is not in pari delicto so as to preclude recovery for the fraud.—Hess v. Culver, 77 Mich. 598.

¶ 674. Where plaintiff sued defendants for obtaining by fraudulent representations his note for oats bought by him of them at $15 per bushel in return for an agreement and bond of a fictitious corporation to sell twice as many bushels for plaintiff at the same price on commission, it was error to direct judgment for defendants on the theory that the parties were in pari delicto in an illegal transaction.—Pearl v. Walter, 80 Mich. 317.

¶ 675. Although equity ordinarily refuses relief to one implicated in a fraud, yet a deed by two adult sons to their father, who exerted a strong influence over them and with whom they had always lived, may be set aside at their instance; where it is shown that he procured them to execute it on the false representation that it was wanted only to exhibit to another child to induce her to convey her share in the same property, and that it would be destroyed when it had served such purpose; and where the father, grantee, caused it to be recorded, the land being a homestead which had stood in the name of the mother then dead.—Peek v. Peek, 101 Mich. 304.

¶ 676. One who has given a mortgage to be sold for a fraudulent purpose cannot set up the fraud as a defense to the mortgage in the hands of a bona fide purchaser.—Bloomer v. Henderson, 8 Mich. 395.

¶ 677. Where the holder of a note knowing its fraudulent character sells it by fraudulently representing that it is good and collectible, he cannot, when sued by the vendee for the amount paid, take advantage of his own fraud by claiming that the note is good in plaintiff's hands as an innocent purchaser, nor can he object to the admission of evidence showing that the note is invalid.—Evans v. Stuhrberg, 78 Mich. 145.

¶ 678. Where a son and his mother, for the purpose of working a fraud upon the son's wife, entered into a scheme whereby mutual receipts for all demands were executed for the purpose of furnishing fraudulent evidence of a settlement between them, the son is estopped to assert fraud for the purpose of defeating the receipt.—In re Teller's Estate, 200 Mich. 181.

¶ 679. While there are some illegal transactions where a party, though acting unfairly, may defend on grounds of public policy, yet falsehood and deception are not, usually, as between the parties using them, any answer to each other's claims.—Crawford v. Osmun, 70 Mich. 561.

¶ 680. Representations made by a vendor at the time of a sale as to the quality of the article sold are merged in an express warranty; and an action of fraud cannot be based on such representations unless the vendor knew them to be false when made.—Horner v. Fellows, 1 D. 51.

¶ 681. Fraud in the making of the original contract cannot be complained of by one of the parties, who after full knowledge of it and in the course of negotiations entered into a further contract to rectify the wrong by changing the property and adding thereto, in respect to which the misrepresentations had been made.—Western Electric Co. v. Hart, 103 Mich. 477.

¶ 682. Where an electric light and power company, fully knowing the falsity of representations that were made by the agent of an electric company as an inducement to the persons who effected its organization, enters into a contract with such company for the enlargement of its plant and a change in its system of lighting, and where its president, with full knowledge of the facts, guarantees the notes given in payment for materials furnished under said contract, the fraud is waived, and the president when sued upon such guaranty cannot show such representations as a defense.—Western Electric Co. v. Hart, 103 Mich. 477.

¶ 684. Where a machine was sold under a written warranty, the purchaser cannot show in an action for the purchase price, that the contract of sale was vitiated by the fraudulent representations of the seller as to the amount of money that the use of the machine would save.—Linderman Machine Co. v. Shaw-Walker Co., 187 Mich. 28.

¶ 685. Representations in the nature of warranties antecedent to a contract of sale cannot be urged as fraud in cases where the contract is in writing and contains specific warranties.—Bates Tractor Co. v. Gregory, 199 Mich. 8.

¶ 686. Fraudulent representations bearing on the value of corporate plant and the authority of the persons making them to dispose of the corporate property are not merged in a contract giving an option on consideration to purchase the property of the corporation. The making of such contract is the injury done by the fraud.—Gubbins v. Ashley, 146 Mich. 453.

¶ 687. It is immaterial, as affecting the right of the purchaser of a rooming house business to recover for fraudulent representations by the owner, his broker and the latter's clerk making the sale as to the character of the tenants and the rent receipts, whether the purchaser did, or did not disaffirm the contract.—Williamson v. Hannan, 200 Mich. 658.

¶ 688. A purchase-money mortgagee who had been in possession of the land for five years before mortgaging cannot reduce the amount of his mortgage by showing that he was defrauded in the purchase by false representations concerning the land and the crops thereon.—Wright v. Peet, 36 Mich. 213.

¶ 690. No equitable interest exists in children of a grantor merely by reason of their relationship which will entitle them to attack his deed for undue influence, though it was practiced to obtain a deed under a void parol promise to hold the land in trust for the heirs of the grantor, and though in time by his death they became his heirs, but after he had parted with the legal title to the grantee by another unimpeachable deed.—Thompson v. Marley, 102 Mich. 476.

¶ 691. Where a daughter by means of fraud and undue influence procured from her father a deed of his lands upon the understanding that she should hold them in trust and after his death distribute them among his heirs at law according to the statute of descent, and where the daughter, not having recorded such deed, procured some time after execution thereof a second deed from her father of the same lands, which deed was not procured by fraud or connected with any trust, it was held that while no resulting trust arose in favor of the heirs at law, yet in view of the fact that the father was in possession of the land when he executed the first deed and so continued until his death, and of the fact that said deed was procured by undue influence with the intent not to carry it into effect, the parol agreement made at the same time was such a fraud as vested in the father an equitable title to the lands; that he might have filed a bill at any time to set aside such deed; that if he had died with the lands in that situation his rights in the premises would have devolved upon his heirs or personal representatives; but that the second deed under the circumstances vested an absolute title in the grantee.—Thompson v. Marley, 102 Mich. 476.

[Note. The rule, that one who has been defrauded in a contract or sale may at his option enforce the contract or sue for the deceit or sue on quantum meruit or quantum valebat or other common count in assumpsit or may await action by the other party and urge the fraud as a defense or matter of recoupment, or may resort to any other available means of redress, depends on the law of contract as much as on the nature of the various actions and remedies. It is therefore treated in Contracts, VII, D; Sales, VIII, IX; Vendors and Purchasers, XII.

The correlative rule, that one may waive a tort and sue in assumpsit, involves torts other than deceit and is treated in Assumpsit, I.]

¶ 693. An action for fraud and deceit as well as assumpsit will lie against an attorney for fraudulently inducing plaintiff to convey property to him for which she received no compensation, although there was a promise by him to pay or reconvey, he having conveyed to a stranger.—Trumbull v. January, 123 Mich. 66.

¶ 695. One not the owner of personalty who does not receive any portion of the purchase money, but who makes false and fraudulent representations concerning it to the purchaser, is not answerable to the latter for the consideration paid by him; where the action sounds in assumpsit on the fraud and not in tort.—Patterson v. Kasper, 182 Mich. 281.

¶ 696. Trover lies to recover the value of goods obtained from plaintiff by false representations recklessly made, without knowing of their truth or falsehood, for a fraudulent purpose.—Beebe v. Knapp, 28 Mich. 53.

¶ 697. Ejectment lies against a party who claims under papers and conveyances that show fraud on their face; the remedy can be administered in such case as well at law as in equity.—McKay v. Williams, 67 Mich. 547.

¶ 700. Defendant negotiated with plaintiffs Painter and Wilgus for the sale of land, and knew that said plaintiffs were acting together in considering the purchase of the land. Defendant later made false and fraudulent representations to Wilgus, knowing that he would communicate the same to Painter. In an action on the case for such fraud, held, Painter was properly joined with Wilgus as a party plaintiff.—Painter v. Lebanon Land Co., 164 Mich. 260.

¶ 701. A declaration for false pretenses must show (1) what they were; (2) that defendants made or authorized them; (3) that they were material; (4) that they were false and fraudulent and deceived plaintiff; (5) what defendants obtained by them. Nothing outside of this belongs to the issue, whatever force it may have as circumstantial evidence.—Parker v. Armstrong, 55 Mich. 176.

¶ 702. In a declaration for fraud consisting in false representations it should be alleged that they were believed by plaintiff to be true, and that so believing he relied on them and that they induced him to take action which resulted in damage to him.—Pforzheimer v. Selkirk, 71 Mich. 600.

¶ 703. The declaration in an action for fraud must definitely and issuably set forth the facts complained of and relied upon for recovery.—Pforzheimer v. Selkirk, 71 Mich. 600.

¶ 704. A special count is necessary in order to recover damages for fraud and deceit; there can be no recovery therefor under the common counts in assumpsit.—Burchy v. Carpenter, 181 Mich. 78.

¶ 705. One who seeks to recover damages for being falsely and fraudulently induced to part with his property while he was "mentally incapable of reasonably and properly managing and conducting his own affairs" must, in order to maintain an action, allege and prove, in the absence of fraudulent representations, that his mental incompetency was such as to avoid a deed.—Devereaux v. Hubbard, 117 Mich. 119.

¶ 706. The sole allegation that one defendant told plaintiff that the other defendant deemed certain land to be worth a stated sum where as it was in fact worth more, is insufficient to sustain a charge of fraudulent misrepresentation as to the value of the land.—Schmoltz v. Schmoltz, 116 Mich. 692.

¶ 707. When A. sues B. for fraudulently misrepresenting the value of a note made by C. but used by B. in paying A., a declaration in tort which does not describe the note nor sufficiently identify it, nor allege that the representations were not true when made or were untrue afterwards, is insufficient.—Stoflet v. Marker, 34 Mich. 313.

¶ 708. A declaration in a case for false warranty may be sustained without allegations that defendant "falsely and fraudulently warranted" and "falsely and fraudulently deceived" the plaintiff, if the substantial averments show the false warranty and the fraudulent sale, and deception of the purchaser.—Hopkins v. O'Neil, 46 Mich. 403.

¶ 709. In pleading fraud as a ground for trover by the seller against the buyer plaintiff need not count on any precise words.—Heineman v. Steiger, 54 Mich. 232.

¶ 710. In an action on the case to recover damages for the transfer of plaintiff's note to a bona fide purchaser without notice, a declaration which states that a bond given was a part of the contract on which the note was given, and that defendant obtained no right to enforce the collection of the note until the conditions of the bond were performed does not state an averment of fact, but is the mere conclusion of the pleader, and is vulnerable on demurrer.—Leland v. Goodfellow, 84 Mich. 357.

¶ 711. A declaration alleging in effect that one of the defendants, claiming to be and acting as an agent, received money from plaintiff which was due his pretended principal for property sold to the plaintiff, and, upon paying it over to such principal, falsely represented that the property had not been paid for, and that he, defendant, owned it, and requested and thereby fraudulently procured a deed of such property to be made to his codefendant, and that all this was done falsely and with intent to wrong, cheat and defraud the plaintiff, and with full knowledge and connivance of all the defendants, is held sufficient to authorize the plaintiff to recover upon proof of the facts alleged.—Whitman v. Johnston, 35 Mich. 406.

¶ 712. In an action for fraudulent representations, a declaration charging a conspiracy of three defendants to defraud plaintiff in the sale of certain goods, and alleging that such goods belonged to a particular defendant and were delivered by him, and that he first called on plaintiff and stated that the other defendants were selling the goods for him, was sufficient to show that plaintiff relied upon representations made by the other two defendants as those of the first defendant.—Pearl v. Walter, 80 Mich. 317.

¶ 713. In an action for fraudulent representations as to his financial condition by which it is alleged defendant procured from plaintiffs merchandise on credit, a declaration alleging that defendant falsely and fraudulently represented his financial condition in making a report to a commercial agency, that plaintiff sold in reliance upon this report, and that such report was false, was sufficiently specific.—Hinchman v. Weeks, 85 Mich. 535.

¶ 714. A declaration in an action on the case to recover damages for the transfer of his note given for Bohemian oats to a bona fide purchaser without notice, whereby plaintiff was forced to pay the note, was held defective on demurrer for want of a sufficient averment of defendant's complicity with the false representations of another person in the transaction upon which the note was based.—Leland v. Goodfellow, 84 Mich. 357.

¶ 715. A declaration which alleges that defendant made certain representations of the width of a platted way or street to plaintiff as an inducement to him to purchase land of defendant, that plaintiff believed and relied upon such representations and purchased the land, that the representations were false, and that plaintiff was damaged thereby, sufficiently states a cause of action for deceit and does not sound upon a covenant in the deed, although it is alleged that a covenant was broken.—Merrill v. Newton, 109 Mich. 249.

¶ 716. Plaintiff's declaration alleged that he suffered a loss by fire; that defendant wholesalers and defendant fire insurance adjusters wrongfully intending to injure plaintiff and deprive him of his money, under the guise and pretense of befriending and assisting him and protecting his interest, and in collecting the moneys due on his insurance policies, induced plaintiff to place said policies with defendant adjusters to collect and receive the money thereon; that said defendant adjusters and wholesalers represented to plaintiff that the money when so collected by defendant adjusters would be promptly deposited in a certain bank to plaintiff's credit; that defendants acting in concert caused plaintiff to indorse and deliver to defendant adjusters drafts given by the insurance companies in payment of said policies; that they collected the money thereon, and wrongfully intending to deprive plaintiff of such money, neglected and refused to deposit same to plaintiff's account, whereby plaintiff suffered damage, etc. Held, in the absence of demurrer said declaration sufficiently stated a cause of action in trespass on the case for fraud.—Dillon v. Craig, 168 Mich. 216.

¶ 717. A declaration averring that the plaintiff was responsible for an undertaker's bill, that the attending physician secured a bill from the undertaker so that he might present it with his own bill for payment, that he presented a bill for more than the amount due the undertaker and obtained a check payable to the same, that he represented to the undertaker that the check included the physician's charges for professional services, and that he thus secured the amount above the true charges of the undertaker, with appropriate averments that all the representations of the defendant were false and fraudulent, that they were believed and relied on by the plaintiff and that as the result he was defrauded, states a good cause of action.—Blanksma v. King, 172 Mich. 666.

Coliability of agent with principal, see Agency §§ 52, 85.

¶ 720. One who complains that he was induced to buy goods by defendant's fraudulent statements cannot prove the acts and sayings of other persons as inducements, unless he avers a conspiracy and enumerates the false statements.—Jackson v. Collins, 39 Mich. 557.

¶ 721. It is not necessary to allege a partnership in order to bind, as joint tort-feasors, parties who join in, and knowingly assist in, the fraudulent disposition of goods fraudulently obtained.—Banner v. Schlessinger, 109 Mich. 262.

¶ 722. A declaration based on fraud, which although indicating that defendants took no part in making the contract which led to plaintiff's loss, did indicate that the fraudulent representations of defendants were made for the purpose of inducing such contract and did induce it, showed sufficient connection on the part of the defendants to make them liable.—First Nat. Bank of Ovid v. Steel, 136 Mich. 588.

¶ 723. A declaration in an action for fraud and deceit, which alleges that false representations were made to plaintiff and that he paid his money, is sufficient though the representations were made to, and the money was paid by his agent and the transaction was ratified by plaintiff.—Sudworth v. Morton, 137 Mich. 575.

¶ 724. Where fraudulent purchases are made on different occasions, each constitutes a distinct and separate act of fraud, for which the seller may maintain a separate action.—Reid, Murdoch & Co. v. Ferris, 112 Mich. 693.

¶ 725. A fraud cannot be separated into two causes of action, and one settled for and the other left open; it is and must be an entirety. And a demand for the fraudulent selling by defendants to the plaintiff of property not their own, which has been paid for partly in plaintiff's own money and partly with obligations of another, the transaction being a single one, cannot be split up, and the fraud settled so far as it applied to the cash purchase, and the controversy left open as to the residue.—Allison v. Connor, 36 Mich. 283.

¶ 727. It was error to allow testimony tending to show that there were not as many trees on a farm as represented by the vendor, in an action to recover payments made upon a fruit farm under a contract, abandoned because of fraud in the sale, where the declaration does not state that there were not as many as were represented, nor does it state that reliance was placed upon such representation, though it alleges what the representation was.—Mestler v. Jeffries, 145 Mich. 598.

¶ 728. Under a declaration alleging that land sold to plaintiff was represented by defendant to be of a certain value, representations that it was of that value for any purpose, e. g., farming, may be shown.—Holcomb v. Noble, 69 Mich. 396.

¶ 729. A declaration in case charging defendant with having procured plaintiff to sell and deliver goods to him by making false representations as to his own credit is not supported by evidence that defendant, by making false representations of solvency and prompt payment, had obtained an extension of time on a debt already matured.—Jones v. Kemp, 49 Mich. 9.

¶ 731. Plaintiff sued in assumpsit to recover on the ground of fraud money advanced to defendant for goods. Plaintiff's declaration alleged that defendant fraudulently represented that he intended to open a permanent branch at Des Moines, Iowa; that he represented himself to be the largest manufacturer of his line of goods; that the goods were of the highest standard; and that experience on plaintiff's part in selling same was unnecessary. Held, these allegations were broad enough to admit evidence of fraudulent representations.—Ward v. Cook, 158 Mich. 283.

¶ 732. Where a declaration for obtaining money on false pretenses is so amended as to describe the fraudulent representations differently, and add to them, as by differently stating localities and amounts of payments made by the plaintiffs, the variance is material.—Fish v. Barbour, 43 Mich. 19.

¶ 734. In an action for trespass on the case where the plaintiffs claimed that peppermint oil sold them represented to be good and genuine was in fact dementholized oil, they can recover if in fact the oil was dementholized and they had relied upon the representations that it was good and genuine, but if the oil was not dementholized then the verdict must be for the defendants, whether the oil was "weedy" or not.—Durfee v. Newkirk, 83 Mich. 522.

¶ 735. A declaration for false representations in inducing one to buy corporate stock averred that defendant was the owner of the stock purchased; that plaintiff purchased it from him, and paid therefor to him the sum of $500. It appeared from the evidence that the stock which plaintiff received was unissued stock of the corporation, in which defendant had no interest except as a stockholder, and that he never received personally any portion of the purchase money, but that the same was paid directly to the bookkeeper of the corporation. Held, that there was a fatal variance between the proofs and the averments of the declaration.—Hubbard v. Long, 105 Mich. 442.

¶ 736. A declaration which alleges that defendant was indebted in a certain sum for horses obtained from plaintiffs at his request, that he promised to pay that sum for them, and that he afterwards delivered in payment a note which plaintiffs were induced to accept by his false representations, whereby they were injured, does not sustain evidence that defendant agreed to sell certain horses for plaintiffs, and to return to the latter $60 in money if sold for cash, and the same amount in good, bankable paper if sold on time, that he afterwards delivered to plaintiffs the note described in the declaration, representing the same to have been received in payment for the horses, and to be good and bankable, and that it was not such paper as defendant well knew.—Bilsborrow v. Warner, 117 Mich. 506.

¶ 738. A declaration in an action for false representations made on the sale of certain corporate stock, which alleged that a fraudulent representation was made to plaintiff, is not supported by proof of a statement made in a letter written to a third person.—Fisher v. Radford, 153 Mich. 385.

¶ 739. There is no variance between the declaration in an action for deceit in the sale of mining stock, and the proof, where the declaration averred that plaintiff was induced by the defendant to purchase the stock, while the proof showed a purchase from another party, and where the declaration did not state of whom the stock was purchased and the testimony tended to show that the payments were made to the defendants or some of them.—Hasse v. Freud, 119 Mich. 358.

Under declaration sounding alternatively in fraud and incompetency, see ante ¶ 705.

Instructions on requirements of proof, see ante § 62.

General rule that proof of substance of the issue or of one of several complete frauds suffices, see also Pleading, IX.

¶ 740. Where fraud is alleged in the declaration in an action for damages, the facts which are made the basis of the wrong should be proved as stated.—Collins v. Jackson, 54 Mich. 186.

¶ 741. The fact that a declaration for damages for misrepresenting the value of land sold to plaintiff charges fraudulent and deceitful purposes on defendant's part does not necessitate proof of such purposes.—Holcomb v. Noble, 69 Mich. 396.

¶ 743. In an action for damages by a vendee of land for fraudulent representations as to title, it is not necessary for plaintiff to prove all of the representations alleged in his declaration; and if any material fraudulent representations are charged which resulted in the injury complained of, he is entitled upon proof of same, to recover.—Wegner v. Herkimer, 167 Mich. 587.

¶ 747. In cases of fraud, where it is doubtful whether the defense would be good at law, equity will entertain jurisdiction.—Ankrim v. Woodworth, H. 355.

¶ 748. In cases of actual fraud a court of equity has jurisdiction notwithstanding that the complainant may have a remedy at law.—Cogswell v. Mitts, 90 Mich. 353.

¶ 749. Equity has jurisdiction in all cases of fraud where the complainant is entitled to relief specifically equitable, and it does not in all cases depend upon an absence of legal remedy.—Fred Macey Co. v. Macey, 143 Mich. 138, per Hooker, McAlvay, and Montgomery.

¶ 750. False representations are a basis for equity jurisdiction only in cases where relief cannot be obtained in proceedings at law.—Heffernan v. Burns, 175 Mich. 457.

¶ 751. Where plaintiff purchased from defendant the furniture in a rooming house, under an instalment contract providing for forfeiture on default in payment, a bill claiming that the contract is fraudulent, and seeking to have defendant enjoined from enforcing it, will be dismissed, it appearing that the fraud alleged is available in defending or prosecuting an action at law.—Heffernan v. Burns, 175 Mich. 457.

¶ 752. Courts of law and equity have concurrent jurisdiction in cases of fraud, and a suit may be planted on the chancery side of the court where complainant is shown entitled to relief especially equitable.—Laubengayer v. Rohde, 167 Mich. 605.

¶ 753. Courts of equity have concurrent jurisdiction with the law courts to grant relief from the consequences of fraud and misrepresentation where one party has obtained an executory contract by fraud, and the injured party asks for a cancellation of it, for an equitable lien upon property for money paid on such a contract, and for an accounting.—Culver v. Avery, 161 Mich. 322.

fraudulent representations of the seller.—Schwier v. Hurlburt, 184 Mich. 698.

¶ 755. Equity is the proper forum wherein to adjust the relative rights of a defrauded vendor and of the vendee's bona fide mortgagee whose mortgage covers both previous debts and new advances, and who has taken possession and sold under foreclosure.—Zucker v. Karpeles, 88 Mich. 413.

¶ 757. The principle that equity has jurisdiction in all cases of fraud is subject to the limitation that it be confined to transactions in which the mode of action or kind of aid or relief sought is not practicable in a court of law, but is allowable in equity.—Teft v. Stewart, 31 Mich. 367; Hagenbuch v. Howard, 34 Mich. 1.

¶ 758. Equity does not have concurrent jurisdiction with courts of law in cases of fraud unless the relief sought is of an equitable character.—Mack v. Village of Frankfort, 123 Mich. 421.

¶ 759. A combination by which one was defrauded into giving a conveyance of land on the faith of an agreement to transfer to him an interest in a stock of goods, which transfer was afterwards refused, was held to present a case that did not call for equitable cognizance, but for which the remedy at law was adequate.—Teft v. Stewart, 31 Mich. 367.

¶ 760. The existence of a legal remedy will not prevent resort to equity to have the agreed consideration or the value of premises out of which the complainant has been cheated declared an equitable lien on the lands.—Merrill v. Allen, 38 Mich. 487.

¶ 762. Where the transactions stated in the bill, by which certain notes were obtained, presented a case of fraud, although, from the case made, it was doubtful whether the complainant could defend successfully the full amount of the notes, and a general demurrer was interposed, the court refused to sustain the demurrer and required the defendant to answer.—Ankrim v. Woodworth, H. 355.

¶ 763. In cases of fraud or breach of trust equity will retain jurisdiction even though a court of law might take cognizance of the matters.—McKinney v. Curtiss, 60 Mich. 611.

¶ 764. Equity is without jurisdiction of an action by one partner against his copartner and a third person to recover a sum of money of which the complainant alleges he was defrauded as the result of a conspiracy between the defendants, since his remedy at law was adequate.—Lannin v. Lynn, 184 Mich. 325.

¶ 765. A bill against a village and its trustees to reimburse complainants for money paid for village bonds which the bill alleges were issued through fraud, and calling for a money judgment, will not lie, the remedy at law being adequate.—Mack v. Village of Frankfort, 123 Mich. 421.

¶ 766. When property is obtained by fraud or undue influence, the injured person may proceed in equity for an accounting.—Powell v. Pennock, 181 Mich. 588.

Averments of fraud or concealment in chancery bill to anticipate plea of limitations, see also Equity § 89.

Bills to rescind and cancel, see Rescission, VI.

Bills to establish trusts arising out of fraud, see Trusts, XII.

¶ 767. Where an act, alleged in the bill to have been done, does not of itself import a fraud, a fraudulent intent must be charged; but no such averment is requisite where from the statement of facts fraud is plainly to be inferred.—Hale v. Chandler, 3 Mich. 531.

¶ 768. The circumstances which tend to establish fraud need not be detailed in the bill. It is sufficient if the facts which constitute the fraud are set forth with an averment of the injurious result; and a detail of the circumstances which tend to establish a dishonest intent in defendant's action is more properly left to the evidence.—Tong v. Marvin, 15 Mich. 60; Hubbard v. McNaughton, 43 Mich. 220.

¶ 769. In a bill all the details of an alleged fraud need not be set out but the substance of the transaction and its results must be alleged.—McMahon v. Rooney, 93 Mich. 390.

¶ 770. One who complains of fraud need only set forth in his bill the substance of the transaction and the result; evidence that the mode of consummating the fraud varied in some respects from the manner charged is no reason for denying relief.—Merrill v. Allen, 38 Mich. 487.

¶ 771. Where a bill is grounded on fraudulent intent, technical formality in its averment will not be exacted, in the absence of demurrer, if the complainant's substantial rights appear and the grounds of equitable relief are stated. Nor will a demurrer make any difference unless it is brought to a hearing or relied on upon the argument.—Reeg v. Burnham, 55 Mich. 39.

¶ 772. An allegation in a bill that complainants had been induced to purchase on representations by the seller which were untrue, there being no charge of actual fraud, is not sufficient to bring the action within the jurisdiction of equity.—Linn v. Gunn, 56 Mich. 447.

¶ 773. A bill charged fraud on the part of defendant vendee in representing to complainant that a certain strip of land was a part of the land sold, and stated that he relied on the representations made and was thereby induced to forego any examination of the records, fully believing from such representations that the deed of the property executed and delivered to him contained all the lands lying between the corners, lines, courses, and distances pointed out and shown him by defendants; that immediately on discovering the fraud he rescinded and tendered a reconveyance, with demand for return of the purchase price and the money he had honestly invested in improving the property. Held, the bill was not demurrable for failure to state a case of actionable fraud.—Laubengayer v. Rohde, 167 Mich. 605.

¶ 774. A bill by a life insurance company to cancel certain policies on the ground of fraud, was dismissed upon demurrer, where it was alleged that the policies were merely held for inspection and were never accepted; that no premium was ever paid and no credit or extension was given, and that the necessary revenue stamps were not attached and canceled until after the insured's death; such allegations not of themselves showing fraud.—Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Amos, 136 Mich. 210.

¶ 775. A complainant in a bill to set aside a probate sale of land to pay a claim allowed against an estate alleged that the claim was fraudulent, and its allowance was obtained by perjured evidence. Held, the allegations of fraud were too indefinite and general.—Andrews v. Osborn, 159 Mich. 77.

¶ 776. In an action of ejectment it cannot be shown as an equitable defense that the title of the plaintiff is based on a deed the delivery of which was surreptitiously obtained, as the deed is voidable for the fraud, but not void, and cannot be questioned in an action at law.—Harrett v. Kinney, 44 Mich. 457.

§ 98. Pleading fraud as defense; general issue.

Sufficiency of issues on contract to present fraud as defense, see also Contracts § 297.

Pleading fraud in assessment as answer to petition to sell for taxes, see Taxes, XI, A.

general issue without notice.—Miller v. Finley, 26 Mich. 249.

¶ 778. Testimony of misrepresentation and fraud in procuring the note sued on is inadmissible under a plea of the general issue with notice merely that no consideration was given for the note.—McCabe v. Caner, 68 Mich. 182.

¶ 780. The defense of fraudulent misrepresentations is as available under a notice of special defense, stating the falsity of the representations and that the plaintiff thereby deceived the defendant in the purchase, as under a notice stating in addition precisely and technically that the plaintiff knew the representations to be false when he made them; an allegation of a scienter is unnecessary.—Browne v. Moore, 32 Mich. 254.

¶ 781. Evidence of fraudulent representations was inadmissible in defense in assumpsit on a bond, where defendants' notice failed to set forth plainly the facts upon which such defense is based, as provided in Cir. Ct. Rule 7, subd. c., and contained no statement of any particular representation.—Stauber v. Ellett, 140 Mich. 271.

¶ 782. Averments in a notice of special defense attached to a plea of the general issue, that plaintiff and certain named associates had procured the organization of a corporation "for the pretended purpose of manufacturing hog cholera medicine" and that the stock issued by such corporation was of no value, warrant the introduction of testimony tending to prove fraud in the formation of such corporation.—Smith v. McDonald, 139 Mich. 225.

¶ 783. A notice of special defense attached to a plea of the general issue which sets up in detail representations of plaintiff that he had investigated certain stock and was willing to buy it at $150, that such representations were false and fraudulent, and intended to deceive defendant and did result in his deception is sufficient to warrant introduction of evidence to show fraud.—Smith v. McDonald, 139 Mich. 225.

FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.

TREATS of the statutes corresponding to the Statute of Frauds of England (Stat. 29 Car. II, c. 3), by which a writing or a payment of part or a partial delivery is required to make a contract enforceable, and by which a deed is required for the transfer of interest in lands; also of the effect of the statutes and of noncompliance with them and of the pleading and proof of compliance or noncompliance. It excludes the offer and acceptance of contracts and their operation and effect (see Contracts; Sales), the effect and construction of deeds (see Deeds), and the use of documents as evidence (see Evidence).

Necessity of writing to evidence advancement of share in estate, see Descent § 27.
Necessity that negotiable instrument be in writing, see Negotiable Instruments, I.
Necessity of writing to create a trust, see Trusts, III.
Necessity that will be in writing, see Wills IV, A.
Necessity of writing of new promise to take contract out of limitations, see Jud. Act, chap. IX, § 21; Comp. L. 1915, § 12331.

Requisites and sufficiency of writing, see post § 87.
Operation and effect of statute, see post, III.
Recovery for services rendered under parol contract of employment for term of years see post § 126.
Leases for more than one year, see also post § 67.
Questions of law and fact, see post § 155.
Performance of contracts, in general, see Contracts, VII.
Provisions of the statute, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11981, ¶ 1.

¶ 1. An oral agreement by A. to pay a specified sum to B. if the latter will perform certain services for C., extending over a period of more than one year, is void under the statute of frauds.—Bristol v. Sutton, 115 Mich. 365.

¶ 2. An oral contract of employment for three years is within the statute of frauds as one not to be performed within a year. —Smith v. Chase & Baker Piano Mfg. Co., 175 Mich. 371.

¶ 3. A contract whereby A., fifteen years old, is to work for B. until he, A., comes of age, B. to supply schooling in the winter and clothing, and at the end of the service certain articles of personalty, is void under the statute.—Burroughs v. Morse, 48 Mich. 520.

¶ 4. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 9515, subd. 1, an oral contract whereby one party delivers sheep to be returned double in number in four years is wholly within the statute of frauds.—Dietrich v. Hoefelmeir, 128 Mich. 145.

¶ 5. A contract that in consideration of the plaintiff's procuring the defendant to be admitted as a partner, having a certain interest in a joint venture and in the business to be carried on and the profits to be made by it, the latter would at the end of three years pay whatever the business as then developed would show that interest to have been fairly worth when the contract was entered into, is within the statute (Comp. L. 1871, § 4698, How. St., subd. 2).—Whipple v. Parker, 29 Mich. 369.

¶ 6. An agreement to rent a telephone for the term of three years at the stipulated rental is within the statute of frauds.—Co-operative Tel. Co. v. Katus, 140 Mich. 367.

¶ 7. An executed oral agreement for the sale of the good-will of one's professional practice is not void under the statute as one not to be performed within a year. When the practice is transferred, paid for and entered upon, the parties have done what they could to make the transaction complete, even if the purchaser does not, within the year, reap all the benefits he expects from it.—Doty v. Martin, 32 Mich. 462.

¶ 8. A contract to insert an advertisement for a period of one year does not come within the statute of frauds and need not be in writing.—Mail & Express Co. v. Wood, 140 Mich. 505.

¶ 9. The statute of frauds does not apply to contracts the terms of which are such as to leave it uncertain whether they may or may not be performed within a year.—Barton v. Gray, 57 Mich. 622.

¶ 10. Where it is possible that a contract may be performed within the year, although it may run over the year, it is not within the statute of frauds.—Robinson v. Western U. Tel. Co., 169 Mich. 503.

¶ 12. The provision of the statute of frauds that every agreement that, by its terms, is not to be performed within one year from the making thereof shall be void unless in writing, is not applicable to a contract which may, by any possibility, be performed within the year, although the parties may have intended that it should, and it does in fact, extend over a longer period. So held where a daughter orally agreed to pay for the care of her aged father, and to allow the person furnishing the support to occupy lands belonging to her until the services should be paid for.—Smalley v. Mitchell, 110 Mich. 650.

¶ 13. A merchant's parol promise to supply a customer, on specified terms, with what goods he may want, is not within the provision of the statute of frauds declaring void every oral agreement that, by its terms, is not to be performed within one year from the making.—Durgin v. Smith, 115 Mich. 239.

¶ 15. An agreement to build a side track to the plaintiff's warehouse upon his moving and remodeling it is not within the statute of frauds as it may be performed within a year.—Thomas v. South Haven & Eastern Railroad Co., 138 Mich. 50.

¶ 16. Where one promised to pay for services rendered, improvements made, etc., out of his estate after his death, the promise was not within the statute, for at the time of its making it was possible that it might be performed within a year.—Sword v. Keith, 31 Mich. 247.

¶ 17. A contract by a railroad company to furnish permanent employment for an injured brakeman as long as satisfactory is not within the statute of frauds; since it may be performed within a year.—Sax v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 125 Mich. 252.

¶ 18. Where, by the terms of a logging contract, performance thereof may be demanded within a year from the making thereof, such contract is not within the statute of frauds.—Herron v. Raupp, 156 Mich. 162.

¶ 19. The statute of frauds, Comp. L. 1897, § 9515, does not apply to a contract of employment as captain of a tug made at the close of one season's work on November 14th, for the next season of navigation, although the general accepted meaning and also the custom is, that the "season of navigation" begins April 1st and ends December 5th, where there was evidence that the previous season of that tug ended on November 13th.—De Land v. Hall, 134 Mich. 381.

§ 4. Contract to be performed one year from future date.

Leases for one year to commence at future date, see post § 69.
Agreement to make a lease for a year from future date, see post § 71.
Memorandum of contract of employment for a year from future date, see post § 87.

¶ 20. A parol contract of hiring for a term of one year, to begin at a future day, is within the statute of frauds and void.—Carroll v. Palmer Mfg. Co., 181 Mich. 280.

¶ 21. An oral contract to employ one at $1,000 a year is within the statute of frauds and hence unenforceable where the testimony of the plaintiff is that there was but one conversation and that occurred several days before he was to begin his work.—Davis v. Michigan Mut. Life Ins. Co., 127 Mich. 559.

Extension of time for performance of contracts, in general, see Contracts, VII.
Inefficacy of parol agreement to modify earlier agreement if not performable within a year, see also Contracts ¶ 1067.
Parol extension of lease, see post ¶ 246.

¶ 22. An unwritten contract to be performed within a year is not made void, under the statute of frauds, by parol extension from time to time for periods of less than a year.—Donovan v. Richmond, 61 Mich. 467.

¶ 23. A contract to cut, haul and deliver afloat in a certain stream all the logs that can be cut from specified lands "at the rate of two million feet, board measure, every winter, and as much more as the owners of said timber shall desire," is not one by the terms whereof performance cannot be made within one year; and an agreement extending the time of the annual cutting from year to year need not be in writing.—Barton v. Gray, 48 Mich. 164; Barton v. Gray, 57 Mich. 622.

¶ 24. The statute does not defeat a contract made originally for a year's service and allowed by the parties to run on from year to year thereafter.—Sines v. Superintendents of the Poor for Wayne County, 58 Mich. 503.

B. AGREEMENTS TO ANSWER FOR ANOTHER.

Promise by executor or administrator to answer personally, see post I, D.
Representations as to credit of another, see post I, H.
Requisites and sufficiency of writing, see post § 86.
Void oral promise to pay debt of another as consideration for subsequent promise, see post § 128.
Parol evidence to aid written agreement to answer for another, see post § 153.
Questions of law and fact as to agreement to answer for another, see post § 155.
Necessity of writing to extend chattel mortgage to cover debts of another, see Chattel Mortgages ¶ 98.
Provisions of the statute, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11981, ¶ 2.

¶ 25. The statute of frauds applies only to promises that are in the nature of guaranties for some original or primary obligation to be performed by another.—Gibbs v. Blanchard, 15 Mich. 292.

¶ 27. The provision of the statute of frauds (Comp. L. 1897, § 9515) that "every special promise to answer for the debt, default, or misdoings of another person" must be in writing, has no application to an agreement between the trustee and preferred creditor under a trust mortgage, with another trustee that if the latter accepted the trust, the bank of which he was president should share equally in the trust funds.—Wolff v. Alpena Nat. Bank, 131 Mich. 634.

¶ 29. The statute of frauds does not apply where plaintiff, suing for the price of logs sold by another to defendant was to be paid direct by the buyer, though plaintiff claimed to have loaned money to the seller which was to be repaid direct by the buyer on such purchases, where the relations of plaintiff and the seller were such that the jury could find that the nominal seller was plaintiff's agent.—Colburn v. I. Stephenson Co., 133 Mich. 437.

¶ 30. A promise to the holder of another's promissory note to pay it at maturity is one which is collateral to such note, and is within the statute.—Halsted v. Francis, 31 Mich. 113.

¶ 31. In an action against the majority stockholder of a corporation for extra services claimed to have been rendered in the performance of a contract with such stockholder defendant cannot claim that such extras having been for the benefit of the corporation the implied agreement to reimburse plaintiff was within the statute of frauds.—Hapke v. Davidson, 180 Mich. 138.

¶ 32. It is not a promise to answer for the debt of another for one, who has given the sheriff a receipt for goods taken on execution, to say when the goods are demanded that he will pay the execution and keep the goods; where the action sounds in trover for nondelivery of the goods for the amount of the execution as damages, since such action is not on the statement as a promise but on the receipt and duty to redeliver.—Bowen v. Culp, 36 Mich. 224.

Effect of novation generally, see Novation.

¶ 33. The statute of frauds does not apply to an agreement to pay the debt of a third person where, as part of the agreement, such person is discharged from his original indebtedness.—Mulcrone v. American Lumber Co., 55 Mich. 622.

¶ 34. The oral promise of a tenant of a mortgagor to pay rent to the mortgagee, to be applied on the mortgage, is void as a promise to answer for the debt of another, if the mortgagee has not released the mortgagor.—Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 Mich. 351.

¶ 35. A mere oral promise to pay another's debt, without any understanding with the latter or any independent contract for the promisor's account, the original debt being kept alive, is void.—Gower v. Stuart, 40 Mich. 747.

¶ 36. An oral promise by A. to pay B. the amount of an account which B. holds against C., there being no agreement between all three that A. should be substituted as the debtor and C. discharged, is void, as a promise to answer for the debt of another.—Pfaff v. Cummings, 67 Mich. 143.

¶ 37. Where A. orally promises B. to pay him for such goods as he may furnish C., the promise is not so taken out of the statute as to make A. liable unless B. has thereupon absolutely discharged C. from liability, and looks only to A. for payment; B. cannot hold each liable severally at his option.—Welch v. Marvin, 36 Mich. 59.

¶ 38. The provision requiring written agreement to bind one for another's debt, does not apply to dealings between plaintiff and a new firm whereby his account for services to the old firm was carried into account of its successor, and was finally paid by applying moneys received from the latter, leaving a balance due for subsequent services.—Armitage v. Saunders, 94 Mich. 482.

¶ 40. A promise to pay the debt of another in liquidation of the party's own debt constituted a novation and the statute of frauds had no application.—Martin v. Curtis, 119 Mich. 169.

¶ 41. A firm of lumber dealers made a contract with a firm of manufacturers whereby the latter were to convert the timber on certain premises into shingles and siding. The manufacturers made an independent contract with a logger to cut the timber and haul it to the mill; but as they were slow in making payment the logger went to the dealers for payment, and they orally agreed to pay him on orders from the manufacturers. Several payments were made in this way, but when the logger tried to obtain a final settlement they refused to pay him the balance, and he brought suit on the agreement. Held, that it could not be maintained. There was no novation except so far as the orders were actually given; and the oral agreement was a promise to pay another's debt.—Preston v. Young, 46 Mich. 103.

¶ 43. One is not collaterally liable as guarantor or surety where he has not made a written agreement.—Ingersoll v. Baker, 41 Mich. 48.

¶ 44. A contractor having abandoned the building he was erecting resumed work and did certain extra labor on the promise of defendant—a third person—to pay him. But the evidence showed that he still looked to the original debtor for payment, and to defendant only as guarantor; and the promise of defendant was held within the statute.—Bresler v. Pendell, 12 Mich. 224.

¶ 45. A mortgagee's oral promise to indemnify a third person from loss if he will become cosurety with him in a bond given by the mortgagor on replevying the mortgaged chattels from attaching creditors of the mortgagor's vendor who attack the sale as fraudulent, is an original undertaking not within the statute.—Boyer v. Soules, 105 Mich. 31.

¶ 46. An oral agreement whereby partners buy out the interest of a copartner, and agree in consideration of his surrender to them of his interest to indemnify him against the partnership debts, is not within the statute.—Bonebright v. Pease, 3 Mich. 318.

Parol consent of indorser to alteration of paper, see Negotiable Instruments.

Validity and effect of parol acceptance of draft or bill of exchange, see Negotiable Instruments, VI.

¶ 47. Where the guaranty of another's debt is merely incidental to a principal contract made by the guarantor himself on his own account, it is then regarded as in effect a promise to pay his own debt, and it need not, therefore, be in writing.—Huntington v. Wellington, 12 Mich. 10.

¶ 48. The statute was held not applicable to a parol guaranty that certain notes sold by defendant to plaintiffs were good and collectible and the makers responsible; that the maker of a certain mortgage sold at the same time was responsible; that the land mortgaged was ample security, and the title perfect and unincumbered.—Huntington v. Wellington, 12 Mich. 10.

¶ 49. A. is bound by his oral guaranty that a note offered by B. as part of the purchase price of a farm that C. is selling to B. is as good as gold or as good as money; since this is not a guaranty that the note is collectible.—Taylor v. Soper, 53 Mich. 96.

¶ 50. A town treasurer sold a pump on a tax levy, and the purchaser sold it to third parties, who claimed that the treasurer promised verbally, and without receiving any consideration, to be responsible for the title. Held, that the promise was a collateral undertaking involving no liability until the failure of the latter contract, under which a warranty of title was implied by rules of law.—In re Tozer's Estate, 46 Mich. 299.

¶ 52. An agreement between an employer and an employee whereby the employer agrees to pay the employee's board which agreement is known and acted upon by the party furnishing the board is not within the statute of frauds.—Stevenson v. Sterling, 138 Mich. 300.

¶ 53. The statute does not avoid an oral contract whereby one who claimed to have an interest in a patent under which he was about to organize a company to deal in rights promised another that if he would become a member, subscribe for shares, and give his promissory note therefor, the shares would cost him nothing, and as soon as the company should be organized, another man should be found to take the shares off his hands and pay him the amount of his note, and that he should be put to no expense on account of the shares and note.—Green v. Brookins, 23 Mich. 48.

¶ 54. An oral agreement made between two persons, at or before the organization of a corporation, to share the profits or losses of the business, is not invalid under the statute of frauds as an agreement not in writing to answer for the debt of another, but is valid as an agreement to answer for the contracting party's own debt.—Lowitz v. Kimmerle, 221 Fed. 857. Writ of certiorari denied 238 U. S. 639, 59 L. ed. 1501, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 901.

Parol agreement to assume partnership debts, see ante ¶¶ 38, 46.

¶ 55. The statute does not apply to an understanding by which the dealings of individual partners with another firm shall be treated as a matter of account between the two firms in their mutual dealings; purchases and sales made on the faith and in strict pursuance of it can be considered as original transactions on the part of the members of the firm charged, who may bind themselves by such an agreement if no rule of law or policy or other disability prevents.—Davis v. Dodge, 30 Mich. 267.

¶ 56. An oral promise to pay the debt of a partner incurred in his individual capacity made when the promisee gave the promisor a receipt for payment for services rendered the partnership is within the statute of frauds where there is nothing to indicate that the promise had for its object a benefit accruing immediately to the promisor, the partner has not been discharged from the debt, and it has not become an obligation of the partnership.—Smith v. Sheridan, 175 Mich. 391.

¶ 57. A corporation's liability for money lent to its president upon his own credit is collateral if it exists at all, and is not enforceable unless supported by the corporation's written promise, duly signed.—Baumann v. Manistee Salt & Lumber Co., 94 Mich. 363.

See also ante § 6.

¶ 58. An arrangement by which A. is to cash for B. orders drawn on B. by B.'s contractor in payment of the contractor's employees, and B. was to reimburse A. for the moneys so advanced by him, is an original and direct, not a secondary or collateral, undertaking, and is not within the statute.—Comstock v. Norton, 36 Mich. 277.

¶ 59. A.'s promise to B. at C.'s request to pay out of a fund which should come into A.'s hands belonging to C. the amount of C.'s debt to B. is an original promise not within the statute.—Mitts v. McMorran, 64 Mich. 664.

¶ 60. Where a contract has been assigned as security for advances agreed to be made in aid of its performance, a promise made at the assignor's request by the assignee, to a mechanic, to pay the latter out of the surplus received the amount due him from the assignor for work on the contract, is an original promise not within the statute of frauds.—Mitts v. McMorran, 85 Mich. 94.

¶ 61. Where parties are engaged in a joint undertaking to purchase logs and manufacture lumber, a promise by one whose duty it is to make advances to pay a laborer employed by the other is not a promise to answer for another's debt or default but is a promise to pay his own debt.—Dumanoise v. Townsend, 80 Mich. 302.

¶ 62. The statute of frauds does not cover the oral promise of the sureties on the bond of a public contractor, given to secure the payment of labor and material claims, to repay to a third person the money realized from the discount of the contractor's note on the strength of such third person's indorsement, which money the sureties receive and agree to apply in payment of said claims.—Sweet v. Colleton, 96 Mich. 391.

¶ 63. The statute does not require a writing of an agreement between attorney and client that the former shall prosecute the latter's suit and pay all costs, receiving half the recovery if successful.—Wildey v. Crane, 69 Mich. 17.

¶ 64. An oral promise to repay money furnished to a third party solely upon the credit of the promisor, is not within the statute of frauds.—Ford v. McLane, 131 Mich. 371.

¶ 65. An original promise to pay the existing debt of a third party, where based upon a present consideration, is not within the statute of frauds.—Bennett v. Knowles, 111 Mich. 226.

¶ 66. The statute of frauds does not apply to sales made entirely upon the credit of a third person, with his knowledge of such fact, and with the expectation that he would pay for the goods.—Hagadorn v. Stronach Lumber Co., 81 Mich. 56.

¶ 67. A writing is not necessary on a promise to pay for goods furnished to another, where it was made to induce delivery after credit to such other had been refused.—Michigan Slate Co. v. Iron Range & H. R. Co., 101 Mich. 14.

¶ 68. A contract by which A. was to erect a building for B. provided that if A. failed to furnish material B. could supply it and deduct its cost from the money due A. C., after furnishing material on A.'s credit, refused to do so longer, and B. agreed to make payments for material directly to C. Held, that this agreement was not within the statute as a promise to pay another's debt.—Bice v. Marquette Opera House Building Co., 96 Mich. 24.

See also ante § 10.
Necessity and sufficiency of consideration to support contracts generally, see Contracts, V.

¶ 69. When the owner of negotiable paper sells it and accompanies the sale by a guaranty, his undertaking, being founded on a new consideration inuring to his own benefit, is an original one and is not within the statute.—Jones v. Palmer, 1 D. 379; Thomas v. Dodge, 8 Mich. 51.

¶ 70. A promise by a debtor, who by means of fraudulent representations has induced the creditor to accept as part payment of his claim a note and mortgage owned by the debtor, that if the creditor fails to collect the note he (the debtor) will pay the creditor the amount of the same, is not within the statute of frauds since the benefit of the promise accrues immediately to the promisor.—Bryant v. Rich's Estate, 104 Mich. 124.

¶ 71. A parol agreement to pay the debt of a third person is not void under the statute of frauds where there is a consideration passing to the promisor.—Durgin v. Smith, 115 Mich. 239.

¶ 72. One may make a valid oral promise to pay another's debt without releasing the original debtor by payment, if the consideration does not move to the original debtor alone. The promise cannot be said to be within the statute merely because the debt will remain that of the original promisor.—McLaughlin v. Austin, 104 Mich. 489.

¶ 73. A promise to become a cosigner with the promisee of a note of third persons and to pay the same at maturity is not a promise to pay the debt of another within the statute of frauds, where the purpose of giving the note is to borrow money which is to go into such promisor's hands, though the ultimate purpose was to make use of the money to aid one of the third persons who were first signers of the note, and for which such promisor was to obtain security in his own name and for his own benefit as for an advance made by him personally.—Potter v. Brown, 35 Mich. 274.

¶ 74. The statute does not apply to a promise to make payments on the debt of another of sums which the promisor should become liable to pay to the debtor for services to be performed by the latter for him, there being a consideration moving to him which was the inducement for making the promise.—Calkins v. Chandler, 36 Mich. 320.

¶ 75. An oral promise by an indorser of a note to the bank holding it, that if the bank would send the note to said indorser he would deposit its value to the credit of the bank with its correspondent bank in another city, is void under the statute of frauds unless it is shown that the note was actually delivered pursuant to such promise.—Crawford v. Steel, 137 Mich. 610.

¶ 76. Defendant orally promised a debtor of plaintiff to pay the debt on condition that the debtor would relinquish his tenancy of plaintiff's farm to defendant and deliver defendant a certain cow. Later while the debtor was leaving the farm and to prevent any opposition on the part of the plaintiff thereto, defendant promised plaintiff to pay the debtor's obligation, but said nothing of the other conditions. Held that plaintiff not having discharged the debtor, the promise, not being upon any consideration moving from plaintiff, was void by the statute.—Brown v. Hazen, 11 Mich. 219.

¶ 77. One claiming an interest in certain goods held by another who was his debtor agreed not to attach them in consideration of the oral promise by another creditor who proposed to attach that he would pay his debt. Held, that this promise to pay was within the statute and void.—Waldo v. Simonson, 18 Mich. 345.

¶ 79. The holders of a chattel mortgage upon a sawmill owned by M. agreed orally with M. and with certain persons for whom M. was then engaged in sawing lumber, that, in consideration of an extension of the time of payment of the mortgage, M. should allow customers of his to retain the sum of fifty cents per thousand feet of all lumber thereafter sawed by M. for them, and that they should pay that sum to the holders of the mortgage. Held, that the promise was valid and not within the statute of frauds; and the persons for whom the sawing was done were bound to withhold from M. such proportion of their sawbill as they had thus agreed to pay to the holders of the mortgage, and were liable to the latter for the amount thereof whether they did or not so withhold it.—Calkins v. Chandler, 36 Mich. 320.

¶ 80. B. hired out to V. to draw wood for D., but fearing that he would not get his pay went to D. and told him he would draw no more unless he could be assured of getting it. D. told him to go ahead and he would pay him and take it out of V. Whether this, instead of being a novation, was not void as a promise to pay another's debt, and whether Calkins v. Chandler, 36 Mich. 320, is not vitally distinguishable from it in that the arrangement there sustained was concurred in by the intermediate party whose debt was to be paid, quære.—Bates v. Donnelly, 57 Mich. 521.

¶ 81. A., who was indebted both to B. and to C., absconded, leaving property in B.'s hands, and B., on being informed that C. would attach the property, promised orally to pay C.'s claim. Held, that such promise was without any consideration that could inure to B., and was within the statute, whether B. appropriated the property to his own use or not.—Stewart v. Jerome, 71 Mich. 201.

¶ 82. Where one employed by another to do certain work has quit work because of nonpayment, a third person's promise in consideration of the benefits to the promisor, and not to secure credit for the employer, to pay him if he will complete the work is not within the statute of frauds.—Mitchell v. Beck, 88 Mich. 342.

¶ 83. When M. has agreed with J. to do the plumbing for a house to be built by J. for A., and where J. has abandoned his contract with A. the latter's oral agreement with M. to pay him for the work agreed by him to be done for J., if M. will finish said work and make certain changes at an additional price, is valid.—McLaughlin v. Austin, 104 Mich. 489.

¶ 84. Since there cannot be two original promises at the same time, it is essential that an owner's promise to pay a subcontractor for work must have been made in view of an abandonment of an earlier contract with the principal contractor or upon refusal to do the work under it, both promises having been oral.—Wilhelm v. Voss, 118 Mich. 106.

¶ 85. An oral promise to pay the debt of another is not exempted from the operation of the statute by reason of its consideration being the release of property to the original debtor. It remains a collateral promise still. —Corkins v. Collins, 16 Mich. 478.

§ 22. Promise to pay for services inuring to another.

Promise of personal representative to answer personally for services rendered the estate, see post § 29.

Oral promise to pay for services rendered at request of agent lacking authority, see Agency ¶ 301.

¶ 86. A parol promise by a railroad company to pay the obligations of a contractor to his laborers is void.—Bottomley v. Port Huron & N. W. R. Co., 44 Mich. 542.

¶ 87. Where A., for whom B. has contracted to do work, promises C., who has been employed by B. to do part of the work, to keep back enough of B.'s money to pay him, such promise is void, being an oral agreement to answer for another's debt or default. —Dupuis v. Interior Construction & Imp. Co., 88 Mich. 103.

¶ 88. Where A. let B. take a yoke of oxen to use in clearing land for A.'s wife, and with the understanding that B. should own the oxen when he had done $100 worth of clearing, such arrangement was not within the statute of frauds.—Sutherland v. Carter, 52 Mich. 151.

¶ 89. A physician who has rendered professional services to a man's father and has then been told by the man to charge to him the bill and also any bill for subsequent services, cannot, by prefixing the man's first initial to the charge previously made in the physician's account book to the father by his surname, make the man liable for services rendered prior to his promise, which was an unwritten agreement to pay another's debt. —Chappell v. Barkley, 90 Mich. 35.

¶ 90. An alleged agreement by a decedent to pay the claimant for work to be performed by him upon decedent's farm for claimant's father, who was the lessee, was void under the statute of frauds.—Bristol v. Sutton, 119 Mich. 693.

¶ 91. Where defendant received a telegram addressed to his wife announcing the death of her father, and orally authorized the telegraph operator to have the body shipped at his expense, his promise was not one to pay the debt of another, and he is primarily liable, even though the operator sent the telegram in the wife's name and the body was shipped to her.—Hillman v. Hulett, 149 Mich. 289.

See also ante § 18, ¶ 52.

Promise of husband or wife to pay for goods furnished the other, see post § 26.

¶ 92. A promise to the vendor to pay for such goods as may be furnished to a third person is original and not collateral, and is not within the statute as a promise to pay another's debt.—Larson v. Jensen, 53 Mich. 427; Morris v. Osterhout, 55 Mich. 262.

¶ 93. An oral promise made by the purchaser of a stock of goods to a creditor of the vendor to pay the latter's indebtedness is void under the statute of frauds.—Dean v. Ellis, 108 Mich. 240.

¶ 94. A collateral promise to pay for goods furnished another is void under the statute of frauds unless in writing and signed by the person promising or by his duly authorized agent.—Ruppe v. Edwards, 52 Mich. 411.

¶ 95. The oral promise of the president of an electric corporation, that if a lumber company which had been furnishing the corporation with slabs for fuel would continue to deliver the slabs he would see that they were paid for, is void under the statute of frauds. —Ramsdell v. Citizens' Electric Light & Power Co., 103 Mich. 89.

¶ 96. A verbal promise by an employer to a merchant that he "would see that the account was paid" and that he "would guarantee the account" for goods furnished to one logging for him is an agreement to answer for the debt of a third person and not an original promise.—Butters Salt & Lumber Co. v. Vogel, 130 Mich. 33.

¶ 97. Where goods are furnished and credit given to one person under the understanding that he shall pay for the same in orders upon another person, the latter cannot be held for the purchase price because of his oral promise, made when the orders are presented, that he will pay them in a few days, since a contract to answer for another's debt is required to be in writing.—Fuller & Rice L. & M. Co. v. Houseman, 114 Mich. 275.

Owner's oral promise to pay subcontractor for work, see ante ¶ 84.

¶ 98. An oral promise to pay for material furnished to another person on a contract made with him and not with the promisor cannot be enforced so long as the original contract remains uncanceled.—Baker v. Ingersoll, 89 Mich. 158.

¶ 99. Where defendants' superintendent stated to plaintiff that defendants would pay for any supplies furnished a lumbering jobber while working on defendants' logs, the promise is void as a promise to pay the debt of another, and not in writing.—Sherman v. Alberts, 153 Mich. 361.

¶ 100. Where a house has been built for A. by B. with materials furnished to the latter by C., if any promise by A. to pay C. for such materials can be implied from A.'s asking C. to wait on him awhile for the bill, such promise is void as within the statute of frauds.—Preston v. Zekind, 84 Mich. 641.

¶ 101. If A., for whom B. has built a house with material furnished the latter by C., asks C. to wait awhile for his bill, such implied promise on A.'s part to pay is not sufficient in law under the statute of frauds to estop him from thereafter denying the validity of the claim, even though C. refrains, because of A.'s request, from proceedings under the lien law.—Preston v. Zekind, 84 Mich. 641.

¶ 102. Where the owner of property said to one who had furnished materials to contractors that if a lien was put upon his property he would sue, and, further, that such person would get his pay though it might take some time, such language did not take the case out of the statute of frauds. It was not a promise to pay.—Fuller & Rice Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. Houseman, 117 Mich. 553.

¶ 103. In an action to recover the price of board and supplies furnished to laborers and employees of a subcontractor of the defendants, a verdict for defendants, with special findings that such subcontractor was never agent of defendants, that the agreements were made with him personally and not as agent, and that the debts sued for were incurred and the articles furnished solely on his credit and engagement, and not on account of defendants, shows that even if defendants had promised to pay the accounts their promise was within the statute of frauds, as a promise to pay the debt of another.—Barden v. Briscoe, 36 Mich. 254.

¶ 105. An oral promise to a merchant to guarantee payment for anything a third person should want in equipping a sawmill, at which he was to manufacture shingles for the promisor, is within the statute of frauds and cannot support an action by the merchant against the person making the promise where it appears that such goods were charged against such third person and the monthly statements were sent to him.—Studley v. Barth, 54 Mich. 6.

¶ 106. Where one furnishing material for a building in process of construction has agreed with mortgagees furnishing a building loan in writing, for a valuable consideration, to see that no liens are placed upon the property, his subsequent promise to pay the claim of a material man, in consideration of the latter's forbearing to enforce his lien, is binding as an original promise. The benefit of preventing a lien from going on is the consideration for the second promise.—Stephen v. Yeomans, 112 Mich. 624.

¶ 107. Where the owner of property in consideration of a material man forbearing to file a lien against his property and furnishing additional material to complete the building agrees to pay the debt owed by the defaulting contractor for materials furnished him the agreement is supported by a sufficient consideration so as to take the case out of the statute of frauds.—Monroe Lumber Co. v. Bezeau, 192 Mich. 307.

¶ 108. The purchase of goods that are to be delivered to one on the joint promise and credit of two is in legal effect, as between them and the vendor, a purchase by both, and is not within the statute.—Gibbs v. Blanchard, 15 Mich. 292.

§ 26. Promise of husband or wife to pay the other's debt.

Liability of one spouse for other's debts, see Husband and Wife.

¶ 109. A wife is not liable upon her oral promise to pay for coal previously furnished for a steamboat owned by her husband but mortgaged to her, although she knew when she made the promise that the claim for such coal was a lien upon the vessel, and although the creditor thereafter made no effort to enforce a lien where there was no express agreement that the lien should be released, and where the creditor did not know of the wife's interest in the boat.—Goodman v. Felcher, 116 Mich. 348.

¶ 110. The business of a retail trader indebted to plaintiffs for goods bought was continued by his widow, who orally promised plaintiffs to pay her husband's debt if they would sell goods to her on credit. Credit was given. Held, that this was void as a promise to pay another's debt.—Ruppe v. Peterson, 67 Mich. 437.

¶ 111. The oral promise of a widow to pay a physician's bill against her husband is void under the statute of frauds.—Buck v. Haynes's Estate, 75 Mich. 397.

¶ 112. An oral agreement of a married woman that if the seller of lumber purchased by her husband would leave such material there and would ship the balance, she would see that it was paid for, was in effect a statement that if her husband did not pay for such materials, she would, and was void under the statute of frauds, and as the act of a married woman who is sought to be made liable for the debt of her husband.—Reelman v. Grofsend, 140 Mich. 681.

¶ 113. It seems that an oral promise to execute a paper, undertaking to pay debts, in accepting a written offer of sale which stipulates that they shall be assumed, is not void under the statute of frauds.—Wagner v. Egleston, 49 Mich. 218.

¶ 114. Where a corporation which holds a note from two of its stockholders agrees to give it up in consideration that they pay a note of the corporation held by a bank, the agreement is an independent undertaking not within the statute of frauds.—Clay Lumber Co. v. Harts Branch Coal Co., 174 Mich. 613.

¶ 115. A firm of railway contractors sublet the work, reserving the right to pay off the laborers employed by the subcontractors, who assigned to the contractors all moneys due said laborers. The liability of the contractors to the laborers was limited to the amount so assigned, and to the amount due and payable to the subcontractors. The subcontractors abandoned their contract, and gave time checks to the laborers for the amount due them. The laborers sold their checks, and the contractors arranged with the purchaser, with notice that he was to release the subcontractors, to pay said checks, which were charged up in account against the subcontractors. Held, that the agreement was not within the statute of frauds.—Gleason v. Fitzgerald, 105 Mich. 516.

¶ 116. A promise by a tenant to pay the rent due for a previous tenant whose lease was taken over is a promise to pay the debt of another and void under the statute of frauds unless the circumstances show it was a valid new, and original promise.—Draggo v. West Bay City Sugar Co., 144 Mich. 195.

C. AGREEMENT UPON CONSIDERATION OF MARRIAGE.

¶ 117. An ante-nuptial parol agreement to settle property on the wife is void.—Wood v. Savage, 2 D. 316.

¶ 118. One's parol promise to give his daughter certain lands upon her marriage is doubly within the statute of frauds because it concerns land and because it is in consideration of marriage; nor does the marriage take it out of the statute.—Welch v. Whelpley, 62 Mich. 15.

¶ 119. An oral agreement to make a will in favor of a person upon consideration of marriage to such person is void under the Statute of Frauds, C. L. 1897, sec. 9515, sub. 3, How. 2nd Ed., § 11399.—Dienst v. Dienst, 175 Mich. 724.

D. PROMISE BY EXECUTOR OR ADMINISTRATOR TO ANSWER PERSONALLY.

Agreements to answer for another, see ante I, B.
Operation and effect of statute, see post III.
Provisions of the statute, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11981, ¶ 4.

¶ 120. An agreement by an administrator to pay for legal services for the estate is not within the statute of frauds, where credit is given to the administrator personally.—Meade v. Bowles, 123 Mich. 696.

E. AGREEMENT FOR COMMISSIONS ON SALE OF LAND.

Estates and interests in lands generally, see post I, G.
Contracts of agency, brokerage or factorage as contracts for sale of goods, see post § 37.
Agreement to pay agent obtaining lands a proportion of profits on sale thereof, see post § 55.
Powers and agencies to transfer or create interests in land, see post § 72.
Agreements to procure sales or conveyances from or to others, see post § 75.
Requisites and sufficiency of writing or memorandum, see post § 90.
Operation and effect of statute, see post III.
Burden of showing the sale to be within the statute, see post § 151.
Recovery for services rendered under parol contract for commissions, see post § 126.
Employment of real estate broker, see Brokers § 3.
Provisions of the statute, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11981, ¶ 5.

¶ 121. Under Pub. Acts 1913, No. 238, amending Comp. Laws 1897, § 9515, How. 2nd Ed., § 11399, every agreement for the sale of real estate on commission entered into after the law takes effect is absolutely void unless such agreement or memorandum thereof is in writing and is signed by the party to be charged or by some person by him lawfully authorized.—McGavock v. Ducharme, 192 Mich. 98.

¶ 122. Contracts coming within Pub. Acts 1913, No. 238, providing that the statute of frauds shall include every agreement, promise or contract to pay any commission for or upon the sale of any interest in real estate, are absolutely void.—Smith v. Starke, 196 Mich. 311.

¶ 123. Pub. Acts 1913, No. 238, providing that the statute of frauds shall include every agreement, promise or contract to pay any commission for or upon the sale of any interest in real estate, applies to contracts between others than those between owner and broker.—Smith v. Starke, 196 Mich. 311.

¶ 124. A contract for commissions for the sale of real estate made after the taking effect of Pub. Acts 1913, No. 238 is invalid unless in writing.—Bennett v. Denton, 194 Mich. 610.

¶ 126. An oral contract for the sale of real estate on commission is not a contract creating an interest in land or a power over it so as to necessitate that it be in writing and subscribed by the party creating such interest or power or by his authorized agent under Comp. Laws 1897, §§ 9509, 9511, How. 2nd Ed. §§ 11393, 11395.—McGavock v. Ducharme, 192 Mich. 98.

¶ 127. Pub. Acts 1913, No. 238, making void every agreement to pay any commission, etc., unless in writing has no application in an action by the contract purchasers of land against the vendor for false representations as to the value of the land.—Cox v. Holkeboer, 200 Mich. 86.

¶ 129. Compensation contracted by plaintiff, a farmer, and defendant, a real estate broker, for plaintiff to receive if he would furnish a customer for certain premises, held to be "commission" within Pub. Acts 1913, No. 238, providing that the statute of frauds shall include every agreement, promise or contract to pay any commission for or upon the sale of any interest in real estate.—Smith v. Starke, 196 Mich. 311. (Ostrander, J., dissenting.)

§ 32. Contract of purchaser to pay commission.

¶ 130. Under Pub. Acts 1913, No. 238, § 2, providing that every agreement, promise or contract to pay any commission for or upon the sale of any interest in real estate shall be void unless such agreement, contract or promise shall be in writing, a contract for the payment of a commission by the purchaser of land must be in writing.—Slocum v. Smith, 195 Mich. 281.

Leases of lands or interests therein, see post § 67.

¶ 131. A contract for commissions for the lease of real estate for a period of ten years, made before Pub. Acts 1913, No. 238, was passed, held enforceable though not in writing.—Collin v. Kittelberger, 193 Mich. 133.

F. SALE OF GOODS.

Provisions of the statute, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11835.

¶ 132. Where goods exceeding $50 in price are ordered, the vendee is not bound unless there is an acceptance in writing or some act done on the faith of the order.—Goodspeed v. The Wiard Plow Co., 45 Mich. 322.

¶ 133. There can be no recovery on an oral sale of goods exceeding $50 in value unless something has been paid or some part of the goods delivered.—Dooley v. Eilbert, 47 Mich. 615.

¶ 134. To make a sale of personal property of the value of fifty dollars or more valid, there must be a delivery, a part payment, or a writing signed by the party to be charged.—Johnson v. Morrison, 163 Mich. 322.

As to nature of contract of sale, see Sales.

¶ 135. A contract of barter is regarded as a contract of sale within the meaning of the statute of frauds.—Gorman v. Brossard, 120 Mich. 611.

¶ 136. An agreement whereby certain chattels are to be turned over by the owner in consideration of the surrender of a note given by him for the purchase price is a contract for sale, within the meaning of the statute of frauds.—Hudson v. Emmons, 107 Mich. 549.

¶ 137. An oral agreement to accept a quantity of stone lying in an alley as payment of a debt is void under the statute of frauds, where there was no payment of money which would take the transaction out of the statute and no receipt or other extinction of the debt passed and no transfer of possession of the stone.—Gorman v. Brossard, 120 Mich. 611.

¶ 138. An agreement by one to construct an article especially for or according to the plans of another, whether at an agreed price or not, although the transaction is to result in the sale of the article, is a contract for work and labor and is not within the statute of frauds, but if the article to be made and delivered is of a kind which the producer usually has for sale, in the course of his business, it is a contract for sale and must be in writing.—Ericsson Mfg. Co. v. Caille Bros. Co., 195 Mich. 545.

¶ 141. An agreement to install and connect with machinery belonging to the defendant, machines to be furnished by plaintiff and to be affixed to the freehold and become a part of the fixtures already situate upon the premises, was not a sale of goods within the meaning of the statute of frauds, and therefore the original contract between the parties need not have been in writing.—Underfeed Stoker Co. v. Detroit Salt Co., 135 Mich. 431.

¶ 142. The deceased ordered of claimant, a German manufacturer, a set of goods of special shape and style, and inscribed with the monogram of deceased. The goods were such as the claimant could not sell in its general trade. Held, the order was not within the statute of frauds since the contract was one for work and labor and not for the sale of goods.—In re Gies' Estate, 160 Mich. 502; Bauscher v. Gies, Id.

Agreements for commissions on sale of lands, see ante § 30.

Agency contracts in general, see Agency.

Brokerage or factorage contracts in general, see Brokers.

¶ 143. An agreement between a retail grocer and a commercial broker that the former shall include for the latter in his annual order for canned goods a certain amount for the broker is not a contract of bargain and sale required by the statute of frauds to be in writing where the value of the goods exceeds $50, but of agency.—Hatch v. McBrien, 83 Mich. 159.

¶ 144. An agreement to pay compensation to an agent for the sale of personal property, graduated by the price obtained from a third person on such sale, is not an agreement for the sale of chattels and is not required to be in writing.—Hamilton v. Frothingham, 59 Mich. 253.

¶ 145. A contract by which a broker agreed to find a purchaser for goods worth more than fifty dollars need not be in writing.—Obenauer v. Solomon, 151 Mich. 570.

Parol contract for sale of stock, see post ¶ 149.

Subscriptions for stock generally, see Corporations, VII.

¶ 147. The statute of frauds does not bar a recovery on a parol subscription for stock in a corporation. It is not a sale of the stock.—Peninsular Leasing Co. v. Cody, 161 Mich. 604.

¶ 148. The terms "goods, wares and merchandise," in the statute, embrace animate as well as inanimate property.—Weston v. McDowell, 20 Mich. 353.

¶ 149. A parol contract for the sale of stock already issued in an incorporated company is invalid, such stock being "goods," within the meaning of the statute of frauds (3 Comp. Laws, 1897, § 9516).—Sprague v. Hosie, 155 Mich. 30.

Modification of contracts in general, see Contracts, VIII.

¶ 150. A written contract for the sale of personalty of the value of over $50 may be modified by a subsequent oral agreement which works a release or discharge of the whole contract or obligation.—Grand Traverse Fruit & Produce Exchange v. Thomas Canning Co., 200 Mich. 95.

G. ESTATES AND INTERESTS IN LAND.

Agreements for commissions on sale of lands, see ante § 30.
Executory agreements for conveyances or interests, see post § 59.
Parol leases, see post § 67.
Parol agreements for lease, see post § 71.
Powers and agencies to transfer or create interests, see post § 72.
Parol alterations of conveyances, see post § 77.
Creation grant or surrender of estates or interests by operation of law, see post § 79.
Requisites and sufficiency of writing or of part performance, see post II, B.
Operation and effect of statute, see post III.
Parol evidence to aid the writing or identify the parties, see post § 153.
Illegality of arbitration of fee titles to land, see Arbitration § 2.
Parol building restrictions, see also Buildings § 20.
Validity of oral dedication, see Dedication §§ 1, 6, 17.
Nature and requisites of deeds or conveyances generally, see Deeds I.
Inadmissibility of oral evidence of title or ownership of lands, see Evidence § 114.
Office of execution certificate of purchase to satisfy statute of frauds, see Executions § 76.
Parol trusts in respect to lands or interests therein, see Trusts, III.
Provisions of the statute, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 11975, 11976, 11977.

¶ 151. Conveyances of land and interests therein must be by deed.—Enos v. Sutherland, 11 Mich. 538; Morrill v. Mackman, 24 Mich. 279; Hayes v. Livingston, 34 Mich. 384; Nims v. Sherman, 43 Mich. 45; Shaw v. Chambers, 48 Mich. 355.

Oral extinguishment of equitable interests, see post § 58.
Contract to procure conveyance of equity of redemption, see post § 75.
Equitable rights and titles in general, see Equity II.

¶ 153. The interest which the grantor in a conveyance of land absolute in form but intended as a security has in the premises can only be transferred at law by a written instrument.—Miner v. O'Harrow, 60 Mich. 91.

Effect of part performance of agreement for easement, see post § 105.
Nature and creation of easements in general, see Easements I.
Creation of easements by estoppel or by prescription, see Easements §§ 11-13.

¶ 154. In general an easement on the land of another cannot be created without deed.—Millerd v. Reeves, 1 Mich. 107; and see Day v. Walden, 46 Mich. 575.

¶ 155. An agreement to convey a right of way is an agreement to convey an interest in land, and must, it seems, be in writing to bind the land-owner.—Detroit, H. & I. R. Co. v. Forbes, 30 Mich. 165, 175.

¶ 156. A privilege granted for an annual compensation to flow lands for an indefinite period is void unless in writing.—Morrill v. Mackman, 24 Mich. 279.

¶ 157. Under the statute of frauds, an easement imposing a servitude upon lands of a grantor for the benefit of the estate of the grantee, cannot be assigned, granted or surrendered unless by a writing or by operation of law.—Ives v. Edison, 124 Mich. 402.

¶ 158. The right of drainage through the lands of another is an easement requiring for its enjoyment, an interest in such land, and cannot be conferred except by deed or conveyance in writing.—Schultz v. Huffman, 127 Mich. 276.

Void land contract operative as license, see post § 129.
Validity of oral license to cut standing timber given by agent without written authority, see post ¶ 260.
Nature and creation of licenses to enter land, generally, see Licenses to Enter on Land.

¶ 160. A parol license to cut and remove timber at a fixed price is valid until revoked. It is not a sale of an interest in lands, and is entirely outside of the statute of frauds.—Greeley v. Stilson, 27 Mich. 153; Spalding v. Archibald, 52 Mich. 365.

¶ 161. A parol license to enter land and cut timber is valid so far as executed before revocation, and cannot be revoked so as to undo what has been done or earned under it.—Greeley v. Stilson, 27 Mich. 153; Spalding v. Archibald, 52 Mich. 365; Wetherbee v. Green, 22 Mich. 311; Wetmore v. Neuberger, 44 Mich. 362; Sovereign v. Ortmann, 47 Mich. 181.

¶ 162. A license, being merely a permission to do some act or series of acts on the licensor's land without any permanent interest in it, may be created by parol, and will protect the licensor until revoked.—Morrill v. Mackman, 24 Mich. 279.

and removal, whether valid under the statute of frauds or not when made, are good as licenses so far as acted upon.—Haskell v. Ayres, 35 Mich. 89.

¶ 164. Where standing timber was by written contract absolutely sold to be taken off in two years by the vendee, who had fully paid therefor, subsequent parol extensions not exceeding one year each were made by the vendor, at least they amounted to a revocable license.—Williams v. Flood, 63 Mich. 487, per Champlin and Morse, JJ., Campbell, C. J., and Sherwood, J., contending that they were more and were valid waivers of a forfeiture.

Reservation of trees, see post ¶ 214.

Reservations and exceptions in general, see Deeds, III, D.

¶ 165. A parol agreement reserving crops growing on land contracted in writing to be sold is void.—Vanderkarr v. Thompson, 19 Mich. 82.

¶ 166. A parol agreement for the reservation or exception of a barn or sheds from the operation of a deed is void under the statute of frauds, and the question whether an undertaking sued on is of that character is not to be determined by the name which the parties or their witnesses give it, but by the nature and substance of the transaction.—Detroit, H. & I. R. Co. v. Forbes, 30 Mich. 165.

¶ 167. An undertaking to remove a barn and sheds situated upon a forty-acre tract in consideration of the giving of a deed of land lying fifty feet on each side of a proposed railroad route where it should cross such tract cannot be construed as an exception or reservation of the barn and sheds from the operation of the deed, in the absence of any showing of the actual location of the route of the railroad, or that it was so located as to include the ground where the barn and sheds stood, nor is such undertaking required to be in writing.—Detroit, H. & I. R. Co. v. Forbes, 30 Mich. 65.

Nature and requisites of covenants for title generally, see Covenants for Title.

¶ 169. A warranty or representation that real estate is not incumbered is not the creation, granting or surrendering or declaring of any estate, interest, etc., which the statute requires to be in writing.—Huntington v. Wellington, 12 Mich. 10.

¶ 169a. A guaranty that the maker of a certain mortgage sold by defendant to plaintiffs was responsible and able to pay is simply an undertaking that certain facts exist, and, if inserted in a deed of conveyance, would be simply a personal covenant which would not run with the land, and it need not be written as if it passed an interest in the land.—Huntington v. Wellington, 12 Mich. 10.

Executory agreements for mortgages, see post § 66.

Necessity that agent's authority to assign mortgage be written, see post § 74.

Requisites and sufficiency of writing, see post § 92.

Part performance of agreement to convey land subject to mortgage, see post § 104.

Assignment and transfer of mortgages generally, see Mortgages.

¶ 170. Mortgages, being chattel interests, may be transferred or extinguished without writing.—Cooper v. Ulmann, W. 251; Dougherty v. Randall, 3 Mich. 581; Martin v. McReynolds, 6 Mich. 70; Pease v. Warren, 29 Mich. 9; Nims v. Sherman, 43 Mich. 45.

§ 49. Reconveyance or revestment of title.

Oral extinguishment of equitable right to reconveyance, see post ¶ 186.

¶ 172. A grantee's title cannot be divested or revested in his grantor by destruction of the conveyance.—Gugins v. Van Gorder, 10 Mich. 523; Warren v. Tobey, 32 Mich. 45; Mette v. Feldman, 45 Mich. 25; Hyne v. Osborn, 62 Mich. 235.

¶ 173. Under the statute requiring a writing to transfer an interest in land, the surrender of an unrecorded deed and its subsequent destruction at the instance of the grantee, was not in effect a reconveyance of the land; particularly in the absence of evidence of a surrender of the deed by the grantor with the intention to revest the title, or of its destruction at his direction.—Tabor v. Tabor, 136 Mich. 255.

¶ 174. After a vendor in a land contract has put performance out of his power by conveying to a third person, an oral agreement to have the land conveyed to the vendor and then reconveyed to the original vendee on his paying up all the purchase money is within the statute of frauds, and cannot operate as a waiver of such vendee's right to treat the contract as rescinded and to recover the money paid.—Weaver v. Aitcheson, 65 Mich. 285.

Executory agreements for release or surrender of estates or interests, see post § 60.
Surrender of estates or interests by operation of law, see post § 79.
Letter as disclaimer of title to real estate, see Estoppel ¶ 179.

¶ 175. An interest that rests in parol may be extinguished by parol.—First Nat. Bank v. McAllister, 46 Mich. 397.

¶ 176. One cannot by mere waiver part with the legal title to land. As to waiver of the right that an execution purchaser has to demand and receive a sheriff's deed after the period for redemption has expired, quære. —Whiting v. Butler, 29 Mich. 122.

¶ 177. An agreement to surrender or release an equitable estate in fee-simple must be in writing signed by the party transferring or releasing it, and if oral it cannot be shown to alter a written contract.—McEwan v. Ortman, 34 Mich. 325.

¶ 178. A parol agreement by one remainderman in common not to claim a share of his testator's realty will not affect a vested interest in land.—Broas v. Broas, 153 Mich. 310.

¶ 179. An interest of a contract purchaser in land is such an interest in land as cannot be surrendered by parol under the statute (How. St. § 6179).—Grunow v. Salter, 118 Mich. 148.

¶ 180. Under Comp. Laws 1897, § 9509, providing that no estate in lands shall be created, granted, or surrendered unless by operation of law or by a written instrument, the interest of a purchaser under the land contract is such an interest in land as cannot be surrendered by parol.—Stewart v. McLaughlin's Estate, 126 Mich. 1.

¶ 182. Complainant and his wife deeded a remainder interest in land to defendant, who agreed in writing to pay them twenty-five dollars a month for their lifetime. Later defendant took possession of the land. Held, he could not show a verbal agreement with complainant modifying the original agreement to the effect that defendant was to work the land and to support complainant, since interests in land cannot be divested by a verbal agreement.—Herpel v. Herpel, 162 Mich. 606.

¶ 183. While Comp. L. 1897, § 9509, prohibit the selling of standing timber upon land except by a writing signed by the owner, the right to forfeit timber thus sold for failure or nonremoval within a certain time may be legally waived by parol.—Wallace v. Kelly, 148 Mich. 336.

Equitable rights and interests, see ante § 42.

¶ 185. It seems that, against the legal owner of land, equities may be extinguished otherwise than by conveyance under the statute of frauds.—Munch v. Shabel, 37 Mich. 166.

¶ 186. Inasmuch as a right resting in parol may be surrendered or extinguished by parol, one who has an equitable right to a reconveyance of land may orally relinquish it and direct the reconveyance to be made to his wife as a gift.—Crittenden v. Canfield, 87 Mich. 152.

Persons to whom statute is available, see post § 141.
Equities based on part performance of parol agreement as to partnership property, see post § 139.
Questions of law and fact as to time of entering into the agreement, see post § 156.

¶ 187. The statute of frauds is not involved where complainant seeks specific performance of an oral agreement for the reorganization of a bankrupt corporation and for a division of corporate stock between complainant, a stockholder in the bankrupt corporation and the purchaser of the assets of the bankrupt corporation, including real estate, so far as it relates to a division of stock, where complainant was legally entitled to the stock when issued and defendant has already conveyed the real estate to the corporation.—Millen v. Potter, 190 Mich. 262.

¶ 188. An agreement among promoters is within the statute where it contemplates purchase and preparation of ground and erection of buildings thereon for use as a factory and reimbursement in stock of the corporation to be formed to which it was to be devoted.—McLennan v. Boutell, 117 Mich. 544.

¶ 189. A parol contract of partnership for the purpose of dealing in timber lands is within the statute of frauds and therefore void, though it contemplates numerous tracts. —Nester v. Sullivan, 147 Mich. 493.

¶ 190. An oral agreement to form a copartnership for the purchase of timber land from which the manufacture and sale of lumber is to be carried on is within the statute of frauds.—Raub v. Smith, 61 Mich. 543.

¶ 191. An agreement whereby plaintiff is to purchase, for himself and defendant, land whereon a plaster-bed is located, the title to be in the names of both parties, and whereby both are to form a partnership to work the plaster, is within the statute.—Brosnan v. McKee, 63 Mich. 454.

Executory agreements for interests in lands generally, see post § 59.

¶ 192. The statute does not apply to a bargain between principal and agent whereby the latter is to be paid for his services in obtaining lands a certain proportion of the profits on the sale thereof.—Carr v. Leavitt, 54 Mich. 540.

¶ 193. An agreement whereby one party was to look up lands to be purchased, the profits to be shared equally after a sale, there being no express agreement as to whose names should appear as grantees in the purchase deeds, is not within the statute of frauds.—Davis v. Gerber, 69 Mich. 246.

¶ 194. Where the holder of an option on pine land agrees orally with another person to give him the right to purchase, each to pay half the expense incurred in examining the timber, and such other person if he purchases to pay one-third of the profits, the agreement is not void under the statute of frauds.—Petrie v. Torrent, 88 Mich. 43.

¶ 197. An agreement between one making an application for a patent to land and two other persons, who furnished the purchase money, and to whom the patent was issued, whereby the applicant was to have an undivided interest in the land for his services in exploring the land for mining purposes, is invalid where not in writing, under How. St. § 6179, providing that no trust or power over or concerning lands shall be created, unless in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged or his authorized agent.—Crawford v. Moore, 28 Fed. 824, aff'd 130 U. S. 122, 32 L. ed. 878, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 447.

¶ 198. Real estate was devised in trust to be sold under power of attorney in a will, and the balance of the proceeds from the sale of the land, was void under the statute paid to complainant. An absolute deed was made conveying the land, and complainant alleges an oral agreement between the grantee and herself with reference to her interest in the land. Held, that alleged agreement, being made several years before the alleged trust fund was created by the subsequent sale of the land, was void under the statute of frauds.—Longe v. Kinney, 171 Mich. 312.

¶ 199. Where the heirs at law of a deceased person enter into a contract with the widow of decedent for the purchase of her dower interest in land, an oral agreement among such heirs as to the proportionate amount of the contract price to be paid by each of them is not within the statute of frauds.—Stevens v. Jackson, 180 Mich. 131.

¶ 200. Defendant held two mortgages on land. Plaintiff held a third mortgage, and bought in the equity of redemption. Defendant foreclosed. Before the time for redemption expired, plaintiff and defendant made an oral agreement by which each was to try to sell the land, and the proceeds were to be divided according to their respective equities. Upon the maturing of his foreclosure title defendant went into possession, and seven years afterwards sold the land. Held, that the oral agreement to make the sale and divide the proceeds was void under the statute of frauds.—Mitchell v. Bilderback, 159 Mich. 483.

Agreements as to character of fixture and right to remove generally, see Fixtures, III.

Inefficacy of verbal agreement to change fixtures into movables, see also Fixtures ¶ 60.

¶ 201. A house built by one who holds lands under a contract of purchase, being part of the realty, an oral agreement that it may be levied upon by virtue of an execution against chattels is void.—Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 Mich. 351.

¶ 202. The provision as to contracts for the sale of an interest in lands has no application to an instrument in so far as it affects a building which never in fact became a part of the realty.—Osborn v. Potter, 101 Mich. 300.

Settlement of boundaries by estoppel, see post ¶ 145.
Parol agreements as to boundaries generally, see Boundaries §§ 2-8.
Agreements as to fencing generally, see Fences.

¶ 203. An agreement to build a fence does not relate to an interest in lands.—Dodder v. Snyder, 110 Mich. 69.

¶ 205. Adjoining owners orally agreed that one of them should keep up a division fence, but should keep it entirely within his own bounds. After twenty years the fence was moved to the boundary, and ejectment was brought for the strip of land cut off by its removal. Held, that the action would not lie. As the oral agreement was void, and the owner of the strip might have withdrawn from it, the strip was never held adversely to the owner, whose title was recognized in the agreement and always afterwards.—White v. Hapeman, 43 Mich. 267.

¶ 207. Occupancy to an agreed line supposed to be the true boundary for more than the statutory period cannot be undone and the titles adjusted to the true boundary when afterwards discovered by a parol agreement.—Bunce v. Bidwell, 43 Mich. 542.

¶ 208. A division line established by mutual agreement and acquiescence and constant occupancy for more than twenty years cannot be changed without writing.—Burns v. Martin, 45 Mich. 22.

Agreements for exchange of standing timber, see post § 61.
Contracts affecting crops and emblements generally, see Agriculture § 2.

¶ 213. Title to standing timber cannot be passed except by deed; but where timber is cut pursuant to a license it becomes personalty, and title thereto passes to the licensee unless the license is revoked before the cutting.—White v. King, 87 Mich. 107.

Contracts for commissions on sale of land, see ante § 30.
Agreement to convey easement, see ante § 43.
Parol surrender on transfer of purchasers or vendors' interest under contract, see ante § 51.
Agreements respecting real estate corporations or firms, see ante § 54.
Agreements for interests in future proceeds of land, see ante § 55.
Agreements affecting fixtures and improvements, see ante § 56.
Agreements affecting fencing and boundaries, see ante § 57.
Agreements affecting growing crops or standing timber, see ante § 58.
Agreements for lease, see post § 71.
Parol alterations of executory contracts, see post § 78.
Note or memorandum of executory agreements for conveyances or interests, see post § 93.
Part performance or execution of the agreement, see post § 103.
Oral executory contract in respect to lands as consideration for subsequent promise, see post § 128.

Avoidance of reciprocal promise or connected parts of transaction, see post § 130.
Reformation of contracts for sale of land, see Reformation of Instruments.

¶ 215. An oral contract for the sale of lands is void under the statute of frauds.—Dwight v. Cutler, 3 Mich. 566; Bomier v. Caldwell, 8 Mich. 463; Holland v. Hoyt, 14 Mich. 238; Hogsett v. Ellis, 17 Mich. 351; Palmer v. Williams, 24 Mich. 328; Scott v. Bush, 26 Mich. 418; Scott v. Bush, 29 Mich. 523; Colgrove v. Solomon, 34 Mich. 494; Liddle v. Needham, 39 Mich. 147; Curtis v. Abbe, 39 Mich. 441; Nims v. Sherman, 43 Mich. 45; Ayres v. Gallup, 44 Mich. 13; Sutton v. Rowley, 44 Mich. 112; Jackson v. Evans, 44 Mich. 510; De Moss v. Robinson, 46 Mich. 62; Peckham v. Balch, 49 Mich. 179; Wardell v. Williams, 62 Mich. 50; Bewick v. Hanika, 142 Mich. 206.

¶ 217. A parol agreement for the purchase and disposition of land is void under the statute of frauds so long as it remains executory.—Collar v. Collar, 86 Mich. 507.

¶ 218. An agreement relative to the sale or exchange of real estate must be in writing signed by the party to be charged or some person lawfully authorized.—Kaufmann v. Burton, 144 Mich. 487.

¶ 219. A verbal executory agreement to purchase real estate subject to the back taxes was as between the parties void under the statute of frauds.—Ball v. Harpham, 140 Mich. 661.

¶ 220. An oral agreement to pay for services by a conveyance of lands is invalid.—Hillebrands v. Nibbelink, 40 Mich. 646; Sutton v. Rowley, 44 Mich. 112.

¶ 221. An oral agreement between a son and his father that if the son will pay the father's debts, and obtain the discharge of mortgages upon his property, the father shall convey to him his real estate, is void under the statute of frauds.—Kelly v. Kelly, 54 Mich. 80.

¶ 223. A verbal promise to convey after the parties to a contract to sell land had agreed on a release by which the title was vested in the vendor and all rights released, and where the vendor had specifically refused to assent to the insertion in the releasing agreement any provision for repurchase because he wanted an end of the former contract, explaining that the other party must rely entirely on his oral promise, confers no enforceable right on the releasor who understood and was informed by the draftsman of the contract that it terminated all legal right.—Loth v. Friederick, 95 Mich. 598.

¶ 224. A parol promise by one who had secured title from the purchaser at a mortgage foreclosure sale to convey the land either to the former owner or to a railroad company to which the latter had agreed to sell it as a right of way, and pay the price he was to receive therefor to the owner is void under the statute of frauds.—Rapley v. McKinney's Estate, 143 Mich. 508.

¶ 226. A transaction by which three parties verbally agree that title to real estate shall be taken in the name of one for the joint account of all, with a parol understanding as to the terms on which the title should be held, is a contract for an interest in land, and is unenforceable under the statute of frauds unless in writing.—White v. McKenzie, 193 Mich. 189.

Reconveyance or revestment of title, see ante § 49.
Release or surrender of estates or interests, see ante § 50.
Agreements respecting real estate corporations as firms, see ante § 54.
Parol agreement to release or surrender a parcel mentioned in a contract for sale of lands, see post § 78.
Contracts for exchange of property generally, see Exchange of Property.

¶ 227. An agreement to surrender or release a parcel of land, mentioned in a contemporaneous contract, is not a defeasance but an agreement for a resale, and is within the statute.—McEwan v. Ortman, 34 Mich. 325.

¶ 228. A parol promise by a grantee of land to reconvey the same is void under the statute of frauds.—Poppe v. Poppe, 114 Mich. 649.

¶ 229. A parol agreement for the exchange of standing timber for a farm, which provides for the necessary transfers by deed, is void under the statute of frauds until the deeds are delivered.—Chick v. Sisson, 95 Mich. 412.

§ 62. ——For partition or settlement of estates.

both personalty and realty, in order to avoid the contesting of the will, is not void under the statute of frauds.—Kunzie v. Nibbelink, 199 Mich. 308.

¶ 231. The statute does not require a vendee's agreement to pay purchase money to be in writing.—Holland v. Hoyt, 14 Mich. 238; Scott v. Bush, 26 Mich. 418; Burke v. Wilber, 42 Mich. 327; Huff v. Hall, 56 Mich. 456.

Extinguishment or release of dower generally, see Dower, III.

¶ 232. A wife's parol agreement to convey or release her right of dower is not valid.—Wright v. De Groff, 14 Mich. 164.

¶ 233. A promise by an administratrix to a certain person that if the latter would attend a sale of real estate to be made by her and bid a certain amount her right of dower in the land would pass by the sale is void.—Wright v. De Groff, 14 Mich. 164.

§ 65. ——For devise or provision by will.

Agreement to will property in consideration of marriage, see ante ¶ 119.

Contracts to will generally, see Wills, I.

¶ 235. An agreement to provide by will for the support of a divorced wife in consideration of her refraining from taking legal proceedings to enforce her rights and procure alimony, is not within the statute of frauds.—Kundinger v. Kundinger, 150 Mich. 630.

Requisites and sufficiency of writing or of performance of mortgage agreements, see post § 93.

¶ 236. An agreement to execute a mortgage upon real estate is an agreement concerning interests in lands which, to be valid, must be in writing, or some note or memorandum thereof signed by the party making the promise.—Wardell v. Williams, 62 Mich. 50.

§ 67. Leases.

Agreements not to be performed within a year generally, see ante § 1.

Contract for commissions for lease of real estate, see ante § 33.

Agreements for leases, see post § 71.

Powers and agencies to execute leases for more than one year, see post § 72.

Parol alterations of leases, see post § 78.

Requisites and sufficiency of writing or memorandum, see post § 101.

Sufficiency of part performance of agreement for lease, see post § 106.

Tenancy under void lease, see post § 140.

¶ 238. How. St. § 6179, as to the essentials of a lease of land for a term exceeding a year, covers every case where an interest in land is to be divested by act of the party.—Chesebrough v. Pingree, 72 Mich. 438.

¶ 239. A leasehold interest for a term of years is within the purview of Comp. Laws 1897, § 9509, How. 2nd Ed. § 11393, providing that no estate or interest in lands other than leases for a term not exceeding one year, nor any trust or power over or concerning lands, or in any manner relating thereto, shall hereafter be created, granted, assigned, surrendered or declared, unless by act or operation of law, or by deed or conveyance in writing, subscribed by the party creating, granting, assigning, surrendering or declaring the same, or by some person thereunto by him lawfully authorized by writing.—In re Reh's Estate, 196 Mich. 210.

¶ 240. An oral subletting at a monthly rental of a part of leased premises for the unexpired term of a lease having three years yet to run is within the prohibition of How. St. § 6179, as a lease exceeding one year.—Fratcher v. Smith, 104 Mich. 537.

¶ 241. An oral agreement by the owner of land with one in possession thereof that, if the latter takes care of the former's father, she can stay on the land until she receives therefrom sufficient to pay her for such care, is invalid, under How. St. § 6179, providing that no estate or interest in lands, other than leases for not more than a year, shall be created unless by act or operation of law, or by a written deed or conveyance.—Smalley v. Mitchell, 110 Mich. 650.

¶ 243. An oral lease for a stipulated annual rent, no time being named, is a lease for a year.—Benfey v. Congdon, 40 Mich. 283.

¶ 244. A verbal lease of property until the lessor can find another tenant, which may and in fact does terminate within a year is not void under the statute of frauds.—Drew v. Billings-Drew Co., 132 Mich. 65.

§ 69. ——For one year to commence in future.

Contracts to be performed one year from future date, see ante § 4.

Agreement for lease for a year from future date, see post ¶ 249.

¶ 245. An agreement made in April for a year's tenancy from the 1st of May is not a lease for a term exceeding one year or a contract for the leasing for a longer period than one year, and it need not be in writing.—Tillman v. Fuller, 13 Mich. 113; Whiting v. Ohlert, 52 Mich. 462.

¶ 246. Where a lease due to expire in one month is by a parol contract extended for another year, the agreement is not void as contravening the statute of frauds.—Rooks v. Booth, 160 Mich. 62.

¶ 247. The right to enter and reap a crop, when it cannot be exercised within one year, is an interest in land; and so, a parol lease of land for one year, coupled with an oral agreement that the tenant may sow to wheat, will not entitle him to re-enter after the year and harvest the wheat.—Carney v. Mosher, 97 Mich. 554.

Executory agreements for conveyances or interests, see ante § 59.
Requisites and sufficiency of writing or memorandum, see post § 101.
Sufficiency of part performance of agreement for lease, see post § 106.

¶ 248. A parol agreement to lease lands for one year, with the privilege of three, at an annual rental, is void under the statute of frauds, and, if wholly executory, no action can be founded thereon. It is not performable within a year.—Hand v. Osgood, 107 Mich. 55.

¶ 249. An agreement for a lease is performed by making the lease; hence, an oral agreement to make a lease within a year for the term of a year to commence on a future day is not within the statute.—Tillman v. Fuller, 13 Mich. 113; Whiting v. Ohlert, 52 Mich. 462.

¶ 250. A verbal agreement to rent premises to a tenant for a "long term of years at a rental to be afterwards agreed upon" is within the statute of frauds, and is void.—Kezeli v. River Rouge Lodge, No. 410, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, 195 Mich. 181.

§ 72. Powers and agencies to transfer or create interests.

Requisites and sufficiency of writing or of performance, see post § 102.
Ratification of land contract made by agent without written authority, see post § 136.
Creation of agencies generally, see Agency, I.
Agency to buy or sell within the statute, see also Agency ¶ 5.
Parol trusts, see Trusts, III.

¶ 251. The authority of an agent acting for the vendor in the sale of lands must be in writing; otherwise the agreement to sell is void.—Holland v. Hoyt, 14 Mich. 238; Hammond v. Hannin, 21 Mich. 374; Palmer v. Williams, 24 Mich. 328; Powell v. Conant, 33 Mich. 396; Dickinson v. Wright, 56 Mich. 42.

¶ 252. A contract for the sale of land, signed by an agent whose authority to make the same rests wholly in parol, is within the statute of frauds.—Baldwin v. Schiappacasse, 109 Mich. 170.

¶ 253. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 9509, a written contract for the sale of lands made by an agent without written authority is void unless it has been ratified or adopted by the principal.—Detroit, P. & N. R. Co. v. Hartz, 147 Mich. 354.

¶ 254. An agent whose authority rests in parol cannot bind his principal by a contract for the purchase of land.—Colgrove v. Solomon, 34 Mich. 494.

¶ 255. It seems that the authority of the agent of the vendee in a contract for the sale of lands must be in writing.—Hammond v. Hannin, 21 Mich. 374.

¶ 256. The authority of an agent to execute a lease of land for more than one year must be in writing.—Toan v. Pline, 60 Mich. 385.

¶ 257. A lease for more than one year, executed by an agent whose authority rests in parol only, is void under the Illinois statute of frauds, providing that no action shall be brought to charge any person upon any contract for the sale of lands, or any interest in or concerning them, for a longer term than one year, unless such contract shall be in writing, signed by the party to be charged therewith, or by some other person thereunto authorized in writing signed by such party.—McIntosh v. Hodges, 110 Mich. 319.

¶ 258. A renewal for more than one year of a lease of the right to cut and remove ice is invalid if made by a surviving partner without written authority from the deceased partner's heirs, unless it is necessary to close out the partnership business.—Oliver v. Olmstead, 112 Mich. 483.

¶ 259. A lease of land for more than one year, executed by an agent without written authority and delivered to the lessee, is void under the statute of frauds, and is not validated by the after execution of a duplicate by the principal, of the existence of which the lessee has no knowledge.—Chesebrough v. Pingree, 72 Mich. 438.

¶ 260. It was not necessary that the agent who gave defendant oral license to cut standing timber should have written authority.—Antrim Iron Co. v. Anderson, 140 Mich. 702.

¶ 261. A sale of land made by an auctioneer without written authority from the owner is absolutely void even though made within the terms of the printed advertisement thereof.—Muffatt v. Gott, 74 Mich. 672.

Executory agreements for mortgaging, see ante § 66.

¶ 262. Authority of an agent to assign a mortgage need not be in writing.—Moreland v. Houghton, 94 Mich. 548.

§ 75. Agreements to procure sales or conveyances from or to others.

Agreements for commissions on sale of land, see ante § 30.

¶ 263. Agreements to pay money for services in procuring the sale of real estate are not within the statute of frauds.—Waterman Real Estate Exch. v. Stephens, 71 Mich. 104.

¶ 264. A contract between an owner of land and a real estate dealer in which the owner agrees to sell his farm for $6,400 and to allow said dealer all over that sum which he can induce a purchaser to pay, and in which said owner agrees to furnish an abstract of title and warranty deed, is not a contract for the sale of land required to be in writing under 3 Comp. Laws, §§ 9509, 9510.—Brittson v. Smith, 165 Mich. 222.

¶ 265. A contract to procure the conveyance of an equity of redemption held by a third person is, within the statute, a contract for the sale of an interest in lands, and is void if not in writing.—Rawdon v. Dodge, 40 Mich. 697.

¶ 267. Where, under oral authority from the vendee in a land contract the deed in fulfillment thereof is made to the vendee's wife, both signing a written memorandum of the receipt of such deed, the transaction is not in the nature of a parol agreement relating to land, but is a ratification in writing of the vendor's transfer of the legal title. —Merson v. Merson, 101 Mich. 55.

Subsequent oral agreement to modify agreement for support contained in deed, see also Evidence ¶ 1223.

¶ 268. Under the statute of frauds, which requires all contracts for the sale of lands to be in writing and avoids them if not written and signed by the vendor, parol alterations cannot be made extending the time therein expressly fixed for performance.—Abell v. Munson, 18 Mich. 306; Cook v. Bell, 18 Mich. 387.

¶ 269. That which is evidenced by the deeds of conveyance cannot be changed on parol testimony of promises, agreements or understandings.—Hayes v. Livingston, 34 Mich. 384.

¶ 270. An attempted verbal modification of the written conditions of a deed relative to time for delivery, was within the statute of frauds and therefore ineffectual to make it deliverable sooner.—Culy v. Upham, 135 Mich. 131.

¶ 271. The correction which changes a void into a good deed can only be made by conforming to the statute of frauds.—Paine v. State Land Office Com'r, 66 Mich. 245.

Parol leases for more than one year, see ante § 67.

¶ 272. An oral stipulation inconsistent with the terms of a contract for the sale of lands cannot be imported into it; e. g., one to release or surrender a parcel mentioned therein.—McEwan v. Ortman, 34 Mich. 325.

¶ 273. Title to land cannot under the statute of frauds be divested from the purchaser by mere oral authority to insert another's name as copurchaser, or by the mere payment of money by such alleged copurchaser contract for the purchase of land.—Truski v. Streseveski, 60 Mich. 34.

¶ 274. The time limited for acceptance in a written offer to sell land cannot be extended by parol.—Wardell v. Williams, 62 Mich. 50.

¶ 275. The parties in a contract for the sale of land that requires the deed to be executed on a specified day may, without violating the statute, orally extend the time. —Loveridge v. Shurtz, 111 Mich. 618.

¶ 276. Where complainant and defendant entered into a written lease of premises for a term of years, and complainant made extensive improvements thereon as provided in the lease, oral promises by defendant made subsequent thereto that in the event of the improvements costing more than was contemplated he would pay an increased rental are not binding under the statute of frauds. —Miles v. Shreve, 179 Mich. 671.

¶ 277. Under Comp. Laws 1897, § 9509, providing that no estate in lands shall be created, granted, or surrendered unless by operation of law or by a written instrument, the parol surrender and acceptance of a land contract is not a surrender by operation of law where the land was unoccupied and the vendor has not subsequently attempted to exercise dominion over it.—Stewart v. McLaughlin's Estate, 126 Mich. 1.

¶ 278. Where a lessor assented to an assignment by his lessee, and agreed by parol to accept the assignee as his tenant and to look to him for the rent, this was held to be a sufficient surrender of the old lease by operation of law (Laws 1883, p. 342, § 9, How. St., § 6179).—Logan v. Anderson, 2 D. 101.

H. REPRESENTATIONS AS TO CREDIT OF ANOTHER.

Requisites and sufficiency of writing, see post § 89.
Operation and effect of statute, see post, III.
Fraudulent representations as to credit or solvency, what constitute, see Fraud § 17.
Provisions of the statute, see Comp. L. § 11983.

¶ 279. An oral representation that a person is a member of a specified firm, by means of which the party to whom the assurance was made was induced to sell the firm goods, is not within How. St., § 6188, requiring favorable representations concerning another's character, etc., to be in writing in order to be actionable.—Clark v. Hurd, 79 Mich. 130.

¶ 280. It is not a representation concerning the character, conduct, credit, etc., of another person, required by How. St. § 6188, to be in writing to charge the maker, where a person induced a dealer to supply brick to contractors engaged in building houses for him, he falsely representing—orally—to the dealer that he had sufficient money coming to them under his control, and that the dealer should be paid first.—Daniel v. Robinson, 66 Mich. 296.

¶ 281. The fact that a person, who falsely represented to a dealer that there was enough money due to the dealer's customer, a builder, to pay for bricks, that it was under control of the person making the representations, promised that he would apply enough to pay for the bricks does not raise the transaction to a representation concerning the other's credit or character, he having been insolvent as both knew, for which reason the dealer had refused to furnish more bricks without such representation.—Daniel v. Robinson, 66 Mich. 299.

¶ 282. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 9518, providing that no action shall be brought against any person by reason of any favorable representation or assurance made regarding the credit, etc., of any other person, unless made in writing and signed by the party to be charged; a director in a bank who offered his father's paper to the bank for discount, while acting solely as the father's agent, was not liable for representations made orally, where the proceeds were placed to the father's credit and the son obtained no benefit from the transaction.—St. John's Nat. Bank v. Steel, 135 Mich. 165.

¶ 283. In an action by the assignee of a state bank which was the successor of a national bank to recover damages for fraud and deceit sustained by his assignor, against a director of the bank, where the allegations in the declaration state that at the time of presenting certain notes belonging to defendant's father for discount, the defendant fraudulently represented the notes, makers, and indorsers to be good, and relying on such representations, the notes were discounted, there can be no recovery unless there is written evidence of such misrepresentations signed by the defendant given or offered.—Hicks v. Steel, 142 Mich. 292.

¶ 284. Comp. L. 1857, § 3186, How. St. § 6188, is confined to cases where the representations form no part of a contract.—Huntington v. Wellington, 12 Mich. 10.

¶ 285. Comp. L. 1871, § 4701, How. St. § 6188, does not apply where the holder of a note seeks to recover against an indorser whose signature was obtained by means of his own false and fraudulent representations as to the maker's solvency.—Lenheim v. Fay, 27 Mich. 70.

Actionable fraud and deceit generally, see Fraud.

¶ 286. Section 9318, 3 Comp. Laws 1897, providing that no person shall be charged for favorable representations as to the credit, trade, etc., of another unless the representations be in writing has no application to a case of fraudulent representations made with intent to deceive.—Massey v. Luce, 158 Mich. 128.

¶ 287. Where a corporation whose worthless stock plaintiff was induced to purchase, was only an instrument in a scheme of fraud by which defendants obtained plaintiff's property for their own use, Comp. L. 1897, § 9518, requiring that to be actionable representations made concerning another person must be in writing, has no application to an action for damages for the fraud.—McDonald v. Smith, 139 Mich. 211.

§ 83. Representations as to credit of corporation or value of stock.

§ 4701 (How. St. § 6188), which prohibits actions on oral representations concerning another's character, ability, trade or dealings. —Bush v. Sprague, 51 Mich. 41.

¶ 290. Representations made in good faith by the directors of a company as to its financial standing and business management are not actionable on the ground of fraud unless made in writing as provided in Comp. L. 1897, § 9518; where such directors were not selling their own stock and made no profit out of the transaction and were, in fact, representing the good faith and credit of another and not of themselves.—Getchell v. Dusenbury, 145 Mich. 197.

¶ 292. Comp. L. 1897, § 9518, providing that only such misrepresentations of the credit or ability of another as are made in writing are actionable, does not apply in the case of one who by oral false representations of the financial condition of a company effected the sale of stock of such company and who was directly benefited by receiving a commission on such sale.—Getchell v. Dusenbury, 145 Mich. 197.

¶ 293. Where a person falsely represents the value of stock held by him thus inducing another to purchase the same, it cannot be said that the representations made were as to the standing of the corporation thus precluding recovery under the statute of frauds by reason of its being a representation as to the credit of a third party.—Hubbard v. Oliver, 173 Mich. 337.

¶ 294. Alleged representations by a stockholder that the corporation is paying large dividends, made for his own benefit to induce the party to whom they are made to purchase stock, are not within How. St., § 6188, which provides that "no action shall be brought to charge any person upon or by reason of any favorable representation or assurance made concerning the character, conduct, credit, ability, trade, or dealings of any other person, unless such representation or assurance be made in writing, and signed by the party to be charged thereby, or by some person thereunto by him lawfully authorized."—Hubbard v. Long, 105 Mich. 442.

¶ 295. How. St., § 6188, requiring representations concerning character or credit of another to be in writing in order to charge the maker of them, does not apply to a stockholder's representations as to his corporation's financial condition and as to his own affairs, made by him in selling his corporate stock and one of its bonds.—French v. Fitch, 67 Mich. 492.

II. REQUISITES AND SUFFICIENCY OF WRITING, OR OF PERFORMANCE IN LIEU OF IT.

A. IN GENERAL.

Memorandum of contract not to be performed in one year, see post § 87.

Memorandum of agreement for commission on sale of land, see post § 90.

Note or memorandum of executory agreement for conveyances or interests in land, see post § 93.

Note or memorandum of sale of goods, see post § 107.

¶ 296. Whether, under the statute, the contract required to be in writing is not to be treated as one entire contract, so that all the stipulations of both parties must be in writing, quære.—Whipple v. Parker, 29 Mich. 369.

¶ 297. A telegram to "come on at once at a salary of two thousand, conditional only upon satisfactory discharge of business," lacks some of the essential terms of a contract in that it fixes no time for the continuance of the employment and does not even name the employment itself.—Palmer v. Marquette & P. Rolling Mill Co., 32 Mich. 274.

¶ 298. A complete contract binding under the statute of frauds may be gathered from letters, writings and telegrams between the parties relating to the subject-matter of the contract, and so connected with each other that they may fairly be said to constitute one paper relating to the contract.—Ryan v. United States, 136 U. S. 68, 34 L. ed. 447, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 913.

See also ante ¶ 57.

Necessity that agreements to answer for another be in writing, see ante I, B.

Necessity for expressing in promise to answer for another the consideration for the promise, see Contracts ¶ 396.

¶ 300. A promise in writing to pay the debt of another must show the whole terms of the contract; no resort can be had to parol evidence to add to them.—Hall v. Soule, 11 Mich. 494.

¶ 301. A writing relied upon to take a promise to pay the debt of another out of the statute must contain all the terms of the contract; such promise cannot rest partly in writing and partly in parol.—Baumann v. Manistee Salt & Lumber Co., 94 Mich. 363.

¶ 302. The writing need not state the consideration on which a promise is based to pay the debt of another.—DeCamp v. Scofield, 75 Mich. 449.

§ 87. Agreements not to be performed in one year.

Necessity that agreements not to be performed in one year be in writing, see ante I, A.

Burden of showing sufficient writing or memorandum, see post § 151.

¶ 303. The memorandum of a contract that is not to be performed within a year must embrace all its substantial terms except the consideration; and when essentially defective it cannot be aided by parol evidence.—Palmer v. Marquette & P. Rolling Mill Co., 32 Mich. 274.

¶ 304. Comp. L. 1871, § 4702, How. St., § 6189, which dispenses with the necessity of expressing in any contract required to be in writing the consideration thereof, and permits proof of such consideration by other evidence, does not, it seems, apply to a case where the consideration consisted of counter-promises or executory stipulations to be performed more than a year after the making of the contract.—Whipple v. Parker, 29 Mich. 369.

¶ 306. An agreement in writing under which the defendants agreed to buy of plaintiff two shares of stock a week, but which was not signed by the plaintiff, inasmuch as it was not to be performed within one year is void under the statute of frauds.—McIlroy v. Richards, 148 Mich. 694.

¶ 307. A contract to keep an advertising cabinet in a hotel for two years not signed by the plaintiff, being unperformable within one year, is unenforceable under Comp. L. 1897, § 9515, where the defendant, who did sign it, rejected the cabinet when sent to it.—Adams v. Harrington Hotel Co., 154 Mich. 198.

¶ 308. A contract of service for more than a year, signed only by the employer, is void for want of mutuality; and the other party cannot make it effective by written acceptance after the employer has refused to perform.—Wilkinson v. Heavenrich, 58 Mich. 574.

¶ 309. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 9518, providing that no action shall be brought on assurance or representation of credit unless in writing and signed by the party to be charged or his agent, in an action for fraud in an unsigned statement exhibited by a third person in securing a loan, a subsequent letter written by the defendant in which he says he remembers such an exhibit at the time of making the loan is not sufficient to amount to a signed statement where the statement had not been exhibited by the defendant and it could not be identified from the letter.—Third Nat. Bank of New York v. Steel, 129 Mich. 434.

Necessity that agreements for commissions be in writing, see ante I, E.

¶ 310. A letter written by the owner of real estate to a real estate broker with whom the owner had entered into an oral agreement for commissions for the sale of land, stating that it was agreed between the owner and the agent that a note attached was to be paid from commissions earned by the agent in selling certain lands of the owner, and signed by the owner and the agent, is insufficient to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds, Comp. Laws 1897, § 9515, How. 2nd Ed., § 11399, providing that every agreement or contract to pay commissions for the sale of any interest in real estate must be in writing.—Paul v. Graham, 193 Mich. 447.

B. ESTATES AND INTERESTS IN LAND, LEASES AND TRUSTS.

Necessity of writing generally, see ante I, G.

Creation, grant or surrender of estates or interests by operation of law, see ante § 79.

Necessity and sufficiency of written declaration of a trust in lands, see Trusts.

§ 91. Deeds or conveyances.

Defective deed as memorandum, see post § 100.

Transfer or conveyance as part performance of contract for sale of lands, see post § 104.

Requisites and sufficiency of deeds and conveyances generally, see Deeds.

¶ 311. A deed or conveyance in writing of an interest in land must be complete in itself and leave nothing resting in parol.—In re Reh's Estate, 196 Mich. 210.

¶ 312. Plaintiff presented a written petition to the mayor and common council of defendant city, asking permission to construct a private sewer in some of the public streets, describing specifically the termini of the proposed sewer, the streets in which it was to be placed, and its exact location therein. The council referred the petition to a committee, with power to act. Thereafter a bond conditioned for the proper performance of the work of constructing the sewer was furnished by plaintiff, and was accepted and approved by the proper officers. Extensions were authorized in like manner. Held, that there was sufficient written evidence of a contract, granting to plaintiff the use of the streets, to satisfy the statute of frauds.—Stevens v. City of Muskegon, 111 Mich. 72.

§ 92. Mortgages and mortgage agreements.

Necessity of writing to assign or transfer mortgages, see ante § 47.

Assignability as personalty of deed given as mortgage, see also Assignments ¶ 6.

Sufficiency of signature by corporate officers to mortgage to satisfy statutory requirement of lawful authorization, see also Corporations § 103, ¶ 381.

¶ 313. An agreement in writing to pay higher interest held sufficient under the statute of frauds to charge the land, it being connected with the mortgage.—Smith v. Graham, 34 Mich. 301.

§ 93. Note or memorandum of executory agreement.

Necessity that executory agreements for conveyances or interest be in writing, see ante § 59.

Note or memorandum in general, see ante § 85.

Part performance or execution of agreement, see post § 103.

¶ 314. A complete and binding contract of sale of land may be created by letters or other writings relating to one connected transaction, if, without the aid of parol testimony, the parties, the subject-matter and the terms of the contract may be collected.—Francis v. Barry, 69 Mich. 311.

¶ 315. Correspondence looking to purchase of a store property, and including an offer to sell culminated in an offer of $2,000 in cash and notes for $500, to which the seller wrote that all was satisfactory; that he would take the money when defendant could raise it, and to let all stand until his return in two weeks' time. Plaintiff borrowed the money and wrote defendant that it was ready and that she wanted a deed. Defendant replied that he would give a deed, take $2,000 and notes for the balance, and would attend to it when he returned. Held, that there was a sufficient contract in writing to comply with How. St., § 6181.—Francis v. Barry, 69 Mich. 311.

¶ 316. In a suit for specific performance of a land contract, letters between the parties with reference to the purchase and the amount due, contemplating the carrying out by the plaintiff of a written contract between the defendant and the plaintiff's assignor, were sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the statute of frauds.—Hickman v. Chaney, 155 Mich. 217.

¶ 317. A complete contract binding under the statute of frauds may be gathered from letters, writings and telegrams between the parties relating to the subject-matter of the contract and so connected with each other that they may be fairly said to constitute one paper relating to the contract.—Ryan v. United States, 136 U. S. 68, 34 L. ed. 447, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 913.

Consideration and terms of payment, see post § 96.

¶ 318. In order to satisfy the statute of frauds, the memorandum of contract for sale of lands must contain the substantial terms of the contract, expressed with such certainty that they may be understood without resort to parol evidence.—Messmore v. Cunningham, 78 Mich. 623.

¶ 319. A memorandum of agreement for the sale of lands is not invalidated by omitting to provide therein for transfer of possession.—Munro v. Edwards, 86 Mich. 91.

¶ 320. Where a written contract for the sale of land signed by both parties states the parties, the considerations, and when and how payments are to be paid, the description of the premises and the date of taking possession, it is sufficiently definite to satisfy the statute of frauds.—Harris v. Brown, 172 Mich. 164.

¶ 321. An agreement for a contract for the sale of real estate in which the parties, the property, the price, terms of payment and time of performance are all definitely fixed, complies with the statute of frauds.—Ogooshevitz v. Arnold, 197 Mich. 203.

¶ 322. A contract for the sale of real estate definitely fixing the property, the parties, the price and the terms of payment, complies with the statute of frauds, Comp. Laws 1897, § 9511, How. 2nd Ed., § 11395.—Walsh v. Oakman, 199 Mich. 688.

¶ 323. A writing that does not specify the purchase price or the time of payment is insufficient to constitute a contract for the sale of lands under the statute of frauds, and is not aided by a subsequent letter of the party sought to be charged instructing his agent how to fill out the contract if one should be made.—Webster v. Brown, 67 Mich. 328.

¶ 324. A contract for the sale of land reciting the receipt from designated persons of a certain sum as deposit on designated premises, the purchase price of which was a designated sum, and further reciting "One thousand will be paid before June 15, 1915. Balance $300 and interest," held insufficient under the statute of frauds because not containing the terms and time of the performance.—Rosenbaum v. Tyszka, 192 Mich. 457.

¶ 325. An option for the sale of real estate, naming the purchase price and adding "Int. 5 per cent easy terms," is not indefinite as to whether it is for the purchase or leasing of the property, but it fails to state sufficiently the time or terms of the payment purchase price to satisfy the Statute of Frauds, Comp. Laws 1897, § 9511, and will not support a bill by the vendee for specific performance.—Hilberg v. Greer, 172 Mich. 505.

¶ 326. Where the directors of a corporation, who were also trustees of a deceased stockholder's estate, acting as trustees, and not as directors, signed a tentative acceptance of a written offer to purchase the corporate property; and where, immediately after the authority to consummate such sale had been obtained by such trustees by a bill in chancery, to which neither the purchaser nor the corporation were made parties, one of the trustees telephoned a further acceptance, it was held that no valid contract in writing binding upon the corporation, and answering the requirements of the statute of frauds, ever existed.—Taylor v. R. D. Scott & Co., 149 Mich. 525.

¶ 327. A land contract which, though written, does not describe a part of the lands nor point out any method for identifying them, is fatally defective under the statute of frauds. So held where a joint owner of land purported, in selling it, to be acting for himself and his co-owners, but the quantity of land fell short of his representations, and a compromise agreement was made which provided that the deficiency might be made up out of lands owned solely by the vendor, but there was nothing relied upon by either party to show what particular parcel could be taken. —Alpena Lumber Co. v. Fletcher, 48 Mich. 555.

¶ 328. The description of real property, in a contract for its sale, must so fit and comprehend it that it can be applied to the property intended and exclude all else with the aid at least of extrinsic testimony which shall neither contradict nor add to it; and a conflict in the extrinsic evidence cannot establish its insufficiency under the statute.—Eggleston v. Wagner, 46 Mich. 610.

¶ 329. A sale of lands is not made out by an entry on the books of the vendors and by their receipts for purchase money where the land was not fully described and did not belong to them, and the actual owners only assented to the sale orally.—Ayres v. Gallup, 44 Mich. 13.

¶ 330. In correspondence relative to the purchase and sale of certain real estate the property was at first described by both parties as the "Schoolcraft store" and subsequently as "the property." Held a sufficient description.—Francis v. Barry, 69 Mich. 311.

¶ 331. A written proposal to sell land to the federal government for a military post, describing the land by township, range, and section, and giving the purchase price, and a written acceptance of such proposal, contained a sufficient description to meet the Statute of Frauds, How. St., § 6181, even though the name of the village in which the land was located was not given, where such defect, if any, was supplied by a communication by a member of the board of army officers having charge of making the purchase to the seller in which he transmitted to the latter a letter of instruction from the war department in which the land was referred to as a certain number of acres at such village and also by reference to a deed executed and delivered by the seller which disclosed the exact locality of the land.—Ryan v. United States, 136 U. S. 68, 34 L. ed. 447, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 913.

Consideration in memorandum of sale of goods, see post § 108.
General rules as to consideration, see Contracts, V.

¶ 332. There is no known and recognized custom fixing the time or times of payment of the purchase money where the memorandum of the sale of land leaves it undetermined.—Gault v. Stormont, 51 Mich. 636.

¶ 333. An instrument in which the signer agrees to leave to a certain person a half interest in designated property at any time the deed may be demanded is an insufficient memorandum under the Statute of Frauds, Comp. Laws 1897, § 9511, How. 2nd Ed., § 11395, as no consideration is named and there is not any time stated within which the consideration must be paid.—Holland v. Holland, 195 Mich. 513.

¶ 335. A memorandum of a contract for the sale of land stating that a warranty deed will be given upon the payment of $275 is not defective because failing to show when payment is to be made, the inference being that the payment is to be made within a reasonable time.—Mull v. Smith, 132 Mich. 618.

¶ 336. A vendor's receipt evidencing an oral agreement for the sale of land is not sufficient to take the contract out of the statute of frauds so as to make it specifically enforceable where such receipt recites the sum of money paid down and the balance of the agreed purchase price, but fails to specify the time or times for the payment of said balance.—Ebert v. Cullen, 165 Mich. 75.

See also ante ¶ 218.

Signing note or memorandum of sale of goods, see post § 109.

Execution of instruments generally, see Execution of Instruments.

¶ 337. A written agreement for the sale of lands is void unless signed by the vendor.—Abell v. Munson, 18 Mich. 306; Cook v. Bell, 18 Mich. 387; Maynard v. Brown, 41 Mich. 298.

¶ 338. A contract for the sale of land must, in order to satisfy the statute of frauds, be signed by the party who is to make the sale.—Maynard v. Brown, 41 Mich. 298.

¶ 339. A memorandum of a contract for the sale of land, signed by the vendor only and accepted by the vendee, is sufficient to satisfy the statute of frauds which requires that a contract for the sale of land, to be valid, must be witnessed by a note or memorandum thereof signed by the vendor.—Mull v. Smith, 132 Mich. 618.

¶ 340. There is no grant of land by the purchaser under a land contract necessitating the signing of the contract by the purchaser within the statue of frauds, where such contract provides that the vendor shall have until a certain time to take off a crop and that the buildings are "excepted," and will be removed when necessary.—Walsh v. Oakman, 199 Mich. 688.

¶ 343. A deed was executed by two only of three grantors named therein and delivered to an agent of both parties, who was to obtain the signature of the third grantor and then deliver it to the grantee, and the latter deposited the consideration with the agent to be delivered to the grantors when the deal was completed. The third grantor refused to sign and action for specific performance was brought against the two grantors who had signed. Held that the transaction constituted an oral executory contract and was within the statute of frauds and hence not enforceable.—Wisconsin & M. R. Co. v. McKenna, 139 Mich. 43.

Necessity and requisites of a seal, see Execution of Instruments, I.

¶ 344. The statute of frauds does not require executory contracts to be under seal, but requires deeds only where trusts or powers or estates in land are created or assigned.—Enos v. Sutherland, 11 Mich. 538; Hammond v. Hannin, 21 Mich. 374.

§ 99. ——Acceptance of contract.

Necessity that actionable representations as to credit of another be in writing, see ante I, H.

General rules as to acceptance of contracts, see Contracts, III.

¶ 345. A party offered in writing to sell land at a certain price, part to be secured by mortgage on the land, the valuation of the lots into which the land had been subdivided to be agreed to, and, on payment being made on account of said mortgage, lots of value equal to amount paid to be released, the valuation of each lot as agreed upon to be placed on plat. Held, that a mere oral acceptance of such offer within the time limited, without tender of cash payment or of any deed or mortgage executed or to be executed, did not constitute a sufficient contract under How. St., § 6181.—Wardell v. Williams, 62 Mich. 50.

¶ 346. Where one party signs a memorandum offering to exchange land which he owns for land owned by another party, such memorandum cannot be made a valid contract by the oral acceptance and promise of the other party to make such exchange; such oral promise not being enforceable.—Wardell v. Williams, 62 Mich. 50.

¶ 347. The execution and tender of a deed of lands, pursuant to the written offer of the person proposed as grantee to pay a specified price therefor, is not an acceptance in writing completing the written offer, and so complying with the requirement of the statute of frauds that such contracts, to be binding, shall be in writing, signed by the party by whom the sale is to be made.—Kroll v. Diamond Match Co., 113 Mich. 196.

¶ 348. A memorandum of agreement for the sale of land signed by the vendor is binding on both parties even if accepted verbally by the vendee where it acknowledges the receipt of a part of the purchase price and provides for the transfer of title and the payment of the price.—Smith v. Mathis, 174 Mich. 262.

Deed or conveyance within the statute in general, see ante § 91.

Form and requisites of deeds generally, see Deeds.

¶ 349. The delivery of a deed which does not conform to an oral agreement for the purchase of the lands conveyed is not a sufficient written memorandum to avoid the statute of frauds.—Kelsey v. McDonald, 76 Mich. 188.

¶ 350. A deed executed by the vendor under an oral agreement for sale of land, and left with an attorney not authorized to accept it and to close the transaction in behalf of the vendee, was not such a written memorandum as would take the case out of the statute of frauds.—Ducett v. Wolf, 81 Mich. 311.

Necessity of writing to create lease, see ante § 67.

Necessity that agreement for lease be in writing, see ante § 71.

Part performance of agreement for lease, see post § 106.

Tenancy under void lease, see post § 140.

¶ 351. A written lease of lands for a term of years which stated that the rental should be a certain percentage of the entire cost of the premises, including the purchase price, money furnished to lessees to pay for the breaking of the land and preparation of the first crop, and commission paid lessee, for management of such work, held not uncertain or indefinite so as to be void under the Statute of Frauds of Texas or New York.—Eames v. Barber, 192 Mich. 1.

§ 102. Powers in respect to estates or interests therein.

Necessity for writing generally, see ante § 72.

Parol trusts in respect to lands, see Trusts, III.

¶ 352. A contract for sale of land signed by one as agent for the owners, his principals, and naming the purchaser and otherwise sufficient, is not invalidated because the agent's written authority to sell did not name the prospective purchaser and because that name was not disclosed to the principal.—Stuart v. Mattern, 141 Mich. 686.

§ 103. Part performance or execution of agreement.

Part performance of contract of sale of goods, see post § 114.

Rights arising out of executed or partly performed contract, see post §§ 135, 137.

Burden of showing part performance of the agreement, see post § 151.

Sufficiency of occupancy and part performance of oral contract to support homestead by purchaser, see Homestead, II.

Partial performance as ground for specific enforcement of oral agreements, see Specific Performance, III.

Part performance or execution of parol trusts in lands, see Trusts, III.

¶ 353. The statute of frauds will not bear any exception that cannot rest on the substantial equities of a partly-performed contract.—Baker v. Johnston, 21 Mich. 319.

¶ 354. The effect of part performance on a void contract is not to make it enforceable at law, but to raise such equities against whichever party permits the other to rely on it as may justify a court of equity in enforcing it specifically against him. — Dickinson v. Wright, 56 Mich. 42.

¶ 356. Part payment of an existing debt in money, under an arrangement to accept payment partly in money and partly in land held and to be conveyed by a third person, and in the debtor's present discharge of a mortgage he held against the land in question, cannot operate as such a part performance of an oral contract to accept the land as payment as to take the case out of the statute; such part payment was but payment of so much of an existing debt, and the discharge of the mortgage was not a fact of part performance at all, but merely a preparatory act to put the payer in condition to tender performance by offering a deed to the land disincumbered of his mortgage.—Colgrove v. Solomon, 34 Mich. 494.

¶ 357. Marriage of the promisee does not take out of the statute a promise to settle lands on the promisee when she should marry.—Welch v. Whelpley, 62 Mich. 15.

Requisites and sufficiency of deed or conveyance, see ante § 91.

Effect of tender of deed responsive to contract invalid under the statute, see also Contracts ¶ 144.

¶ 358. An oral agreement for the purchase of lands is not taken out of the statute by payment and deposit of a deed which does not conform to the agreement; and the ven-dee's oral expression of his intention to accept the deed, and his taking possession of the land without doing anything thereon that cannot be compensated for in damages, will not help the matter.—Kelsey v. McDonald, 76 Mich. 188.

¶ 359. A parol agreement by one tenant in common of land for its sale by his cotenant in the joint interest, which has been fully executed, and the interest of such tenant converted into money and received by the cotenant, is not within the statute of frauds.—White v. Cleaver, 75 Mich. 17.

¶ 360. An oral contract for the exchange of lands, whereby one of the parties agrees to reduce an incumbrance on the land conveyed by him, is taken out of the statute of frauds by the execution and delivery of deeds, so as to render enforceable a subsequent promise in writing to deliver possession, and to reduce the incumbrance pursuant to the oral agreement.—Bennett v. Knowles, 111 Mich. 226.

¶ 362. The owner of land made an oral agreement with defendant to convey to him the land subject to a mortgage, defendant agreeing to pay the same and the mortgage notes, and to hold the vendor harmless. Subsequently the vendor quitclaimed the land to defendant's sons at the request of defendant, who renewed his agreement to pay the notes and mortgage. Held, that the conveyance to the sons was equivalent to a sale to defendant, and the conveyance, delivery and acceptance of possession took the case out of the statute.—Waldron v. Laird, 65 Mich. 237.

¶ 363. The grantor of land who had conveyed it by deed absolute in form but intended as a security, having had an offer from a third person for the land, informed B., the grantee, thereof, who told him he would like to take the land himself for the price, and it was orally agreed B. should have it, and possession was given up to him accordingly. B. subsequently sold the land for a larger price to the third person. Held, that the parol contract had been carried out by performance; that B.'s promise was based on a sufficient consideration, and that he was liable for the price.—Miner v. O'Harrow, 60 Mich. 91.

Easements as interests in land necessitating writing, see ante § 43.

Nature and creation of easements generally, see Easements, I.

¶¶ 364, 365. A parol agreement by the servient owner to allow to the dominant owner, in consideration of a release by the latter of his rights in the track as originally laid, a corresponding interest in a new track to be constructed a short distance away, is so far performed as to be taken out of the statute of frauds, where the dominant owner consents to the removal, and continues to use the track as reconstructed.—Kent Furniture Mfg. Co. v. Long, 111 Mich. 383.

§ 106. ——Of agreements for leases.

Necessity of writing to create leases, see ante § 67.

Necessity that agreements for leases be in writing, see ante § 71.

Requisites and sufficiency of writing, see ante § 101.

¶ 366. In a particular case the partial execution of an oral agreement varying the terms of a lease of water-power was held to take the whole agreement out of the statute.—Norris v. Showerman, 2 D. 16.

¶ 367. As between landlord and tenant, when the tenant is in possession at the date of the agreement to purchase, holding under the lease, continuance in possession is not an act of part performance to take the case out of the operation of the statute of frauds.—Messmore v. Cunningham, 78 Mich. 623.

C. SALE OF GOODS.

1. Note, Memorandum or Bill of Sale.

Necessity of writing in general, see ante § 34.

Memorandum or contract in general, see ante § 85.

Part payment or earnest money, see post § 110.

Part performance or delivery and acceptance, see post § 114.

¶ 368. Whether or not the statute requires that the memorandum of a contract of sale shall show the price to be made, it must, at all events, show all the other terms of the contract, and also show that it is a contract of sale.—James v. Muir, 33 Mich. 223.

¶ 369. Essential parts of a contract for the sale of goods of the value of over $50, resting in parol, renders the contract void under the statute of frauds.—McCaskey Register Co. v. Truettner, 149 Mich. 241.

¶ 370. A contract for the sale of goods of the value of fifty dollars and upwards is within the statute of frauds, when resting partly in writing and partly in parol.—Kraus v. Hansen, 182 Mich. 52.

¶ 371. An incomplete agreement for the sale of goods of the value of fifty dollars and upwards cannot be validated by a subsequent telephonic conversation supplying the missing essential elements.—Kraus v. Hansen, 182 Mich. 52.

¶ 372. Where a vendee signs an order for goods solicited by and delivered to the vendor's agent, and the agent acknowledges in writing that the goods have been ordered from his principal, a foreign manufacturer, there is a sufficient memorandum of sale to satisfy the statute of frauds.—Leo Austrian & Co. v. Springer, 94 Mich. 343.

¶ 373. The contractual vendee of stock under an oral agreement took from the attorney of the vendor the following receipt: "Received of Louis J. Goux, six hundred dollars for the purchase of forty shares Ditzler Cola Company stock.

"Lodge, Trevor & Brown."

There was evidence that the vendee deposited the money conditionally upon its being repaid if the vendor did not secure title within a specified time. Held, the receipt was not sufficient to take the contract out of the statute of frauds.—Leonard v. Roth, 164 Mich. 646.

¶ 374. A letter from the vendor "confirming" to the purchaser a sale of a cow at a certain price per pound, and inclosing an order on her keeper for delivery and weighing, is a sufficient memorandum.—Sherwood v. Walker, 66 Mich. 568.

¶ 375. Defendant, having been shown goods in plaintiff's store at an agreed price of $200 with a view to purchase, afterwards wrote to plaintiff, "You may place the gas fixtures I selected today. The dining-room fixtures may as well be changed over with the salesman who showed me the goods. Please put them up in fine shape, promptly as possible." The goods were prepared for installation but delay was requested by defendant and they were not accepted or received, and defendant afterwards countermanded his order. Held, that the letter contained no information except by reference to the oral agreement on the price and did not make a written memorandum.—Sheley v. Whitman, 67 Mich. 397.

¶ 376. A telegram in the following words: "I will take double-deck car—hogs; W. C. Bryant will close contract," having reference to a previous parol negotiation and arrangement, is not, under the statute, a sufficient memorandum of a contract. Standing by itself it contains none of the elements of a bargain except quantity.—McElroy v. Buck, 35 Mich. 434.

¶ 377. The following is, under the statute of frauds, a sufficient memorandum of sale, viz., "John Heffron bought of J. H. Rudell, agent for J. K. Armsby, 300 cases B. M. corn, $1.25 cash, less one-half per cent. [Signed] J. H. Rudell," provided the alleged agent was authorized to act for the vendor.—Heffron v. Armsby, 61 Mich. 505.

¶ 378. An order to a broker to buy wheat, reduced to writing by the agent of the broker in the presence of the customer and signed in the customer's name by the agent and acted upon by the broker, is not within the statute of frauds.—DeMary v. Burtenshaw's Estate, 131 Mich. 326.

See also ante § 107.

Consideration in memorandum of agreement for sale of land, see ante § 96.

Necessity for consideration to support contracts generally, see Contracts, V.

¶ 379. Where the statute requires a written contract, it requires all material parts of the contract to be expressed in a signed writing. This requires the consideration on both sides, which involves, in the case of an alleged sale, an agreement to sell and an agreement to buy and pay the price.—Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Roberts, 72 Mich. 49.

Subscribing and signing memorandum of agreement for sale of land, see ante § 97.

General rules in respect to signing instruments, see Execution of Instruments.

¶ 380. A contract for the sale of goods, wares and merchandise of the value of fifty dollars and upwards, is not valid unless signed by both the seller and purchaser.—Willebrandt v. Sisters of Mercy, 185 Mich. 366.

2. Part Payment or Earnest Money.

See also post §§ 135, 137.

Part performance of the contract, see post § 114.

General rules as to payment and tender, see Payment.

Payment and tender under sale contracts generally, see Sales, VII.

Earnest money in seller's hands as subject of garnishment for debt of vendor, see Garnishment ¶ 88.

¶ 381. The payment required by the statute of frauds is the usual payment, as the term is commonly understood, whereby the vendee unconditionally transfers money or property to the vendor which the vendor unconditionally accepts in discharge, pro tanto, of the purchase price.—Leonard v. Roth, 164 Mich. 646.

¶ 382. A verbal executory contract of sale of an automobile delivery wagon for $1,020 held valid where the terms were mutually understood and earnest money paid thereon.—Meyer v. Shapton, 178 Mich. 417.

¶ 383. Defendants entered into an oral agreement with plaintiff to purchase from him an automobile delivery wagon. A written memorandum of the terms of the sale was signed by defendants and delivered to the plaintiff. At the time of the agreement $10 was paid down and subsequently $75 was paid on the contract. In an action for refusal to accept the machine when delivered, held, that a valid oral contract existed.—Meyer v. Shapton, 178 Mich. 417.

¶ 384. One Sturback, a Finn unable to speak English, negotiated with defendant's agent for the sale of some logs to defendant. There was some dispute as to the money to be paid down to Sturback. Defendant's agent gave Sturback a letter to defendant stating that it would be safe to pay Sturback $230 on account. The defendant upon being handed the letter by Sturback wrote out an order to one of his clerks to pay that sum to Sturback and handed the order to Sturback, who, upon being informed by his interpreter as to the amount, returned the order to defendant and declared the sale off. Held, the delivery of the order by defendant to Sturback was not such a part payment as to take the sale out of the statute of frauds.—Johnson v. Morrison, 163 Mich. 322.

¶ 385. Plaintiff agreed with defendant to buy twenty-four tons of hay of defendant, plaintiff to bear the expense of baling. Plaintiff sent balers with whom defendant cooperated in doing the baling, and plaintiff paid the balers. Defendant refused to go on with the contract. Held, that plaintiff's act in paying for the baling was such a part payment as to take the case out of the statute of frauds, and entitled plaintiff to damages for breach of contract.—Driggs v. Bush, 152 Mich. 53.

¶ 386. An intervener contracted orally to purchase stock of complainant. Complainant was engaged in litigation over the title to the stock and the intervener put up the purchase money with complainant's attorney to be returned to him if complainant should not be successful in securing clear title by a specified time. Held, there was here no such payment as would take the contract out of the statute of frauds.—Leonard v. Roth, 164 Mich. 646.

¶ 387. Where earnest money is paid to an agent acting for several interests it will be regarded as belonging ratably to all, and will therefore bring all within the protection of the statute, which validates sales without delivery where earnest money is given.—Burhans v. Corey, 17 Mich. 282.

¶ 388. A subsequent part payment intended and accepted as such is sufficient to satisfy Comp. L. 1897, § 9516, with reference to the sale of personal property.—Dallavo v. Richardson, 134 Mich. 226.

¶ 389. An oral sale of railroad ties is taken out of the operation Comp. L. 1897, § 9516, by a subsequent agreement that a piece of machinery bought by the seller from the buyer of the ties is to be applied on the payment of the ties.—Dallavo v. Richardson, 134 Mich. 226.

Medium of payment generally, see Payment, I.

¶ 390. Part payment may be made in money or in anything of value.—Johnson v. Morrison, 163 Mich. 322.

§ 113. Agreement to discharge pre-existing debt.

¶ 391. Merely agreeing that merchandise should be taken as a payment of a debt without some act of cancellation of the debt is not such a "payment" as will satisfy the statute.—Gorman v. Brossard, 120 Mich. 611.

3. Part Performance or Delivery and Acceptance.

Part payment or earnest money, see ante § 110.

Part performance of agreements respecting interests in real property, see ante § 103.

Recovery for goods transferred under the contract, see post § 147.

Burden of showing delivery and acceptance under the contract, see post § 151.

Questions of law and fact as to delivery and acceptance, see post § 155.

Delivery and acceptance under contracts of sale generally, see Sales, V.

¶¶ 392, 393. A case cannot be taken out of the statute of frauds by the intention of the parties; acts, not words, are required.—Spedding v. Griggs, 196 Mich. 571.

¶ 394. A conversation in which the plaintiff asked the defendant if he thought he could purchase a car load of potatoes at 90 cents a bushel in his vicinity, to which defendant replied that he would see and if he could purchase a car load, he would do so, is not an enforceable contract, where, no memorandum was signed by either party, and no money was paid; even though the defendant went into the country and bought some potatoes following such conversation.—Ayers v. Hinkle, 145 Mich. 283.

¶ 395. In trover by an administrator against a son of the deceased, evidence of a parol agreement faithfully executed by the defendant who had made it with the deceased and his wife, and by which the defendant was to remain on the farm, manage affairs and support his parents during their lives in consideration of what there was of the property, was held admissible, notwithstanding the objection that it showed an oral arrangement required by the statute of frauds to be in writing.—Hill v. Chambers, 30 Mich. 422.

See also ante § 114.

Necessity of delivery of goods within state to make binding contract in that state, see also Contracts ¶ 378.

¶ 396. Delivery and acceptance of part of the goods purchased take the case out of the statute as to the whole.—Alderton v. Buchoz, 3 Mich. 322; Garfield v. Paris, 96 U. S. 557, 24 L. ed. 821.

¶ 397. The delivery of a portion of goods sold satisfies the statute of frauds.—Kendrick v. Hochradel, 167 Mich. 179.

¶ 398. Delivery of merchandise, to validate a contract for over $50 under the statute of frauds, must be a delivery under the contract and in pursuance of it.—Armour & Co. v. Freeman Baking Co., 197 Mich. 421.

¶ 399. In assumpsit, where plaintiffs claimed defendant had agreed to purchase a stock of apple butter for $4,800, and where the same was stored in a warehouse, and later taken back and sold by plaintiffs, and defendant denied the agreement or acceptance, the statute of frauds can be satisfied only by an unequivocal act of defendant indicating a receipt or acceptance.—Yeiter v. Campau, 174 Mich. 94.

¶ 400. Where a quantity of onions are sold by sample, and stored in one lot, to be shipped on the order of the vendees, the delivery and acceptance of one car load saves the sale from the operation of the statute of frauds, and passes the title to the entire lot to the vendees.—Gilbert v. Lichtenberg, 98 Mich. 417.

¶ 401. An oral contract for the sale of a printing press for five hundred dollars is taken out of the operation of the statute of frauds where immediately after the date of making said contract the press is removed to defendant's plant and installed by him.—Paddock v. Hatch, 169 Mich. 95.

¶ 402. Acceptance of merchandise under a contract that is invalid by the statute of frauds cannot be implied from a tender of such merchandise made on one side without referring to any contract, and from a refusal on the other to take it then for want of time to attend to it, with a promise, however, to send for it when it should be needed.—Scotten v. Sutter, 37 Mich. 526.

¶ 403. If an oral order is followed by delivery and acceptance the sale is completed and the case is taken out of the statute. So held where the vendee telegraphed cancelling the order, but upon receiving an answer that the goods had been shipped accepted them.—Sullivan v. Sullivan, 70 Mich. 583.

Title and control of goods in custody of common carrier, see Carriers, II, C; Sales, IV.

¶ 404. Delivery to a common carrier is not such delivery and acceptance as to take the sale of personal property out of the statute of frauds.—Gatiss v. Cyr, 134 Mich. 233; Kuppenheimer v. Wertheimer, 107 Mich. 77; Spedding v. Griggs, 196 Mich. 571.

¶ 405. Where a contract which was void and unenforceable under the statute of frauds was made for the sale of certain goods by plaintiff to defendant which the parties agreed should be shipped to plaintiff as consignee with bill of lading and draft attached and defendant notified, delivery to the carrier for such shipment held not delivery to defendant and not to take the case out of the statute.—Spedding v. Griggs, 196 Mich. 571.

¶ 406. Where an oral sale would otherwise be void under the statute of frauds, and there is a delivery of the goods in pursuance of the same contract to a carrier who has no separate and independent authority from the vendee to receive them, reception by the carrier does not amount to an acceptance by the vendee so as to bar the statute.—Grimes v. Van Vechten, 20 Mich. 410; Webber v. Howe, 36 Mich. 150; Smith v. Brennan, 62 Mich. 349.

¶ 407. A purchaser by verbal contract of goods does not by verbal contract with a carrier for transportation of the goods thereby make the carrier his agent to accept the goods, when the statute of frauds is involved.—Spedding v. Griggs, 196 Mich. 571.

¶ 408. Whether receipt of goods by carrier selected by vendees is such an acceptance by them as satisfies the statute in absence of writing or earnest money, quære.—Barker v. Cleveland, 19 Mich. 230.

¶ 409. It seems that acceptance by a carrier employed by the vendee is effectual to satisfy the statute of frauds, where the vendee reserves no right of personal inspection or decision.—Grimes v. Van Vechten, 20 Mich. 410.

¶ 410. Reception and assumption of custody by a carrier who is to take the goods to vendee subject to acceptance by him does not complete an oral sale so as to take it out of the statute.—Rindskopf v. DeRuyter, 39 Mich. 1.

¶ 411. Where one bought a carload of coal through a verbal order, the fact that the seller ordered the railroad company to turn the car over to the buyer is not such a delivery and acceptance as will take the oral contract of sale out of the statute of frauds, where there was nothing to show an authority by the buyer that the railroad company could accept the coal for him.—Calvert v. Schultz, 143 Mich. 441.

¶ 412. The claimed custom existing among coal dealers by which a direction to the railroad company to turn coal over to the purchaser constitutes a delivery and acceptance does not change the rule that such a delivery of an oral order does not take it out of the statute of frauds, and the proof of the acceptance of coal by purchasers under similar circumstances proves no more than that the great majority of purchasers would not insist on the defense of the statute of frauds.—Calvert v. Schultz, 143 Mich. 441.

Symbolical delivery of goods sold in general, see Sales, V.

¶ 413. Acceptance sufficient to satisfy the statute may be constructive; so held where spirituous liquors were sold by parol, vendor agreeing to furnish certain copyrighted labels which added to the value of the liquors and entered into the price and were accepted by the vendee.—Garfield v. Paris, 96 U. S. 557, 24 L. ed. 821.

¶ 414. An oral agreement to accept a quantity of stone there present in satisfaction of a debt, the buyer agreeing to send for them when desired, is void under the statute of frauds, such facts not being sufficient to show a constructive delivery so as to take the transaction out of the statute.—Gorman v. Brossard, 120 Mich. 611.

¶ 415. A party contracted to sell a quantity of wood, part of which was piled in his yard and the rest of which was afterwards hauled and piled by him. Then the vendee took possession of the wood and hired a man to repile it. Held, a sufficient delivery to take the case out of the statute.—Richards v. Burroughs, 62 Mich. 117.

¶ 416. The delivery required by the statute where no payment is made or earnest money given is not dispensed with by an agreement at the time that the vendee should take the property where it then was and the vendor not be troubled to make any delivery. —Alderton v. Buchoz, 3 Mich. 322.

¶ 417. Inquiry about the property by the buyer after it has been sold to him and left for him to take possession of without actual delivery will not amount to an act of ownership, which will take the sale out of the statute of frauds.—Alderton v. Buchoz, 3 Mich. 322.

¶ 418. In an oral sale of ponderous articles incapable of actual delivery, if the purchaser accepts them where they are, and exercises acts of control and ownership over them, it will satisfy the statute; but where it does not appear that the articles (as here, mill-irons) are ponderous, or were so regarded by the parties, that fact cannot be assumed without proof.—Alderton v. Buchoz, 3 Mich. 322.

¶ 419. Defendant had in his possession lumber culls belonging to plaintiff, and made an oral offer to plaintiff's agent to buy the same. Plaintiff accepted this offer immediately, by letter of February 17th. Shortly thereafter defendant informed plaintiff's agent that he would not take the culls, and followed this by a letter of February 22d, notifying plaintiff. Held, that this retention of possession of the culls by defendant did not constitute an acceptance so as to take the case out of the statute of frauds, under 3 Comp. Laws 1897, § 9516.—Godkin v. Weber, 154 Mich. 207. (Grant, Blair, and Moore, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 421. A sale by a salesman for a wholesale dealer to a retailer of goods for immediate delivery and goods for future delivery listed upon separate sheets and canceled in entirety the next day is not made valid under the statute of frauds by the subsequent receipt and acceptance of the part of the goods delivered immediately.—Brown v. Snider, 126 Mich. 198.

¶ 422. Where, in order to effectuate for his principal the sale of a binder, an agent included in the transaction a corn-sheller owned by him personally, which was delivered to the vendee, and for which the agent was paid by his principal, the delivery of the corn-sheller was not such a delivery of part of the goods as would take the sale of the binder out of the statute of frauds; since it passed by a transaction personal to the agent and not part of the contract for the binder.—McCormack Harvesting Machine Co. v. Cusack, 116 Mich. 647.

¶ 423. An oral purchase by two vendees of goods worth more than $50 is not taken out of the statute as to both by a subsequent acceptance of the goods by one without the other's knowledge or assent.—Chamberlain v. Dow, 10 Mich. 319.

§ 122. Delivery to and acceptance by executor or administrator.

Powers of executors and administrators in general, see Estates of Decedents, IV.

¶ 424. The administrator of a deceased vendee cannot accept goods orally ordered by his intestate and thus take the case out of the statute.—Smith v. Brennan, 62 Mich. 349.

¶ 425. Where goods ordered orally by sample reached the purchaser's warehouse after his death and were inventoried and appraised by his administrator as part of the estate, there was not such a delivery and acceptance as would satisfy the statute of frauds and preclude the seller from replevying the goods.—Smith v. Brennan, 62 Mich. 349.

III. OPERATION AND EFFECT OF STATUTE.

A. IN GENERAL; COLLATERAL AND ALTERNATIVE RIGHTS.

Effect on title or ownership, see post § 131.
Ratification or performance of oral contract, see post § 135.
Effect of execution of the contract, see post § 137.
Estoppel to urge statute, see post § 143.
Rights where statute makes the contract unenforceable by action thereon, see post § 146.
Validity of oral contract as depending on place where made, see Conflict of Laws, II.
Requisites and sufficiency of contracts in general, see Contracts.
Conflict of laws as to validity and effect of contracts, see Conflict of Laws, II.
Domestic or foreign statute as governed by place of contract, see Conflict of Laws § 15.
Actionableness of oral representation of credit made in state where no writing is required, see Conflict of Laws ¶ 88.
Adverse possession under parol grant, see Adverse Possession § 25.

Invalidity of parol agreements for commissions for sale of land, see also ante § 30.
Effect of invalidity of contracts in general, see Contracts, IV, D.
Void oral promise as defense in suit for reformation, see Reformation of Instruments.
Gift by invalid parol transfer, see Gifts § 24.
Provisions of the statute invalidating the contract when not in writing, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 1975, 1977, 1981.
Provisions of statute rendering oral contracts for sale of personalty nonenforceable, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11835.

¶ 426. A contract void under the statute of frauds is a mere nullity, and cannot be used or be binding for any purpose whatever.—Scott v. Bush, 26 Mich. 418; Lentz v. Flint & Pere Marquette R. Co., 53 Mich. 444; Raub v. Smith, 61 Mich. 543; Wardell v. Williams, 62 Mich. 50.

¶ 427. A contract void under the statute of frauds can support no rights, legal or equitable.—Kelly v. Kelly, 54 Mich. 30.

Use of void parol contract to measure damages, see post § 127.
Remedies upon breach of contracts generally, see Contracts, VII.
General rules as to damages, see Damages.
Right to damages for breach of contract for sale of lands generally, see Vendor and Purchaser, IX.

¶ 430. For the breach of a contract void under the statute there can in law be no damages, stipulated or otherwise.—Scott v. Bush, 29 Mich. 523.

¶ 431. Money advanced on an oral agreement for the sale of lands with a stipulation for its retention as damages on default in the purchaser, cannot be retained on the claim that there was a sufficient consideration for the payment growing out of collateral matter which in effect was but part of the void contract itself.—Scott v. Bush, 29 Mich. 523.

Recovery for value of land conveyed, see post § 138.
Recovery for goods transferred under nonenforceable parol contract, see post § 147.
Recovery on implied contracts generally, see Implied Contracts.
Recovery of illegal or mistaken payments generally, see Payment, VI.
Common assumpsit for performance under parol contract, see also Assumpsit § 35.
Oral invalid ratification as sufficient to make principal liable on implied contract, see Agency ¶ 393.

¶ 432. One who goes into possession under an oral contract, makes payments and cuts timber cannot maintain an action to recover back such payments.—Cilley v. Burkholder, 41 Mich. 749.

¶ 433. In an action on the common counts to recover back the value of a consideration paid, received and appropriated under a contract void under the statute of frauds, held, that the contract might be referred to to show the equitable circumstances under which the consideration was received in order to reduce the value, but that it could not be used by the plaintiff to aid him in recovering beyond the real value of such consideration. —Whipple v. Parker, 29 Mich. 369.

Use of the void contract to measure value of services, see post § 127.

Recovery upon contracts for services generally, see Master and Servant, II; and see also Implied Contracts, II.

¶ 434. There can be no recovery for services not actually performed under a parol contract of employment for a term of years. —Smith v. Chase & Baker Piano Mfg. Co., 185 Mich. 313.

¶ 435. One may recover at the agreed compensation for services actually performed under a contract of employment void under the statute of frauds.—Smith v. Chase & Baker Piano Mfg. Co., 185 Mich. 313.

¶ 436. No recovery can be had upon a quantum meruit for services performed under an agreement which is void under Pub. Acts 1913, No. 238, including in the statute of frauds every agreement, promise or contract to pay any commission for or upon the sale of any interest in real estate. —Smith v. Starke, 196 Mich. 311.

¶ 437. There can be no recovery on quantum meruit for services rendered by a broker to a purchaser of land in procuring the purchase of land where the contract is not in writing as required by the statute of frauds, Pub. Acts 1913, No. 238, § 2.—Slocum v. Smith, 195 Mich. 281.

¶ 438. Unless an agreement for the sale of land on commission is in writing as required by Comp. Laws 1897, § 9515, How. 2nd Ed. § 11399, as amended by Pub. Acts 1913, No. 238, no recovery can be had for commissions, either under the contract or under quantum meruit.—Paul v. Graham, 193 Mich. 447.

¶ 439. In a suit for work and labor performed under a contract void under the statute of frauds, evidence of the terms of the contract, as claimed by plaintiff, is admissible to show the value of plaintiff's services as agreed upon by the parties.—Moore v. Capewell Horse Nail Co., 76 Mich. 606.

¶ 440. An oral contract by a mother to convey land to her adopted child in consideration of services to be rendered by the latter, though void under the statute of frauds, may be resorted to, in an action to recover for such services, for the purpose of negativing the presumption that they were gratuitously rendered, at least if there have been such acts of part performance as would entitle plaintiff to equitable relief.—In re Williams' Estate, 106 Mich. 490.

§ 127. Use to measure damages or value.

Right to damages under void parol contract, see ante § 124.

Measure of damages for breach of contract generally, see Damages, II.

Liquidated damage clause as void because oral contract is void, see also Damages ¶ 684.

Evidence of value in general, see Values.

¶ 441. An agreement void under the statute because not written cannot be considered in measuring damages or for any other purpose.—Hillebrands v. Nibbelink, 40 Mich. 646; Sutton v. Rowley, 44 Mich. 112.

¶ 442. It is the general rule that an agreement void under the statute of frauds is void in all its parts, cannot be considered for the purpose of assessing damages, and is not good as fixing the consideration.—Smelling v. Valley, 103 Mich. 580.

¶ 443. An oral agreement to purchase land, and to convey it to a broker, in payment of his commissions on a land sale, is void under the statute of frauds and cannot serve as a basis for a recovery of the value of the lots. —McDonald v. Maltz, 78 Mich. 685.

¶ 444. In an action to recover the value of machinery which was exchanged for real estate, while no recovery can be had on the verbal agreement to sell the real estate, it is proper to show what the verbal contract was, as bearing upon the relations of the parties and the delivery and acceptance of the machinery.—Bowen v. Chandler, 172 Mich. 678.

¶ 445. Evidence of an oral option to sell real estate is competent where no question arises as to the enforcement of an executed conveyance under it, and where such evidence is offered in a suit by the holder of the option to recover his share of the profits realized on a resale of the land by a third party.—Ranney v. Donovan, 78 Mich. 318.

¶ 446. An oral agreement to convey land in consideration of personal services may be considered in estimating the value of the services in an action to recover therefor, although there have been no acts of part performance by the promisor.—Rhea v. Meyers' Estate, 111 Mich. 140.

§ 128. Void contract as consideration for subsequent promise or conveyance.

Promise invalid under the statute as consideration for other's promise, see Contracts § 131.

Void oral agreement carried into written one with terms fraudulently omitted, see Contracts ¶ 1122.

Validity of account stated based on invalid oral promise, see Account Stated ¶ 24.

¶ 447. A contract that is within the statute and void because not in writing cannot be recognized as creating a moral obligation which in its turn should be held a sufficient consideration to take any part of the contract out of the statute.—Scott v. Bush, 29 Mich. 523.

¶ 448. An oral promise to pay the debt of another, being void under the statute of frauds, is not a valid consideration for a subsequent promise in writing.—Hall v. Soule, 11 Mich. 494.

¶ 449. A promise made in consideration of an oral executory contract to deed land is void for want of consideration.—Liddle v. Needham, 39 Mich. 147.

¶ 450. Whether a mere oral promise of such a character that by the statute it would have to be in writing to be of any force constitutes of itself a sufficient consideration for another promise to render the latter binding at the time it is made, quære. Where such oral promise has been fully performed within a reasonable time, and before the promise in consideration of which it was made has been retracted, and such performance has been accepted, the defendant's promise becomes binding and can be enforced.—Detroit, H. & I. R. Co. v. Forbes, 30 Mich. 165.

Necessity that licenses to enter land be in writing, see ante § 44.

¶ 451. A contract to sell standing timber although invalid as a contract because not in writing was good as a license to cut such timber, and such timber cut before such license was revoked became the property of defendant, in replevin.—Antrim Iron Co. v. Anderson, 140 Mich. 702.

¶ 453. Defendant made a written offer to sell real estate. Plaintiffs made a written acceptance at the bottom thereof, but did not deliver the instrument with the acceptance to defendant or even show it to him. They did orally inform defendant of their acceptance and were instantly informed that the deal was off. Held, under § 9511, Statute of Frauds, requiring contracts for the sale of land to be in writing, no contract of sale resulted, and since plaintiffs, not having delivered a written acceptance, were not bound, defendant for lack of mutuality was not bound either.—Hollingshead v. Morris, 172 Mich. 126.

¶ 454. A written contract was supplemented by an oral agreement whereby one of the parties was to advance money and use it in buying an interest in land for the other. Held, that under the statute of frauds the arrangement had no force, and that as the obligation to buy could not bind the other party he could not be charged with the cost of executing such obligation.—Wetmore v. Neuberger, 44 Mich. 362.

¶ 455. Where an oral agreement is made for the transfer of a farm, and it is also agreed that the wheat growing on the farm shall be transferred, the former agreement, being void because not in writing, avoids the latter as inseparably connected with it.—Jackson v. Evans, 44 Mich. 510.

¶ 456. An oral agreement for the purchase of lands, with a stipulation that money paid down may be retained as stipulated damages, is a single contract, and under the statute is void—the agreement for forfeiture as well as the other stipulations.—Scott v. Bush, 26 Mich. 418; Scott v. Bush, 29 Mich. 523.

¶ 457. Where a written contract for the sale of personalty includes real estate also, the contract for personalty is not necessarily vitiated by noncompliance with the statute of frauds in that portion which relates to realty.—Stansell v. Leavitt, 51 Mich. 536.

See also post § 144.

Effect of oral agreement establishing boundary, see ante § 57.

Effect where transfer or conveyance is made pursuant to contract for sale of lands, see ante § 104.

Effect on title to goods transferred under parol contract of sale, see also post § 147.

Leviability of title of one heir holding deed under verbal agreement with others to care for parents, see Executions ¶ 50.

¶ 458. Under an oral arrangement between the owner of a railroad and another person for the sale to the latter of a part of the rails to be taken from the road-bed, nothing being paid and no rails taken up or delivered, title does not pass.—Ginsburg v. Cutler & Savidge Lumber Co., 85 Mich. 439.

§ 132. ——Trover, trespass or replevin for property.

Recovery for goods transferred under invalid contract, see post § 147.

¶ 459. Liquors worth $80 were sold on oral order and were shipped to the vendee by rail, and while in the possession of the railroad company, before acceptance by or delivery to the vendee, were seized on execution against him. Held, that the sale was within How. St. § 6186, and that the vendor could bring trover against the execution purchaser.—Winner v. Williams, 62 Mich. 363.

¶ 460. A party receiving a number of sheep to be returned double in number in four years cannot assert title and avoid his obligation to return the sheep on the ground that the contract is void under the statute of frauds; the contract is void in toto, no title passes and the party is liable in trover for the value of the sheep which he has converted.—Dietrich v. Hoefelmeir, 128 Mich. 145.

¶ 461. In an action for fraud in the sale of lands, perpetrated by pointing out and pretending to sell to one ignorant of the manner of describing lands in deeds, and unable to read, a parcel of valuable land, and then fraudulently deeding in lieu thereof a different and worthless parcel, evidence of the fraudulent transaction cannot be excluded on the ground that the agreement to sell the land, not being in writing, was void under the statute of frauds.—Ochsenkehl v. Jeffers, 32 Mich. 482.

¶ 462. A party who, by promising to assign a tax-purchase certificate to the owner of the land, has induced the latter not to exercise his right to redeem, cannot, after the time for redemption has expired, shield himself behind the statute.—Laing v. McKee, 13 Mich. 124.

¶ 463. The statute does not preclude a suit by a principal against his agent for money equitably due the former in consequence of a fraudulent transaction whereby the agent bought lands of his principal and sold them at a higher price.—Moore v. Mandlebaum, 8 Mich. 433.

¶ 464. Parol evidence of an agreement to make good any deficiency in the value of land agreed to be given in part payment for other land is admissible, where the deed to the latter land, having been delivered to a third person to be held until a written agreement to make good such deficiency should be executed, was fraudulently obtained by the grantee therein before the execution and delivery of such agreement, and the transaction was thereupon repudiated by the grantor.—Gillett v. Knowles, 108 Mich. 602.

Equities based on entire or partial performance, see post § 139.

Equitable remedies and relief in general, see Equity.

General law as to accounting, see Accounting Suits.

Insufficiency of void parol promise to pay another's debt to constitute primary resort of creditor in relief of other creditor of principal debtor, see also Marshalling Assets.

¶ 465. Courts of equity will not enlarge the exceptions of the statute of frauds.—Webster v. Gray, 37 Mich. 87.

¶ 466. Where complainant is not seeking to enforce the specific performance of a verbal contract, relating to an interest in land, but requests an accounting for wrongfully disposing of an interest in a mining option and for profits, he may prove himself entitled to such relief.—Quinn v. Tully, 174 Mich. 30.

§ 135. Ratification or performance of oral contract.

See also ante ¶ 253.

Sufficiency of part performance or execution of agreement in respect to real property, see ante § 103.

Part performance of contract for sale of goods, see ante § 114.

Effect of execution of contract, see post § 137.

Equities based on entire or partial performance, see post § 139.

¶ 467. A contract void under the statute is wholly, not partially, void, and cannot furnish authority to a third person to ratify it.—Grimes v. Van Vechten, 20 Mich. 410.

¶ 468. An oral contract by two persons jointly to purchase articles within the statute cannot be made effectual against both by the subsequent ratification by one of them, the contract being wholly void.—Chamberlain v. Dow, 10 Mich. 319.

§ 136. ——Of land contract by agent under parol authority.

Necessity that agencies to transfer or create interests be in writing, see ante § 72.

Execution of duplicate lease by principal as validating a lease for more than year by agent, see ante ¶ 259.

¶ 469. The absence of proof of written authority to an agent to execute a land contract is unimportant where there is full proof of ratification by both parties by demand and receipt of payment and by possession and improvement.—Hanchett v. McQueen, 32 Mich. 22; Bailey v. Cornell, 66 Mich. 107.

¶ 470. An unauthorized sale of land cannot be ratified except in writing or by such conduct as creates an estoppel; and it must be by a party informed of the facts.—Palmer v. Williams, 24 Mich. 328.

¶ 471. Ratification of agency by covendor in land contract executed for him on parol authority, though insufficient under statute of frauds to validate contract, is sufficient as to receipt of money on joint account, and renders party jointly liable to refund to vendee payments made by latter.—Wright v. Dickinson, 67 Mich. 590.

¶ 472. Where the officers of an association have given a written agreement whereby the recipient is declared entitled to a specified portion of certain described land held by the association under a lease, and this agreement is ratified and confirmed on the books of the association, the objection that a subsequent oral agreement to perfect the title and give him the interest was void under the statute of frauds was considered unimportant where this agreement also was ratified, confirmed and entered on the books, especially as the title was afterwards perfected, which fact in itself would have left the original agreement, if valid, sufficient to assure the same interest.—Compo v. Jackson Iron Co., 49 Mich. 39.

¶ 473. An oral ratification by the vendee in a written contract for the sale of lands made by his agent without authority is sufficient.—Hammond v. Hannin, 21 Mich. 374.

Executed parol license to enter on land, see also ante § 44.

Sufficiency of part performance or execution of agreement in respect to real property, see ante § 103.

¶ 474. Failure to sign a written lease does not destroy the effect of a previous arrangement that had been practically executed in part by an exchange of possession which took it out of the statute of frauds.—Switzer v. Gardner, 41 Mich. 164.

¶ 475. An oral agreement is valid so far as it has been carried out, even though when made it referred for its terms to another contract not then signed and not in fact signed afterwards, and therefore invalid. Nor can such an agreement be so revoked as to undo what has been earned under it.—Sovereign v. Ortmann, 47 Mich. 181.

¶ 476. A parol agreement that would be void under the statute of frauds may nevertheless be put in evidence in an action on it to the extent to which the parties have carried it out, since they have so far agreed to be governed by its terms.—Fuller v. Rice, 52 Mich. 435.

¶ 477. A parol agreement for the purchase of land is not open to objection in ejectment, where both litigants claim title through the same person who acquired his legal title in the consummation of such oral agreement.—Clark v. Daniels, 77 Mich. 26.

¶ 478. J. G. and her infant daughter owned certain land, to sell the infant's interest in which proceedings had been taken in chancery, and J. G. agreed with W. G. that if the latter would buy at the chancery sale, whereat a complete title was to be offered, he could have the land for a specified sum regardless of the amount of his bid, J. G.'s share to be computed accordingly. Then J. G. conveyed to W. G., who bid in the premises for more than the price agreed upon. In an action by J. G. for the purchase price, held, that she could not claim that the agreement, being oral, was void under the statute of frauds, so as to enable her to recover on the basis of the sum bid.—Gardner v. Gardner, 106 Mich. 18.

¶ 479. The statute of frauds has no application to a parol agreement by a widow, who is administratrix, to convey her dower rights to the purchaser at administratrix' sale to pay debts, the case being one of a parol contract fully executed.—Gerber v. Upton, 123 Mich. 605.

¶ 480. A logging contract with the owners of certain pine lands provided that they were to sell the other parties, on certain terms, all the white pine the latter should cut from the lands before a certain date. The signing of the contract was delayed, but meanwhile the parties made an oral agreement that the purchasers should proceed with their lumbering. The original contract was not signed after all, and the owners of the land replevied the logs which the other parties had got out and forwarded to buyers, whereupon the purchasers sued for damages. Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to all the interests which they had earned under their parol agreement so far as they had executed it, whether it made them agents or equitable owners, and that they could recover their agreed compensation or the money had and received by defendants to their use, or such damages as might appear, according to the nature of the agreement; the case was one for the jury.—Sovereign v. Ortmann, 47 Mich. 181.

§ 138. ——Recovery for value of land conveyed.

¶ 481. The statute of frauds does not preclude recovery for the price of lands actually conveyed, whether the agreement for the price is written or oral.—Holland v. Hoyt, 14 Mich. 238.

¶ 482. L. and N. agreed orally that if N. would deed land to L.'s son L. would give him his note for a certain sum. N. deeded the land but L. refused to pay. Held, that N. could not recover from him, as an oral land contract is void and furnishes no consideration for a promise, and if any undertaking to pay for the land was implied the grantee was liable upon it.—Liddle v. Needham, 39 Mich. 147.

§ 139. ——Equities based on entire or partial performance.

See also ante § 103.

Accounting or other equitable relief under void parol contract, see ante § 134.

Enforcement of partly executed parol trust, see Trusts, III.

[Note. The specific enforcement of parol land contracts because of partial performance is based on the equities of the parties, and is only in a qualified sense an exception to the statute of frauds. See Specific Performance, III.]

Sufficiency of performance to raise an equity entitling complainant to specific performance or other equitable relief, see Specific Performance, III; Rescission, II, III; Quieting Title, I; Reformation, I.

¶ 483. Payment by A. under his oral contract with B. to pay the latter's debts and obtain discharge of mortgages upon his land, B. to convey his real estate to A., cannot create an equitable lien upon the land, though perhaps recoverable in assumpsit.—Kelly v. Kelly, 54 Mich. 30.

¶ 484. One who conveys land to the purchase of which both he and his grantee have contributed, relying merely upon the latter to do equity as between them, is remediless under the statute of frauds.—McCarn v. Wilcox, 106 Mich. 64.

¶ 485. A parol gift of land followed by possession and improvements makes the donee the equitable owner of the land.—Maas v. Anchor Fire Ins. Co. of Cincinnati, Ohio, 148 Mich. 432.

¶ 486. The statute of frauds has no application to a contract entered into by the president of a paper company, without authority from the board of directors, with a railroad for the construction and use of a sidetrack, where the railroad company performed by constructing and using the sidetrack, since such performance took it, at least in equity, out of the operation of the statute.—Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Chicago, K. & S. Ry. Co., 132 Mich. 324.

¶ 487. A contract or permit to cut timber, though not executed by one whose authority appeared to be in writing and therefore inadequate under the statute of frauds to convey title to the standing trees, was valid in equity as a parol contract partly, if not fully, performed, in view of the full payment of consideration and the work done in reliance upon it; and the prosecution of trespass by a subsequent purchaser of the land charged with knowledge of the licensee's operation, was enjoined.—Oconto Co. v. Lundquist, 119 Mich. 264.

¶ 488. The following offer by parol accepted by performance is held to be a binding contract to convey, and effective against subsequent grantees of the original owner: "Right here I will give you an acre of land just as long as you will occupy it for a school. If you will build a school-house here, you will have it just as long as you will keep school in it. It shall be yours. I will give you a deed of this land if you will put a school-house on it."—Greenwood v. School District No. 4 of Napoleon Township, 126 Mich. 81.

¶ 489. On accounting and partition of partnership assets, the statute of frauds is no obstacle to treating lands as part of such assets where the partnership agreement has been entered upon and partially performed, though one partner holds the legal title and has made no conveyance of any interest in it to the other partner.—Chase v. Angell, 148 Mich. 1.

¶ 490. For the purpose of protecting in equity the rights of a bona fide purchaser in possession under an oral contract, who has fully performed and has made improvements, the oral contract is valid and enforceable.—Atkinson v. Akin, 197 Mich. 289.

§ 140. Tenancy under void lease.

Necessity that leases be in writing, see ante § 67.

Requisites and sufficiency of writing, see ante § 101.

Continuance of tenant in possession under parol agreement for lease as constituting part performance, see ante § 106.

Right to institute summary proceedings at end of year against tenant in possession under parol lease valid for one year only, see Forcible Entry § 9.

¶ 491. Though an oral lease for more than a year is void, such a lease, reserving an annual rent under which the lessee has been put in possession, will be a good lease from year to year until terminated by notice.—Morrill v. Mackman, 24 Mich. 279.

¶ 492. Leases for more than one year are invalid if executed by an agent not authorized in writing; but when the lessee has been put in possession and has enjoyed the premises for a full year, the executed agreement is good for that period at least, and the lessee is liable for the accrued rent.—Toan v. Pline, 60 Mich. 385.

¶ 493. A lessee, who, having entered upon the performance of an oral contract that he should have a two years' longer term for clearing certain land, and who, having made part of the clearing could have enforced the agreement by a resort to equity, was not allowed to say that he was not bound to pay the consideration agreed upon as a condition to his continued occupancy.—Smelling v. Valley, 103 Mich. 580.

¶ 494. In an action for use and occupation, a void lease, under which the defendant entered into possession, is admissible to show the nature of his holding.—McIntosh v. Hodges, 110 Mich. 319.

¶ 495. Defendant received from complainant an absolute deed of realty as security for money loaned. Third parties obtained a judgment against complainant and levied execution on the premises. Defendant, acting on behalf of complainant, bought in the title obtained at the execution sale, by said third parties. Held, defendant stood in a fiduciary relation to complainant, and in a suit by the latter to redeem could not invoke the statute of frauds.—Williams v. Bolt, 170 Mich. 517.

¶ 496. The statute of frauds does not apply to an oral copartnership agreement concerning land, where the plaintiff who has the title and whom the statute is designed to protect, states that the defendant has paid for and should have an undivided half interest.—Edwards v. Zuck, 171 Mich. 29.

¶ 497. Intervener contracted orally to buy stock of complainant. Complainant subsequently pledged the stock to defendant. In a suit by complainant to compel a retransfer of the stock, which suit was prosecuted by the intervener, held, defendant could raise the statute of frauds as invalidating said contract despite the fact that complainant ratified it.—Leonard v. Roth, 164 Mich. 646.

¶ 498. If the parties to a sale that would be void under the statute of frauds choose to treat it as valid, it will be so as to them, and may become effectual for all purposes. —Spalding v. Archibald, 52 Mich. 365.

§ 143. Estoppel to urge statute.

Invalid oral contract as basis for estoppel, see Estoppel § 42.

Inefficacy of estoppel to impart validity to void contracts, see Estoppel § 51.

Narrowed operation of estoppel in pais because of effect of statute, see Estoppel ¶ 222.

Building and renting house on land held under parol agreement as estoppel to claim it as movable against paramount owner, see Fixtures ¶ 63.

¶ 499. A promise void under the statute of frauds cannot be enforced as an estoppel where the party has not been misled as to the facts. Accordingly, where an administratrix promised one that if the latter would attend a sale of real estate to be made by her and bid a certain amount her right of dower in the land should pass by the sale, it was held that she was not thereby estopped from claiming it.—Wright v. De Groff, 14 Mich. 164.

¶ 500. The doctrine of estoppel by acts in pais cannot be so applied as to transfer or extinguish interests which the law provides shall pass by writing only.—Showers v. Robinson, 43 Mich. 502.

¶ 501. The doctrine of estoppel by actions, oral statements or silence cannot have the effect to pass title to land.—Hayes v. Livingston, 34 Mich. 384; Nims v. Sherman, 43 Mich. 45; White v. Hapeman, 43 Mich. 267; First Nat. Bank of Kalamazoo v. McAllister, 46 Mich. 397; Shaw v. Chambers, 48 Mich. 355; De Mill v. Moffat, 49 Mich. 125.

¶ 504. Interest in land cannot rest on an estoppel alone, this being forbidden by the statute of frauds.—Wilson v. Muskegon, G. R. & I. R. Co., 132 Mich. 469.

¶ 505. Oral estoppel cannot pass the right to the permanent possession of land.—White v. Hapeman, 43 Mich. 267.

¶ 506. Spoken words will not by estoppel establish a title to land in the absence of the formal conveyances required by the statute of frauds, unless in cases of doubtful and disputed claims and cases where the facts are not of record and not readily accessible. —Shaw v. Chambers, 48 Mich. 355.

¶ 507. The statute of frauds prevents the passing of title to realty by parol, and this cannot be done any more under the guise of an estoppel, in the absence of fraud, and when the estoppel consists only of an implied assent, than by showing a direct parol contract.—Huyck v. Bailey, 100 Mich. 223.

¶ 509. Where defendant's grantor at the time of the formation of a subdivision did not join in a building restriction imposed on adjacent property, but later on acquired a portion of such property in part consideration of his agreement that the entire tract should be subject to the restriction, same being recited in the deed to him, which however was not signed by him, it was held that defendant having notice of the agreement under which its grantor acquired the title to the property and that such agreement had been made by its grantor and partially performed, it was estopped to invoke the statute of frauds to enable it to do what it knew before it purchased it its grantor promised he would not do.—Hartz v. Kales Realty Co., 178 Mich. 560.

Agreements affecting fencing and boundaries, see also ante § 57.

¶ 510. Unless the attempt to settle a doubtful boundary is honestly made in view of a question about it, the statute of frauds will prevent mere acquiescence in the boundary from operating as an estoppel.—Cronin v. Gore, 38 Mich. 381.

¶ 511. Estoppel to question a boundary settled by agreement relied on by the parties does not amount to a transfer of land titles by estoppel in violation of the statute of frauds; since the statute does not apply to boundaries.—Pittsburgh & L. A. Iron Co. v. Lake Superior Iron Co., 118 Mich. 109. Writ of error dismissed in 178 U. S. 270, 44 L. ed. 1065, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 931.

B. RIGHTS UNDER CONTRACTS UNENFORCEABLE BY ACTION THEREON; SALE CONTRACTS.

Provisions of the statute as to nonenforceability of the contract, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11835, ¶ 1.

Necessity that sales of goods be in writing generally, see ante § 34.

Requisites and sufficiency of writing or part performance of contract for sale of goods, see ante II, C.

Effect where statute renders parol contract void, see ante § 123.

Void contract as consideration for subsequent promise, see ante § 128.

Trover, trespass or replevin of property transferred under void parol contract, see ante § 132.

Effect of execution of void parol contract, see ante § 137.

Estoppel to urge statute of frauds, see ante § 143.

Remedies under contract for sale of goods generally, see Sales.

§ 147. Recovery for goods transferred under invalid contract.

Right to recover on implied contract, see also ante § 125.

Recovery of property transferred under void contract, see ante § 132.

¶ 512. Where, under an arrangement for the exchange of personal property for real estate, a bill of sale is to be executed by the vendor, and the vendee receives and accepts the goods, but refuses to convey the real estate, the agreement not being in writing, the title to the personal property passes without such bill of sale, and the vendor can recover its value.—Harris Photographic Supply Co. v. Fisher, 81 Mich. 136.

§ 148. Actions for fraud and not on the sale.

See also ante § 133.

Remedies for fraud and deceit generally, see Fraud.

¶ 513. The statute of frauds was not involved in an action to recover for the fraudulent conversion of corporate stock, where plaintiff did not seek to recover for a breach of the verbal agreement in question to take over the stock in certain contingencies, but claimed that the promises were made in pursuance of a conspiracy and fraudulently, for the purpose of obtaining from him his stock.—McNaughton v. Smith, 136 Mich. 368.

IV. PLEADING, EVIDENCE AND PRACTICE.

[Note. The present division is restricted to pleading, urging and proving the fact that the contract or transfer is within the statute. Remedial rights and procedure pertaining to actions based on or arising from the contract or deed are fully treated in the appropriate specific topics, e. g., Contracts, X; Sales, VIII, IX; Vendors and Purchasers, XII; Assumpsit; Conversion; Replevin; Ejectment; etc. See also cross-references which follow.]

Recovery of damages under void parol contract, see ante § 124.

Recovery on implied contract where parol agreement void under the statute, see ante § 125.

Recovery for services rendered under void parol contract, see ante § 126.

Trover, trespass or replevin for property transferred under void parol contract, see ante § 132.

Recovery for fraud and not on the parol contract, see ante §§ 133, 148.

Recovery for goods transferred under invalid contract, see ante § 147.

Equities based on entire or partial performance of parol contract, see ante § 139.

Common assumpsit for performance under parol contract, see Assumpsit § 35.

Promises for benefit of third persons, who may sue, see Contracts § 13.

General law as to pleading statutes, see Pleading, I.

General rules as to anticipating defenses, see Pleading, III.

¶ 514. A declaration on a contract need not contain allegations taking it out of the statute of frauds; since these are matters of proof.—Harris Photographic Co. v. Fisher, 81 Mich. 136.

¶ 515. A declaration alleging that defendant proposed in writing to pay plaintiff a specified sum for a deed to certain lands, that plaintiff accepted the offer, and afterwards tendered the deed, but that defendant refused payment, is not defective in failing to aver that plaintiff's acceptance was in writing.—Kroll v. Diamond Match Co., 106 Mich. 127.

¶ 516. It is not necessary in pleading to aver that a contract required by the statute of frauds to be in writing was reduced to writing. It is enough to aver that a contract was made, which imports a valid contract, and admits the requisite proof to show its validity.—Stearns v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 112 Mich. 651.

¶ 517. A declaration on a guaranty within the purview of the statute of frauds need not aver that the guaranty was in writing, or that the undertaking guaranteed was made with the formalities required by the statute. —Dayton v. Williams, 2 D. 31.

¶ 518. A declaration in a suit for the breach of a contract for the sale of personal property exceeding $50 in value, in exchange for real estate to be conveyed to the vendor, need not aver that the agreement in relation to the real estate was in writing, or that there was a part delivery and acceptance of the personal property, or any payment made on account of its purchase, in order to take the case out of the statute of frauds; such facts, if existing, being matters of proof on the trial.—Harris Photographic Supply Co. v. Fisher, 81 Mich. 136.

¶ 519. An averment in a declaration that a contract was made between the parties to the suit imports a valid contract, and renders proof admissible to show that the contract was in writing, when essential to its validity under the statute of frauds.—Stearns v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 112 Mich. 651.

General law as to defensive pleading, see Pleading, III.

Scope of the general issue in general, see Pleading, IX.

¶ 520. The scope of the plea of the general issue is as a general rule a denial of every material averment of fact in the declaration, and under this plea it may be proved that the contract sued on was unenforceable under the statute of frauds although no notice was given of this defense, and the declaration did not show whether or not the contract sued on was obnoxious to the statute.—Sprague v. Hosie, 155 Mich. 30.

¶ 521. The defense of the statute of frauds is available under a plea of the general issue. —Third Nat. Bank of New York v. Steel, 129 Mich. 434.

¶ 522. The question of the application of the statute of frauds cannot be raised by demurrer to the declaration.—First Nat. Bank of Ovid v. Steel, 136 Mich. 588.

¶ 523. A bill to enforce an agreement involving an interest in land is demurrable if it appears that the agreement is void under the statute of frauds; and even though it does not appear, the defect is involved in the case. But the defense may be lost by not insisting on it.—Eveland v. Stephenson, 45 Mich. 394.

See also post § 154.

Presumption as to time of payment of land, see also ante ¶ 335.

General law as to presumptions and burden of proof, see Evidence, II.

Presumption as to validity of oral contract under law of other state, see Evidence § 59.

¶ 524. Both the delivery and acceptance of personal property must be established in order to save an oral sale of goods worth more than $50 from the operation of the statute of frauds, and the burden of proof rests upon the vendor.—Harris Photographic Supply Co. v. Fisher, 81 Mich. 136.

¶ 526. One who counts on a contract not to be performed within a year from the time of its making must show that the contract, or a memorandum of it, was reduced to writing and signed by the defendant or on his behalf.—Palmer v. Marquette & P. Rolling Mill Co., 82 Mich. 274.

¶ 527. The rule adopted by courts of equity in suits to enforce the specific performance of oral contracts for the sale of land, that a party who sets up part performance to take the contract out of the statute of frauds must show acts unequivocally referring to and resulting from that agreement, and done with a direct view to its performance, is equally applicable to actions at law founded upon contract.—Sullivan v. Ross's Estate, 98 Mich. 570.

Void parol contract as evidence of value of services, see ante § 126.

Void parol contract as evidence of damages or value, see ante § 127.

Right to put in evidence parol contract partly or wholly executed, see ante §§ 135, 137.

Right to refer to the contract to show equitable circumstances under which consideration paid, see ante ¶ 433.

Inadmissibility of oral evidence of title or ownership of lands, see Evidence § 114.

Admissibility of writings not satisfying the statute, see Evidence §§ 494, 497.

Rule requiring writing conformable to statute of frauds as best evidence, see Evidence, IV, A.

¶ 528. Where it is sought to charge a corporation on an obligation which, if it exists, is collateral and necessary to be in writing, for money lent to its president and alleged to have been received by it, testimony by plaintiff as to conferences with such president or with other officers of defendant is incompetent for the purpose of connecting entries upon defendant's books with the president's individual notes executed to plaintiff, and to show that such notes are in fact the company's.—Baumann v. Manistee Salt & Lumber Co., 94 Mich. 363.

¶ 529. In an action by C. against A. upon a void oral guaranty the record of an action by C. against B. is admissible to show that the two actions are based upon the identical claim, and that it was still in existence and uncanceled and that C. never discharged B. from liability.—Dupuis v. Interior Construction & Imp. Co., 88 Mich. 103.

¶ 530. One who sues for the price of goods which he claims to have furnished a third party upon defendant's agreement to pay for the same, may testify that he never presented a bill for the goods to such third party or made any claim upon him, and that he did not look to him in any way; this as tending to exclude any claim that defendant may make under the statute of frauds.—Rossman v. Bock, 97 Mich. 430.

Parol evidence to aid written agreement to answer for another, see also ante § 86.
Parol evidence to aid written agreement not to be performed in one year, see ante § 87.
Parol evidence to aid contract for sale of lands, see also ante § 94.
Parol evidence to aid description of land in contract for its sale, see also ante ¶ 95.
Parol evidence in aid of note, memorandum or bill of sale of goods, see also ante § 107.
General rules as to parol evidence to explain or vary writings, see Evidence, V.

¶ 531. Because of the statute requiring a promise to answer for the debt of another to be in writing, it cannot be shown orally that such a contract in writing and signed only by the president of a bank as an individual was in fact the contract of the bank by which it undertook to guarantee sureties on a note discounted by the bank.—First Nat. Bank of Sturgis v. Bennett, 33 Mich. 520.

¶ 532. The statute of frauds is against extending on parol testimony an ambiguous description in a mortgage, unless upon positive proofs.—Hurst v. Beaver, 50 Mich. 612.

¶ 533. The sufficiency, under the statute, of a description of land in a contract for its sale is a question which arises on the face of the paper; and, it seems, should be settled by inspection thereof before the introduction of extrinsic evidence to connect the contract with any particular premises.—Eggleston v. Wagner, 46 Mich. 610.

¶ 534. It cannot be shown by parol that goods mentioned in a contract of sale, which is signed by the purchaser only, were to be manufactured by the vendor, where there is nothing in the contract to show that the goods were not in existence.—Willebrandt v. Sisters of Mercy, 185 Mich. 366.

Sufficiency of memorandum of agreement for commissions on sale of land, see ante § 90.
Sufficiency of note or memorandum of contract for land, see ante § 93.
Sufficiency of note, or memorandum of sale of goods, see ante § 107.
General law as to weight and sufficiency of evidence, see Evidence, X.

¶ 535. Goods being found by two jointly in the St. Clair river, it was agreed that defendant should sell the same and divide the proceeds. Suit being brought upon this agreement, defendant claimed that under the statute relative to lost goods no sale could lawfully have been made within a year, and the agreement, which was not in writing, was therefore void. Held that, to render the statute applicable, he should have shown that the finding was within the state.—Cummings v. Stone, 13 Mich. 70.

¶ 536. After two owners of a mill had hired plaintiff to run it and to cut their stock of logs for a stated price per thousand, defendant, before much had been done under the contract, bought the interest of the owner in the mill but not in the logs, and told plaintiff that he took his vendor's place in the contract; relying upon which plaintiff went on with the work. Held, that there was evidence of an original promise by the vendee, not within the statute of frauds, to pay in connection with his co-owner for work subsequently done under the contract.—Franks v. Stevens, 82 Mich. 192.

¶ 537. Evidence that S., on presentation of a hotel bill due from P. to G., orally promised to pay it, and that G. never afterwards looked to P. for payment, and that at the time P. was lumbering under a contract with S., who was furnishing him advances and supplies, supports a finding that it was understood P. should be released, and S. substituted as debtor.—Green v. Solomon, 80 Mich. 234.

¶ 538. In the matter of a claim against an estate under an alleged agreement by the decedent to pay for work done upon decedent's farm for claimant's father, who was the lessee, testimony that claimant's labor enhanced the value of the farm, was insufficient to take the case out of the statute of frauds in the absence of testimony that this was a consideration for the contract, or that the father was not correspondingly benefited by his increase in the crops.—Bristol v. Sutton, 119 Mich. 693.

¶ 539. A claim that the defendant in consideration of the promise of a material man to withhold a lien, agreed to pay for materials furnished a contractor for use in a building before he abandoned work thereon, held not established by the evidence.—Central City Lumber Co. v. Weber, 184 Mich. 563.

¶ 540. Evidence that defendant told plaintiff that he would have some work for him, and that L. would see him about it; that on request of L. plaintiff met L., and gave him a price on the work, but afterwards, suspecting L.'s responsibility, told defendant that he had found that L.'s credit was no good, whereupon defendant said that it was all right, that he (defendant) was putting money into the matter and helping L. along, that all the money would go through his (defendant's) hands, and that he would pay plaintiff—is sufficient to justify a jury in finding a direct promise by defendant to pay for the work, although contradicted by defendant's evidence.—Wenzel v. Johnston, 112 Mich. 243.

¶ 541. A judgment for the seller of building materials against a husband and wife in assumpsit for the sale price thereof, will not be reversed on the ground that the wife's agreement was void under the statute of frauds or as an agreement to pay for her husband's debt; where plaintiff claimed that although the lumber was originally sold to the husband, after the first car load was shipped, and when he was in condition to recover it back, a new arrangement was made by which the material was to go into a building to be erected upon land owned by the wife, though to be occupied by both defendants, and the balance of the material was shipped, both defendants agreeing to pay for all such material, and where the record states that plaintiff introduced testimony in support of such claim, but does not set forth the evidence, although both defendants denied such new agreement.—Reelman v. Grosfend, 140 Mich. 681.

¶ 542. Testimony of the proposed purchaser under a written contract for the sale of personal property which omitted to name the purchase price, that the seller estimated the property to be worth from $60 to $150, but that witness had never seen it, is insufficient to bring the contract within the statute of frauds as being for the sale of chattels of the value of $50 or more.—Slesinger v. Bresler, 110 Mich. 198.

¶ 543. In an action to recover the market price of certain lard, where a verbal order for over $50 void under the Statute of Frauds, Comp. Laws 1897, § 9516, How. 2nd Ed., § 11400, was made, evidence held insufficient to show that delivery was intended by plaintiff to be on such order and at the contract price.—Armour & Co. v. Freeman Baking Co., 197 Mich. 421.

¶ 544. One will not be permitted to avail himself, as part performance, of acts that by numerous voluntary writings he has referred to another and a different transaction.—Sullivan v. Ross's Estate, 98 Mich. 570.

General law as to questions of law and fact, see Trial, VI.

¶ 546. The question of whether there was a delivery and acceptance of a horse satisfying the statute of frauds is, on conflicting evidence, one for the jury.—Kendrick v. Hochradel, 167 Mich. 179.

¶ 547. The existence of an agreement or original promise on the part of an owner to pay for lumber alleged to have been sold, is a question of fact, when the evidence is conflicting as to whether the seller of the lumber trusted the owner, for such lumber, or gave credit to a carpenter who bid for the work.—Temple v. Goldsmith, 118 Mich. 172.

¶ 548. Where there is evidence that the seller sold a bill of goods to the alleged promisor rather than to his lessee, and that contemporaneously and as one transaction the promisor agreed to pay for other goods which the lessee was then using, it is for the jury to say whether the promise was direct as a whole or was within the statute as a promise to pay another's debt.—Hake v. Solomon, 62 Mich. 377.

¶ 549. Where there was a jury question as to whether the goods were sold to the promisor or to a dealer, it was proper to refuse a binding charge that the oral promise to pay for them was one to answer for the debt of another, and proper to leave it to the jury to find which was the buyer with instructions that the promise was invalid if it was to pay another's debt, but valid if it was a promise to pay the price of a direct sale of goods delivered to another.—Hake v. Solomon, 62 Mich. 377.

¶ 550. Whether an oral promise to pay for the plastering on a building was an original promise by the owner, or was collateral to the principal contractor's promise, was for the jury on evidence that the owner's prospective son-in-law, employed as a workman by the principal contractor, accompanied the principal contractor at the time the latter made a contract for it; that afterward, on hearing that the principal contractor was not financially responsible, the plastering contractor inquired of such son-in-law and was informed that he expected to live in the house and that the owner would pay for the plastering, or see that it was paid for; and that the plastering contractor said he would not do the work unless the owner paid for it, there being some evidence also that the son-in-law was an agent of the owner for the purpose of making the promise.—Wilhelm v. Voss, 118 Mich. 106.

¶ 551. Whether the contract was an original promise or one to answer for another's debt was a jury question on evidence that a building contractor to whom it had been furnished failed to pay, whereupon the plaintiff material man refused to furnish more, and the owner then promised that, since he wanted the job finished, he would pay for the lumber furnished and to be furnished.—Haak v. Kellogg, 146 Mich. 541.

¶ 551a. Defendant's tenant went to plaintiff's mill to get, on credit, some seed for the farm. Plaintiff's clerk called up the defendant by telephone and talked about the payment for the seed. The clerk testified that the sale was to the defendant, and he agreed to pay. The defendant's testimony as to the telephone conversation, and also the original order and other correspondence between the plaintiff and defendant, showed the defendant to be the guarantor of payment, but not the purchaser. Held, it was a question for the jury whether defendant agreed to pay or was simply the maker of a guaranty, required by Comp. L. 1897, § 9515, to be in writing.—Saginaw Milling Co. v. Mower, 154 Mich. 620.

¶ 552. A finding of the jury that the defendant in assumpsit for the price of supplies furnished a third party, understood, through its officers and agents, that such goods were being furnished entirely on the credit of defendant, and that defendant would pay for them, was supported by the evidence, where it appeared that such third party threatened to abandon a contract with defendant on account of failure to secure such supplies, and that thereupon defendant's superintendent gave such third party a letter of recommendation to plaintiff, with instructions to get the supplies there; that plaintiff after filling the first order for supplies upon such recommendation charged them upon the books to defendant and a few days thereafter informed such superintendent that he was furnishing such supplies solely on defendant's credit; that monthly bills were rendered to defendant, which made no objection to any of them until the completion of the contract; that defendant's superintendent took possession of the supplies left over, saying that defendant would have to pay for them; and the statute of frauds does not apply.—Hagadorn v. Stronach Lumber Co., 81 Mich. 56.

¶ 553. A sale by a wholesale dealer of goods for immediate delivery and future delivery, listed upon separate sheets, and containing different terms of payment is sufficient to justify submitting to the jury the question of whether the contract is entire, so as to take it out of the statute of frauds upon acceptance by the purchaser of the part of the goods shipped immediately.—Brown v. Snider, 126 Mich. 198.

¶ 554. Evidence held to present a question for the jury whether an oral agreement was made between plaintiff and defendant, prior to the organization of a corporation, for a sharing in the profits and losses of the venture, so to render it, if made, not invalid within the statute of frauds, as an agreement not in writing to pay the debt of another.—Lowitz v. Kimmerle, 221 Fed. 857. Writ of certiorari denied, 238 U. S. 639, 59 L. ed. 1501, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 901.

¶ 555. Where several oral contracts of employment had been entered into, and it was contended that the contract was within the statute of frauds, but the only agreement relied on was one to be performed within one year it was properly submitted to the jury.—Galvin v. Detroit Steering Wheel & Windshield Co., 176 Mich. 569.

¶ 556. In an action for goods sold and delivered, in which the issue was whether the agreement of the defendant was void as a mere verbal undertaking to answer for the debt of another, testimony from which the jury could have inferred that defendant's obligation was that of an original purchaser, warranted the refusal to direct a verdict for defendant.—Butters Salt & Lumber Co. v. Vogel, 135 Mich. 381.

¶ 557. In an action to recover for goods purchased by defendant's alleged agent, where the defense was that the goods were purchased by such agent for her personal account, an instruction that if the goods were not purchased with the authority of defendant, he would not be bound by a promise to pay unless in writing and on good consideration held proper.—Feist v. Root, 189 Mich. 595.

¶ 558. Contractors for the construction of a railroad gave their workmen certificates of the amount due them, which were presented to and accepted by the railroad company. Upon these certificates the plaintiffs furnished goods which they charged to the contractors. In a suit brought against the contractors to recover the price it was made a question before the jury whether the goods were furnished on the credit of the contractors, or of third persons who, according to some of the evidence, were to make advances. The jury were charged that if the goods were furnished under an arrangement with the contractors, or if they subsequently assented to the goods being charged to them—in either case they would be liable. Whether the latter branch of this charge was correct, quære; the court being equally divided on the question.—Farwell v. Dewey, 12 Mich. 436.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

TREATS of transfers or conveyances of property with intent or effect to defraud or hinder third persons, creditors of the transferor or to whom he owes some duty or obligation, especially those obnoxious to Comp. L. 1915, chapters 231-233 and to the Bulk Sales Law (Comp. L. 1915, chapter 122). It excludes preferential or fraudulent assignments for creditors (see Assignments for Creditors), transfers voidable under the Bankruptcy Law (see Bankruptcy), chattel mortgages or conditional sales voidable because not filed or accompanied by change of possession (see Chattel Mortgages; Sales, XII), and illegal preferences by failing or insolvent corporations (see Corporations, XXIII). The operation and effect of the Recording Acts and the bona fide taker doctrine are treated in Notice and Record of Title. Bills in aid of execution are treated in Creditors' Suits.

Invalidity of conveyances made to hinder, delay or defraud creditors, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 11998-12003.
Conveyances embraced by statutory prohibition of transfers in fraud of creditors, see Comp. L. 1915, § 12003.

¶ 1. The question of fraud in a conveyance by a debtor to his creditor must be determined by the state of affairs at the time of the conveyance.—Rathbone v. Maltz, 155 Mich. 306.

¶ 2. A conveyance valid when made cannot be invalidated by subsequent acts of the grantor, or by creation of subsequent debts. —Page v. Kendrick, 10 Mich. 300.

¶ 3. Where a bill in aid of execution is filed to reach land which has been previously conveyed without fraudulent intent, the grantee's right must be determined by the original nature of the transactions, and cannot be made to depend on later dealings with other lands which are not involved in the litigation.—First Nat. Bank v. McAllister, 46 Mich. 397.

¶ 3a. Mere ignorance on the part of the attaching creditor that the debtor's interest had been assigned at the time of the levy will not enable such attaching creditor to treat the assignment as invalid and to regard the debtor as still having an interest, where the assignment was prior in time and was not found to be fraudulent in fact and where value was paid and the assignee was in possession.—Dumas v. Geer, 144 Mich. 377.

¶ 4. The statute which allows creditors to treat certain dealings as absolutely void confines their redress to frauds aimed against creditors, and does not reach frauds against the debtor himself.—Lewis v. Rice, 61 Mich. 97.

§ 2. Intent to defraud or hinder.

Implied or constructive fraud, see post § 3.
Failure to record as badge, see post § 4.
Making discharged mortgage appear as lien, see post § 5.
Acquiescence of debtor in loss of property, see post § 6.
Necessity of fraudulent intent to set aside transfer as to subsequent creditors, see post § 95.
Intent to defraud as determinative of creditors against whom invalid, see post § 89, ¶ 436.
Necessity for actual intent to defraud on transfer from one spouse to other, see post ¶ 210.
Necessity for an actual fraudulent design to defeat voluntary conveyance, see also post ¶ 123.
Effect of intent to defraud and hinder upon rights of bona fide purchaser, see also post ¶ 528.
Presumption of good faith from payment of consideration, see post ¶ 109.
Instructions as to intent to defraud or hinder, see post ¶ 88.
Intent to defraud or hinder as question for jury, see post ¶¶ 80-86.
Admissibility and sufficiency of evidence of intent to defraud or hinder, see post ¶¶ 64, 66, 67, 69-72, 74.
Necessity for actual fraudulent design to defeat voluntary conveyance as against existing creditors, see also post ¶ 442.
Fraudulent intent as question of fact, see Comp. L. 1915, § 12001.

¶ 5. If a conveyance is made with intent to hinder or delay or defraud the grantor's creditors in collecting their demands, it is fraudulent as to them.—Corbitt v. Cutcheon, 79 Mich. 41.

¶ 6. As against a judgment creditor proceeding with diligence, any disposition of property made with a direct design of defeating his remedy is fraudulent and void. —Nelson v. Ferris, 30 Mich. 497.

¶ 7. An agreement between a mortgagor and mortgagee for the sale of the land, and extension of the time of payment, although not per se fraudulent as to creditors, is rendered void ab initio by the use of said agreement as a means to defraud creditors.—Bigelow v. Sheehan, 150 Mich. 507.

§ 3. ——Implied or constructive fraud.

Presumptions and inferences of fraud, see post § 18.

¶ 8. Acts are constructively fraudulent as to creditors when injurious to their rights, without of necessity involving actual fraud or an intent to defraud.—Sweet v. Converse, 88 Mich. 1.

¶ 9. Under How. St., § 6203, providing that every conveyance or assignment made to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors is void, a conveyance or assignment is void if it operates to delay, hinder or defraud creditors, even though there is no actual fraud, and though fraud was not practiced or intended to be practiced upon the part of the grantee or assignee.—Cutcheon v. Buchanan, 88 Mich. 594.

Long delay in recordation as evidence of fraud, see also post ¶ 614.

Delay in recordation as evidence of fraud, see also post ¶ 318.

Withholding of chattel mortgage from files to shield mortgagor, see Chattel Mortgages § 55.

¶ 10. Withholding conveyances of real estate from record does not tend to show fraud. —Blish v. Collins, 68 Mich. 542.

¶ 11. In a case where a bank has been given by a debtor a land contract and mortgage, and the same have not been recorded, these will not be held void as to creditors except on a showing of fraud.—Haug v. Third Nat. Bank, 95 Mich. 249.

¶ 12. Failure to record a mortgage operated as a legal fraud upon creditors from whom the mortgagor was enabled to obtain credit which they would not have extended had the mortgage been recorded.—Belcher v. Curtis, 119 Mich. 1.

Assertion of mortgage lien by mortgagee after discharge as fraud upon other creditors of mortgagor, see Chattel Mortgages § 119.

¶ 13. If a mortgage is in fact paid, but instead of being discharged is fraudulently assigned with intent to defraud creditors, it is not a valid lien; and those who have received a grant of the property from the mortgagor's assignee in bankruptcy are entitled to have the mortgage declared paid, and the fraudulent assignment adjudged void.—McMaster v. Campbell, 41 Mich. 513.

¶ 14. The mortgagee of a stock of goods foreclosed and bid it in, but allowed the mortgagor to remain in possession and continue the business under an arrangement that he should have title to the stock when he paid the amount of the mortgage. This was paid; but the mortgagee, at the mortgagor's request, and to hinder creditors, sold the stock to a third person without consideration, who secretly sold to the mortgagor, the latter being still in possession, and afterwards the stock was transferred ostensibly by such third person to a bona fide purchaser. Held, that under the arrangement the mortgagor held an equitable title, which became a legal one on payment; that the transfer to the third person was void, and that the notes in his possession given by the bona fide purchaser could be garnished as the mortgagor's property by his creditors.—Robinson v. Smith, 63 Mich. 350.

¶ 15. The failure of a mortgagee of chattels to indorse payments on the mortgage, or a copy thereof, on file in the office of the township or city clerk, or to volunteer a statement of the amount unpaid to a creditor of the mortgagor who refuses to recognize the validity of the mortgage for any sum or to ask the amount due on the mortgage, will not avoid it as to creditors.—Anderson v. Cook, 100 Mich. 621.

¶ 16. Where property is sold by one not its true owner, the rights of the owner's creditors to follow the same are not affected by the owner's acquiescence in the sale.—Pierson & Hough Co. v. Noret, 154 Mich. 267.

§ 7. Hindering and delaying transfers.

Conversion and secretion of assets from levy, see post § 8.

Transfers on eve of suit or levy, see post § 9.

Bulk sales of merchandise, see post §§ 10-12.

Transfer back to grantor or seller, see post § 13.

Chattel mortgages fraudulent as to creditors and third persons, see Chattel Mortgages §§ 55-60.

Nonleviability of lands purchased and placed directly in name of third person, see Executions § 25.

Withdrawal and redeposit in fraud of creditors as terminating bank's debt to depositor, see Banking ¶ 28.

¶ 17. To bring a transaction within the statute against fraudulent conveyances it is not necessary that the transfer should actually defraud creditors. It is sufficient if it only hinder and delay them.—Wood v. Eldredge, 147 Mich. 554.

¶ 18. Fraud in fact, or an express intent to commit fraud, is not necessary in order to render a conveyance fraudulent as against creditors. It is sufficient if the effect of the conveyance is to delay or hinder creditors in the collection of their debts.—Buck v. Sherman, 2 D. 176.

¶ 20. The fact that two chattel mortgages executed on the same day by an insolvent corporation were authorized by the board of directors at the same meeting, does not constitute them parts of the same transaction, so that one's being fraudulent as to creditors vitiates the other; though the theory is that the second was given to keep creditors from redeeming from the first.—Kock v. Bostwick, 113 Mich. 302.

¶ 21. An agreement whereby A. is to work land for B.'s benefit, who is to own and have the crops raised and apply the proceeds upon A.'s indebtedness to him, is fraudulent as to pre-existing creditors, if its real intent is to protect the fruits of A.'s labor against them. —Haynes v. Ledyard, 33 Mich. 319.

¶ 22. A statement in a chattel mortgage that it shall be a continuing security until discharged by writing, and, at the option of the mortgagee, shall be as binding in all respects upon the assigns of the mortgagor's business as if made by them in person, only states the legal effect of the mortgage, and is not a badge of fraud.—Armstrong v. Cook, 95 Mich. 257.

¶ 23. It is not a fraud on the creditors of the promisor for the promisee to enforce a contract obligation for more than the balance due as recited in a contract by plaintiff with third persons in the absence of any showing that a creditor was deceived by the recital, or that if such deception resulted, the claimant was in any way chargeable therewith.—Fisher v. Burroughs Adding Machine Co., 157 Mich. 126.

Concealment of sale of assets as badge of fraud, see ante ¶ 19.

Criminal concealment or removal to defraud, see Crimes § 88.

Disposal or concealment as ground for attachment, see Attachment § 9.

Exempt property of debtor and right to dispose of same, see generally Exemptions; Homesteads.

¶ 24. The legal effect of disposing of property, and converting the avails into negotiable paper, and secreting it from creditors, is a fraud upon them.—Barnes v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 81 Mich. 374.

¶ 25. A sale not made in payment of a debt is void as against creditors if made to delay or defraud them and to enable the debtor to put his property in a shape in which they cannot reach it; sales on long time or for assets not readily convertible nor subject to levy may be of this class.—Jordan v. White, 38 Mich. 253.

§ 9. Transfers on eve of suit or levy.

Transfer on eve of suit as evidence of fraud, see also post ¶ 318.

¶ 26. Changing the title to land which at the time of the rendition of a decree was subject to levy and sale, so that it could not be reached by such levy and sale, is in effect legal fraud, whatever the motive.—Foster v. Whelpley, 123 Mich. 350.

¶ 27. How. St., § 6203, which avoids a conveyance if made with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors or other persons of their lawful suits, damages, forfeitures, debts, or demands, protects the holder of a demand against the grantor for the taking and converting of personal property upon which suit had been commenced before the deed was made, and upon which judgment is afterwards obtained.—Schaible v. Ardner, 98 Mich. 70.

¶ 29. Where, after the recovery of judgment against the principal in a liquor bond, suit has been brought on such judgment against a surety in the bond, a conveyance by such surety, made for the purpose of preventing the collection of the judgment, may be set aside as fraudulent against the judgment creditor, whose claim may be held as not an unliquidated demand.—People, for use of Clinton v. Rice, 79 Mich. 354.

¶ 30. A bill by a judgment creditor, a building contractor to have a deed by the owner of the property, on which complainant worked, to the owner's wife decreed to be subject to complainant's levy, on the ground that the deed was without consideration and was in fraud of creditors was sustained, where the deed was given and recorded after complainant's claim on the contract accrued, but before judgment thereon.—Shippey v. Sullivan, How. N. P. 272.

"Fixtures" and property used in connection with business, see post § 11.

Exercise of mortgagee's or seller's reserved rights, see post § 12.

Effect between parties of sales in violation of Bulk Sales Law, see post § 113.

Liability of transferee under Bulk Sales Law, see post §§ 123, 124.

Who are creditors within meaning of Bulk Sales Law, see post ¶ 439.

Necessity for judgment or lien to entitle to relief from violation of Bulk Sales Law, see post § 102.

Delay and laches in securing relief under Bulk Sales Law, see post § 99.

Inventories, affidavits and notices under Bulk Sales Law, see post § 125.

Defenses to proceedings under Bulk Sales Law, see also post ¶ 550.
Application of Bulk Sales Law to transfer of exempt property, see also post ¶ 48.

Bulk sale by corporate manager without authority or compliance with statute, invalidity against creditors, see Corporations § 133, ¶ 487.
Bulk Sales Law, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 6346-6348.

¶ 31. The terms, "sale, transfer or assignment" used in the title and in the body of the sales-in-bulk act (Pub. Acts 1905, Act No. 223), mean the disposition of the entire title of the seller.—Hannah & Hogg v. Richter Brewing Co., 149 Mich. 220.

¶ 32. A chattel mortgage on a stock of goods is not a sale, transfer or assignment in bulk within the meaning of the Bulk Sales Act.—American Steel & Wire Co. v. Dedrick, 196 Mich. 731.

¶ 33. A chattel mortgage upon a stock of goods is not a sale, transfer, or assignment in bulk within the meaning of the sales-in-bulk act (Pub. Acts 1905, Act No. 223).—Hannah & Hogg v. Richter Brewing Co., 149 Mich. 220.

¶ 34. A regular foreclosure of a chattel mortgage, although resulting in the sale of the incumbered chattels, is not a voluntary sale, transfer or assignment within the meaning of the Bulk Sales Act (Act No. 223, Pub. Acts 1905, §§ 2612-2614, How. St., 2nd Ed.).—Symons Bros. & Co. v. Brink, 187 Mich. 43.

¶ 35. A sale in bulk by an undertaker, of caskets, steel vaults, robes, and casket hardware, is a sale of merchandise within the meaning of the Bulk Sales Law, Act No. 223, Pub. Acts 1905.—People's Sav. Bank v. Van Allsburg, 165 Mich. 524.

¶ 37. One George D. Hanna went on an appeal bond. Shortly afterwards he was advised that he might have to pay the amount of the judgment if the appeal was lost. He then conveyed his stock of groceries and fixtures to plaintiff, his brother, but retained possession. Such deed was not recorded until after the decision of the appeal adversely to Hanna. The goods were seized on execution to satisfy the judgment. Plaintiff replevied. Held, under No. 223, Pub. Acts 1905, the Bulk Sales Act, the conveyance to plaintiff was fraudulent and void.—Hanna v. Hurley, 162 Mich. 601.

¶ 38. Act No. 223, Pub. Acts 1905, invalidating sales of stocks of goods in bulk, does not violate section 32, art. 6 of the State Constitution, which provides that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor is it in conflict with the Fourteenth Amendment of the Federal Constitution, which provides that no state shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.—Musselman Grocer Co. v. Kidd, Dater & Price Co., 151 Mich. 478, affirmed in 217 U. S. 461, 54 L. ed. 839, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 606.

¶ 39. The word "fixtures," as used in the Bulk Sales Law, Act No. 223, Pub. Acts 1905, has reference to such chattels as merchants usually possess and annex to the premises occupied by them, to enable them the better to store, handle, and display their goods and wares.—Bowen v. Quigley, 165 Mich. 337.

¶ 40. The legislature by its language in the Bulk Sales Act, Act No. 223, Pub. Acts 1905, intended the word "fixtures" should have no other or different meaning than is usually given to it in the relation of landlord and tenant.—Bowen v. Quigley, 165 Mich. 337.

¶ 44. Where a mortgagee under a chattel mortgage took possession of the mortgaged property, under authority to do so contained in the mortgage, with the purpose of selling it and applying the proceeds as far as they would go to the payment of the mortgagor's indebtedness to him, but was restrained by order of the court from proceeding with the sale, held that, there being no fraud shown, such taking possession of the property was not a violation of the Bulk Sales Law, Act No. 223, Pub. Acts 1905.—Symons Bros. & Co. v. Brink, 194 Mich. 389.

§ 13. Transfer back to grantor or seller.

Preference by retransfer to seller of property not paid for, see post § 73.

Preference by reconveyance of lands to satisfy vendor's lien, see post ¶ 369.

¶ 45. Where land is conveyed in consideration of an agreement by the grantee to support the grantor for life, a reconveyance to the grantor upon grantee's becoming indebted and embarrassed, reserving part of the premises as compensation for the support already furnished, is not a fraud upon intervening creditors of the grantee, in the absence of an actual intent to defraud, although the land is thereupon conveyed to the wife of the grantee under a similar agreement.—Gustin Co. v. Arn, 107 Mich. 231.

¶ 46. An assignment by an insolvent debtor of a life insurance policy payable to himself, his executors, administrators or assigns, with intent to avoid the payment of his debts, is void as to creditors.—Ionia County Savings Bank v. McLean, 84 Mich. 625.

§ 15. Transfer of exempt or nonleviable property.

Conversion of property into exemptions, see post § 17.

Transfer of exempt or nonleviable property for inadequate consideration, see post § 40.

Right of parties to relief on transfer of exempt property, see post § 106.

¶ 47. A debtor may put his exempt property, real or personal, to such use as he pleases, and creditors cannot complain of his dealings with it or attack as fraudulent his conveyances or incumbrances of it.—Smith v. Rumsey, 33 Mich. 183; Dart v. Woodhouse, 40 Mich. 399; Rosenthal v. Scott, 41 Mich. 632; Rhead v. Hounson, 46 Mich. 243; Anderson v. Odell, 51 Mich. 492; Buckley v. Wheeler, 52 Mich. 1; Emerson v. Bacon, 58 Mich. 526; Riggs v. Sterling, 60 Mich. 643; Freehling v. Bresnahan, 61 Mich. 540; Fischer v. McIntyre, 66 Mich. 681; Farrand v. Caton, 69 Mich. 235; Dull v. Merrill, 69 Mich. 49.

¶ 48. Where a debtor not complying with the Bulk Sales Law sells his stock which in value is exempt to plaintiff, a creditor, the bill of sale being recorded and afterward defendant, a constable, levies on the property in the possession of the debtor to enforce a judgment in favor of another creditor, plaintiff is entitled to the property since the Bulk Sales Law does not invalidate the sale of exempt property.—McCormick v. Kistler, 175 Mich. 422.

¶ 49. Whether a conveyance of the equity of redemption could be fraudulent as against the mortgage creditor in view of the statute forbidding levy on it for the mortgage debt, query.—Preston v. Ryan, 45 Mich. 174.

¶ 50. There is no fraud in preventing creditors from seizing property not belonging to the debtor and in which they have no right to seize.—Bloomingdale v. Chittenden, 74 Mich. 698.

Conversion of property into homestead, see post § 17.

Right of parties to relief on transfer of homesteads, see post § 106.

Transfer of homestead for inadequate consideration, see post § 40.

Transfer of all property except homestead, see post ¶ 79.

Transfer of homestead as evidence of fraudulent intent, see post ¶ 325.

¶ 51. The conveyance by a debtor of land that is exempt as a homestead from creditors' demands cannot be considered as fraudulent against them.—Smith v. Rumsey, 33 Mich. 183; correcting on this point Herschfeldt v. George, 6 Mich. 456.

¶ 54. Where a homestead is conveyed in good faith, and in consideration of the agreement of the grantee, the performance of which is secured by a mortgage on the land, to furnish the grantor with a life support, the land is not subject to levy and sale under an execution issued upon a judgment against the grantor, and the execution creditor has no interest in proceedings to foreclose the mortgage.—Chandler v. Parsons, 100 Mich. 313.

¶ 55. In determining the solvency or insolvency of the debtor as an element of fraud in a transfer, a debtor is solvent where evidence shows that he has sufficient unincumbered property apart from the property alleged to have been fraudulent conveyed to another creditor to fully pay his indebtedness to a particular creditor.—Downing v. Brooks, 194 Mich. 490.

Conversion of property into homestead as evidence of fraudulent intent, see post ¶ 71.

¶ 56. One whose indebtedness equals or exceeds his resources may take part of his property to purchase a homestead; this is not a fraud upon creditors nor a concealment of his property.—Meigs v. Dibble, 73 Mich. 101.

¶ 57. A debtor's assignment of mortgages held by him to one who has bought him a homestead, if such an assignment is in good faith and by way of security for repayment, is not open to attack of creditors. Nor are his creditors concerned with his leaving the title to the homestead in the purchaser to keep it safe.—Bostwick v. Benjamin, 63 Mich. 289.

Implied or constructive fraud, see ante § 3.

Burden of proof, see also post ¶ 73.

Burden of proof as to intention to defraud, see also post ¶ 112.

Burden of proof and presumptions as to matters not related to specific elements and indicia of fraud, see post § 132.

¶ 58. Burden of proving fraud is upon him who alleges the conveyance to be fraudulent.—Peasle v. Collier, 83 Mich. 549.

¶ 59. Fraud against creditors in a transfer of securities is not inferable from suspicious circumstances, with uncontradicted testimony to the contrary.—Miller v. Beadle, 65 Mich. 643.

¶ 60. A party is presumed to intend the natural and necessary consequences of his own acts, and when prejudice to the rights of creditors results from an act of the debtor such act will be held constructively fraudulent notwithstanding good motives and intentions.—Wood v. Eldredge, 147 Mich. 554.

¶ 61. Where a bill is filed in aid of execution, and the question at issue is the good faith of a transfer of the land, and the purchaser is made a party defendant, and evidence is given tending to show that the sale was made with an evident intent to defraud creditors, his neglect to make an affirmative showing to support the sale will warrant a court in giving their full force to any legitimate inferences drawn from the evidence given against it.—Whitney v. Rose, 43 Mich. 27.

¶ 62. The fact that an agreement of defeasance in a trust accompanied a warranty deed absolute in form given as security, and that the deed alone was recorded, raises no inference of fraud.—McDonald v. Preston Nat. Bank, 111 Mich. 649.

¶ 63. The courts will not infer a dishonest intent to defraud creditors from a chattel mortgage where it is possible to place an honest construction on it which is consistent with the whole tenor of the instrument.—Gay v. Bidwell, 7 Mich. 519.

Evidence as to insolvency and irresponsibility, see post § 20.

Admissibility of evidence relative to matters other than specific elements and indicia of fraud, see post § 133.

Weight and sufficiency of evidence as to matters not related to specific elements and indicia of fraud, see post § 134.

Admissibility of evidence of motives of debtor, see also post ¶ 394.

Admissions by letter to prove good faith in execution of chattel mortgage, see Chattel Mortgages ¶ 246.

Admissibility of other fraudulent mortgages as showing plan or intent, see also Chattel Mortgages § 59.

Admissibility of declarations as showing fraudulent intent or good faith or knowledge, see Evidence § 333.

¶ 64. Anything said or done by a vendor, before or at the time of an alleged fraudulent sale, showing his intent thereby to defraud his creditors, is admissible as evidence of such intent; and it is not necessary to its admission for that purpose that it should have been said or done in the presence of the vendee.—Buckingham v. Tyler, 74 Mich. 101.

¶ 65. Subsequent acts and representations, the immediate tendency of which would be to prevent action by the vendor to protect himself, is relevant and competent on the question of fraud at the time of the purchase of goods when tending to show a dishonest scheme.—Ross v. Miner, 64 Mich. 204.

¶ 66. Declarations of a vendor to a vendee, made after the transfer of the goods, are inadmissible to show the good faith of the sale when it is attacked as fraudulent.—Buckingham v. Tyler, 74 Mich. 101.

¶ 68. Where the seller of cordwood had agreed that the price therefor should be paid to certain creditors by the purchaser, evidence that after another creditor not included had attached the wood, the seller had told the purchaser not to pay his indebtedness but to apply the money on his own indebtedness has no tendency to prove that the original sale was fraudulent.—Thompson v. Newland, 144 Mich. 595.

¶ 70. A debtor mortgaged his lands in consideration of the negotiable notes of the mortgagee of equal amount, payable on time. Actual fraudulent intention was denied, and it did not appear whether the notes had been negotiated. It was held that fraud was not sufficiently established by the facts to authorize the court to decree a release of the mortgage.—Buck v. Sherman, 2 D. 176.

¶ 72. A bill in aid of execution will lie where the evidence clearly shows a conveyance of the land which it is sought to reach, from the debtor to a third person, with fraudulent intent on the part of both grantor and grantee.—Coon v. Henry, 49 Mich. 208.

¶ 73. In trover by a firm for goods sold under execution by defendants against a person claiming to be the firm's agent, defendants claimed that the so-called firm was only a name used by such person as a device to shield such person from creditors' claims, and that in fact he owned all the property vested in the business. Held, that the burden of establishing such fraudulent conduct was upon defendants, and that positive proof was not required, but that proof by facts and circumstances from which the inference of fraud could be drawn was sufficient.—Freedman v. Campfield, 92 Mich. 118.

¶ 74. Intent to defraud subsequent creditors is not shown by the making of a deed of all his real estate by the debtor, where at the time he owned a note for $4,000 and realty worth $17,000 and the total of claims against him was little more than $8,600 of which $7,880.35 was disputed and was afterwards settled for $200 besides a judgment for $80.35, and where after the conveyance was made plaintiff firm, one of the former creditors whose claim was not disputed and was paid, extended further credit on the belief that he still owned the real estate, the deed not having been yet recorded because the taxes on the land were not paid.—Barkworth v. Palmer, 118 Mich. 50.

Insolvency or solvency and possession of resources as evidence on issues of fraud between the parties, see Fraud § 17.

¶ 75. Evidence of a seller's insolvency at time of sale is admissible in an action by the buyer against an officer who attached the property as the seller's claiming it was sold in fraud of creditors.—Whittle v. Bailes, 65 Mich. 640.

¶ 76. An assignee of goods, bringing replevin against a constable who had levied on them under an execution against the assignor, may be cross-examined as to whether he was not wholly irresponsible at the time of the assignment, if the purpose is to show that it was a fraud on creditors.—Jennings v. Prentice, 39 Mich. 421.

¶ 77. Where a sheriff, sued in trover for the value of goods attached, claims that the title of the trover plaintiff is fraudulent as to the creditors of the attachment defendant, the embarrassed condition of the attachment defendant is material, and may be shown on cross-examination of plaintiff's witnesses.—Adams v. Kellogg, 63 Mich. 105.

¶ 78. In trover by a person claiming under a chattel mortgage attacked as fraudulent, the records in several attachment suits against the mortgagor are admissible as evidence tending to show the debtor's insolvency at the time he executed the mortgage, although the sale of the goods in question had only taken place in one of such suits.—Eureka Iron & Steel Works v. Bresnahan, 66 Mich. 489.

¶ 79. A transfer by a debtor of all his property but the homestead, of whose value there is no evidence, cannot be said to have been fraudulent as to creditors; since the homestead may have been of such value as to enable payment of the creditors and make it unnecessary for them to attack the transfer for fraud.—Hill v. Mallory, 112 Mich. 387,

Questions of law and fact as to matters not related to specific elements and indicia of fraud, see post § 135.

Instructions not involving specific elements and indicia of fraud, see post § 136.

Fraudulent intent on transfer from one spouse to other as jury question, see also post ¶ 336.

Fraudulent intent as question of fact, see Comp. L. 1915, § 12001.

¶ 83. The question of bona fides of a debt from the defendant to the garnishee is a question for the jury, where there is evidence indicative of a simulated sale of an unprosperous business to a relative and that the debt was designed to absorb assets of it.—Banner Cigar Mfg. Co. v. Treusch, 125 Mich. 265; Gumberg v. Treusch, 103 Mich. 543.

¶ 84. Where an officer who has attached goods as mortgaged in fraud of creditors is sued for conversion, the questions whether the indebtedness named in the mortgage existed in good faith, and whether the instrument was executed to hinder, delay or defraud creditors, should be submitted to the jury.—Warner v. Littlefield, 89 Mich. 329.

¶ 87. A conveyance is fraudulent if the grantor meant to hinder or defraud any of his creditors, and a charge conveying the idea that he must have meant to defraud all his creditors is misleading.—Allen v. Kinyon, 41 Mich. 281.

¶ 88. Where the debt of plaintiff was contracted after defendant conveyed her property to the garnishee defendant, the court erred in refusing an instruction that actual intent to defraud plaintiff must be shown to entitle plaintiff to compel the garnishee defendant to pay the debt, and in instructing the jury that if the credit was extended on defendant's apparent ownership of the land, and there was sufficient estate remaining from the debts that had been paid to satisfy plaintiff's claim, a verdict should be entered against the garnishee defendant.—Lovell v. Denison, 171 Mich. 599.

Knowledge of wife as transferee as to husband's representations to creditors as to his assets, see also post ¶¶ 282, 283, 285.

¶ 90. Actual participation by the transferee in the fraudulent intent of the insolvent transferor of goods is not necessary to defeat the transfer as fraudulent. If the purchaser is not a creditor it is enough that he knows what would put a prudent man upon inquiry as to the motive of the sale.—Hough v. Dickinson, 58 Mich. 89; Bedford v. Penny, 58 Mich. 424.

¶ 91. The fact of the fraudulent intent of a vendor in making a sale cannot affect the vendee, if ignorant of such intent; but such fact, if established, may be weighed with the other circumstances in the case, to determine whether or not the vendee was a party to such fraudulent intent, or had such knowledge that he was put upon inquiry as to the good faith of the vendor in making the transfer.—Buckingham v. Tyler, 74 Mich. 101.

¶ 92. Credit was given a firm in reliance on representations as to the wealth of one of the partners, part of whose property had, however, been transferred to his wife by a deed that was placed on record before the credit was given. Held, that a bill in aid of execution to set aside the deed as a fraudulent transfer would not lie, at least as against the wife, who neither made nor was privy to the representations, and was not alleged to have done or omitted any act so as to mislead complainants.—Hedstrom v. Kingsbury, 40 Mich. 636.

¶ 95. One who buys land after having been notified by an administrator that he claims the right to recover the property on the ground that it was conveyed by his decedent in fraud of creditors is not a bona fide purchaser.—Walker v. Cady, 106 Mich. 21.

¶ 96. An agreement by a debtor to sell and deliver certain property to his creditor for a price exceeding $50, to be credited therefor on the latter's books, which credit was immediately given, but without the vendor's knowledge, there being no delivery or payment of earnest money, nor any memorandum of sale signed by the vendor remained executory; and hence was fraudulent where the purchaser knew of an outstanding execution.—Webster v. Bailey, 40 Mich. 641.

¶ 97. The assignment to a bank of a mortgage on property, although made by the debtor with the intent to avoid the payment of a claim to a particular creditor, is not fraudulent as to such creditor where the bank acts in the customary way and in line with its business, and does not knowingly participate in any fraudulent attempt to defeat the creditor in his efforts to collect indebtedness from the debtor.—Downing v. Brooks, 194 Mich. 490.

See also ante ¶ 96.
Right of debtor to prefer creditors, see post §§ 68-71.

¶ 98. Knowledge, either actual or constructive, by a creditor, of an intention on the part of his debtor to defeat other creditors by a transfer to him, is sufficient to avoid the transaction, where part of the consideration is cash paid to the debtor, although the other part is the discharge of the transferee's claim. Such is not a mere preference.—Gumberg v. Treusch, 110 Mich. 451.

¶ 99. A transfer by an insolvent debtor is void as against a creditor, although it was made in payment of an honest debt of an amount equal to the fair value of the property, where the transferees knew that the debtor had made false statements in regard to, or had purposely concealed, his financial condition in order to obtain credit on purchase of the goods so transferred from such creditor, or knew that the purchases were made from the latter for the purpose of obtaining goods to secure their claims.—Hill v. Mallory, 112 Mich. 387.

¶ 100. One who, holding a third mortgage and being thereby fully secured for his debt, accepts a deed of the mortgaged premises, obligating himself to pay no more as a consideration than he would have been compelled to pay in order to protect his rights as third mortgagee and the consideration named in the deed being at least $2,000 less than what the property is fairly worth, is not a purchaser in good faith, his knowledge of facts being sufficient to put him on inquiry.—Allen v. Stingel, 95 Mich. 195.

Right to prefer creditors by mortgage or security, see post §§ 69, 70.
Presumption of fraudulent purpose from acceptance of security for debt, see also post ¶ 108.
Purchasers at execution sale as subsequent creditors, see also post ¶ 452.

¶ 101. A chattel mortgage is not invalidated by the mere fact that the creditor knows the debtor is in failing circumstances and that the intended effect of giving the security will be to delay or defeat other creditors in the collection of their dues.—Olmstead v. Mattison, 45 Mich. 617; Sweetzer v. Higby, 63 Mich. 13.

¶ 103. A chattel mortgage taken as security for a debt is not rendered fraudulent as to other creditors by the mortgagee's knowledge that the mortgagor intends to make an assignment for the benefit of creditors, and that his mortgage will postpone or cut off the claims of such other creditors, or even by his further knowledge—provided he renders no collusive assistance—that the debtor consents to give the mortgage expecting that it will be a shield to him.—Oshkosh Nat. Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 100 Mich. 485.

¶ 104. An execution sale when tainted with fraud to which the purchaser is a party is subject to the same infirmity that attaches to other fraudulent transfers of the debtor's property.—Aldrich v. Maitland, 4 Mich. 205.

¶ 105. Where a purchaser at a sheriff's sale, by a fraudulent combination with the sheriff and judgment debtor to prevent competition at the sale, is enabled to purchase property at much less than its value, the sale is void as to creditors.—Aldrich v. Maitland, 4 Mich. 205.

¶ 106. The honesty of one of two mortgagees will not save the mortgage, if there was any fraud or wrong in the other.—Showman v. Lee, 86 Mich. 556.

¶ 107. A partially wrongful purpose may invalidate a mortgage; and when taken by two mortgagees, the honesty of one will not help it if the other commits any fraud or wrong in taking it.—Adams v. Niemann, 46 Mich. 135.

Burden of proof and presumptions as to matters not related to specific elements and indicia of fraud, see post § 132.

¶ 108. A creditor's participation in the purpose of his debtor to defraud other creditors cannot be inferred from his acceptance as security for his debt of a mortgage covering all of the debtor's property.—Beckman v. Noble, 115 Mich. 523.

¶ 109. Good faith in the purchase of partnership assets is not presumable from the payment of a valuable consideration if it appears that the purchaser knows that creditors are urgent, and that there is no change in possession or in the control of the business.—Parshall v. Fisher, 43 Mich. 529.

¶ 110. A letter written in plaintiff's office after a conference upon a mortgage claimed to be fraudulent, containing direct reference to the transaction, by the man who had acted for all parties, stating what both had adopted as their scheme to influence creditors, and conveying suggestions and proposed explanations to make it appear valid which infer a common purpose, is open to inference that plaintiff was implicated in it in spite of assurances to the contrary.—Krolik v. Graham, 64 Mich. 226.

¶ 111. In an action involving the good faith of a transfer of goods the transferee may properly show what he had been told as to the financial standing of the other party to the transaction, by way of rebutting any presumption that he knew it was bad.—Hough v. Dickinson, 58 Mich. 89.

¶ 112. The burden of proving good faith and an absence of intention to defraud was held, under R. S. 1838, to be on the party claiming under an assignment made by way of security.—Jackson v. Dean, 1 D. 519.

¶ 113. Where a person, against whom an action is pending, transfers his real estate, the plaintiff, on recovering judgment, cannot maintain ejectment against the purchaser of the real estate on the ground that it was fraudulently transferred unless he shows that the transferee participated in the fraudulent purpose or had notice thereof.—Brown v. Dean, 52 Mich. 267.

Admissibility of evidence of intent of transferee, see also post ¶ 597.

Admissibility of evidence relative to matters other than specific elements and indicia of fraud, see post § 133.

Weight and sufficiency of evidence as to matters not related to specific elements and indicia of fraud, see post § 134.

Cross-examination as to fraud or good faith and notice, see Examination of Witnesses § 58.

¶ 114. In trover against a sheriff for goods attached by him for the vendor's creditors after they had been sold and delivered to plaintiff, testimony for defendant that the vendor was intoxicated when the sale to plaintiff was made was admissible as bearing upon the question of notice to the vendee of an intended fraud against creditors.—Bendetson v. Moody, 100 Mich. 553.

¶ 115. Where, in replevin by a mortgagee of chattels, the mortgage is attacked as fraudulent as against creditors, the mortgagee may be asked on cross-examination whether he did not know when he took the mortgage that the mortgagor was indebted to one from whom defendant purchased the property at execution sale.—Watson v. Mead, 98 Mich. 330.

¶ 116. Where a stock of goods worth from $2,000 to $2,500 was hastily appraised in the nighttime and purchased for $850 by one who knew of the vendor's indebtedness to third persons and of said vendor's anxiety to dispose of such stock, it cannot be said as matter of law that there is no evidence that the sale was made with intent to defraud creditors, or that the circumstances attending it were not sufficient to put the vendee upon inquiry.—Bendetson v. Moody, 100 Mich. 553.

¶ 117. In a suit by a trustee in bankruptcy to set aside certain conveyances of land as fraudulent to creditors, evidence examined, and held not to prove that the holder of the present title was a party to the fraudulent purpose of his grantor and the bankrupt, but that he was without notice of any defect in the title he received.—Weatherwax v. Gorman, 150 Mich. 316.

§ 30. Instructions and questions for jury.

Questions of law and fact as to matters not related to specific elements and indicia of fraud, see post § 135.

Instructions not involving specific element and indicia of fraud, see post § 136.

¶ 118. A charge that a transfer to a creditor in payment of an honest debt at a fair valuation is valid, though it defeats other creditors and is intended to do so, is inapplicable and erroneous; where it is in issue that the transferees had notice of a purpose to buy goods on credit and then transfer them to defeat the seller, or had notice that the transferor's financial condition had been falsified to gain the credit on which they were purchased.—Hill v. Mallory, 112 Mich. 387.

¶ 119. In replevin by a vendee to recover a stock of goods seized at the suit of the vendor's creditors, plaintiff relied upon his bill of sale as evidence of his title, the consideration for which he claimed was two chattel mortgages held by him on the property. The creditors claimed that one of the mortgages was given without any valuable consideration, and that the other was increased in amount, all with intent to defraud them, and with the knowledge of the vendee; held a question for the jury, and if found in favor of the creditors, the fraud tainted the whole transaction, and prevented a recovery by plaintiff.—Clark v. Lee, 78 Mich. 221.

Invalidity of accord to be satisfied in future where consideration is lacking, see Accord and Satisfaction ¶ 28.

Voluntary character of payments within Bankruptcy Act, see Bankruptcy § 8.

¶ 120. Voluntary conveyances are not necessarily fraudulent, even when made by a person indebted at the time.—Herschfeldt v. George, 6 Mich. 456.

¶ 121. A voluntary conveyance is not void as to creditors, even though the grantor is indebted at the time, if he retains ample means to pay his debts.—Wooden v. Wooden, 72 Mich. 347.

¶ 122. Where a voluntary conveyance operates to the injury of creditors, it is immaterial whether or not the grantee participated in the fraudulent design.—Schaible v. Ardner, 98 Mich. 70.

¶ 124. A voluntary conveyance from husband to wife without valuable consideration is void in law as against creditors.—Fellows v. Smith, 40 Mich. 689.

¶ 125. A voluntary conveyance is good when made without any fraudulent intent and by a person not indebted at the time, or, if indebted, whose debts are so small in amount, when compared with the means retained to pay them, as to repel all presumption of fraud on their account.—Herschfeldt v. George, 6 Mich. 456.

¶ 126. A son bought a farm from his mother and gave her a mortgage on it to secure part of the purchase price. They afterwards agreed that she should take back the farm, and, in consideration of the wheat growing on it, should indorse its value on the mortgage. Held, that, as the reconveyance of the farm canceled the mortgage, the transfer of the wheat was without consideration and void as to creditors.—Jackson v. Evans, 44 Mich. 510.

¶ 127. Even if decedent's widow is the only creditor of his estate it cannot be urged that a voluntary deed by him to take effect on his death conveying his realty to such widow and to his daughters cannot be set aside and a sale thereof had to pay the debt on the ground that the deed which was greater in value than the amount of the debt operated as a payment where it was a voluntary conveyance without consideration.—Barris v. Emmons, 173 Mich. 590.

¶ 128. A contract for the sale of definitely described, identified and located personalty and referring to an invoice taken in that connection and clearly setting forth the terms of payment, is not void as against creditors as transferring an uncertain amount of property for an uncertain consideration.—Angell v. Pickard, 61 Mich. 561.

Mortgages for benefit of third persons, see post § 33.
Right to prefer creditors by mortgage or security, see post §§ 69, 70.
Making discharged mortgages appear as lien, see ante § 5.
Against whom invalid, see post § 89, ¶ 435.
Validity of voluntary mortgage between parties, see post ¶ 491.
Validity of voluntary mortgage as to subsequent mortgagee with notice, see also post ¶ 457.

¶ 129. A chattel mortgage is invalid if instead of being taken as security it was taken to prevent the vendor of the mortgaged goods from recovering them or their value.—Robinson v. Walsh, 54 Mich. 506.

¶ 130. A mortgage intended for a fraudulent purpose, voluntarily given, and not asked for, to secure a debt which had never been regarded as a debt, and was allowed to be fixed at an unreasonable rate by the debtor himself, cannot be sustained against the party intended to be defrauded.—Hunt v. Shier, 59 Mich. 286.

¶ 131. A chattel mortgage given without consideration to secure the antecedent individual debt of one of the partners is fraudulent as against creditors of the firm if at the time it was given the firm was insolvent or would become so by such a shrinkage in outstanding accounts as might reasonably be expected.—Heineman v. Hart, 55 Mich. 64.

¶ 132. The voluntary assignment of a mortgage to the mortgagee's wife, by substituting her name as mortgagee after the instrument has become operative by delivery, and without consideration, will not prevent the subjection of the mortgage to the equitable remedies of a judgment creditor of the husband, in order to apply it in satisfaction of the judgment.—Keam v. Conkwright, 78 Mich. 58.

Excessive mortgages and liens, see post § 36.

¶ 133. A mortgage representing an indebtedness to the mortgagor's sister, providing that the principal should be paid to the mortgagor's children and the interest to the sister for life, was not subject to attack by creditors of the mortgagor to the extent of the children's part, on the ground that it was void because there was no privity between the children and the mortgagor; since it was a promise direct to the children for whose benefit the promise was made, and even if not so they might enforce it in equity in their own names.—Palmer v. Bray, 136 Mich. 85.

On foreclosure or judicial sale, see post § 35.
Reality and sufficiency of consideration on transfers to family, relatives or business associates, see post § 50.

Effect of consideration where transfer fraudulent, see also post ¶ 437.
Adequacy of consideration as between parties, see post ¶ 492.

¶ 135. A transfer of property in payment of a debt is fraudulent and void if the property was transferred at a price greatly below its real value, with intent to defraud other creditors.—Dyer v. Rosenthal, 45 Mich. 588.

¶ 136. Fraud in making a conveyance must be found as a fact before the conveyance can be avoided as fraudulent; and mere disparity of consideration and value without actual fraud is not enough.—Spear v. Rood, 51 Mich. 140.

¶ 137. A sale for the nominal purpose of raising money, but for a grossly inadequate sum, and to a person who has no means, is apparently fraudulent.—Morford v. Dieffenbacker, 54 Mich. 593.

¶ 138. Where a valuable consideration is paid for goods the fact that it is much below their value is not conclusive against the purchaser's good faith.—Boydson v. Goodrich, 49 Mich. 65.

¶ 139. That a part of the price paid for land conveyed by a decedent was an outlawed obligation of his does not affect the consideration for a deed from him on the question whether the transfer is or is not in fraud of creditor.—Fraser v. Passage, 63 Mich. 551.

¶ 141. A sale of the merchandise business of an insolvent cannot be said to be without sufficient consideration where negotiable demand notes were given by the purchaser, and by him turned over to another for payment of a debt of the insolvent and where part of the purchase price reimbursed the purchaser for the amount of a note which he had indorsed for such insolvent.—Gordon v. Alexander, 122 Mich. 107.

¶ 142. A creditor's bill to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent, and to subject the property involved to the payment of amounts due a wife under a decree in a divorce case, cannot be maintained although the property involved was bought by a mortgagee on foreclosure at less than its value, and was sold cheaply to another person who purchased it at the suggestion of the husband, it appearing that the husband had no interest in the property, although the purchaser advanced money to him with a chattel mortgage as security.—Reeves v. Miller, 121 Mich. 311.

Foreclosing for small amount mortgage almost wholly paid, see post ¶ 363.

Evidence of excessive mortgage, see also post ¶ 182.

Judgment for excessive amount including immature debt as fraud on other creditors, see also Attachment ¶ 241.

¶ 143. Taking a mortgage for an amount in excess of the debt or of the assumed liability is a badge of fraud.—Showman v. Lee, 86 Mich. 556.

¶ 144. The fact that the value of the property greatly exceeds the debt secured bears upon the validity of a mortgage, as having been given to defeat, delay and defraud creditors.—Warner v. Littlefield, 89 Mich. 329.

¶ 145. That a chattel mortgage taken from a merchant in failing circumstances to secure an existing debt is given for more than the amount of the actual indebtedness is a badge of fraud, and avoids the mortgage unless the amount so inserted in excess was by mistake, and with no intent to defraud or hinder creditors.—Ferris v. McQueen, 94 Mich. 367.

¶ 146. On the question of fraud on creditors in a chattel mortgage the disproportionate value of the goods to the debt may be considered as bearing on the good faith of the transaction.—Ganong v. Green, 71 Mich. 1.

¶ 147. A mortgage given in excess of the amount due or of the liability assumed is fraudulent if the purpose is to protect the mortgagor's interest from other creditors.—Showman v. Lee, 86 Mich. 556.

¶ 148. It is a badge of fraud if a chattel mortgage is given and received for much more than is due the mortgagee; and it is fraud in law if the purpose is to protect the debtor's interest from other creditors.—King v. Hubbell, 42 Mich. 597.

¶ 149. Where a chattel mortgage security largely exceeds the debt the fact may be considered as tending to show that the creditor's intention in taking it is not in good faith to secure himself, but to hinder, delay or defraud other creditors.—Olmstead v. Mattison, 45 Mich. 617.

¶ 150. The taking of a chattel mortgage for an amount in excess of the debt or the assumed liability is a badge of fraud, and is a fraud in law if the purpose is to protect the debtor's interest in the property mortgaged from other creditors.—Patrick v. Riggs, 105 Mich. 616.

¶ 151. A man filed a mortgage on his present and future stock to secure a greater sum than he owed, and kept possession. He had nothing else liable to execution. Held, that these facts, though not conclusive, tended to show that he had disposed of property in fraud of creditors, and should go to the jury with other facts.—Willison v. Desenberg, 41 Mich. 156.

¶ 152. The fact that a small part of a mortgage debt is valid and unquestioned does not necessarily preclude any question as to the good faith of the mortgage for inadequacy of consideration.—King v. Hubbell, 42 Mich. 597.

¶ 153. The amount found due on a chattel mortgage given to secure a debt to the mortgagee, and also to secure her against liability on notes given for the mortgagor's debts, was less than the amount of the mortgage. The mortgagor testified that he supposed, at the time he made the mortgage, that the indebtedness to the mortgagee amounted to the face of the mortgage, and the mortgagee testified that she had not figured up the amount at the time she accepted the mortgage. Held, that the fact that the mortgage was given for more than the amount due was a badge of fraud, but not conclusive evidence thereof, and that the question of the bona fides of the transaction was properly submitted to the jury.—Louden v. Vinton, 108 Mich. 313.

§ 37. Future consideration or security.

Services to be rendered in future, see post § 38.

¶ 155. That the whole amount secured by a mortgage was not advanced at the time of its execution does not render it fraudulent as to creditors of the mortgagor, in the absence of an intent to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors, although it does not state on its face that it is given to secure future advances.—Dummer v. Smedley, 110 Mich. 466.

¶ 156. Where, in replevin, by chattel mortgagees against the mortgagor's attacking creditors the testimony shows that the mortgage was given to secure not only an existing debt but also certain future advances, and the court instructs the jury that the mortgagees had no right to place on file an instrument that bears upon its face a false statement as to their claim, it is error to refuse to charge further that if the jury finds the mortgagees agreed, when they took the mortgage, to make such advances, and that the rest of the sum secured was a valid existing indebtedness to the mortgagees, the taking of the mortgage for the amount so to be advanced would not affect its validity.—Brace v. Berdan, 104 Mich. 356.

¶ 157. An agreement to pay the assignor's funeral expenses was held insufficient to support a transfer of property to the amount of over $1,000 as against one to whom the assignor owed a debt payable out of such property as he might die the owner of; and as against such creditor the transfer was held voluntary.—Cicotte v. Gagnier, 2 Mich. 381.

¶ 158. An agreement to support one's parents is not, as against creditors, a valid consideration for a deed from the parents if made with the purpose of putting the property beyond the reach of execution; such an agreement is for the direct benefit of the grantors.—Rynearson v. Turner, 52 Mich. 7.

¶ 159. An agreement for future support is not a sufficient consideration for a conveyance as against creditors, it being for the direct benefit of the grantor.—Michigan Trust Co. v. Comstock, 130 Mich. 572.

§ 39. Past consideration and corrective transfers.

See also ante ¶ 139.

Sufficiency of evidence of past consideration, see also post ¶ 326.

Evidence of past consideration, see also post ¶ 185.

¶ 160. A revived claim, to constitute a sufficient consideration to sustain a conveyance by an insolvent debtor, must be founded upon an acknowledged and recognized indebtedness theretofore existing.—Case Mfg. Co. v. Perkins, 106 Mich. 349.

¶ 161. A husband's ancient debt to his wife is a good consideration between them even as against creditors for his conveyance of land to her.—Glaze v. Three Rivers Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 87 Mich. 349.

¶ 165. Where land, paid for by a wife, is by mistake conveyed to the husband, and the wife sells the land as her own and informs the purchaser that she is the owner, and both understand that a purchase-price mortgage shall be drawn in her favor, which, by a mistake of the scrivener, is drawn in favor of the husband, a correction of said mistake, after the delivery of the mortgage, by the consent of the mortgagor, by substituting the name of the wife as mortgagee, cannot be claimed to be in fraud of the husband's creditors, and need not be supported by a new consideration.—Keam v. Conkwright, 78 Mich. 58.

¶ 166. The question of adequacy of consideration for a transfer of an equitable interest in homestead property on a bill in aid of execution to have the deed set aside as fraudulent to creditors is immaterial where the equity transferred does not exceed the statutory exemption.—Albert v. Patterson, 188 Mich. 378.

¶ 168. Where a husband is honestly indebted to his wife, he may satisfy her claim in preference to those of other creditors by transferring the homestead to her, if its value does not exceed the amount exempt from execution and the debt taken together. —Brigham v. Fawcett, 42 Mich. 542.

¶ 170. No fraud can be said to be perpetrated as against existing creditors, by a conveyance of premises in which a homestead interest exists in the grantor and an incumbrance covering that and other property, in which the aggregate of the incumbrance and homestead interest exceeds the total value of the property.—Wolcott v. Tweddle, 133 Mich. 389.

¶ 172. A husband's conveyance of land, including his homestead, to his wife, in payment of a bona fide indebtedness that amounts, with the homestead exemption, to the entire value of the land, is not void as to creditors.—Hicks v. McLachlan, 94 Mich. 278; Dull v. Merrill, 69 Mich. 49; Shay v. Wheeler, 69 Mich. 254.

¶ 173. Creditors had no right to complain of the conveyance by a debtor of his homestead to his son, where the entire property was worth less than $3,500 and it was incumbered by a bona fide mortgage for $2,500. —Palmer v. Bray, 136 Mich. 85.

¶ 174. As a transfer will not be set aside in behalf of creditors unless it is affirmatively shown that they have been substantially injured thereby, a conveyance by a husband to his wife of his home farm of 120 acres, valued at from $3,800 to $4,200, in consideration of her agreement, contained in the deed, to pay a mortgage of $2,550 on the land, and to account for the homestead to minor children when the youngest should come of age, was allowed to stand.—Nash v. Geraghty, 105 Mich. 382.

§ 41. Consideration furnished by debtor for grant or transfer to third person.

Sufficiency of averment in bill that consideration was furnished by debtor, see post ¶¶ 578, 582.

Right of creditors to proceeds of mortgage purchased by foreclosing mortgagee with money furnished by debtor, see Foreclosure ¶ 515.

Presumption of fraud where consideration is furnished by debtor for conveyance to third person and trust resulting therefrom, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11572.

¶ 176. The purchase of a mortgage on real estate by the daughter of the mortgagor is fraudulent and for the purpose of defrauding the creditors of such mortgagor, where such mortgagor furnished his daughter the money for such purchase, and was insolvent at the time.—Hatch v. Daugherty, 145 Mich. 569.

¶ 177. How. St. § 5884, authorizing an administrator to recover any lands conveyed in fraud of creditors by decedent in his lifetime, does not, it seems, authorize the subjecting to the payment of decedent's debts land deeded to defendant by a stranger at a time when decedent had no creditors who could complain of such deed, even if the purchase-money was furnished by decedent.— White v. Newhall, 68 Mich. 641.

Burden of proof and presumptions as to matters not related to specific elements and indicia of fraud, see post § 132.

Conclusiveness and impeachment of stated consideration in transfer, see also Contracts § 143.

¶ 178. Where land is conveyed in fraud of creditors, the burden of proof is upon the second grantee to show that he purchased in good faith, and for a valuable consideration. —Schaible v. Ardner, 98 Mich. 70.

¶ 179. Where part of the sum a chattel mortgage is given to secure is in fact, though not so expressed in the mortgage, advances to be made in future, the burden is not cast upon the mortgagees, in replevin by them against the mortgagor's attaching creditors, to negative fraud in the transaction.—Brace v. Berdan, 104 Mich. 356.

¶ 180. A voluntary post-nuptial settlement upon a wife, by a husband who was indebted at the time, is fraudulent and void as against existing creditors, and is prima facie fraudulent even as against subsequent creditors; but as against them, the presumption of fraud arising from the fact of indebtedness may be repelled by circumstances; as that the debts existing at the time were secured by mortgage or in the settlement. If the husband was not indebted at the time, the settlement will be valid unless actual fraud is shown.—Wood v. Savage, 2 D. 316.

Admissibility of evidence relative to matters other than specific elements and indicia of fraud, see post § 133.

¶ 181. The fact that a husband, when perfectly solvent, gave expensive presents to his wife does not concern a creditor of his claiming property adversely to her under a chattel mortgage in which her husband had included it without her knowledge or consent.—Davis v. Zimmerman, 40 Mich. 24.

¶ 182. A mere variance between the amount of a mortgage and the actual debt is not conclusive evidence of fraud, but is admissible in connection with other facts as bearing on the question whether there was any.—Willison v. Desenberg, 41 Mich. 156.

¶ 183. The extravagance of a daughter of the buyer of goods in a stock of merchandise, the seller being engaged to marry such daughter, is too remote to show whether or not the sale was fair and on a sufficient consideration as against attaching creditors of the seller.—Lewis v. Rice, 61 Mich. 97.

¶ 184. In trover against a sheriff by one claiming, as purchaser, goods seized on attachment, the sale being attacked as fraudulent, evidence is admissible to show that land given as part payment is worth no more than an incumbrance against it, since such evidence would tend to establish the fraud.—Ismond v. Scougale, 120 Mich. 353.

¶ 185. Where an assignment from master to servant purports to be in consideration of both money lent and wages earned by the latter, and is attacked as fraudulent with respect to creditors, it may be shown that the money lent was money owned by the servant before entering the master's service.—Winfield v. Adams, 34 Mich. 437.

Weight and sufficiency of evidence as to matters not related to specific elements and indicia of fraud, see post § 134.

Sufficiency of evidence of inadequacy of consideration, see also post ¶ 315.

¶ 186. Great inadequacy of consideration for an insolvent debtor's conveyances is important evidence to show fraud, varying, however, with the circumstances of each case.—Blish v. Collins, 68 Mich. 542.

¶ 187. Evidence that a grantee was without means to purchase, and that the grantor was without the proceeds which should have resulted from such purchase, tends to prove that the conveyance was without valuable consideration.—Schaible v. Ardner, 98 Mich. 70.

¶ 188. The sufficiency of the consideration for a conveyance may bear on the honesty of the grantor's intent; but excess in value over the amount of consideration is not conclusive evidence of fraud.—Spear v. Rood, 51 Mich. 140.

¶ 189. That the price paid for property was less than its value, while a relevant circumstance, if true, is no evidence of fraud, unless it was so small as to make the conveyance substantially a voluntary one.—Fraser v. Passage, 63 Mich. 551.

¶ 190. Proof that a party was indebted in the sum of $300 at the time of making a voluntary conveyance is not sufficient evidence of fraud to avoid the conveyance in favor of a subsequent creditor.—Page v. Kendrick, 10 Mich. 300.

¶ 191. The partnership of which defendant was a member had assets of $19,000 and debts of $15,000. Judgments against the firm of $6,000 were taken. Defendant got a stay of execution. Before the stay expired defendant conveyed away his farm to a grantee in Canada. Defendant's attorneys drew the deed, had it recorded, and then kept possession of it. Held, the evidence warranted a decree in equity setting aside the deed in behalf of creditors on grounds of fraud.—Welton v. McBride, 162 Mich. 193.

¶ 192. Where the husband of a chattel mortgagee withdrew from a firm the day after it opened its store for business, and financial statements rendered by the firm, by the successor and by the husband made no mention of the mortgage, it was held to lead to the conclusion that the court below was warranted in finding that the mortgages given for amounts largely in excess of the amount actually advanced, were with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud the creditors of the mortgagor, and that they were purposely kept from the files with intent to defraud, and are fraudulent and void as against creditors who sold on faith of credit reports.—Patrick v. Riggs, 105 Mich. 616.

¶ 193. Evidence that grantee, the father, had been working for the grantor and for others for more than thirteen years, his wages being received by such grantor under an agreement to pay interest thereon, is sufficient to show an adequate consideration, as against the son's creditors.—Woodhull v. Whittle, 63 Mich. 575.

¶ 194. On a bill in aid of execution by creditors to set aside a deed to land given by a debtor to his son and son's wife held that the contention that the deed was without consideration because the grantees paid nothing to the grantor was without merit where it appeared that the father had himself paid nothing for the land and simply held the legal title to the land as security for a loan made by the mother to the son.—Atkinson v. Akin, 197 Mich. 289.

D. TRANSFERS TO FAMILY, RELATIVES OR BUSINESS ASSOCIATES.

§ 45. In general; intent to defraud or effect upon solvency.

Persons against whom fraudulent transfers invalid, see post II.
Rights and liabilities of grantee towards defrauded creditors, see post IV.
Necessity of making wife party defendant to suit to set aside fraudulent transfer, see also post ¶ 570.

¶ 195. Where a conveyance is made by a debtor to his father who afterwards conveys to the debtor's children, the debtor remaining in control and possession, the transaction is not an honest preference but a cover to keep the property from the creditors and it may be impeached by the creditors.—Munson v. Arnold, 55 Mich. 134.

¶ 196. A husband gave to his wife forty acres of land valuable chiefly for pasture, upon which he paid the taxes, made improvements, and used the proceeds in common with the proceeds from the rest of the farm for the support of his family. At the same time he agreed to pay his wife a high rent for the land which was permitted to accumulate until with interest it equaled the value of 80 acres upon which the farm buildings were situated which he then conveyed to the wife in payment. At the same time a son rendered services on the farm and in payment 40 acres thereof was deeded to him, leaving nothing for creditors. Held, that the lands so conveyed were liable to levy and execution in favor of a creditor of the husband.—Winslow v. Putnam, 130 Mich. 359.

¶ 197. Where a debtor, in anticipation of proceedings against him, made a deed to his brother, the evident purpose of which was to hamper the title, and for which a very small part of the consideration was paid, the deed was held to be invalid as against creditors.—Chase v. Welsh, 45 Mich. 345.

¶ 198. Transfers from a father to his son and from the latter to his wife, held fraudulent as to creditors.—Rindge v. Grow, 99 Mich. 482.

¶ 199. Not every voluntary conveyance by a parent to a child is fraudulent against creditors; but when made in good faith by way of advancement, and abundant property is retained by the parent to pay all his debts, it is good against existing as well as subsequent creditors.—Cutter v. Griswold, W. 437.

¶ 200. Where a man, while solvent, makes provision for his wife that is not extravagant in view of existing circumstances, and does so in good faith and not in anticipation of reverses, it cannot be set aside on a bill in aid of execution for a debt incurred afterwards.—Brown v. Vandermeulen, 44 Mich. 522.

¶ 201. An absolute title under a deed by a husband to his wife cannot be affected by the fact that he long subsequently signed and did not pay a certain note and it does not subject the lands to an execution issued on a judgment rendered on the note, notwithstanding she may not have paid a valuable consideration for the lands and did not record her deed until shortly prior to maturity of the note.—Otis v. Sprague, 118 Mich. 61.

¶ 202. An allegation that a warranty deed was executed and delivered to the grantor's wife with an intent to defraud his creditors is not sustained by evidence merely that the deed was withheld from record for a number of years, and that the grantor continued to collect the rents for the property conveyed, where it appears that the grantor had at the time other property amply sufficient to pay his debts, and where it further appears that the deed to the land in controversy was withheld from record through inadvertence, and that the grantor accounted to the grantee for all rents by him collected.—Michigan Trust Co. v. Adams, 109 Mich. 181.

¶ 203. A deed of real property, executed by a husband to his wife with a view to protecting himself against the contingency of failure in his business, and purposely withheld from record in a place equally under his control and hers until, the risks of such business having increased, his assets, aside from the premises so conveyed, are less than his liabilities, is void as against creditors, even though the grantor was solvent at the time of its execution.—Preston Nat. Bank v. Pierson, 112 Mich. 435.

¶ 204. A wife lent money to her husband which he used in his business; and, while solvent, he bought lands with her money and such lands were conveyed to her, he afterwards becoming insolvent. Held, that the wife was under no obligation to notify persons with whom her husband dealt that he was trading with her capital, or to take writings showing the state of her account with him, and that the lands were not subject to his debts.—Buhl v. Peck, 70 Mich. 44.

¶ 205. A bill in aid of execution was dismissed where the premises which the complainant sought to reach had been deeded by the judgment debtor to his daughter before complainant's claim arose, and while he was solvent, in consideration of the daughter's kindness and attention to him in sickness, and, where, though the grantor had kept the deed in his own custody he had repeatedly recognized its execution and delivery to the daughter, who had for years occupied the premises with the understanding, on the part of the family, that they were hers.—Dunham v. Pitkin, 53 Mich. 504.

Weight and sufficiency of evidence to show transfer from parent to child fraudulent, see post ¶¶ 291, 294-297, 301.

¶ 206. A transfer by an aged and infirm debtor to his son as a voluntary provision for the grantor and his family was avoided in favor of creditors.—Pursel v. Armstrong, 37 Mich. 326.

¶ 207. A transfer by a father, aged and in poor physical condition, of property to a son without consideration, for the purpose of defeating the claims of creditors, will be set aside.—Terry v. Terry, 170 Mich. 330.

¶ 208. A conveyance of land by parent to child, when based on a valuable consideration, although the deed is withheld from record, is not void as to one who subsequently extends credit to a third person in reliance on the grantor's guaranty, where the grantor does not make any representations as to the extent of his property.—Reed v. Brown, 184 Mich. 515.

¶ 209. Where a judgment debtor conveyed forty acres of land to his son, the same being his only property subject to execution, under suspicious circumstances, characterizing the transaction as a fraud, such conveyance, on a bill in aid of execution, will be vacated and set aside as to such judgment.—Yates v. McGahen, 174 Mich. 211.

Creation of estates by the entireties as fraud of creditors' rights, see Husband and Wife ¶ 106.

¶ 210. A transfer of property by a man to his wife may be in effect a conveyance in fraud of creditors although made with no actual intent to defraud creditors.—Felker v. Chubb, 90 Mich. 24.

¶ 211. If a husband who is insolvent at the time causes real estate to be conveyed to his wife, the conveyance will be void both as to existing and as to subsequent creditors.—Beach v. White, W. 495.

¶ 213. A husband transferred certain village lots to his wife while divorce proceedings were pending between them, and she occupied them as a home, but secretly conveyed them back to him after her solicitor had recovered a judgment against her for his services; held, that such conveyance was fraudulent and void as against the levy and sale under such judgment.—Smith v. Brown, 34 Mich. 455.

¶ 214. A creditor's bill may be maintained to reach assets of a partnership in the hands of the executor, it being alleged that a partner transferred property of the partnership to his wife, without consideration, before his death, which assets were in the possession of the wife's executor.—Murdoch v. Walls, 121 Mich. 164.

¶ 215. A conveyance by a husband, liable as an indorser upon promissory notes, to his wife, without sufficient consideration, for the purpose of covering up the property, and keeping it beyond the reach of creditors, will be set aside as fraudulent.—Treadwell v. Wilsey, 110 Mich. 646.

Weight and sufficiency of evidence as to transfers through intermediaries to family or relatives, see post § 64.

¶ 216. A conveyance by a husband through a third person to himself and wife, at a time when he had become deeply involved, is fraudulent as to creditors where it appears that he had made false statements regarding his property, and incumbered his personal property by chattel mortgages which were not recorded, the deeds effecting the conveyance being executed at night and indorsed "please do not publish," before they were recorded, the claimed consideration for the transfer being money loaned by the wife, to which the husband was entitled.—Lansing State Sav. Bank v. Harrington, 151 Mich. 268.

¶ 217. An insolvent merchant who had mortgaged to a bank a building containing both his store and residence, conveyed the premises to the bank, which returned the mortgage notes but retained the mortgage, and at the same time executed a contract of purchase to the mortgagor's wife. The latter afterwards paid $1,000 upon the contract. It appearing that the merchant entered into the arrangement with the bank for the purpose of placing the title in his wife and defeating his creditors, and that the payment by his wife was in fact made by him and reduced the bank's claim by that amount, the contract was set aside, the deed treated as a mortgage, and the premises sold subject to the balance unpaid on the mortgage, and to the wife's dower and homestead interest.—Desbecker v. Mendelson, 117 Mich. 293.

See also ante ¶¶ 124, 181, and post ¶ 493a.

¶ 218. The fraudulent effect of a gift from a man to his wife by which the property is placed beyond the reach of creditors is not changed by the fact that the wife, while she knew her husband was indebted, did not know that he could not give her his property under the circumstances.—Matson v. Melchor, 42 Mich. 477.

¶ 219. One who owns lands subject to a contract to sell and convey the same to his wife upon which a part of the purchase price remains unpaid cannot, pending suit against him and on the eve of a judgment, make a valid deed of gift of his interest in the lands to his wife to defeat an execution levy.—Doak v. Runyon, 33 Mich. 75.

¶ 220. When the effect of a voluntary conveyance by a husband to his wife is to defraud his creditors, no actual intent to defraud need be shown.—Felker v. Chubb, 90 Mich. 24.

¶ 221. Where a judgment creditor's bill is filed to set aside voluntary conveyances made by a man to his wife long before he became indebted to complainant, the latter must show that they were made with intent to defraud either existing or subsequent creditors.——Brown v. Vandermeulen, 44 Mich. 522.

¶ 222. Before the statute of 1844, a settlement after marriage, on the wife, of property belonging to her before marriage, in pursuance of an ante-nuptial parol agreement, was void as against creditors; the promise to make such settlement being founded solely upon the consideration of marriage, and therefore void as within the statute of frauds.—Wood v. Savage, 2 D. 316, reversing W. 471.

¶ 223. Where one makes a settlement upon his wife under such circumstances as, if voluntary, would render it void as to creditors, and receives from her a small and inadequate consideration, such settlement will be sustained in equity only so far as to secure to her the repayment of that sum.—Herschfeldt v. George, 6 Mich. 456.

¶ 226. A conveyance of property by a husband to the wife is in fraud of creditors where made without consideration, leaving to the husband no property except an interest in a failing corporation, which interest subsequently sold for $1,500, the indebtedness being proximate to $4,000.—Palmer v. Smith, 126 Mich. 352.

Right of creditors to proceeds of mortgage purchased by daughter of debtor with money furnished by him, see Foreclosure ¶ 515.
Sufficiency of evidence of consideration, see also post ¶ 308.

¶ 227. The services of a wife as clerk in the bakery of the husband belong to him and do not furnish an adequate consideration, as against creditors of the husband, for a conveyance of real estate by the husband to the wife.—Henze v. Rogatzky, 199 Mich. 558.

¶ 228. A conveyance by a husband to his wife, without a present consideration, made at a time when the husband is sought to be held as surety upon the bond of a defaulting township officer, and embracing property the title to which has stood in his name for twenty-five years, and which was included in his estimate of assets when he gave the bond and justified as to his responsibility, is fraudulent as to the township, even though the property was originally purchased under an arrangement entered into by the wife without the knowledge of the husband, and was paid for out of a common fund to which her earnings contributed.—Township Maple Valley v. Foley, 113 Mich. 622.

¶ 230. A wife who voluntarily gives money to her husband, there being no express agreement that his property is to be conveyed to her in consideration of the loan, is not a bona fide purchaser of such property when conveyed to her before his death.—Williams v. Williams, 118 Mich. 477.

¶ 231. An agreement whereby a husband is to pay to his wife a specified sum per year for her services as housekeeper is contrary to public policy, and a claim founded thereon will not support a conveyance to the wife as against the rights of creditors.—Michigan Trust Co. v. Chapin, 106 Mich. 384.

¶ 232. Property conveyed by a husband to his wife is properly subjected to execution against him, although the husband was indebted to the wife, where the value of the property so conveyed, together with a mortgage received by her on the transfer of other property, exceeds the indebtedness to the wife and the homestead valuation to an amount substantially equaling the execution debt.—Ryan v. Meyer, 108 Mich. 638.

¶ 234. In 1902, before any indebtedness was contracted by defendants, they deeded certain land to their son, and delivered the instrument to him, which deed was lost. The son took charge of the land, cropped, managed, and had the proceeds from it. It was thereafter assessed to him and he paid the taxes thereon. In 1906, after defendants had incurred indebtedness and were involved in litigation, the old deed having been lost, they made a new deed to the son. Held, the judgment creditors were not entitled on a creditor's bill and one in aid of execution to reach the land deeded to the son.—Rohrabacher v. Walsh, 170 Mich. 59.

¶ 234a. Where by mutual understanding between husband and wife their mutual acquisitions were to be equally divided and owned, and a certain amount of property was vested in the wife accordingly, if she afterwards allowed her husband to dispose of this property for his own benefit, she became to that extent his creditor.—Hyde v. Powell, 47 Mich. 156.

¶ 236. On a bill filed in aid of execution to set aside a mortgage claimed to be fraudulent, held the conveyance of a mortgaged homestead and other land, by a husband to his wife, in consideration of her releasing dower in other realty of his which he desired to dispose of, and of $200 claimed to be due her for improvements made upon the homestead, was not fraudulent, the consideration being a good though perhaps not an adequate one.—Peaslee v. Collier, 83 Mich. 549.

¶ 237. A husband who was deeply indebted which fact was known to his wife, sold some property, the wife joining in the conveyance, and shortly thereafter conveyed to his wife certain other property and also some lots received upon the sale, the value of the whole being in excess of her dower right in the land sold. In a suit to set aside the deed as in fraud of creditors, held, that the conveyance could not be sustained as being in consideration of joining in the deed of the property sold where her testimony showed that the value of her dower right was not considered in the transaction.—Riggs v. Whitaker, 130 Mich. 327.

§ 52. Preference of family or relatives as creditors.

By conveyance of lands, see post § 53.
Right to prefer creditors generally, see post §§ 68-71.
Right of wife as creditor of her husband where she fails to make known her claim, see post ¶ 472.
Right to prefer wife by transfer of property to her which includes homestead, see ante ¶¶ 168, 169, 171-174.

¶ 238. Parents have a right, as against creditors, to compensate children for their services in supporting them.—Howard v. Rynearson, 50 Mich. 307.

¶ 239. A husband who is indebted to his wife may prefer her to other creditors, and can transfer his property to her to apply on the debt, even if it defeats the collection of other debts.—Hill v. Bowman, 35 Mich. 191; Jordan v. White, 38 Mich. 253.

¶ 240. On an accounting under a bill attacking the transfer of certain personal property from husband to wife under a former decree holding such transfer to be in fraud of creditors, record examined and held that certain credits should be allowed defendant and deducted from the amount allowed under the decree.—Jewell v. Kelley, 180 Mich. 61.

¶ 241. A son who is actually indebted to his father has a legal right to prefer him to other creditors and to convey to him, in payment of his debt, enough of his property to meet it, even though he should not have enough left to pay the rest of his debts.—State Bank of Fenton v. Whittle, 48 Mich. 1; Woodhull v. Whittle, 63 Mich. 575.

¶ 242. A husband who is in good faith indebted to his wife has the right to prefer her to other creditors, but when a conveyance is made by an insolvent husband to his wife in payment of alleged debts, the transaction should be closely scrutinized.—Winslow v. Putnam, 130 Mich. 359.

¶ 243. A husband's conveyance to his wife, in payment of a debt due to her from him, of property worth no more than the debt, is not fraudulent as to creditors.—Dull v. Merrill, 69 Mich. 49; Wooden v. Wooden, 72 Mich. 347; Meigs v. Dibble, 73 Mich. 101.

¶ 244. A husband may lawfully prefer his wife's bona fide debt, but may not, as against other creditors, convey property to her for a grossly inadequate sum.—First Nat. Bank of Lake Linden v. Condon, 122 Mich. 457.

¶ 245. A husband's parol agreement that lands purchased in his name shall eventually be exchanged for a homestead, which shall be taken in the name of his wife, does not operate to discharge a debt that he is owing her, so as to prevent him from thereafter conveying such lands to her in payment of the debt as against other creditors, who set up the invalidity of the secret trust.—Parker v. Barkenowitz, 116 Mich. 58.

¶ 246. A deed given by a husband to his wife in payment of a bona fide debt having been recorded before the debt of a complaining creditor was contracted, and there being no evidence of a fraudulent intent on the wife's part, is valid.—Strauss v. Parshall, 91 Mich. 475.

¶ 247. A husband who is, in good faith, in debt to his wife has a right to pay her claim in preference to the claims of other creditors; and if this is done by having land deeded to her, for which he exchanged a stock of goods which had in turn been bought with the proceeds of land which had been purchased in part with her money, the deed cannot be set aside.—Leppig v. Bretzel, 48 Mich. 321.

¶ 248. A conveyance from a father to his daughter cannot be set aside as fraudulent in respect to creditors where the consideration therefor is not apparently excessive and consists of the amount due on a note from him to her, with interest, and embraces her services in their support and her agreement to support them in future.—Howard v. Rynearson, 50 Mich. 307.

¶ 249. A husband was appointed guardian of his wife's mother, an incompetent. He collected a sum of money due the mother as back pension and used the same to discharge a mortgage on his own land. He did not account for this money during the lifetime of the mother, but after her death conveyed said land to his wife for the purpose of discharging his obligation to the mother's estate. The value of the land was approximately equal to the amount due the estate. Held, a bill brought by the husband's creditors to set aside such conveyance as fraudulent was properly dismissed.—Heller Aller Co. v. Ries, 164 Mich. 501.

¶ 250. A husband who is solvent cannot expend all his means in erecting a building on land owned by his wife and leave creditors who have furnished the materials without redress, and such creditors may maintain a creditors' bill and a bill in aid of execution against the property improved except that the original interest of the wife must be protected.—Brand v. Connery, 132 Mich. 88.

See also post ¶ 564.
Adequacy where consideration furnished by debtor for grant or transfer to his child, see also ante ¶ 176.

¶ 251. Bad faith by a debtor in transactions as to real estate is not shown by proof that the debtor himself paid for such property and took a quitclaim deed in the name of his wife and that the wife subsequently conveyed such premises to another person, where the debtor at the time of such transactions was solvent.—Downing v. Brooks, 194 Mich. 490.

¶ 252. The action of a debtor in having title to purchased property quitclaimed to his wife and in having such property subsequently conveyed to another person cannot be questioned by a creditor where the debtor afterwards actually pays the indebtedness due to the creditor at the time of the conveyance, and the debtor was in fact indebted to his wife in an amount equal to the value of the property.—Downing v. Brooks, 194 Mich. 490.

¶ 253. A wife, whose husband was in debt to her, took in her own name a bond and mortgage for which certain of his and certain of her property were exchanged. Creditors of the husband sought, by suit, to reach the bond and mortgage. Held, that a suspicion of fraudulent intention on her part would not justify a finding that she was guilty of fraud, and that she was entitled to have the value of her interest in the bond and mortgage paid to her after the foreclosure in the creditors' suit, and that the creditors were entitled to the balance.—Cicotte v. Stebbins, 49 Mich. 631.

¶ 254. Where a husband, to hinder his judgment creditor, has with his own funds taken title to land in the joint names of himself and his wife, crops subsequently sown on such land without agreement between the husband and wife as to who shall own them cannot be subjected by such creditor to levy and sale under an execution at law against the husband; and it is conversion to do so.—Dickey v. Converse, 117 Mich. 449.

¶ 255. Where a judgment-debtor and his wife jointly purchased land, which was conveyed to them jointly, held, on judgment-creditor's bill, filed to reach the husband's interest therein, that in the absence of any showing to the contrary the husband would be presumed to have paid one-half of the purchase-price, and that an undivided half of the premises should be sold for the creditor's benefit.—Newlove v. Callaghan, 86 Mich. 297.

¶ 256. Defendant, while the holder of the legal and equitable right to certain lands, became indebted to complainant. He conveyed same to a third person, who immediately reconveyed it to defendant and his wife so as to create an estate by the entireties, for the purpose of defrauding complainant and other creditors, said conveyance being made without consideration. Subsequently complainant secured a judgment at law for the amount of defendant's indebtedness. Held, the estate by the entirety apparently created by the fraudulent deeds, never in fact existed, but the legal title remained all the time in defendant, and a bill in equity would lie to set aside said conveyance and to subject the latter to levy.—Hackett v. Kenning, 170 Mich. 583.

¶ 257. Where a contract for the exchange of real estate is entered into and one purchaser takes title to the exchanged property in the names of herself and husband for the purpose of defrauding the seller and other creditors, the interest of the purchaser may be subjected to execution under Comp. Laws 1897, § 9167, How. 2nd ed., § 11321, providing that all real estate of any debtor, including legal and equitable interests in lands acquired by parties to contracts for sale and purchase of land, including lands fraudulently conveyed with the intent to defeat, delay or defraud his creditors, shall be subject to execution.—Lipp v. Jacobs, 198 Mich. 357.

Evidence admissible as to transfers to business associates, see post ¶ 278.

¶ 258. On a bill by creditors of a corporation against retiring stockholders, to set aside the sale of certain corporate stock and to enjoin the foreclosure of a mortgage, held, that the sale was made in good faith to the corporation, and not to defendant officers, to whom the stock was assigned before the claims of the creditors arose.—Clark v. E. C. Clark Mach. Co., 151 Mich. 416.

¶ 259. A conveyance was made to enable the grantee to purchase goods for the joint benefit of both parties, who were to become partners. The goods were not purchased, and a creditor of the grantor who had sued his claim before the conveyance was made levied upon the premises. It was held that the conveyance was fraudulent and void as to such creditor.—Wisner v. Farnham, 2 Mich. 472.

¶ 260. Fraud on the unsecured creditors of a firm cannot be imputed to a mortgage by it to its lawful bona fide creditor because of the fact that the creditor was also a firm in which there was a partner common to both, and on the theory to sustain the mortgage would allow that member to withdraw assets of the debtor firm for his own benefit.—Burrows v. Leech, 116 Mich. 32.

¶ 261. An agent who had effected for his principal an exchange of a parcel of land for a house and lot, taking, without his principal's knowledge, the conveyance of the house and lot in his own name, conveyed the latter premises to his principal and others to whom an interest had been sold; but before the latter conveyance had been made the premises were levied upon by the agent's creditor who claimed that the exchanged parcel was in fact the agent's, and that the transaction was fraudulent as to creditors. Upon a bill filed to set aside the levy it appeared that the principal had paid for the land, exercised control over it, and had it assessed to herself, and that the deed from the agent was executed in the absence of any claim or showing that either had at that time learned of the levy. Held, that these were controlling facts, and warranted a decree for complainant.—Petit v. Hubbell, 105 Mich. 405.

¶ 262. Where a partner executed and filed a mortgage upon the firm stock in favor of one whose money he had been handling as agent, and in the capacity of agent accepted the same for the mortgagee, justifying the transaction by the claim that he had applied certain of the mortgagee's funds to the use of the firm, such mortgage was held fraudulent at the suit of a creditor who was at the time of its execution pressing the firm for security, and who immediately afterwards accepted a mortgage upon the same stock, it appearing that the only evidence, aside from the testimony of the mortgaging partner, which was not convincing, to show that the alleged consideration ever passed to the firm, was a statement in a book wherein he kept his accounts as agent that his principal had received a firm note for the amount, and, on the date of the mortgage, an entry of interest therein.—Williams v. Baker, 116 Mich. 66.

¶ 262a. The transfer of property to a corporation of which the transferor is an organizer and the acceptance of stock for the full value of the property does not work an injury to creditors so as to justify garnishment proceedings against the corporation as garnishee of the transferor.—Plaut v. Billings-Drew Co., 127 Mich. 11.

§ 58. Transfers for benefit of business associates.

Weight and sufficiency of evidence as to transfers to business associates, see post § 65.

¶ 263. It is not necessarily fraudulent, either in fact or in law, for a firm that is solvent to give a partnership mortgage to the father of one of the partners to secure the individual debt of a partner.—Caulfield v. Curry, 63 Mich. 594.

§ 59. Presumptions and burden of proof.

Burden of proof and presumptions as to matters not related to specific elements and indicia of fraud, see post § 132.

¶ 264. The fact that the transferees are relatives does not raise a presumption that the transfer is in fraud of creditors.—Fraser v. Passage, 63 Mich. 551.

¶ 265. A conveyance by an insolvent debtor will not be presumed fraudulent because executed to a relative.—Kalamazoo Spring & Axle Co. v. Winans, Pratt & Co., 106 Mich. 193.

¶ 266. There is no rule of law whereby a husband cannot give his property to his wife without raising a presumption of fraud.—Manke v. Manke, 75 Mich. 435.

¶ 267. The alleged fraudulent conveyance being by a man to his intended wife, whom he soon after married, it was held that the continued occupation of the land by him after the marriage, the neglect for some years to record the deed, and the mortgaging of the land by husband and wife for the husband's benefit, did not raise a presumption of fraudulent intent in making the conveyance.—Page v. Kendrick, 10 Mich. 300.

¶ 268. Where creditors attack a husband's conveyance to his wife of land in payment of his debt to her, the burden is upon them—if they rely on such representations—of bringing home to her knowledge that he was making representations at the time he became indebted to them, that he owed no debts and had money at interest.—Dull v. Merrill, 69 Mich. 49.

¶ 269. A claimant whose only title consisted of a tax-deed and a quitclaim from a party who denied having any title sold to his son for $100, none of which was paid, a parcel worth $1,000. Held that, although the same strictness is not always to be looked for between father and son as between strangers, the burden of proving that this sale was in good faith and for a valuable consideration was on the parties thereto, in a suit to quiet title, to which they had been made defendants.—Hammontree v. Lott, 40 Mich. 190.

¶ 271. A conveyance from a husband to his wife, made in pursuance of an agreement whereby money was borrowed will be sustained where the evidence clearly shows such facts, although Pub. Acts 1897, No. 99, provides that a complainant shall make a prima facie case on a bill filed in aid of execution by introducing his judgment, execution, and levy, and proof of the conveyance complained of, and thereafter the burden of proof shall be upon the judgment debtor to show that the transaction is bona fide.—Keegan v. Loranger, 118 Mich. 481.

Transfers from husband to wife, see post § 61.

¶ 272. The fact that an insolvent debtor is related to persons with whom he has dealings does not necessarily show that such dealings are fraudulent, though it is a circumstance calling for greater scrutiny, and the relationship is always admissible for that purpose.—Blish v. Collins, 68 Mich. 542.

¶ 273. In assumpsit by the trustee in bankruptcy to recover the value of goods alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed, evidence that the transferee was the father of one bankrupt, that he knew that only $3,000 had been put into the business, that he purchased the partnership stock for $5,000 knowing that the partners had partnership debts and personal debts aggregating more than the proceeds, is not sufficient to authorize a directed verdict for the plaintiff.—Lyon v. Clark, 129 Mich. 381.

¶ 274. Where a bill of sale from a son to his mother is attacked by his creditors as fraudulent, it is proper to go fully into the transactions between the two, with reference to any property which the son had owned, and their dealings respecting it, before, at or after his failure, which had any bearing on the question of fraud.—Burrill v. Kimbell, 65 Mich. 217.

¶ 275. On an issue of good faith in a transfer from a son to his father where the property has been attached as belonging to the son, it is proper to ask him whether any portion of his object in making the transfer was to hinder, delay or defraud creditors.—Hart v. Newton, 48 Mich. 401.

¶ 276. On the question whether goods were purchased by a merchant with the intent of reselling or transferring them to his relatives to whom he was indebted, and thereby applying them to payment of a factitious indebtedness claimed by the relatives, it is proper to show that immediately after acquiring the business from them he asked other dealers for quotations and samples of goods and to show what was done with the samples received, he being without capital and in debt for more than the total of his assets, it being also in evidence that large purchases were made from such other dealers and that large sales were claimed to have been made to the relatives corresponding in amount to the amount of the purchases.—Gumberg v. Treusch, 103 Mich. 543.

¶ 277. On the question whether the principal debtor related to the garnishees and in failing circumstances had transferred to them in fraud of other creditors certain merchandise out of his stock, it is competent to show how the orders of the garnishees for goods were filled, whether in the usual course of business or otherwise.—Gumberg v. Treusch, 103 Mich. 543.

¶ 278. On the question whether a mortgage by a firm was in fraud of its creditors it is relevant to show whether the money it was said to secure really passed into the firm, the mortgage having been executed by one partner who was also agent of the mortgagee and who delivered the mortgage to himself as agent, since it bore on the question whether there was any consideration for the mortgage.—Williams v. Baker, 116 Mich. 66.

¶ 279. Where a wife asserts that lands conveyed to her by her husband were in payment of loans made by her to him, the nonexistence of any written evidence of the debt is at most a suspicious circumstance, open to explanation, and does not justify the rejection of her testimony.—Allen v. Antisdale, 38 Mich. 229.

¶ 280. All facts and circumstances bearing on the good faith of an alleged change of ownership from husband to wife should be admitted in evidence where the rights of the husband's creditors are involved and the only change of possession pretended is from the husband as owner to the husband as agent, though business goes on in his name.—Judge v. Vogel, 38 Mich. 569.

¶ 281. Evidence as to the source from which a wife obtained the money paid for real estate conveyed to her is admissible upon an issue whether a subsequent transfer of personalty from the husband to the wife was voluntary and fraudulent as to his creditors.—Jansen v. McQueen, 112 Mich. 254.

¶ 282. In an action by a wife against a sheriff who had seized goods, claimed by her under a chattel mortgage given her by her husband to secure alleged loans to him, for the debt of the husband, the defense being that the chattel mortgage was fraudulent, it is error to exclude evidence of statements made to R. G. Dun & Co. and to the creditor by the husband relative to his assets and liabilities; since in cases of fraud wide latitude is permitted in the admission of evidence and inferences are generally for the jury, and if, at the conclusion of the evidence, there is nothing to show that plaintiff had knowledge of the representations made by the husband the court will so instruct the jury.—Heath v. Koon, 130 Mich. 54.

conducting business, and of his financial condition, and of other circumstances are admissible on the question of good faith in giving the mortgage.—Heath v. Koon, 130 Mich. 54.

¶ 284. A judgment debtor, his wife joining, conveyed his land to a third person to secure a loan, and upon the death of such third person his executors conveyed to the wife of the judgment debtor. In a suit by the judgment creditor, attacking these conveyances as being in fraud of creditors, held, that books of account kept by the trustees and executors of the third person are not admissible, as they can have no influence in determining whether the transfers of land by her and her husband to the third person, and by such third person back to her, were in fraud of creditors.—Rathbone v. Maltz, 155 Mich. 306.

¶ 285. In replevin by a wife against her husband's execution creditors for goods claimed by her under a bill of sale from her husband to secure a debt due her for money long previously lent, where no note was given or account kept, and no interest or principal paid or requested, it is proper to show on cross-examination of the husband what property he has owned since the debt originated, what the profits of his business have been, and his wife's knowledge from time to time of his business ventures and investments.—Miller v. Hanley, 94 Mich. 253.

¶ 286. In replevin by a wife against a levy against property as her husband's it is proper to show that plaintiff and her husband have made statements relative to the ownership of the property on deposit inconsistent with the claim made at the trial; and the financial condition of both husband and wife from the time when the debt originated may be inquired into, and a wide latitude of cross-examination should be allowed to the judgment creditor.—Miller v. Hanley, 94 Mich. 253.

¶ 287. In replevin against a city treasurer for property levied upon to satisfy a tax against plaintiff's husband, she may show, as bearing on the good faith of a transfer of the goods to herself from her husband, that she had insured the property and used it as her own.—Hall v. Moriarty, 57 Mich. 345.

¶ 289. Where a wife claims as against creditors that property conveyed to her was in payment of an alleged debt, the financial condition of both herself and husband from the time the debt originated is a proper subject of inquiry.—Miller v. Hanley, 94 Mich. 253.

¶ 290. In an action by a wife for an alleged wrongful attachment, where the evidence as to plaintiff's title was mainly that of her husband who stated that he transferred the property he had employed in his business, to his wife by bill of sale reciting consideration of one dollar and other valuable consideration and that at the time of the transfer he was indebted; that the name over the door was the family name; that plaintiff was at the shop a portion of the time and that the garnished money could only be withdrawn under plaintiff's name signed by the husband, and that he was unable to state the amount paid him by his wife on the transfer; it was error for the court to treat such possession as one which cast the burden of proof upon the defendant.—Mazirioff v. Commercial Bank, 135 Mich. 390.

Transfers from one spouse to other, see post § 63.

Transfers through intermediaries to family or relatives, see post § 64.

Transfers to business associates, see post § 65.

Weight and sufficiency of evidence as to matters not related to specific elements and indicia of fraud, see post § 134.

¶ 291. Evidence that at the time a father and daughter purchased land in common he informed her that upon his death she should have it, and that both father and daughter made quitclaim deeds to each other, which were kept in the control of both until his death when hers was destroyed and his was recorded, is sufficient to justify setting aside the deed in fraud of creditors upon payment to the daughter of such sums as she has paid out as interest and principal on a mortgage on the premises.—Sullivan v. Parkinson, 128 Mich. 527.

¶ 292. Testimony of a father and his son and others to whom the son was indebted on notes indorsed by the father as to the existence of the debts, and the notes in evidence, opposed by testimony, of declarations by the father, denied by him or explained by referring them to an earlier time, that the son did not owe anything and that declarant had not signed for his son, sufficiently shows the debt secured to be bona fide.—Tarbell v. Millard, 63 Mich. 250.

¶ 293. On an issue whether a father paid full value for property transferred by his insolvent son, testimony by the father that $500 advanced by him to the son to purchase stock was a loan was overcome by his testimony given in an earlier case wherein the father declared it was a gift; and, having formed a part of the ostensible consideration for the transfer, the father will be held as a trustee for the son's creditors to that amount.—Richards v. McCormick, 119 Mich. 7.

¶ 295. On a bill by an administrator under Comp. Laws 1897, § 9363, How. St. 2nd Ed., § 11074, to set aside a deed from the intestate to his son, which was filed of record after the latter's death, upon the ground that it was fraudulent as to creditors, and particularly as to a niece to whom he had agreed to will the property as compensation for services as housekeeper, evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that the deed was fraudulently procured by the son with full knowledge as to the agreement between his father and the housekeeper so as to authorize setting aside the deed.—Merriam v. Vandemark, 189 Mich. 226.

¶ 297. A conveyance in fraud of creditors is made out by evidence that the debtor conveyed land to his son without any money consideration under an alleged agreement that the son was to work for the father for two years, that the deed was not recorded until after the father had made an assignment for creditors with assets of about $1,100 and liability of more than $4,000, that subsequently the son conveyed the land to his mother, that she reconveyed it to him and he then reconveyed one-half of it to his father.—Noble v. McKeith, 127 Mich. 163.

¶ 298. Evidence is sufficient to go to the jury on the question of a transfer to defraud creditors where the defendant conveyed all his interest in his father's estate to pay off a mortgage on property held by himself and his wife in entirety, even though at the time of acquiring the estate in entirety he did not have or use a dollar's worth of property which was liable to execution.—Caswell v. Pilkinton, 138 Mich. 138.

¶ 299. The dismissal of a creditor's bill against husband, wife and daughter, in aid of execution upon a deficiency decree against the wife, was set aside, where the course of dealing with the property in question by the defendant family, was suggestive of and strongly tended to show fraud in anticipation of the decree.—Adams v. Bruske, 135 Mich. 339.

¶ 300. Where one who was considerably indebted caused his real estate to be conveyed to his wife and soon thereafter contracted large debts, representing himself to be still the owner of this real estate, and within a few months failed and made an assignment, but showing assets to less than half the amount of his debts, and there was no explanation of these facts, held, that the settlement upon the wife was fraudulent and void as to the subsequent creditors.—Herschfeldt v. George, 6 Mich. 456.

¶ 302. A defendant pending suit gave his brother a mortgage which, if valid, would make a judgment against him worthless. It was given ostensibly to secure a debt, the existence of which had been carefully concealed, even from the mortgagor's family, and most of which would be outlawed unless it had been renewed. The supposed debtor had always appeared to be prosperous, and the indications were that the debt would never have been heard of but for the impending judgment. The original evidence of it had been suppressed or destroyed. Held, that the case could not be treated as one in which a brother, for relationship's sake, had refrained from pressing his claims; and that he was not entitled to take precedence over others as a bona fide creditor.—First Nat. Bank of St. Johns v. Tyler, 55 Mich. 297.

§ 63. ——Transfers from one spouse to other.

See also ante ¶ 300.

Transfers from one spouse to other, see ante §§ 47-49.

¶ 304. In a suit brought by a wife to remove the cloud created upon her title to real estate by executions levied by her husband's creditors, she was denied relief on the ground that the deed under which she claimed was in furtherance of fraud upon such creditors; where it appeared that defendants claimed under a sheriff's sale and levy, made to satisfy claims against complainant's husband, who was a dissipated man and unfit for carrying on business; that prior to his marriage with complainant, he deeded the property to his brother, who paid no money upon such alleged purchase until the night after the deed was redelivered; that the only testimony as to such payment of money was his own, and that his testimony showed inconsistencies; that such brother subsequent to complainant's marriage sold such land to complainant; that subsequently both deeds were recorded; that complainant's testimony as to the money with which she purchased of her husband's brother was evasive and unsatisfactory, but contained the statement that she borrowed it of a relative, who it appeared, was heavily in debt at the time; that complainant did not call upon her husband to testify as to such transactions of which he must have had knowledge.—Barrett v. Lowrey, 77 Mich. 668.

¶ 306. On bill in aid of execution a deed by the debtor alleged to be for the purpose of compensating his daughter for her share of her mother's estate which consisted of moneys received and used by the debtor is held to be in fraud of creditors where the evidence shows that the daughter has title to other property purchased by the debtor and deeded to her, and sufficient apparently to cover her claim.—Steuben County Wine Co. v. Lee, 127 Mich. 698.

¶ 308. A conveyance by a husband to his wife will not be held fraudulent under evidence showing that it was made in pursuance of a proper agreement whereby money was borrowed from a wife by the husband, although conveyances between husband and wife will be carefully scrutinized when attacked by creditors as fraudulent.—Keegan v. Loranger, 118 Mich. 481.

¶ 309. Conveyances of land of value of $4,000 and $2,000 respectively, made by a husband to his wife shortly before his death, cannot be sustained by the husband's receipt of money from his wife thirteen years before when proof thereof rests on her testimony; if she is able to fix the amount no nearer than "two or three hundred dollars."—Felker v. Chubb, 90 Mich. 24.

¶ 310. Evidence showing that the property conveyed by the husband to the wife is worth little more than the homestead and the mortgage lien thereon, that the husband believed the complainant's note had been paid by another before he made the conveyance, and that the conveyance was to repay a bona fide loan testified to by both the husband and the wife is sufficient to affirm a decree dismissing a bill in aid of execution.—Cole v. Cole, 126 Mich. 569.

¶ 311. On a creditor's bill against husband and wife, filed in aid of an execution against the husband, evidence showing a transfer of the land from the husband to the wife, pursuant to a written contract, for a substantial consideration, in connection with other testimony, held to establish that the transaction was free from fraud.—Jewell v. Kelley, 155 Mich. 301.

¶ 312. On a creditor's bill against husband and wife, in aid of an execution against the husband, evidence showing a transfer of personal property by bill of sale from the husband to the wife, which was not required by any contract of long standing and may have been voluntary, together with doubt as to proof of the consideration and its adequacy, held, sufficient to sustain a finding that the transfer was in fraud of creditors.—Jewell v. Kelley, 155 Mich. 301.

¶ 315. Evidence by the wife alone and contradictory and uncertain as to various details and amounts of items, the husband not being called to testify, held to establish that a conveyance from a debtor to his wife was made for the purpose of placing the property beyond the reach of his creditors, and that the indebtedness to the grantee, if any existed, was so disproportionate to the value of the land as to render the consideration grossly inadequate; and a decree was entered subjecting the property to the claims of creditors.—Case Mfg. Co. v. Perkins, 106 Mich. 349.

¶ 316. Evidence that a deed to an undivided interest in land, executed by a husband to his wife in consideration of the discharge by her of a mortgage covering the whole parcel, was withheld from record for several years, and that the husband, in the meantime, obtained credit by representing himself to be the owner of the interest conveyed to the wife, is insufficient, in the absence of any showing that the wife participated in or had any knowledge of the fraud, to submit the grant to the claims of intervening creditors.—Campbell v. Remaly, 112 Mich. 214.

¶ 317. Where an insolvent debtor deeded to his wife in consideration of a debt he owed her, the fact that notes produced as evidence of loans from the wife to her husband were made as an afterthought would not render the conveyance fraudulent; the debt was independent of the notes, and being clearly proved, the right to payment would not be affected by any weak, foolish or even criminal conduct, in an attempt to sustain the case by manufactured evidence.—Hill v. Bowman, 35 Mich. 191.

¶ 318. Where the indebtedness which constituted the consideration for a debtor's conveyance was satisfactorily established, conveyance was not invalidated even by the evidence that it was from husband to wife, and of all his property, and was secretly made after suit threatened, and not recorded till sometime afterwards, and then only on the grantor's advice, and that there was no change in the possession, but the husband still continued to cultivate and enjoy the land.—Hill v. Bowman, 35 Mich. 191.

¶ 319. Upon a review of the evidence supporting a bill in aid of execution, a conveyance of certain premises by defendant to his wife was held fraudulent and void as against complainant's rights.—Lasher v. Stafford, 30 Mich. 369.

¶ 320. The case made by a bill in aid of execution to reach lands claimed to have been conveyed by the defendant to his wife in fraud of complainant's rights as a creditor was held not sustained by the proofs.—Waldby v. Howell, 30 Mich. 483.

¶ 321. Bare circumstances pointing that way cannot support a conclusion that a transfer to a wife was for the purpose of defeating creditors as against all the direct testimony in the case supporting a conclusion that the transfer was made to the wife in consideration of money advanced by her father to the transferor.—Steel v. DeMay, 102 Mich. 274.

¶ 322. Transfers by husband to wife were sustained on the evidence that they were made upon valuable consideration where the attendant circumstances did not make out fraud.—Miller v. Beadle, 65 Mich. 643; German American Seminary v. Saenger, 66 Mich. 249; Popendick v. Frobenius, 66 Mich. 317.

¶ 324. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 10203, putting the burden of proof on the defendant to show a deed without consideration to be bona fide and that the grantor was not insolvent, a conveyance without consideration to the debtor's wife will be set aside where the evidence shows that he had at that time disposed of trust property for which he was indebted to the cestuis, that subsequently he was found indebted to his father's estate to the amount of $50,000 and the debtor himself failed to take the stand to testify in support of the conveyance.—Wilcox v. Hammond, 128 Mich. 516.

Transfers from one spouse to other through agent or intermediary, see ante § 48.

¶ 325. On a bill in aid of execution to set aside as fraudulent against creditors, a transfer by a judgment debtor of his homestead to a third person, who in turn transferred it to debtor and his wife as tenants in common, evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that debtor was insolvent at the time of the transfer so as to warrant a decree setting aside the transfer.—Rand v. Rodgers, 191 Mich. 465.

¶ 326. A bill in aid of execution attacking a conveyance by a judgment debtor to a third person and a reconveyance to himself and wife as joint tenants is properly dismissed where the evidence shows that the wife loaned the husband $500 twenty years before without any written evidence of debt ever having been taken, that she never received anything on it, that she had no notice of his insolvency at the time of the conveyance but believed it a bona fide conveyance to meet his acknowledged obligation to her.—Ullman v. Thomas, 126 Mich. 61.

Transfers for benefit of business associates, see ante § 58.

Transfers to business associates, see ante § 57.

¶ 327. Evidence held sufficient to show that the transfer by the members of a partnership, while the partnership was insolvent, of horses used in delivering goods for a store and equipment, and copies of route sheets bearing names of customers and orders and good-will of the business to a father of one of the partners, an employee of the firm, was for an inadequate consideration, and invalid as against the creditors of the partnership, and merely a cover for the starting of a new business under a new name in a new location.—Rennells v. Potter, 198 Mich. 49.

§ 66. Instructions and jury questions.

Questions of law and fact as to matters not related to specific elements and indicia of fraud, see post § 135.

Instructions not involving specific elements and indicia of fraud, see post § 136.

¶ 328. In a controversy between execution purchasers and the wife of the judgment debtor, claiming under a bill of sale from her husband, instructions to the jury submitting to them for consideration all the facts bearing upon the good faith of the transaction between the husband and wife, and directing them that if from all the evidence they should find the making of the bill of sale was in fact an absolute sale of the property in good faith in payment of a debt due the wife, without any intent to defraud, delay or hinder any of the other creditors of the husband, their verdict should be for the plaintiff, but if they found it was made with intent to hinder, delay or defraud any of his other creditors, they should find for defendant, are held unobjectionable.—Pierce v. Rehfuss, 35 Mich. 53.

¶ 329. Where, on the trial of an action of replevin brought by a wife to recover property seized under an execution against her husband, he testifies that part of the property had belonged to the wife since its original purchase, and that he transferred the remainder to her some years before the trial for a valuable consideration, and said transfer is claimed by the defendant to have been fraudulent as to creditors, it is error to refuse to instruct the jury, on defendant's request, that in determining the question of the wife's ownership of the property they are not bound to accept and believe the husband's statement in reference to the transfer, but should consider, in connection with his evidence, that of defendant's witnesses who have testified as to statements made by the wife with regard to such ownership at the time the levy was made, as well as all the other evidence and circumstances in the case bearing upon the question of ownership.—Warren v. Carpenter, 99 Mich. 287.

¶ 330. It is error to instruct the jury in an action by a wife to recover property seized under an execution against her husband that whether the husband acted right or wrong (in making the transfer) makes no difference with the rights of the wife, and that, if she is entitled to the ownership of the property, their verdict should be for her, notwithstanding anything the husband may have done.—Warren v. Carpenter, 99 Mich. 287.

¶ 331. In trover by a wife for chattels attached by her husband's creditors but of which he had given her a bill of sale, she, to show title, sought to prove that she owned certain land from which she derived sufficient revenue to enable her to make certain loans to her husband, in part satisfaction of which loans the bill of sale was given. Her testimony tended to show that she furnished the money with which the lands were bought; that title was taken in the husband's name, she supposing it should be so taken; and that afterwards, on her learning she could hold title in her own name, he conveyed, with warranty, to her. Held, that the jury should have been instructed that if the husband's deed was given without any intent to defraud his creditors, and did not in fact defraud them when it was executed, it conveyed to her his entire right and title in and to the land whether the land was originally bought with her money or not; that if the land was bought with her money and title placed in her husband's name, and he, recognizing her right, deeded to her at her request, such deed would convey his entire right and title in and to the land acquired by such original conveyance to him, and subsequent creditors of his could not attack the validity of such deed; and that the title acquired by the husband, subsequently to his warranty deed to his wife, by virtue of a deed to cure certain defects in the title to part of the land inured to her benefit because of his warranty.—Jansen v. McQueen, 105 Mich. 199.

¶ 332. Where the good faith of a debtor's transfer of goods is in question the relationship of the parties to the transfer is a fact for the jury, even though the transferee is a creditor.—Hough v. Dickinson, 58 Mich. 89.

¶ 333. Where the defendant in a pending action, in order to prevent the collection of any judgment that might be rendered, had conveyed certain land and personalty to his wife and children, taking in payment their notes which he afterwards destroyed, and where after judgment against him the deed has been recorded and the bill of sale filed, it is a question for the jury whether the papers were intended to pass title to the grantees.—Cole v. Call, 79 Mich. 159.

¶ 334. A man began business on money borrowed from his father shortly before, and although neither had reason to suppose he had made money, the father sold him at par a quantity of worthless railroad stock, took a mortgage on his stock in trade for an amount that would have nearly exhausted it, and left him in possession to sell the goods in the course of business. The goods were seized on attachment by the son's creditors and the father brought replevin for them. Held, that on those facts the case should have gone to the jury on the question of the good faith of the mortgage.—King v. Hubbell, 42 Mich. 597.

¶ 335. In replevin to recover five cows seized upon execution against plaintiff's husband and his father, where plaintiff testified that the 90 acre farm valued at $3,000 from which the cattle were taken, together with four cattle, was conveyed to her to pay for $300 advanced by her and for services, and in consideration of an agreement to support the father-in-law for life; the question of fraudulent transfer was for the jury.—Kastl v. Arthur, 135 Mich. 278.

Rights of grantee from trustee in bankruptcy as against bankrupt's prior grantee, see Bankruptcy § 7.
Decedent's transfers to defraud creditors, see Estates of Decedents §§ 97-101.

¶ 337. The mere fact that a transfer or series of transfers by a debtor to his creditor will necessarily hinder or delay other creditors, or prevent the collection of their claims, does not render the same fraudulent as a matter of law.—McMorran v. Moore, 113 Mich. 101.

¶ 338. A conveyance made as a preference to a specified creditor is not void for fraud merely because its effect is to hinder, delay and obstruct other creditors; to render it so it must be made with that intent.—Hollister v. Loud, 2 Mich. 309.

Preferences as making assignments invalid, see Assignments for Creditors § 9.
Preferences within Bankruptcy Act, see Bankruptcy § 8.

¶ 339. A debtor may secure or prefer any debt he pleases.—Gay v. Bidwell, 7 Mich. 519; Voorhies v. Frisbie, 25 Mich. 476; Hill v. Bowman, 35 Mich. 191; Bay City State Bank v. Chapelle, 40 Mich. 447.

¶ 340. A debtor has the right to pay one creditor in preference to another.—Thompson v. Newland, 144 Mich. 595.

¶ 341. Debtors may lawfully prefer any honest creditor by mortgage, or may sell out to him an entire stock of goods to pay the debt.—Whitfield v. Stiles, 57 Mich. 410.

¶ 342. A debtor may always prefer any of his creditors, so long as it is not done with some unlawful or forbidden purpose.—Johnson v. Stellwagen, 67 Mich. 10.

¶ 343. Debtors being permitted to prefer one creditor to another, and to use any of their property in the payment or security of their honest debts in such order as they may select, nothing but a distinct lien upon property can prevail against such disposition.—People v. Bristol, 35 Mich. 28.

¶ 344. A debtor may prefer one creditor to another, and may use any of his property for the purpose of paying or securing debts, in such order as he may select, and nothing but a distinct lien upon the property by a creditor can prevail against such disposition.—Belding Sav. Bank v. Moore, 118 Mich. 150.

¶ 345. A merchant when ill gave a bill of sale of his stock and accounts to B., his indorser and brother-in-law. It was absolute in form, but the merchant claimed was only to secure him against loss on indorsements, with the understanding that B. should conduct the business until sufficient should be realized to satisfy the indebtedness upon which he was liable, and should then turn the stock back to the merchant, or to the one then entitled thereto. B. having died, his administrator continued the business in the usual way for a time, and then gave a bill of sale of all his right, title, and interest in the stock to W., another creditor of the merchant, in consideration of the payment by W. of the obligations upon which B. was liable and of the debts incurred in the conduct of the business. Held, that if the transfer to W. was intended to pass an absolute title, and the consideration paid was a fair one, other creditors of the merchant could maintain no right to the property, as such a sale was authorized under the bill of sale to B.—Globe Casket Mfg. Co. v. Wolcott, 106 Mich. 151.

¶ 346. Where no assignment for the benefit of creditors, or no transaction amounting to such assignment, exists, a debtor, though insolvent, may pay or secure particular credits.—Sheldon v. Mann, 85 Mich. 265.

§ 69. ——By mortgage or security.

See also ante ¶ 339, post ¶ 401.
Voluntary mortgages, see ante §§ 32, 33.
Effect of notice or knowledge of mortgagee, see ante § 25.
Notice or knowledge of transferee as affecting transfers in payment of debts, see ante § 24.

¶ 347. An insolvent debtor may prefer one or more of his creditors by mortgage security, and if security is the object it is immaterial whether the effect of giving it is to prevent other creditors from realizing on their claims.—Wood v. Eldredge, 147 Mich. 554.

¶ 348. A debtor, although insolvent, may secure a creditor for the payment of a preexisting debt by a mortgage upon all of his property, although he may have numerous creditors who are unsecured.—Warner v. Littlefield, 89 Mich. 329.

¶ 349. Neither the fact of the debtor's insolvency nor the knowledge on the part of the mortgagee of such fact will defeat or impair a mortgage security taken for an honest debt.—Warner v. Littlefield, 89 Mich. 329.

¶ 350. A creditor who obtains in good faith a security for an honest debt can hold it against any subsequent claim to attack it.—Root v. Potter, 59 Mich. 498.

¶ 351. A debtor has a right to mortgage all his property to secure previous bona fide debts and future advances.—Armstrong v. Cook, 95 Mich. 257.

¶ 352. Parties who take security from persons indebted to others must act in good faith, and so as not unnecessarily to hinder, delay or deceive other creditors.—Showman v. Lee, 86 Mich. 556.

¶ 353. A mortgage is not fraudulent that is taken, without fraudulent intent, to secure no more than the mortgagor's actual debt.—Adams v. Niemann, 46 Mich. 135.

¶ 354. A mortgage given to secure a bona fide indebtedness upon which the mortgagor was liable as surety is not rendered fraudulent by the fact that it was within the contemplation of the parties that a preference might be gained over other creditors of the mortgagor in the enforcement of their demands if an insolvency should ensue.—Webber v. Webber, 109 Mich. 147.

¶ 355. A chattel mortgage in fraud of an execution creditor is nevertheless valid if given to secure an honest debt and taken in good faith, unless the mortgagee shares the fraudulent intent.—Andrews v. Fillmore, 46 Mich. 315.

¶ 356. A chattel mortgage by a corporation contemplating assignment, made to secure a bona fide indebtedness to a creditor who did not know an assignment was intended, is valid.—Dwight v. Scranton & Watson Lumber Co., 67 Mich. 507.

¶ 357. A mortgage executed by a debtor to secure his creditor for his debt, and also to secure a debt due another creditor, which the mortgagee agrees to pay, is not in fraud of other creditors.—Harrington v. Upton, 78 Mich. 28.

¶ 358. One may extend credit to a person who is largely indebted to him and to others, and may secure his debt by taking a mortgage in preference to other creditors; and it is not a badge of fraud to do so.—Ferris v. McQueen, 94 Mich. 367.

¶ 359. A debtor has a right to give security upon property to be by him afterwards acquired in the course of business.—Preston National Bank v. Smith Middlings Purifier Co., 84 Mich. 364.

¶ 360. By surrendering a note given for the purchase-price of sheep, and taking in its stead a mortgage which contains an express promise of payment, one does not cease to be a bona fide creditor.—Wright v. Starks, 77 Mich. 221.

¶ 361. Where a chattel mortgage given to secure existing indebtedness, the larger part of which is not due, provides for the payment of the indebtedness at maturity, and there is nothing on the face of the mortgage conferring any power of sale before that time, a parol arrangement, existing at the time the mortgage is given, conferring such power, will be merged in the mortgage; and while such an arrangement, if afterwards made, may tend to show collusion, it will not, as matter of law, become a part of the mortgage, and destroy its validity.—Oshkosh Nat. Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 100 Mich. 485.

¶ 362. Where A. was indebted to plaintiff in $15,000 for cash advanced, and plaintiff was liable, also, as indorser and accommodation acceptor for A. in $22,000, and for a firm composed of A. and another in $104,000; and A., being in failing circumstances, sold to plaintiff certain personal property in satisfaction of the $15,000, and, at the same time, conveyed to him certain real estate by deed for the consideration of $45,000, and took back a mortgage, conditioned for the payment of $45,000 by plaintiff, by the extinguishment of that amount of the liabilities for which plaintiff was so holden, and, in case such liabilities should be taken up by A. or by said firm, then for the payment of that amount to A. within five years; and there was nothing in the evidence to show that the sums mentioned as the consideration for such transfers were less than the value of the property, and no evidence of actual fraud in making them, held, that these transfers were not void, as tending to hinder, delay or defraud the other creditors of A.—Hubbard v. Taylor, 5 Mich. 155.

¶ 363. Foreclosing for a very small sum a mortgage that has been almost wholly paid is not, of itself, a badge of fraud.—Hyde v. Shank, 93 Mich. 535.

¶ 364. The fact that chattel mortgagees took possession within a few days after the execution of the mortgage is not of itself a badge of fraud, as diligent and honest creditors may take this course to secure their debts.—Pierce v. Johnson, 93 Mich. 125.

¶ 365. The failure of a mortgagee of a stock of liquors to foreclose the mortgage by advertisement, and his permitting the mortgagor to sell the liquors at private sale, and account to him for the proceeds, will not render the mortgage void as against an attaching creditor, but the mortgagee will be held liable to account for the surplus, if any, arising from such sales to those holding subsequent liens on the property.—Anderson v. Cook, 100 Mich. 621.

Invalidity of preferential assignments and operation of such as common law assignments, see Assignments for Creditors § 9 et seq.

¶ 366. How. St. § 8739, forbidding preferences in general assignments for creditors, does not avoid honest transfers or securities that are not in themselves general assignments.—Rollins v. Van Baalen, 56 Mich. 610; Neumann v. Calumet & Hecla Mining Co., 57 Mich. 97; Funke v. Cone, 65 Mich. 581.

¶ 367. An instrument securing a single creditor out of several, on property which by its terms can be disposed of only to pay the secured debt, is an equitable mortgage, and not an assignment for the benefit of creditors, and can be avoided only for actual fraud.—Parsell v. Thayer, 39 Mich. 467.

¶ 368. A stock of goods was sold under a contract giving the purchaser possession but providing that the vendor should retain title to the stock and additions until paid for, which contract was not recorded. Upon default the stock was turned over to the vendor. In a suit to subject the stock to claims of creditors of the vendee, held that if the goods were turned over to the vendor in good faith in satisfaction of the contract and their value did not so greatly exceed the amount of his claim as to show fraud, the creditors of the vendee could not complain.—Greene v. Williams, 131 Mich. 46.

¶ 369. Creditors of the vendee cannot complain of a reconveyance of the property to satisfy a vendor's lien thereon for the full amount of the purchase price.—Lyon v. Clark, 132 Mich. 521.

§ 74. Preference by waiving or withholding defense.

¶ 370. A debtor may waive the statute of limitations as to a particular creditor, and other creditors cannot complain.—Brigham v. Fawcett, 42 Mich. 542.

§ 75. Transfers to pay specific claims of creditors.

Sufficiency of past consideration, see ante § 39.

Transfers or mortgages in trust for benefit of specified creditors, see post § 76.

¶ 371. Where a corporation, being financially embarrassed, executed a deed to its real estate for a fair consideration in order to obtain money to pay the claims of specified creditors, such conveyance was not in fraud of other existing creditors.—Haight v. Smith, 178 Mich. 392.

¶ 372. Where property goes to pay an honest debt, that use of it is lawful, although it may cut off the redress of all others, and although intended to do so.—Nichols v. Bancroft, 74 Mich. 191.

¶ 373. The use of property for the payment of a debt is lawful, even though intended to cut off the redress of all other creditors.—Jordan v. White, 38 Mich. 253.

¶ 374. A sale by a debtor to a creditor in payment of a debt is to be considered as a whole; and if there is a balance due the debtor for which the purchaser gives his notes, it is not for that reason alone to be set aside to that extent in favor of other creditors.—Beurmann v. Van Buren, 44 Mich. 496.

¶ 375. A purchase of goods from a debtor, with the sole purpose of obtaining payment of an honest debt, does not make the sale void as to other creditors, even though the debtor intended thereby to hinder or defraud them, if the purchaser did not share his fraudulent intent.—Beurmann v. Van Buren, 44 Mich. 496.

¶ 376. A sale by a debtor of attached property subject to the attachment, in payment of a debt due the vendee, is valid—if made in good faith and with intent that it take immediate effect—as against a subsequent attachment made before the delivery of the property.—Hauser v. Beaty, 93 Mich. 499.

¶ 377. In replevin of property taken upon an execution levy, where plaintiff claimed that the property was turned over to her in payment of a loan made by her to the judgment debtor, and that a bill of sale was given to her, and where the court found that plaintiff had no knowledge of any debts other than her own, it was error to refuse to pass upon the question of the loan, the surrender of the property, and the execution and delivery of the bill of sale.—Morse v. Velzy, 123 Mich. 532.

¶ 378. A judgment for the defendant in replevin of property taken under an execution levy will not be sustained, where it appears that the judgment debtor who was indebted to plaintiff upon his note and unable to pay at maturity, turned over the replevied property to her in payment and executed and delivered a bill of sale, upon a surrender of the note.—Morse v. Velzy, 123 Mich. 532.

¶ 379. A sale of cordwood wherein the consideration was to be paid to certain creditors of the seller is not one made with the intent to hinder, delay, and defraud creditors, and void under Comp. L. 1897, § 9533, even though the arrangement did not provide for the payment of all the creditors, when there was no evidence to show fraud, nor that the price was not a fair one, nor that the debts secured were not bona fide debts.—Thompson v. Newland, 144 Mich. 595.

Transfers on trust for debtor, see post I, F.

Presumptions relative to transfers in trust for benefit of specified creditors, see post ¶ 392.

Transfers in trust for benefit of secured creditors, see post ¶ 390.

Right of voluntary assignee for creditors to question acts of debtor, see post § 109.

Nature, purposes and validity of trusts in general, see Trusts, I.

Validity of transfer in trust to sell for specified creditors where trustee authorized to rent property, see Trusts, I.

¶ 380. A conveyance in trust to sell for the benefit of specified creditors is authorized by Comp. L. 1897, § 8839, and it is not sufficient reason to set it aside that its effect is to hinder and delay other creditors.—Geer v. Traders' Bank of Canada, 132 Mich. 215.

¶ 381. A trustee for the benefit of a single creditor can sell on credit with the assignor's consent, so long as no creditor has obtained a lien on the property.—State Bank of Bay City v. Chapelle, 40 Mich. 447.

¶ 382. A transfer to a trustee for creditors absolute in terms and empowering him to carry on a lumbering business, and not amounting to a mortgage though expressed to be for security, is a fraud on creditors, within the rule of Kendall v. Bishop, 76 Mich. 634; and is therefore subject to attachment.—Pettibone v. Byrne, 97 Mich. 85.

¶ 383. A debtor conveyed a specific portion of his real estate to trustees to pay certain debts. A transferee of some of the creditors protected thereby attached the property, and the trustees filed a bill to quiet their title as against his levy. Held, that the conveyance was not a general assignment, and as such subject to the rules which determine that a general assignment is fraudulent in not conveying all the debtor's property or securing all his creditors or in withholding a part of it for his own benefit.—Palmer v. Mason, 42 Mich. 146.

¶ 384. An instrument which, as between the parties does not convey an absolute title, but merely a transfer in trust to secure certain debts does not do so as against other creditors, and the latter may reach the equity of redemption.—Austin v. First Nat. Bank, 100 Mich. 613.

¶ 385. Where without intent to defraud one has taken from an insolvent debtor an assignment in trust for purpose of paying certain creditors, which operates to delay creditors, but where he has acted in good faith and with the acquiescence of complainants, he should only be charged on the accounting with what he has received from the assigned property, although any specific article which by any gross neglect of duty on his part he may have lost, should be charged to him.—Cutcheon v. Corbitt, 99 Mich. 578.

¶ 386. A brother's transfer to another of all his property, the sole consideration being that the grantee should pay the grantor's debts to certain persons, making no provision for paying a note held against him by their mother, is fraudulent and void.—Nugent v. Goldsmith, 59 Mich. 593.

¶ 387. That a chattel mortgage is given to a trustee to secure demands in favor of several creditors, instead of being given to the creditors themselves, and that it contains a provision that the trustee shall be liable in the premises for his own neglect or default only, are matters to be taken into account in determining the question of fraud, but they do not render the instrument fraudulent in law.—Bagg v. Jerome, 7 Mich. 145.

¶ 388. Execution sale against the assignor for benefit of creditors passes no title, where at the time the deed of assignment had been accepted and the legal title vested in the assignees although they disclaimed any interest in the lands and never executed the trust devolved on them; and accordingly the purchaser has no standing to assail as a cloud on title conveyances by the assignees and the trust deed to them.—Wolf v. O'Connor, 83 Mich. 301, reversed on rehearing, 88 Mich. 124, on the ground that fraudulent preference appeared on the face of the assignment by reason of which the execution sale passed a good title to the purchaser and which title he conveyed to others, and thence to complainant.

¶ 389. A chattel mortgage on personal property of a manufacturer given to a trustee, conveying substantially all the mortgagor's property, and reciting that it was given for the benefit only of those creditors but not less than 50% who accepted the security within sixty days, and extended the time of the payment of their several debts, and if the maker paid the creditors within the time it was to be void, and in default thereof the trustee was authorized to foreclose and sell the property to satisfy the creditors who accepted and pay the surplus to the mortgagor, is fraudulent in that it hindered and delayed creditors where the object of the scheme was to give the maker a year in which to operate its business without annoyance from its creditors and it retained absolute control of all its receipts without any obligation to pay any creditor during the time of the extension, and where there were insufficient funds to pay those creditors who had accepted.—Wood v. Eldredge, 147 Mich. 554.

See also post ¶ 397.

¶ 390. An unsecured creditor cannot complain that moneys in the hands of a trustee for creditors secured by a mortgage were applied to the payment of a fraudulent claim, where the total amount coming to the possession of the trustee was insufficient to pay the valid claims so secured.—Krementz v. Howard, 109 Mich. 466.

¶ 391. Unsecured creditors of an insolvent are not hindered by application of assets of the debtor by the secured creditors to the payment of an invalid claim, where the total assets were insufficient in any event to satisfy the valid secured claims.—Burrows v. Leech, 116 Mich. 32.

Presumptions and burden of proof as to matters not related to specific elements and indicia of fraud, see post § 132.

¶ 392. A conveyance in trust to sell for the benefit of specified creditors as authorized by Comp. L. 1897, § 8839, is presumed to be valid and courts will ascribe to parties thereto, an honest rather than an unlawful purpose.—Geer v. Traders' Bank of Canada, 132 Mich. 215.

¶ 393. In order to destroy the validity of a deed claimed to have been executed to pay an honest debt, the court must not only be satisfied that the deed was made with intent to hinder, delay or to defraud creditors, but that the deed was not actually made to pay a debt justly due; and the burden of proof is on one who seeks to avoid the deed.—Nichols v. Bancroft, 74 Mich. 191.

Admissibility of evidence relative to matters other than specific elements and indicia of fraud, see post § 133.

Weight and sufficiency of evidence as to matters not related to specific elements and indicia of fraud, see post § 134.

¶ 394. Evidence is admissible of the motives of the officers of an insolvent corporation in making an assignment for creditors.—Covert v. Rogers, 38 Mich. 363.

¶ 395. On a review of the testimony an assignment of certain mortgages by an insolvent debtor was held not fraudulent, being designed to secure the assignee as an indorser, attendant acts otherwise suspicious being satisfactorily explained.—Bostwick v. Benjamin, 63 Mich. 289.

¶ 396. Testimony in a creditor's bill upon a judgment does not show collusion but merely the exercise of a debtor's privilege to prefer creditors; where the debtor obtained repeated continuances of the law case upon promises to make payment, and where a day previous to the entry of judgment, a corporation was formed into which the assets of the debtor went, in consideration of stock, and where he immediately turned over such stock to a creditor other than the plaintiff, as collateral security, and otherwise disposed of the remainder.—Scripps v. Crawford, 123 Mich. 173.

¶ 397. Evidence of the invalidity of a single claim sought to be secured with other valid claims by a mortgage executed by an insolvent is insufficient to show an intent to defraud unsecured creditors, where the amount of the invalid claim is trifling in proportion to the whole amount secured, and where the valid secured claims will exhaust the security.—Burrows v. Leech, 116 Mich. 32.

¶ 398. It is not necessarily an evidence of fraud that the parties to a chattel mortgage consent to the mortgagee's selling the property before the debt is due.—Oshkosh Nat. Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 100 Mich. 485.

¶ 399. Preconceived fraud on a seller of goods to a firm consisting in a purpose of buying them and then absorbing them in payment for an old debt, does not appear on testimony that a mortgage claimed to have been fraudulent was to secure in part a loan of funds which went into the stock in the form of goods, that the firm was then solvent and borrowed more money from the mortgagee, that a new partner failed to make his agreed contribution and was bought out, that a further loan was made by the mortgagee to provide funds for so doing and to return to the outgoing partner what he had put in, and to purchase more stock, and that thereafter when the business did not prosper the lender demanded security and was given the mortgage, the sale having been made after the second loan.—Ross v. Miner, 101 Mich. 1.

¶ 400. Where, in garnishment proceedings against a trustee, to whom a firm with which he had formerly been connected had mortgaged its entire stock of goods, books of account, credits, etc., to secure certain specified creditors, the testimony tends to show that the mortgagee had, after severing his connection with the mortgagors, kept some track of their business; that when he took the mortgage he went through the form of taking possession, but continued the mortgagors in actual charge of the business; that he subsequently sold the mortgaged property and bid it in in form, but that the mortgagors continued in possession; and that in taking the mortgage he assumed to act as trustee for certain creditors, who did not appear to have been present—the jury may well find that the trustee would, as a reasonably prudent man, before assuming to act as trustee, inform himself as to the state of said creditors' claims by reference to the books of the mortgagors, especially in view of his previous knowledge of their business, and, if the books tend to show that no such indebtedness as that claimed to exist in favor of a portion of said creditors was ever created, they are competent evidence as showing a fraudulent intent on the part of the mortgagors in executing the mortgage, and some evidence of mala fides on the part of the mortgagee.—Cluett v. Rosenthal, 100 Mich. 193.

Questions of law and fact as to matters not related to specific elements and indicia of fraud, see post § 135.

Instructions not involving specific elements and indicia of fraud, see post § 136.

¶ 401. It is error to charge that a mortgage given for a precedent debt is not a bona fide incumbrance as against other creditors; since a debtor may always give a bona fide security for existing debts.—Wright v. Towle, 67 Mich. 255.

¶ 402. A debtor executed a chattel mortgage, absolute on its face, to a party to whom he was not indebted, for the aggregate amount actually due several of his creditors, and received from the mortgagee an agreement containing a list of said creditors, with the amount due each, and conditioned for the payment of said creditors on the payment to the mortgagee of the amount of the mortgage, or, if only paid in part, then for their pro rata payment. Held, that the two papers should be taken together as showing the entire transaction, which was not fraudulent as to other creditors, if entered into with a bona fide intent to pay the creditors named; and that question was for the jury.—Gore v. Ray, 73 Mich. 385.

¶ 403. In a case involving the validity of the sale of goods to a mortgagee thereof in payment of a debt, the questions whether the mortgage debt had been discharged and whether the note had been given up and canceled, should have been properly submitted to the jury.—Heaton v. Nelson, 74 Mich. 199.

¶ 404. In trover by a vendee against an officer who levied upon the goods under an attachment by the vendor's creditors, plaintiff's request for an instruction that he is entitled to a verdict if the jury finds the vendor's purpose in making the sale was to raise money to pay his creditors and not to defraud them, should be granted where there is evidence to support that theory.—Bendetson v. Moody, 100 Mich. 553.

F. TRANSFERS ON TRUST FOR DEBTOR OR RESERVING BENEFITS OR POSSESSION.

§ 81. Transfers on trust to protect debtor.

Effect of reserved benefits, see post § 82.
Chattel mortgages reserving to debtor right of disposal, see post § 83.
Necessity for delivery and change of possession, see post §§ 84, 85.
Presumptions, burden of proof and evidence, see post §§ 86, 87.
Jury questions and instructions, see post § 88.
Transfers or mortgages in trust for benefit of specified creditors, see ante § 76.
Persons against whom fraudulent transfers invalid, see post II.
Effect between parties and as to third parties not creditors, see post III.
Rights and liabilities of grantee towards defrauded creditors, see post IV.
Invalidity as to creditors of transfers of personalty made in trust for use of person making same, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11980.

¶ 405. All transfers made in trust for the use of the grantor are void as against creditors, under How. St. § 6184, one reason being that the property is thus put beyond the reach of process; and a mortgage or conveyance in trust, which authorizes the trustee to take possession of the property and to continue the business, which gives him power to manage and dispose of the surplus, and which puts the property beyond the reach of creditors, is void as to those creditors who do not accept the benefits of the trust.—Kendall v. Bishop, 76 Mich. 634; Pettibone v. Byrne, 97 Mich. 85.

Chattel mortgages reserving to debtor right of disposal, see post § 83.
Necessity for delivery and change of possession, see post §§ 84, 85.
Conveyances reserving power of revocation, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 11972-11974.

¶ 407. Judgment creditors may, on bill in aid of execution, have a decree avoiding a deed from their debtor to a third person by which his property is withdrawn to provide for himself and his family.—Pursel v. Armstrong, 37 Mich. 326.

¶ 408. A quitclaim deed from husband to wife executed during the grantor's illness, and reserving the use of the land during his life, was apparently intended to operate as a will, was not clearly proved to have been delivered, and by a mutual understanding was kept from record for nearly ten years, and until the grantor's insolvency. Held, that it should be set aside in favor of the creditor whose dealings with the grantor antedated the deed.—Fetters v. Duvernois, 73 Mich. 481.

Validity of mortgage between parties, see also post ¶ 493.
Effect of unfiled chattel mortgages or mortgages without notice or change of possession or fraudulent mortgages, see Chattel Mortgages, I, D.

¶ 409. A mortgage of a stock of goods is not void as against the mortgagor's creditors because it covers after-acquired goods, and permits the mortgagor to sell in the usual course of trade and apply the proceeds to his own use.—Louden v. Vinton, 108 Mich. 313; Huellmantel v. Vinton, 116 Mich. 621.

¶ 410. Where it was shown that the mortgagee of a stock of goods left the same in the hands of the mortgagor, with power to sell and dispose of the same in the usual course of business, for cash or upon credit, and the mortgagor applied the proceeds of sales in the purchase of other goods to keep up the stock, in the support of himself, and in paying other debts than that secured by the mortgage—the mortgagee not asserting a right to the possession of the property, or the specific proceeds of the sale thereof, or preventing or prohibiting such sales—these facts do not render the mortgage absolutely void in law as against the creditors of the mortgagor.—Oliver v. Eaton, 7 Mich. 108.

¶ 411. Being good between the parties, a chattel mortgage which leaves the mortgagor in possession and by inference authorizes him to sell in the usual course of business could not be fraudulent on its face as against creditors, since it would not show that there are any creditors, or, if it did, it would not appear but that they had assented to it, or were themselves sufficiently secured.—Gay v. Bidwell, 7 Mich. 519.

Sales presumed fraudulent for want of immediate delivery and change of possession, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11985.

¶ 412. Comp. L. 1897, § 9520, making every sale of goods unaccompanied by delivery and change of possession, fraudulent as against the vendor's creditors, applies to all creditors whether they became such before or after the sale.—Williams v. Brown, 137 Mich. 569.

¶ 413. In a sale of personalty, where there is no immediate delivery followed by actual and continued change of possession, a fraudulent intent on the vendor's part, though not participated in by the vendee, avoids the sale as to creditors of the vendor.—Kipp v. Lamoreaux, 81 Mich. 299.

¶ 414. The fact that an engagement of marriage exists between vendor and vendee of personalty does not take the case out of the general rule that a sale of personalty, where there is no immediate delivery followed by actual and continued change of possession, is avoided by the vendor's fraudulent intent though not participated in by the vendee.—Kipp v. Lamoreaux, 81 Mich. 299.

¶ 415. A tenant on shares under an oral lease gave a chattel mortgage upon his half of the stock to his landlord, who owned the other half. Being heavily indebted to others he afterwards conveyed the whole to his landlord for the amount of his mortgage and gave up the lease. The landlord then leased the farm to the tenant's wife on the same terms, sold her the half interest in the stock for the amount of the old mortgage, and took her own mortgage, payable in a year, for the same amount. There was no change of possession and the property was worth more than the mortgage. Held, that the transaction was capable of a fraudulent meaning, and that if the landlord entered into it with any complicity, or any reason to suppose it so designed, he could not cut off any rights of creditors by the shifting of tenants. And if the wife obtained property by fraudulent contrivance with her husband, it could not be protected if the husband continued to be the real tenant and manager, even though the landlord had no complicity in the transaction. —Richardson v. Coddington, 49 Mich. 1.

¶ 416. A sale of chattels by a debtor cannot be impeached for want of delivery if they are already under the purchaser's control, as, e. g., where the debtor is the purchaser's son-in-law and is indebted to him, and the chattels are in a building belonging to the purchaser's wife and to which he has the key.—Edwards v. Edwards, 54 Mich. 347.

¶ 417. Where, pursuant to an agreement of sale made on Sunday, delivery is made on Monday of the goods, which are then wrongfully attached by the vendor's creditors, a bill of sale to the vendee executed by the vendor while the goods are in the officer's possession is not fraudulent as to creditors because not followed by delivery.—Aspell v. Hosbein, 98 Mich. 117.

Presumptions and burden of proof as to matters not related to specific elements and indicia of fraud, see post § 132.

Presumption as to nature of transfer where no change of possession, see also ante ¶ 109.

¶ 418. That a sale is not accompanied by an actual and immediate change of possession merely has the effect of casting upon vendee the burden of showing the good faith of the transfer (How. St. § 6190).—Hopkins v. Bishop, 91 Mich. 328; Hauser v. Beaty, 93 Mich. 499.

¶ 419. How. St. § 6190, casting upon the purchaser of personal property, who permits the same to remain in the possession of the seller, the burden of showing, as against creditors, not only his own good faith, but the good faith of the seller, does not apply to a transfer of property as security.—Canfield v. W. J. Gould & Co., 115 Mich. 461.

¶ 420. Where the vendor of personalty retains possession, the vendee has the burden of showing that the sale was in good faith and without any intent to defraud the vendor's creditors; and refusal so to instruct the jury is error.—Clark v. Lee, 78 Mich. 221; Kipp v. Lamoreaux, 81 Mich. 299; Hopkins v. Bishop, 91 Mich. 328.

¶ 421. A sale of a buggy on credit, to be settled on balancing accounts, the buyer knowing an execution to be out against the seller, there being no memorandum or change of possession, held to be presumably fraudulent.—Webster v. Bailey, 40 Mich. 641.

¶ 422. A sale may be good as between the parties but not as against creditors, either upon proof of an actual intent to hinder, delay or defraud them, or upon the statutory presumption of such intent, where the requisite delivery and change of the possession are wanting.—Hatch v. Fowler, 28 Mich. 205.

¶ 423. From the burden of showing, where possession is retained, that the sale of personal property was made in good faith and without intent to defraud creditors, the wife or husband who is a purchaser from the other is not exempt.—Kipp v. Lamoreaux, 81 Mich. 299.

¶ 424. Where a sale of personal property, followed by an actual change of possession, is attacked as fraudulent as to creditors, the burden of proof is upon the attacking party to establish such fact.—Kipp v. Lamoreaux, 81 Mich. 299.

¶ 425. Creditors seeking to levy on property cannot be required to call hostile witnesses to show the nature of a possession under which it is held, when the case prima facie requires explanation from the other party.—Haynes v. Leppig, 40 Mich. 602.

¶ 426. A son selling a stock of goods to his father, giving him the store door key, and instructing the clerk that the older man was thenceforth proprietor, and, following this, the father, being no merchant, hiring the son to run the business for him and returning the key to him a few days after receiving it, so that, to all appearances, the business is that of the son just as before, are facts which, if proved, notwithstanding these appearances, make out a sufficient immediate delivery to satisfy the law; but, in case the goods are attached by the sheriff for the son's debt and they are replevied by the father, the latter has the burden of proving that the sale was an honest one, provided his possession was not actual and continuous throughout from the time of his receiving the key.—Hopkins v. Bishop, 91 Mich. 328.

¶ 427. A sale made by a debtor and not accompanied by immediate delivery is only prima facie fraudulent as against his creditors, and not conclusively so.—Molitor v. Robinson, 40 Mich. 200.

Admissibility of evidence relative to matters other than specific elements and indicia of fraud, see post § 133.

Weight and sufficiency of evidence as to matters not related to specific elements and indicia of fraud, see post § 134.

¶ 428. Whether there was a change of possession must be determined from the circumstances upon a fair preponderance, where a gift of a driving horse by a husband to his wife is attacked as fictitious.—Davis v. Zimmerman, 40 Mich. 24.

¶ 429. Writings by which a chattel mortgagee and mortgagor agreed that the mortgagee might take immediate possession of all the property covered, are admissible for the mortgagee suing an execution creditor for conversion by levying on them as fraudulently conveyed.—Ganong v. Green, 71 Mich. 1.

¶ 430. The plaintiff brewing company was a creditor of one Carrel, a hotel and saloonkeeper, to the extent of $1,500. Plaintiff took from Carrel a bill of sale of the stock of liquor and cigars and the furnishings in his hotel, and made an agreement by which Carrel might buy back the same at the rate of thirty dollars a month. The bill of sale was not recorded, and the goods were left in Carrel's possession. For many years plaintiff and Carrel had occupied intimate relations. Judgment creditors of Carrel levied on the goods in question, and plaintiff sued the defendant sheriff in replevin. Held, the jury was justified in finding the said sale was in fraud of creditors, under Comp. Laws 1897, §§ 9520, 9521, making such a transaction presumptively fraudulent.—Grand Rapids Brewing Co. v. Pettis, 159 Mich. 679.

§ 88. Jury questions and instructions.

See also ante ¶ 420.

Questions of law and fact as to matters not related to specific elements and indicia of fraud, see post § 135.

Instructions not involving specific elements and indicia of fraud, see post § 136.

¶ 431. In a replevin suit turning on the question whether an alleged sale from an attachment debtor to the plaintiffs had been completed, it was error to refuse to charge that if the sale was made but the property left with the debtor, who acted with and treated it as his own, the sale would be deemed fraudulent and void as against his creditors; this rule is established by Comp. L. 1871, § 4703, How. St., § 6190.—Hatch v. Fowler, 28 Mich. 205.

¶ 432. An instruction in an action of trover brought by a wife for property attached by her husband's creditors five days after he had executed to her a bill of sale of the property, that if there was no immediate delivery of the property, and no actual and continued change of possession, the burden of proof was upon plaintiff to show that the sale was made in good faith and without intent to defraud creditors, is not open to the objection that the jury must have understood that what was meant by the expression "immediate delivery" was "instantaneous delivery"; the testimony tending to show that, for two days after the execution of the bill of sale, the husband continued to care for the property, and on the third day left for another state, leaving his son in charge of the property, and that on the third day, while the son was using the property for his father in his business, a portion of the indebtedness for which the property was attached was contracted, under circumstances tending strongly to show that the husband could not reasonably have expected to pay for the goods thus obtained.—Jansen v. McQueen, 105 Mich. 199.

¶ 434. A contract by which A. is to work for B. in the sale of merchandise in the store formerly occupied by A., taking charge of the business, being accountable for all bad debts, to have all the profits over and above ten per cent, and to give up the store and goods whenever required, is not necessarily fraudulent on its face as against creditors, but the question of fraud is for the jury, and would depend on the evidence outside the instrument itself.—Snook v. Davis, 6 Mich. 156.

¶ 435. A voluntary mortgage is fraudulent only as to those who are or may be defrauded by it.—Brigham v. Brown, 44 Mich. 59.

¶ 436. A transfer of property in fraud of creditors is not open to attack by any other creditors than those whom the debtor meant to avoid.—Hall v. Moriarty, 57 Mich. 345.

¶ 437. While conveyances made in fraud of creditors are valid as between the parties themselves, they are absolutely void as to creditors, and as to them it is immaterial whether the grantee paid any consideration or not.—Morley Bros. v. Stringer, 133 Mich. 690.

¶ 438. Transfers made to defendant by a person since deceased with the purpose of defeating his creditors and of saving his estate to himself are void as to the creditors. —Howd v. Breckenridge, 97 Mich. 65.

¶ 439. The obligee in an appeal bond by which the surety becomes liable to pay a judgment if the appeal is lost, is a creditor within the meaning of the Bulk Sales Act, No. 223, Pub. Acts 1905, and the surety cannot, prior to the decision of the appeal, fraudulently convey his goods to escape paying the judgment.—Hanna v. Hurley, 162 Mich. 601.

¶ 443. In replevin a defense of a levy on the goods as fraudulently transferred to the replevin plaintiff, who took them in satisfaction of a debt of the seller, is not sustained, unless it be shown that the execution creditor had a claim when the sale was made, and that the sale was fraudulent as against that claim.—Bodine v. Simmons, 38 Mich. 682.

¶ 444. The doctrine that transfers of property are presumed to be fraudulent as to existing creditors rests on the idea that property is the basis of credit, and that credit is extended in reliance on the property which the debtor possesses.—Lovell v. Denison, 171 Mich. 599.

¶ 445. The question whether a transfer of property is void as to creditors cannot be affected by the fact that at the time the debts were incurred the creditors did not know that the debtor owned the specific property transferred.—Ionia County Savings Bank v. McLean, 84 Mich. 625.

¶ 446. Where a creditor levies upon property as that of his debtor, and a brother claiming ownership, replevies, and the testimony tends to show that although the debtor purchased and paid for the property, the receipted bill was rendered in the name of the brother, and an order for the delivery to the latter was given to the party in whose possession the property was, but that the debtor used the property most of the time, it is error to instruct the jury that it was a question for them to say whether there was any evidence to show that credit was extended to the debtor upon the strength of the property, or to show that the creditor knew of the property when his claim arose and that if he did not, and did not rely upon it, he could not complain of the transfer.—French v. Newberry, 124 Mich. 147.

§ 93. Validity as to junior incumbrancers.

¶ 447. The mortgagee of a second mortgage on real estate can complain only as a general creditor of an insolvent mortgagor, who, for the purpose of defrauding his creditors, while insolvent furnished his daughter the money with which she secured the assignment to herself of a first mortgage on such property.—Hatch v. Daugherty, 145 Mich. 569.

Whether creditors are subsequent or existing as question for jury, see post ¶ 622.

¶ 448. As a general rule a conveyance which is void as to existing creditors is void as to subsequent creditors also.—Beach v. White, W. 495; Herschfeldt v. George, 6 Mich. 456.

¶ 449. A sale of land cannot be attacked as fraudulent by a creditor whose claim against the vendor arose subsequently thereto.—Sorenson v. Sorenson, 69 Mich. 351.

¶ 450. A creditor who does not show that he was such at the time of the giving of a mortgage is not in a position to attack it as fraudulent, on the ground that it allows the mortgagor to remain in possession and dispose of the mortgaged property.—Gay v. Bidwell, 7 Mich. 519.

¶ 451. The rights of the complainant in a bill in aid of execution are not to be determined upon the basis that he is a subsequent creditor merely because certain items of the indebtedness upon which he had judgment were incurred subsequent to the conveyance attacked, but, if such conveyance is shown to have been voluntary, it may be held valid as to such subsequent indebtedness, and void as to the balance of the judgment.—Cole v. Brown, 114 Mich. 396.

Intent to defraud or hinder, see ante § 2.

¶ 453. While no fraudulent intent is necessary to set aside a voluntary conveyance as to existing creditors, it must be established in order to set it aside as to subsequent creditors.—Cole v. Brown, 114 Mich. 396.

¶ 454. Actual fraud and specific intent to defraud, either creditors generally or an individual creditor, must be shown in order to set aside a voluntary conveyance by a debtor as to a subsequent creditor.—Barkworth v. Palmer, 118 Mich. 50.

¶ 455. Whether an actual intent to defraud existing creditors entitles a subsequent creditor to have a conveyance by the debtor set aside—quære.—Cole v. Brown, 114 Mich. 396.

¶ 456. The doctrine of presumptive fraud cannot be applied in case of debts contracted after a secret transfer of property by the debtor, though the transaction may be convincing evidence of the intent to defraud.—Lowell v. Denison, 171 Mich. 599.

§ 96. ——Effect of notice and want of reliance on apparent ownership.

Extension of credit on property transferred as to existing creditors, see ante § 92.

¶ 459. A judgment creditor cannot levy on property that his debtor had transferred before the existence of his claim, and without contemplating any future indebtedness, and where the claim was not incurred on any faith that the property belonged to the debtor, and the creditor does not show himself in any position to attack the rectitude of the transfer.—Keeler v. Ullrich, 32 Mich. 88.

Rights of third persons other than creditors, see post §§ 108-112.

¶ 460. A disputed claim for damages sounding in tort is not a debt before it has been prosecuted to judgment, and does not constitute the claimant a creditor, nor invest him with the right given by law to creditors to question voluntary transfers of their debtor's property.—Hill v. Bowman, 35 Mich. 191. [Criticized as overlooking the words "other persons" in How. St. § 6203 and as giving too narrow construction to the word "creditors."—Schaible v. Ardner, 98 Mich. 70.]

¶ 461. A seller of a boat who rescinds the contract because of the alleged worthlessness of bonds given in payment, and takes possession of the boat, including a substituted, but detached, engine, purchased by a third person before such substitution, is not a creditor of the purchaser of the boat so as to be able to attack the sale of the engine

¶ 436. A transfer of property in fraud of creditors is not open to attack by any other creditors than those whom the debtor meant to avoid.—Hall v. Moriarty, 57 Mich. 345.

¶ 437. While conveyances made in fraud of creditors are valid as between the parties themselves, they are absolutely void as to creditors, and as to them it is immaterial whether the grantee paid any consideration or not.—Morley Bros. v. Stringer, 133 Mich. 690.

¶ 438. Transfers made to defendant by a person since deceased with the purpose of defeating his creditors and of saving his estate to himself are void as to the creditors. —Howd v. Breckenridge, 97 Mich. 65.

¶ 439. The obligee in an appeal bond by which the surety becomes liable to pay a judgment if the appeal is lost, is a creditor within the meaning of the Bulk Sales Act, No. 223, Pub. Acts 1905, and the surety cannot, prior to the decision of the appeal, fraudulently convey his goods to escape paying the judgment.—Hanna v. Hurley, 162 Mich. 601.

Necessity of fraudulent intent, see post § 95.
Effect of notice and want of reliance on apparent ownership, see post § 96.
Validity as to subsequent creditor of transfer to spouse, see also ante ¶ 211.
Whether creditors are subsequent or existing as question for jury, see post ¶ 622.

¶ 448. As a general rule a conveyance which is void as to existing creditors is void as to subsequent creditors also.—Beach v. White, W. 495; Herschfeldt v. George, 6 Mich. 456.

¶ 450. A creditor who does not show that he was such at the time of the giving of a mortgage is not in a position to attack it as fraudulent, on the ground that it allows the mortgagor to remain in possession and dispose of the mortgaged property.—Gay v. Bidwell, 7 Mich. 519.

¶ 451. The rights of the complainant in a bill in aid of execution are not to be determined upon the basis that he is a subsequent creditor merely because certain items of the indebtedness upon which he had judgment were incurred subsequent to the conveyance attacked, but, if such conveyance is shown to have been voluntary, it may be held valid as to such subsequent indebtedness, and void as to the balance of the judgment.—Cole v. Brown, 114 Mich. 396.

Intent to defraud or hinder, see ante § 2.

¶ 453. While no fraudulent intent is necessary to set aside a voluntary conveyance as to existing creditors, it must be established in order to set it aside as to subsequent creditors.—Cole v. Brown, 114 Mich. 396.

¶ 454. Actual fraud and specific intent to defraud, either creditors generally or an individual creditor, must be shown in order to set aside a voluntary conveyance by a debtor as to a subsequent creditor.—Barkworth v. Palmer, 118 Mich. 50.

¶ 455. Whether an actual intent to defraud existing creditors entitles a subsequent creditor to have a conveyance by the debtor set aside—quære.—Cole v. Brown, 114 Mich. 396.

¶ 456. The doctrine of presumptive fraud cannot be applied in case of debts contracted after a secret transfer of property by the debtor, though the transaction may be convincing evidence of the intent to defraud.—Lowell v. Denison, 171 Mich. 599.

Extension of credit on property transferred as to existing creditors, see ante § 92.

¶ 459. A judgment creditor cannot levy on property that his debtor had transferred before the existence of his claim, and without contemplating any future indebtedness, and where the claim was not incurred on any faith that the property belonged to the debtor, and the creditor does not show himself in any position to attack the rectitude of the transfer.—Keeler v. Ullrich, 32 Mich. 88.

Rights of third persons other than creditors, see post §§ 108-112.

¶ 460. A disputed claim for damages sounding in tort is not a debt before it has been prosecuted to judgment, and does not constitute the claimant a creditor, nor invest him with the right given by law to creditors to question voluntary transfers of their debtor's property.—Hill v. Bowman, 35 Mich. 191. [Criticized as overlooking the words "other persons" in How. St. § 6203 and as giving too narrow construction to the word "creditors."—Schaible v. Ardner, 98 Mich. 70.]

¶ 461. A seller of a boat who rescinds the contract because of the alleged worthlessness of bonds given in payment, and takes possession of the boat, including a substituted, but detached, engine, purchased by a third person before such substitution, is not a creditor of the purchaser of the boat so as to be able to attack the sale of the engine

¶ 435. A voluntary mortgage is fraudulent only as to those who are or may be defrauded by it.—Brigham v. Brown, 44 Mich. 59.

¶ 436. A transfer of property in fraud of creditors is not open to attack by any other creditors than those whom the debtor meant to avoid.—Hall v. Moriarty, 57 Mich. 345.

¶ 437. While conveyances made in fraud of creditors are valid as between the parties themselves, they are absolutely void as to creditors, and as to them it is immaterial whether the grantee paid any consideration or not.—Morley Bros. v. Stringer, 133 Mich. 690.

¶ 438. Transfers made to defendant by a person since deceased with the purpose of defeating his creditors and of saving his estate to himself are void as to the creditors. —Howd v. Breckenridge, 97 Mich. 65.

¶ 439. The obligee in an appeal bond by which the surety becomes liable to pay a judgment if the appeal is lost, is a creditor within the meaning of the Bulk Sales Act, No. 223, Pub. Acts 1905, and the surety cannot, prior to the decision of the appeal, fraudulently convey his goods to escape paying the judgment.—Hanna v. Hurley, 162 Mich. 601.

§ 90. Voidable character of fraudulent transfers.

¶ 440. A deed in anticipation of insolvency is not void but only voidable.—Jenison v. Rankin, 57 Mich. 49.

¶ 441. Fraudulent conveyances are, as against the creditors of the grantor, not void, but only voidable at their option on taking proper proceedings.—McMaster v. Campbell, 41 Mich. 513.

¶ 442. An actually fraudulent design is not necessary to defeat a voluntary conveyance as against existing creditors.—Fellows v. Smith, 40 Mich. 689.

¶ 443. In replevin a defense of a levy on the goods as fraudulently transferred to the replevin plaintiff, who took them in satisfaction of a debt of the seller, is not sustained, unless it be shown that the execution creditor had a claim when the sale was made, and that the sale was fraudulent as against that claim.—Bodine v. Simmons, 38 Mich. 682.

¶ 444. The doctrine that transfers of property are presumed to be fraudulent as to existing creditors rests on the idea that property is the basis of credit, and that credit is extended in reliance on the property which the debtor possesses.—Lovell v. Denison, 171 Mich. 599.

¶ 445. The question whether a transfer of property is void as to creditors cannot be affected by the fact that at the time the debts were incurred the creditors did not know that the debtor owned the specific property transferred.—Ionia County Savings Bank v. McLean, 84 Mich. 625.

¶ 446. Where a creditor levies upon property as that of his debtor, and a brother claiming ownership, replevies, and the testimony tends to show that although the debtor purchased and paid for the property, the receipted bill was rendered in the name of the brother, and an order for the delivery to the latter was given to the party in whose possession the property was, but that the debtor used the property most of the time, it is error to instruct the jury that it was a question for them to say whether there was any evidence to show that credit was extended to the debtor upon the strength of the property, or to show that the creditor knew of the property when his claim arose and that if he did not, and did not rely upon it, he could not complain of the transfer.—French v. Newberry, 124 Mich. 147.

§ 93. Validity as to junior incumbrancers.

¶ 448. As a general rule a conveyance which is void as to existing creditors is void as to subsequent creditors also.—Beach v. White, W. 495; Herschfeldt v. George, 6 Mich. 456.

¶ 450. A creditor who does not show that he was such at the time of the giving of a mortgage is not in a position to attack it as fraudulent, on the ground that it allows the mortgagor to remain in possession and dispose of the mortgaged property.—Gay v. Bidwell, 7 Mich. 519.

¶ 451. The rights of the complainant in a bill in aid of execution are not to be determined upon the basis that he is a subsequent creditor merely because certain items of the indebtedness upon which he had judgment were incurred subsequent to the conveyance attacked, but, if such conveyance is shown to have been voluntary, it may be held valid as to such subsequent indebtedness, and void as to the balance of the judgment.—Cole v. Brown, 114 Mich. 396.

Intent to defraud or hinder, see ante § 2.

¶ 453. While no fraudulent intent is necessary to set aside a voluntary conveyance as to existing creditors, it must be established in order to set it aside as to subsequent creditors.—Cole v. Brown, 114 Mich. 396.

¶ 454. Actual fraud and specific intent to defraud, either creditors generally or an individual creditor, must be shown in order to set aside a voluntary conveyance by a debtor as to a subsequent creditor.—Barkworth v. Palmer, 118 Mich. 50.

¶ 455. Whether an actual intent to defraud existing creditors entitles a subsequent creditor to have a conveyance by the debtor set aside—quære.—Cole v. Brown, 114 Mich. 396.

¶ 456. The doctrine of presumptive fraud cannot be applied in case of debts contracted after a secret transfer of property by the debtor, though the transaction may be convincing evidence of the intent to defraud.—Lowell v. Denison, 171 Mich. 599.

¶ 459. A judgment creditor cannot levy on property that his debtor had transferred before the existence of his claim, and without contemplating any future indebtedness, and where the claim was not incurred on any faith that the property belonged to the debtor, and the creditor does not show himself in any position to attack the rectitude of the transfer.—Keeler v. Ullrich, 32 Mich. 88.

§ 97. Claimants regarded as creditors.

¶ 461. A seller of a boat who rescinds the contract because of the alleged worthlessness of bonds given in payment, and takes possession of the boat, including a substituted, but detached, engine, purchased by a third person before such substitution, is not a creditor of the purchaser of the boat so as to be able to attack the sale of the engine as being fraudulent as to creditors under Comp. Laws 1897, § 9520, How. 2nd Ed., § 11404.—Parnell v. Pungs, 190 Mich. 638.

B. DILIGENCE AND LACHES; REDUCTION OF DEBT TO JUDGMENT.

§ 98. Delay and laches.

In securing relief from sale contrary to Bulk Sales Law, see post § 99.
Estoppel to assert rights, see post § 100.
Necessity for judgment or lien, see post §§ 101-103.

Priorities between creditors, see post VI.
Time for filing bill by execution purchaser, see also Executions ¶ 257.

¶ 462. Delay for more than a year to institute proceedings to determine judgment debtor's rights and equities is laches on the part of one who has levied execution to reach an equitable interest in land.—Edsell v. Nevins, 80 Mich. 146.

¶ 463. Where a judgment creditor has waited four years before enforcing his claim, and the grantee of the land attached by him was an active party to a fraud on such creditor, the delay does not constitute laches which will bar the action.—Yates v. McGahen, 174 Mich. 211.

¶ 464. A delay of twenty-eight years in enforcing the claims of creditors to the proceeds of land conveyed by a debtor to his wife, during which time the creditors, the debtor, and his wife have died, is such laches as to bar relief in a bill for an accounting alleging fraud, especially where the facts were ascertainable from the records.—Sheldon v. Miller, 151 Mich. 283.

¶ 465. A bill to set aside certain conveyances as fraudulent, and for an accounting, is barred by laches, when the complainant has neglected to bring her action for nearly thirty years, there being no reasonable excuse for the delay, and it appearing that witnesses and persons charged with fraud, were all dead, and that third persons had acquired interests in the property involved, so that the allowance of the proceeding would prevent safety in acting upon conveyances and records of the court.—Eames v. Manley, 121 Mich. 300.

¶ 466. A conveyance of land in consideration of the agreement of the grantee to pay a mortgage thereon, the amount of which, with interest, exceeded the value of the premises, and to provide a home for the grantor, will not be declared fraudulent as to a creditor of the latter, who, for two years thereafter, although he himself had knowledge of the transaction, left the grantee in ignorance of his claim.—Delavan v. Wright, 110 Mich. 143.

Estoppel or waiver of rights under Bulk Sales Act, see post § 124.
Necessity for judgment or lien to entitle to relief from violation of Bulk Sales Law, see post § 102.
Equitable and legal remedies of creditors under Bulk Sales Law, see post § 127.

¶ 468. If the status of the purchaser of a stock in violation of the Bulk Sales Act (Act No. 223, Pub. Acts 1905, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., §§ 2612-2614) has not been altered in the meantime, delay of a creditor in seeking relief in equity from the sale does not amount to laches.—Humiston, Keeling & Co. v. Yore, 181 Mich. 629.

¶ 468a. A purchaser cannot assert the doctrine either of waiver or estoppel against a creditor who seeks to enforce the provisions of the Bulk Sales Law by garnishment on the ground that the creditor has delayed for two years after having been informed by the debtor of the sale, where it is not shown that the purchaser did anything to change his position in reliance upon the conduct of the creditor.—Marquette County Sav. Bank v. Koivisto, 162 Mich. 554.

Estoppel or waiver of rights under Bulk Sales Law, see post § 124.
Receipt of dividend as estoppel to attack assignee's mortgage as fraudulent, see Assignments for Creditors ¶ 184.

¶ 469. An unsecured creditor is not estopped to attack as in fraud of creditors a bill of sale absolute in form but upon a secret trust to pay certain creditors by the fact that the property including a saw-mill was conveyed to a purchaser who carried on the business in his own name, making advances to pay off pressing claims, and that the attacking creditor was informed of the terms of the alleged sale soon after and had sawing done at the mill and paid for it, the grantee having refused to allow it on his debt, and that the creditor for several years took no steps to set aside the sale.—Corbitt v. Cutcheon, 79 Mich. 41.

¶ 470. Where a creditor was advised by his debtor and a third party that the two were in treaty for a transfer to such third party of the debtor's property, but was not informed that by such transfer the debtor was to deprive himself of the means of paying his debts; and he was called upon by them to declare whether he had any claim against the debtor, or the property in question, and declined to answer, it was held that he was not, by his silence, estopped from seeking relief against the transfer as a voluntary one.—Cicotte v. Gagnier, 2 Mich. 381.

¶ 471. One who takes from an administrator a note and mortgage given to the intestate, upon which the latter had made an indorsement with a view to discharging to that extent the debt, cannot attack such indorsement as fraudulent against creditors, though he himself be a creditor and the estate insolvent.—Morris v. Morris, 5 Mich. 171.

¶ 472. A wife does not lose her rights as a creditor of her husband by failing to make her claim known, even as against a third party who lends money to the husband in ignorance of such claim.—Hyde v. Powell, 47 Mich. 156; Dull v. Merrill, 69 Mich. 49.

§ 101. Necessity for judgment or lien.

For equitable relief from violation of Bulk Sales Law, see post § 102.

Rights under void judgment, see post § 103.

Necessity for judgment lien before assailing fraudulent transfer made to defeat collection of tax, see Taxes, X.

¶ 474. General creditors having no judgment or lien on the debtor's property cannot attack conveyances or other dealings for fraud.—McKibben v. Barton, 1 Mich. 213; Maynard v. Hoskins, 9 Mich. 485; Tyler v. Peatt, 30 Mich. 63; Griswold v. Fuller, 33 Mich. 268; Stoddard v. McLane, 56 Mich. 11; Root v. Potter, 59 Mich. 498; Scott v. Chambers, 62 Mich. 532; Krolik v. Root, 63 Mich. 562; Nugent v. Nugent, 70 Mich. 52; People's Sav. Bank v. Bates, 120 U. S. 556, 30 L. ed. 754, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 679.

¶ 475. A general creditor must obtain a judgment before he can complain that his debtor has fraudulently disposed of his property.—Hatch v. Daugherty, 145 Mich. 569.

¶ 476. It has always been held in this state that general creditors, having no judgment or lien on the debtor's property, cannot attack conveyances or other dealings for fraud.—Root v. Potter, 59 Mich. 498.

¶ 477. A fraudulent conveyance cannot be set aside unless the person bringing suit is a judgment creditor, and in addition the judgment procured must be followed by the issue of an execution and a levy of it upon the property said to have been fraudulently conveyed.—Eames v. Manley, 121 Mich. 300.

¶ 478. General creditors who have not obtained a judgment or who have not any lien on the debtor's property cannot attack conveyances or other dealings for fraud.—Trowbridge v. Bullard, 81 Mich. 451.

¶ 479. A creditor who has not prosecuted his claims has no legal concern with his debtor's dealings with property, and where partly secured cannot complain of the transfer of his debtor's remaining interest as a fraud against him, unless he has obtained a lien upon such remaining interest by due legal process.—Glynn v. Phetteplace, 26 Mich. 383; Eslow v. Mitchell, 26 Mich. 500.

¶ 480. No creditor who has not obtained a lien or judgment, and who has not, in seeking to enforce that lien or judgment in the ordinary way, found it necessary to assail the conveyance of his debtor's property as fraudulent, can complain of it.—Voorhies v. Frisbie, 25 Mich. 476.

¶ 482. A conveyance fraudulent as to creditors can only be avoided by a judgment creditor, or one claiming under him, who has taken out execution and levied on the property fraudulently conveyed.—Fox v. Willis, 1 Mich. 321, reversing Fox v. Clark, W. 535.

¶ 483. A chattel mortgage cannot be questioned by a creditor at large except by some proceeding against the property, as by garnishee process.—Fearey v. Cummings, 41 Mich. 376.

As form of fraudulent transfer in general, see ante § 10.

Delay or laches in securing relief from sale contrary to Bulk Sales Law, see ante § 99.

¶ 484. One need not be a judgment creditor in order to obtain relief in equity from a sale in violation of the Bulk Sales Act (Act No. 223, Pub. Acts 1905, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., §§ 9612-9614).—Humiston, Keeling & Co. v. Yore, 181 Mich. 629; Coffey v. McGahey, 181 Mich. 225. (Ostrander, J., dissenting.)

¶ 485. A creditor seeking relief in equity under the provisions of Pub. Acts 1905, No. 223, avoiding the sale by debtors of stocks of merchandise in bulk, must first secure a judgment at law against the debtor. (By divided court, per Blair, C. J., Ostrander, Grant and Hooker, JJ., concurring; Moore and Brooke, JJ., dissenting; Montgomery and McAlvay, JJ., concurring independently in the decision.)—Bixler v. Fry, 157 Mich. 314.

¶ 486. Where the seller of a stock of goods has absconded a creditor is entitled to equitable relief under the Bulk Sales Act, without first reducing his claim to judgment.—Coffey v. McGahey, 181 Mich. 225. (Ostrander, J., dissenting.)

§ 103. ——Rights under void judgment.

¶ 487. Void judgment in attachment cannot be basis of creditor's bill to set aside conveyance as fraudulent.—Nugent v. Nugent, 70 Mich. 52.

¶ 488. Only judgment creditors can assail a conveyance on the ground that it is fraudulent as to creditors; and one who only has a judgment that is void for want of jurisdiction is not in condition to question such a conveyance.—Millar v. Babcock, 29 Mich. 526.

III. EFFECT BETWEEN PARTIES AND AS TO THIRD PERSONS NOT CREDITORS.

§ 104. Effect between parties.

Validity of voluntary deeds between parties in general, see Deeds § 3.

¶ 489. A voluntary deed, intentionally and deliberately made, is good against the grantor and his heirs and successors and can only be avoided by creditors or others having superior equities to the grantee.—Jackson v. Cleveland, 15 Mich. 94; Ryan v. Brown, 18 Mich. 196; Gale v. Gould, 40 Mich. 515; Barber v. Milner, 43 Mich. 248.

¶ 490. Conveyances to defraud creditors are not utterly void. They convey the property effectually as between the parties and their representatives, and may be maintained against all persons except those intended to be defrauded.—Fox v. Willis, 1 Mich. 321; Cleland v. Taylor, 3 Mich. 201; Millar v. Babcock, 29 Mich. 526; Hess v. Final, 32 Mich. 515; McMaster v. Campbell, 41 Mich. 513; Messmore v. Huggard, 46 Mich. 558; Wheeler v. Wallace, 53 Mich. 364.

¶ 491. A mortgage fraudulent as to creditors may be, and usually is, good as between the parties, if there is a consideration to support it.—Hess v. Final, 32 Mich. 515.

¶ 492. Existence and adequacy of a valuable consideration is not important as between the parties and privies to a deed, where no creditors are involved.—Wallace v. Harris, 32 Mich. 380.

¶ 493. A chattel mortgage of a stock of goods, which leaves the mortgagor in possession, and by inference authorizes him to sell in the usual course of business, is good between the parties.—Gay v. Bidwell, 7 Mich. 519.

¶ 493a. There was a gift by a husband to his wife which he could not avoid, where he deposited money in the bank in her name, and delivered to her the bank book, and where she signed all the checks by which the money was withdrawn, although the purpose of such deposit was to put the money beyond the reach of his creditors.—Wipfler v. Detroit Pattern Works, 140 Mich. 677.

§ 105. Right of parties to relief or defense.

On transfers of homesteads or exempt property, see post § 106.
Disability of party placing money with another in fraud of creditors to sue holder for converting check in obtaining money, see also Conversion ¶ 72.

¶ 494. The rule in relation to a conveyance given to defraud creditors, and without consideration as between the parties, is that the law will not aid either of the parties committing or attempting to commit the fraud, but will leave them where they have placed themselves, without relief.—Williams v. Clink, 90 Mich. 297.

¶ 495. A party who executed a deed for the illegal purpose of delaying his creditor in the collection of his debt must bear the consequences, if the party he trusts, in his unlawful attempt, defrauds him. Courts cannot occupy themselves with adjusting equities between wrongdoers.—Gage v. Gage, 36 Mich. 229.

¶ 496. A deed which, though intended merely as security, is absolute in form, will not, if executed for the purpose of delaying creditors, be adjudged an equitable mortgage at the solicitation of the debtor.—Patnode v. Darveau, 112 Mich. 127.

¶ 497. Where one conveys away to his wife his property for the purpose of avoiding anticipated claims against him, though he regards them as a conspiracy, he is not in position to invoke the aid of a court of equity to obtain a reconveyance.—Poppe v. Poppe, 114 Mich. 649.

¶ 498. That the grantee, wife, in her answer to a bill to compel a reconveyance, admits a parol promise to reconvey, will not avail the complainant, where the conveyance was made for the avowed purpose of placing the property beyond the reach of prospective creditors.—Poppe v. Poppe, 114 Mich. 649.

¶ 499. A mortgagor in a suit brought by the mortgagee may dispute the validity of the mortgage by showing that it was given without consideration, and for the purpose of defrauding his creditors.—Williams v. Clink, 90 Mich. 297.

¶ 500. A grantor cannot seek to have his deed set aside as invalid on the ground that it is fraudulent as to creditors.—Nichols v. Nichols, 94 Mich. 569.

¶ 501. One who deeds land to another for the purpose of enabling the grantor to effect a fraudulent and collusive settlement with his creditors in bankruptcy proceedings, having fraudulently placed the property out of his hands, is in no position to seek the aid of a court of equity to have the deed declared to be a mortgage.—Frolich v. Aikman, 194 Mich. 569. (Bird and Person, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 502. A. held his brother B.'s note and transferred it to C. in a trade, signing himself as joint maker. He afterwards bargained with B. for eighty acres of land on which B. with his wife lived, and offered him three hundred and twenty acres of other land and a reduction of $500 on the note to C. B.'s wife consented to the sale on condition that part of the three hundred and twenty acres be conveyed to her, and supposing it was done she exchanged her share for fifty-three acres bought of a third party. C. obtained a judgment on the note against B., and filed a creditor's bill to reach these fifty-three acres, it appearing that A. was the real party in interest. Held, that the bill should be dismissed, as A. could not assail the title of B.'s wife, he being a party to the transaction.—Bunce v. Bailey, 39 Mich. 192.

¶ 503. Where an assignment of a debt is made to defraud creditors, they only can take advantage of the fraud to set it aside, and it is good against all others, and the debtor cannot set it up as a defense to a suit by the assignee.—Morey v. Forsyth, W. 465.

§ 106. ——On transfers of homesteads or exempt property.

Transfer of homestead, see ante § 16.
Transfers of exempt or nonleviable property, see ante § 15.

¶ 504. Since a debtor's homestead is not subject to the claims of creditors, a conveyance of it for the purpose of placing it beyond their reach does not preclude him from having the deed declared a mortgage, if the circumstances justify such relief.—Patnode v. Darveau, 112 Mich. 127.

¶ 506. Only the creditors of a vendor, or their proper representatives, can attack a sale by him as fraudulent against them.—McAuliffe v. Farmer, 27 Mich. 76; Richardson v. Welch, 47 Mich. 309.

¶ 507. Where mortgaged chattels are levied upon and sold under a claim that the mortgage is fraudulent as to creditors, and the mortgagor's wife purchases part of the property, which is replevied by the mortgagee, she can attack the mortgage for fraud, to the extent of the property purchased by her, on the trial of the replevin suit.—Watson v. Mead, 98 Mich. 330.

¶ 508. Where, through vendee's failure to remove within the stipulated time logs cut under a timber contract, they revert to the vendor, the vendee, in replevin for the logs by the vendor's assignee, cannot attack the good faith of the transfer.—Gamble v. Gates, 97 Mich. 465.

¶ 509. Fraud of the plaintiff in procuring title to the stock is immaterial and is therefore properly excluded in trover against a bank cashier, who was also treasurer of a corporation, for converting stock by refusal to issue a new certificate to plaintiff and thus gaining time for attachment by the bank against the stock standing in the name of plaintiff's assignor.—Hine v. Commercial Bank of Bay City, 119 Mich. 448.

¶ 510. Against a bill filed by the holder of the legal title in possession to quiet title as against void tax titles, the holder of such titles cannot raise the defense that complainant's title is void because originating in fraud of creditors.—Loose v. Navarre, 95 Mich. 603.

¶ 511. The rule announced in Hill v. Bowman, 35 Mich. 191, that a claimant for tort damages is not invested with the right given by law to creditors to question voluntary transfers of their debtor's property was criticized as overlooking the words "other persons" in How. St., § 6203, which makes fraudulent transfers void as to "other persons" hindered, delayed or defrauded and as giving a narrow construction to the word "creditors."—Schaible v. Ardner, 98 Mich. 70.

¶ 512. The voluntary assignee of the mortgagor who takes property subject to the mortgage has no right or title superior to his assignor and does not represent the creditors in such a manner as to entitle him to attack the mortgage and the creditors can question the mortgage only in proceedings brought to enforce their claim.—Wakeman v. Barrows, 41 Mich. 363.

Title of purchaser for valuable consideration without notice of fraud, see Comp. L. 1915, § 12002.

¶ 514. One purchasing incumbered property without notice, from the fraudulent grantee, is entitled to reimbursement for an amount paid by him for the discharge of the incumbrances in case the conveyance is set aside as fraudulent as to creditors of the original grantor, although he had agreed to pay incumbrances as a part of the purchase price.—Weatherwax v. Gorman, 150 Mich. 316.

¶ 515. Where a person has conveyed property in fraud of creditors, and subsequently been adjudicated a bankrupt, the filing of the certified copy of the bond of the trustee in bankruptcy in the office of the register of deeds will not deprive an innocent purchaser from the fraudulent grantee of the right to be reimbursed for the amount paid by him for the land, and for sums paid by him to discharge the incumbrances, in case the deeds to him are set aside at the instance of the trustee in bankruptcy.—Weatherwax v. Gorman, 150 Mich. 316.

Priority of lien of levy and transfers by debtor, see also Executions § 32.

¶ 517. A sheriff, who levied on goods under a judgment prior in time to an agreement whereby the judgment debtor was to work land for the benefit of another, the claimant, who was to have the crops and apply the proceeds on the indebtedness due from such debtor, may show in justifying under the judgment that the agreement was intended to be a shield and was fraudulent as against the pre-existing creditors.—Haynes v. Ledyard, 33 Mich. 319.

¶ 518. An attaching officer unable when sued in trover to justify under his writ because of having disposed of the attached property contrary to law cannot attack as fraudulent a sale of the attached goods to plaintiff by the attachment debtor prior to his levy.—Terry v. Metevier, 104 Mich. 50.

Bulk Sales Law, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 6346-6348.

¶ 519. A sale by a merchant of practically his entire stock in trade in bulk in violation of Pub. Acts 1905, Act No. 223, known as the "sales-in-bulk act" is void, not only as to the creditors, but as between the parties, and the bill of sale cannot be given the effect of a chattel mortgage on the goods for the purchase money.—Farrar v. Lonsby Lumber & Coal Co., 149 Mich. 118.

Invalidity of conveyances made to hinder, delay or defraud creditor, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11998.

¶ 520. Land conveyed by a person for the purpose of defrauding his creditors remains subject to execution in the grantee's hands.—Cleland v. Taylor, 3 Mich. 201.

¶ 521. One who has bought property under an arrangement which would be fraudulent as against the creditors of the vendor, or by an unratified sale in which the vendor's agent has exceeded his authority, obtains no title which he can protect from attachments sued out by the vendor's creditors.—Newburn v. Woods, 52 Mich. 610.

¶ 522. One who takes title from an insolvent debtor, merely for the purpose of defrauding creditors, and disposes of it to an innocent purchaser on credit, is liable to them for its value, whether he succeeds or not in collecting the purchase money.—Robinson v. Boyd, 17 Mich. 128.

¶ 523. A fraudulent grantee to whom a judgment debtor has transferred his property subject to a levy cannot put himself in any better position by a tortious interference with that levy, and the property in his hands or in the hands of any mala fide holder under him would continue to be held under the character of a disposition in fraud of the judgment creditor.—Nelson v. Ferris, 30 Mich. 497.

¶ 525. A grantee who voluntarily becomes a party to a deed which is fraudulent in part forfeits his right to claim benefit from another part which would have been good.—Kirby v. Ingersoll, H. 172.

¶ 526. A conveyance of land by a husband to his wife without consideration and for the purpose of merely making the wife eligible as a surety upon a liquor dealer's bond for the husband, which conveyance failed by reason of misdescription, is subject to a subsequent levy upon a judgment against the husband; and a bill by the wife for injunction and reformation of the deed was dismissed.—Balch v. Jaycox, 122 Mich. 624.

See also ante ¶¶ 94, 95.

Right of bona fide purchaser or transferee to reimbursement for expenditures, see ante ¶¶ 514, 515.

General doctrine of bona fide purchaser, see Notice and Record of Title, I.

¶ 527. The actual secret intent of the grantor, however bad, cannot affect a bona fide purchaser without notice.—Hollister v. Loud, 2 Mich. 309.

¶ 528. A sale to a bona fide purchaser is not invalidated by the fact that the vendor made it with intent to hinder and defraud creditors.—Spring Lake Iron Co. v. Waters, 50 Mich. 13.

¶ 530. The disposal of property by a debtor, although made by him with the intention of avoiding payment of indebtedness to a particular creditor, must be deemed to have been made in good faith as far as the purchaser is concerned, so as not to be subject to attack by such creditor, where such purchaser paid full value for the property, and the abstract of title submitted to him did not disclose any interest of the creditor, and he had no knowledge of the creditor's claim, and no judgment or decree had been entered against the debtor at the time of the purchase.—Downing v. Brooks, 194 Mich. 490.

§ 116. Rights in growing crops on conveyed lands.

¶ 532. A sheriff who has levied on a growing crop after the land had been conveyed by the execution debtor, and has afterwards taken possession of the harvested crops, can show, when sued in replevin by the grantee, that the conveyance was fraudulent and void as against the creditor in his execution; and he is not bound first to have the conveyance set aside in a direct proceeding for that purpose.—Pierce v. Hill, 35 Mich. 194.

¶ 533. A judgment creditor is entitled to crops grown upon the land of his debtor after it has been transferred in fraud of his rights, so far at least as the fraudulent grantor retains an interest in them by an understanding with the grantee; and where there is reason to suppose there is such collusion, all doubts are solved in the creditor's favor.—Fury v. Strohecker, 44 Mich. 337.

§ 117. Exhaustion of debtor's other assets as condition precedent.

Following one of several transfers, see post § 118.

¶ 534. It seems that a conveyance fraudulent as to creditors will not be set aside if it be made to appear that the debtor has other property liable to execution, sufficient for the payment of his debts, which creditors have not yet exhausted.—Fox v. Willis, 1 Mich. 321.

¶ 535. Where the personal property of a judgment debtor, liable to execution, is amply sufficient to satisfy the judgment and all costs, and the creditor's remedy by a resort thereto is neither uncertain nor insufficient, there is nothing to justify a resort to the debtor's real estate, even though fraudulently conveyed. So held where a judgment debtor caused his real estate to be conveyed to his wife, and also conveyed to her his personal property (a stock of goods), all in fraud of his creditors, and at the time of a levy on the real estate she was in possession of the goods, and carrying on the business her husband had been engaged in on the premises thus conveyed in her name by her husband as manager, and where no reason was apparent why said stock of goods should not have been levied upon to satisfy the judgment; the alleged fraud in the sale being attackable in an action at law, and there being no occasion for a resort to a bill in equity.—Brock v. Rich, 76 Mich. 644; Pierce v. Rich, 76 Mich. 648.

¶ 536. A judgment creditor is not obliged to follow all the fraudulent conveyances made by several execution defendants, but may allow some to stand while he seeks to set aside others.—First Nat. Bank of Marshall v. Hosmer, 48 Mich. 200.

§ 119. Extent of liability; property liable.

Growing crops on conveyed lands, see ante § 116.

Exhaustion of debtor's other assets as condition precedent, see ante § 117.

Following one of several transfers, see ante § 118.

Following property in converted form, see post § 120.

Right to levy on property in purchaser's hands when taken before levy but on promise to pay attaching creditor, see Executions ¶ 31.

¶ 537. Creditors levying on live-stock fraudulently transferred cannot take from the transferee the increase therefrom if they have long allowed it to accumulate under his management.—Wheeler v. Wallace, 53 Mich. 355.

¶ 537a. The fact that the tangible assets of a newspaper corporation, whose transfer of all of its assets to another paper the garnishee corporation, in payment of a debt, is attacked as fraudulent by a judgment creditor, did not exceed in value the amount of the indebtedness, will not necessarily relieve the assignee from liability in garnishment, where no account was taken of intangible assets consisting of good will and a press franchise.—Long v. Evening News Ass'n, 113 Mich. 261.

§ 120. Following property in converted form.

¶ 538. Property purchased by a wife with the proceeds of an insurance policy on other property conveyed to her by the husband in fraud of creditors may be subjected in equity to the claims of such creditors.—Syllabus 2 of Palmer v. Smith, 126 Mich. 352.

§ 121. Partially valid transfer or mortgage.

See also ante ¶ 525, post ¶ 586.

¶ 539. That one of the debts secured by a chattel mortgage is fraudulent does not invalidate the mortgage as to the other creditors named therein.—Krementz v. Howard, 109 Mich. 466.

§ 122. Rights, liens and allowances to grantee on transfer being set aside.

Right of transferee to surplus after satisfying creditors, see ante § 107.

¶ 540. Where a deed, given in consideration of expenses incurred and services rendered by grantee and future support, is set aside in favor of creditors, the grantee is entitled to recover for the services rendered and expenses incurred up to the time the deed was made.—Michigan Trust Co. v. Comstock, 130 Mich. 572.

¶ 541. A conveyance by a debtor upon consideration of an agreement to pay him an annuity is void as to creditors who are thereby deprived of the means of enforcing their claims, though no actual fraud was intended; but the grantee will be protected to the extent of the payments made in good faith.—Walker v. Cady, 106 Mich. 21.

¶ 542. A judgment creditor attacking a conveyance of land by his debtor to another creditor, and claiming that the land was conveyed merely as security for a debt between the parties, must, in order to be entitled to relief, offer to reimburse the other creditor for the amount he has been compelled to pay as indorser of a note made by the debtor and delivered before the execution of the conveyance attacked.—Rathbone v. Maltz, 155 Mich. 306.

¶ 543. A conveyance being actually and not only constructively fraudulent, it was held, on bill filed by the creditors to set it aside, that the grantee should be credited with taxes paid and improvements made by him, but not for advances made to the fraudulent grantor, unless the money was used by the latter, before complainants filed their bill, to pay debts due at the time of the conveyance.—How v. Camp, W. 427.

¶ 544. In a case involving the question of the validity of a deed as to creditors, a decree declaring the deed as security for the amount found due the grantee should be affirmed, if there is nothing in the record to satisfy the reviewing court that the amount so secured has been paid.—Smith v. Lee, 79 Mich. 465.

¶ 545. Where, without intent to defraud, one has taken from an insolvent debtor an assignment of a contract, and has subsequently paid the balance due on the contract, taking title in his own name, he should as against his assignor's creditors who with full knowledge of the facts have waited several years before obtaining judgment, levying execution, and filing a bill in aid of such execution, be allowed the amount expended by him on the land, and should be required to turn over to the creditors nothing but the debtor's interest.—Cutcheon v. Buchanan, 88 Mich. 594.

¶ 546. On a bill to subject assets to an assignment for the benefit of creditors, filed against the debtor and his wife, by whom, as averred, these assets are held for him in fraud of creditors, a decree charging the wife with the difference between her husband's indebtedness to her and the value of the property exchanged for land deeded to her, and which was to be her property, may, on an apt showing in the record on appeal, be modified by adding thereto the amount charged to the wife on the husband's books for money paid to her in the same account in which she is credited with the loans making up the husband's indebtedness to her.—Joslin v. Goebel, 90 Mich. 71.

¶ 547. In a bill in aid of execution, one of the defendants who entered into possession of the land in question under quitclaim deed and occupied in good faith and made improvements, was entitled, ahead of the lien established by the levy and attachment, to allowance for such improvements to their value at the time such defendant was notified by complainant not to make improvements.—Cleland v. Clark, 123 Mich. 179.

¶ 548. "He that committeth iniquity, shall not have equity" applies in favor of a creditor filing a bill in aid of execution, as against the debtor's cotenant to whom the debtor had conveyed his interest, and who voluntarily paid off the proportionate part of the mortgage on the half conveyed to him by the debtor and seeks protection as to payments made by him.—Morley Bros. v. Stringer, 133 Mich. 690.

¶ 549. On cancelling a transfer in fraud of creditors made in the form of a deed to one creditor, which was treated as a mortgage, the amount due on such mortgage was decreed to be paid to the holder, it having had no part in the fraud.—Desbecker v. Mendelson, 117 Mich. 293.

Statutory provisions regulating sales, transfers and assignments of goods, merchandise and fixtures in bulk, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 6346-6348.

¶ 550. A purchaser cannot assert ignorance of the Bulk Sales Act in defense to a proceeding against him thereunder by a creditor.—Marquette County Sav. Bank v. Koivisto, 162 Mich. 554.

¶ 551. Where the buyer and seller of a stock of goods fail to observe the provisions of Act 223, P. A. 1905, known as the Bulk Sales Law, creditors of the seller, may recover from the buyer to the extent of the reasonable value of the goods.—J. L. Hudson Co. v. No-Name Hat Co., 174 Mich. 109.

§ 124. ——Estoppel or waiver of rights under act.

Effect of delay or laches in securing relief from sale in violation of Bulk Sales Law, see ante § 99.
Estoppel of creditors to assert rights in general, see ante § 100.

¶ 554. No waiver of a creditor's rights under the Bulk Sales Act (Act No. 223, Pub. Acts 1905, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., §§ 9612-9614) can be predicated on an agreement between him and the purchaser, where, if made, the creditor was not aware that the sale was in violation of the act, nor based on any consideration.—Coffey v. McGahey, 181 Mich. 225. (Ostrander, J., dissenting.)

¶ 555. Plaintiff bought a stock of saloon goods of one Vohlers and left them in the saloon. Upon paying the vendor for them he saw one McGann a creditor of the vendor, showed him the money, and McGann saw him hand it to the vendor. McGann asked Vohlers for the money, and the latter promised to pay him the same day. McGann attached the goods. Plaintiff sued the sheriff in replevin. Held, McGann was not estopped from employing his remedy under the Bulk Sales Act, Act No. 223, Pub. Acts 1905.—Porter v. Goudzwaard, 162 Mich. 158.

§ 125. Inventories, affidavits and notices under Bulk Sales Law.

Who are creditors within meaning of Bulk Sales Law, see ante ¶ 439.
Bulk Sales Law, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 6346-6348.

¶ 556. Under the Bulk Sales Law, Act No. 223, Pub. Acts 1905, if the vendor has no creditors and cannot therefore furnish a list of them, the vendee must take an affidavit of him to that effect.—Interstate Shirt & Collar Co. v. Windham, 165 Mich. 648.

¶ 557. A statement in a vendor's affidavit to a vendee that the stock of goods sold in bulk is entirely free from debt is not a sufficient compliance with that provision of the Bulk Sales Law, Act No. 223, Pub. Acts 1905, which requires the vendor to make an affidavit that he has no creditors, and a vendee who makes a bulk purchase under such an affidavit is liable in garnishment to the vendor's creditors.—Interstate Shirt & Collar Co. v. Windham, 165 Mich. 648.

¶ 558. Under Act No. 223, Pub. Acts 1905 (the Bulk Sales Law), notice of sale must be given to all creditors, and it is not enough that it is given merely to merchandise creditors.—People's Sav. Bank v. Van Allsburg, 165 Mich. 524.

¶ 559. Equity recognizes the right of a judgment creditor to attack any fraudulent conveyance, subterfuge or device resorted to by the debtor for the purpose of hindering, delaying or defeating the creditor from realizing upon his judgment.—Barber v. McMicking, 189 Mich. 266.

¶ 560. Liens obtained on personalty by levy of execution do not in general require the aid of equity to enforce them, and transactions alleged to be fraudulent as against them are properly investigated in courts of law.—Stoddard v. McLane, 56 Mich. 11.

¶ 561. The rule that execution must be returned unsatisfied before equity can be resorted to, to reach property fraudulently conveyed, applies to defeat a suit based upon the fact that within four months the new bankruptcy law will take effect and seeking to preserve the property of the debtor until such time.—Ideal Clothing Co. v. Hazle, 126 Mich. 262.

¶ 562. Where a judgment debtor has elected to treat as fraudulent a conveyance made by his debtor before the judgment, and notwithstanding the transfer of title has proceeded to sell the property on execution, he cannot afterwards maintain a bill to set aside the conveyance.—Cranson v. Smith, 47 Mich. 647.

¶ 563. An execution purchaser of land fraudulently transferred to a third person by the execution debtor may bring ejectment therefor; the fraud may be shown as well at law as in equity.—Cleland v. Taylor, 3 Mich. 201.

¶ 564. Where a deed of real estate was taken in the name of a minor son to keep it from his father's creditors, and it was afterwards sold by the sheriff on the execution against the father, the son was decreed to release to the purchasers at the sheriff's sale. —Cutter v. Griswold, W. 437.

¶ 564a. A delay of eight or nine years after gaining knowledge of facts upon which complainant bases a charge of fraud in transactions between husband and wife is too great to justify relief.—Buhl v. Peck, 70 Mich. 44.

§ 127. ——Under Bulk Sales Law.

Pleading in action under Bulk Sales Law, see also post ¶ 583.
Necessary and proper parties in proceedings under Bulk Sales Law, see post ¶ 571.

Delay and laches in securing relief from sale contrary to Bulk Sales Law, see ante § 99.
Bulk Sales Law, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 6346-6348.

¶ 565. The plain terms of the Bulk Sales Act (Act No. 223, Pub. Acts 1905, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., §§ 9612-9614) show that it was not the intention of the legislature to deprive creditors of an equitable remedy.—Coffey v. McGahey, 181 Mich. 225; Humiston, Keeling & Co. v. Yore, 181 Mich. 629.

¶ 566. The legal remedy by garnishment given creditors of the seller of a stock in violation of the Bulk Sales Act (Act No. 223, Pub. Acts 1905, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., §§ 9612-9614), are not so complete and adequate as to deprive a court of equity of jurisdiction.—Coffey v. McGahey, 181 Mich. 225.

§ 128. Necessary and proper parties.

Necessity of making grantee who has reconveyed party defendant in suit to annul fraudulent conveyance, see Estates of Decedents ¶¶ 312, 313.

¶ 568. Where the intent of a deed is so far carried out, by operative provisions, as to secure to beneficiaries the interests designed for them, the grantors need not be made parties to a creditor's bill to set aside subsequent conveyances.—Paton v. Langley, 50 Mich. 428.

¶ 569. An attorney for a mortgagee, who is charged with actively participating with his client in the fraudulent foreclosure of the mortgage, whereby all of the mortgagor's property was absorbed to the injury of creditors, is a proper, though not a necessary, party to a bill filed by a judgment creditor for an accounting and the payment of his judgment.—Sweet v. Converse, 88 Mich. 1.

¶ 570. A wife has no interest in the case so as to necessitate making her a party defendant to a suit to set aside a fraudulent deed to land executed by her and her husband.—Fowler v. Hanniford, How. N. P. 145.

§ 129. ——Assignees of original parties.

Rights of assignees of creditors, see ante § 109.

¶ 572. The right to sue in equity to have a conveyance or other act set aside for fraud is not assignable.—Morris v. Morris, 5 Mich. 171; Brush v. Sweet, 38 Mich. 574.

¶ 573. An assignee of unpaid claims may attack fraudulent conveyances made by the debtor prior to his assignment.—Noble v. McKeith, 127 Mich. 163.

¶ 574. The assignee of a claim against a fraudulent grantor may sue to set aside the transfer on the same grounds of fraud open to his assignor.—Sweet v. Converse, 88 Mich. 1; Howd v. Breckenridge, 97 Mich. 65.

§ 130. Form, scope and sufficiency of bill.

Extent of grantee's liability and property liable, see ante § 119.
Issues and scope of hearing, see post § 131.
Propriety of joining all causes in one bill, see also Equity § 75.
Treating bill as common law creditors' bill to avoid shorter limitation, see Limitations, II.

¶ 575. A bill to set aside a conveyance made in fraud of creditors is aimed at defendant's legal title to the premises as against his creditors, and not merely at his equitable interest therein.—Cranson v. Smith, 47 Mich. 189.

¶ 576. A bill by another judgment creditor impleading a judgment creditor of an estate and the administrator thereof to set aside the judgment on the ground that it was procured by fraud and collusion between defendants, but alleging no facts or circumstances from which fraud could be inferred, is rightly dismissed for the want of equity.—McMahon v. Rooney, 93 Mich. 390.

¶ 577. A bill to reach land alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed by a judgment debtor is bad on general demurrer if it contain no direct averment that at the time of the alleged fraudulent conveyance the debtor had, or pretended to have, an interest in the lands.—Manning v. Drake, 1 Mich. 34.

¶ 578. Where a creditor seeks in chancery to reach property alleged to have been purchased with the money of his debtor, and conveyed to the debtor's wife to keep the same beyond the reach of creditors, he must show either that his debt existed at the time, or that the debtor was indebted to others, and that the purchase money was paid by him and the deed taken to his wife with actual intent to defraud existing creditors; or that the purchase money was paid by the debtor and the conveyance taken to the wife for the purpose of defrauding future creditors.—Hopson v. Payne, 7 Mich. 334.

¶ 579. The insolvency of a corporation one of defendants alleged to hold a bankrupt's assets in hindrance of creditors is sufficiently set forth in a bill which alleges that an organizer of the same stated that it owed more than it could pay, and which also alleges that judgments are entered or about to be entered for amounts beyond the ability of the company to meet.—Kimmerle v. Dowagiac Gas Co., 159 Mich. 34.

¶ 580. A bill in aid of execution to set aside a deed as fraudulent as against the complainant should show how it is so, and is too general if it merely alleges the fraud. But if the defendant does not object on the hearing the defect is not open on an appeal.—Rhead v. Hounson, 46 Mich. 243.

¶ 581. Where a judgment creditor's bill alleges that the mortgagor and a receiver appointed in foreclosure fraudulently conspired to enable the mortgagee to get possession of all of the mortgagor's assets for a nominal consideration, and that the conspiracy was successful, it is not necessary to aver that as a consequence there were no assets with which to pay complainant's judgment, or that defendants' contract operated as a fraud upon other creditors, or that the intent was to defraud them.—Sweet v. Converse, 88 Mich. 1.

¶ 582. Where the bill was inconsistent, averring in one part that the purchase price was paid by the wife, and in another that the husband paid the money, or furnished the money wherewith it was purchased by the wife, it was held that, as the law presumes honesty rather than fraud, it was to be inferred that the wife paid for the land with her own money rather than the contrary.—Hopson v. Payne, 7 Mich. 334.

¶ 583. A demurrer should not be sustained to a bill of complaint alleging that a stock of merchandise was voluntarily turned over by a debtor to a chattel mortgagee without foreclosure proceedings, in violation of the Bulk Sales Act (Act No. 223, Pub. Acts 1905, §§ 2612-2614, How. St., 2nd Ed.), where the value of the incumbered chattels is not disclosed by the bill.—Symons Bros. & Co. v. Brink, 187 Mich. 43.

¶ 584. If there is no special prayer to have the fraudulent conveyance set aside, the complainant is entitled to have it set aside under the general prayer for other and further relief.—Williams v. Hubbard, W. 28.

§ 131. Issues and scope of hearing.

¶ 585. Whenever a disposition of property has been made which is alleged to be fraudulent as to creditors the actual indebtedness is not only in issue, but it is the primary fact in logical order for the party attacking the conveyance to establish. It is also important in its bearing upon the probable intent of the parties to the transfer; and the bona fides of the transaction cannot be properly tried without going into this subject.—Cook v. Hopper, 23 Mich. 511; Manning v. Bresnahan, 63 Mich. 584.

¶ 586. On a bill to discharge of record certain mortgages alleged to be invalid as against complainants' judgment and levy because they have been paid and satisfied, it is immaterial that the mortgages may be valid as to some of the defendants though void as to complainants, where all parties are joined and before the court.—Eaton v. Eaton, 68 Mich. 158.

¶ 587. Fraud is not presumed from a sale on credit merely, though such presumption may arise from failure to change possession and from some express deviation from the ordinary course of business.—Lewis v. Rice, 61 Mich. 97.

¶ 588. Fraud against creditors in a transfer of securities is not inferable from certain suspicious circumstances, in spite of uncontradicted testimony to the contrary.—Miller v. Beadle, 65 Mich. 643.

¶ 589. Provisions in a chattel mortgage giving power to sell at public or private sale, and to remove the mortgaged property to other places for sale in case of default, are not unusual, and are not per se fraudulent.—Armstrong v. Cook, 95 Mich. 257.

¶ 590. When there is no evidence as to the time when an indebtedness of a husband accrued upon which a judgment was rendered whether before or after a transfer to a wife it must be regarded as having accrued at the date of the judgment.—Glover v. Alcott, 11 Mich. 470.

¶ 591. Complainant in a bill in aid of execution, filed to set aside a conveyance which defendant is alleged to have delivered after verdict had been rendered against him, has the burden of proving that delivery was not made until after verdict.—McCullough v. Day, 45 Mich. 554.

¶ 592. In replevin for property attached by an officer, which had been sold and was in the possession of a third person, the burden of proof is upon the officer to show that the sale of the property by the debtor to the person in possession was fraudulent as against creditors. If the property had not been delivered to the buyer the burden of proof is upon the latter to show the good faith of the transaction.—Angell v. Pickard, 61 Mich. 561.

¶ 593. Under Pub. Acts 1897, No. 99, the burden of proof is on the defendant to show a conveyance attacked by a bill in aid of execution to have been made bona fide.—Ullman v. Thomas, 126 Mich. 61.

¶ 594. Pub. Acts 1897, Act No. 99, shifting to the defendant the burden of proof of fraud in suits in aid of execution applies only in cases where a judgment has been obtained against the principal defendant, and execution issued, and a levy made upon the property which it is claimed was fraudulently conveyed; and had no application to an action against a wife upon a note claimed by her to have been signed for a debt of her husband.—Whelpley v. Stoughton, 119 Mich. 314.

Admissibility of evidence as to form and manner of transfer and intent or effect to hinder and defraud, see also ante §§ 19, 20.

Admissibility of evidence as to notice or participation of transferee in fraud, see ante § 29.

Admissibility of evidence as to voluntariness and inadequacy of consideration as badge of fraud, see ante § 43.

Admissibility of evidence as to transfers to family, relatives or business associates, see ante §§ 60, 61.

Pleadings and files in other suits as evidence, see Evidence § 548.

Acts and declarations of parties as admissions of fraud binding successors, see Evidence §§ 414-416.

Opinions as to insolvency at time of transfer, see Evidence § 211, ¶ 1247.

Settlements with other creditors as admission, see Evidence § 396.
Cross-examination of witnesses as to financial conditions and resources, see Examination of Witnesses § 48.

¶ 596. Where a transfer of goods is attacked by the creditors of the party transferring as fraudulent, liberal rules govern the admissibility of evidence tending to prove fraud. All material facts and circumstances bearing on the transaction and on the relationship of the parties are properly considered.—Carew v. Mathews, 49 Mich. 302.

¶ 597. Where creditors attack a sale as fraudulent, evidence of all that was said and done between the parties at and before the agreement is competent, not only to show fraud but to rebut it. The seller may testify whether the sale was absolute, and the buyer may testify as to his intent.—Angell v. Pickard, 61 Mich. 561.

¶ 598. On an issue whether a stock of goods levied on as A.'s property really belonged to him or to B., as whose ostensible agent A. had been carrying on business, previous dealings between A. and B., whereby the former, to defraud his creditors, transferred to the latter a stock of goods which the jury were justified in treating as the basis of the stock levied on, were admissible in evidence.—Wolfe v. Frederick, 59 Mich. 246.

¶ 599. In an action involving the good faith of a firm in buying goods just before they failed, a written answer to an inquiry by the vendor as to their credit, which though true in fact was false in spirit and tended to mislead, was admissible in evidence.—Shipman v. Seymour, 40 Mich. 274.

¶ 600. Where a vendor's execution creditors sued for conversion by the vendee defend on the ground that the sale defrauded creditors, evidence that two months afterwards vendor made a general assignment, shown to have been contemplated at the time of the sale, is admissible.—Wessels v. Beeman, 87 Mich. 481.

¶ 601. Where an attaching officer sued in trover by a chattel mortgagee attacked the mortgage as fraudulent as to creditors, the court exercised a fair discretion in excluding, upon the cross-examination of plaintiff's witness, testimony which tended to prove that the mortgagor had entered into a fraudulent arrangement with certain other creditors in respect to property not covered by the mortgage.—Keating v. Retan, 80 Mich. 324.

¶ 602. In an action by an assignee in bankruptcy to recover assets fraudulently received from a bankrupt and used by defendants in the investment in a zinc mine, where the actual dividends and value of the stock in the mine had been shown, evidence of the reputation or standing of this or other mines was wholly immaterial.—Arnold v. Harris, 142 Mich. 275.

¶ 604. Where in a suit involving the bona fides of a chattel mortgage given by a druggist to a firm of liquor dealers, with whom he had dealt for several years, to secure an existing indebtedness and the price of a bill of liquors which the mortgagees claim had been ordered by the mortgagor, the mortgagor denies ever ordering the liquors, and testifies that the mortgage was given for the larger amount in fraud of other creditors, it is competent for the assailants of the mortgage to show, as bearing upon the probabilities, in what quantities the mortgagor had usually ordered liquors of the mortgagees, and that the alleged order was an unusual one, and out of all proportion to the business then being carried on by the mortgagor.—Rosenthal v. Bishop, 98 Mich. 527.

¶ 605. The purchaser of goods being dissatisfied negotiated for a resale to the vendor, but notes which he had given fell due and he became embarrassed and made an assignment. In the course of the settlement of his affairs the vendor took back the goods and received a deed of them and gave a mortgage on them to a stranger. In later proceedings to set these aside as having been obtained by fraud, testimony to the original transfer was irrelevant except for the purpose of showing how complainant became indebted and how defendant became interested in the settlement of his debts.—Collins v. Jackson, 43 Mich. 558.

¶ 606. Where the seller of cord wood had agreed that the price therefor should be paid to certain creditors by the purchaser, evidence that a debt not included by the seller was contracted through fraud has no tendency to prove that his sale was fraudulent, neither is such evidence admissible.—Thompson v. Newland, 144 Mich. 595.

¶ 607. Where a mortgagee seeks to recover the value of mortgaged property sold on execution, and the mortgage is charged to have been fraudulent, he may be cross-examined as to his disposition of other property covered by the mortgage but not involved in the suit.—Ganong v. Green, 71 Mich. 1.

¶ 607a. The entire antecedents of the dealings between a principal defendant and a garnishee and their agents, and all transactions regarding the property and its disposal, are admissible in evidence where fraudulent dealings of the garnishee as against the principal defendant's creditors are in question.—Cummings v. Fearey, 44 Mich. 39.

Weight and sufficiency of evidence as to form and manner of transfer and intent or effect to hinder and defraud, see also ante §§ 19, 20.

Weight and sufficiency of evidence as to notice and participation of transferee in fraud, see also ante § 29.

Weight and sufficiency of evidence as to voluntariness and inadequacy of consideration as badge of fraud, see ante § 44.

Weight and sufficiency of evidence as to transfers to family, relatives or business associates, see ante §§ 62-65.

Evidences of fraud in general as between the parties, see Fraud, I, B.

Sufficiency of evidence of fraudulent conveyance in actions against sheriffs for wrongful levy, see Sheriffs, VI.

Evidence as to fairness or fraudulency of corporate assignment for creditors, see Corporations § 230.

Insufficiency of recital of consideration as proof of payment of value as against third person, see also Contracts ¶ 626.

¶ 609. One who impugns a transaction as fraudulent which may or may not be so is not sustained by his own assertion alone in case he is disputed, but must make his allegation good by independent evidence.—Hutchinson v. Poyer, 78 Mich. 337.

¶ 611. A decedent's conveyance will be set aside in favor of his creditors where equities of the complaining creditor are strong and the evidence pertaining to its delivery to a third person for delivery to the grantee on the grantor's death, as well as the question whether the grantor intended to part with all control over the instrument, is weak and not convincing.—Brown v. Keiser, 182 Mich. 432.

¶ 612. A bill in aid of execution and praying for the setting aside of various mortgages, was properly dismissed where the testimony proved that such mortgages were given for a bona fide indebtedness and that they were delivered.—Wilcox v. Wilcox, 135 Mich. 240.

¶ 613. On suit in aid of an execution issued on a deficiency decree, evidence of the suit to foreclose in August, 1896, a transfer of the property made on December 18th without consideration, a deficiency decree in April, 1897, exceeding the value of the remaining property, makes out a prima facie case for the complainant under Act No. 99, Public Acts of 1897 and testimony by two witnesses for the defendant tending to show the existence of sufficient property to cover the indebtedness at the time of the transfer, is offset by further testimony of an execution issued shortly thereafter and returned unsatisfied and the debtor's testimony that he is not sure whether his personal property was mortgaged at that time or not.—Gruner v. Brooks, 126 Mich. 465.

¶ 614. A contention that there is no evidence of fraud cannot be sustained where judgment creditors seeking to set aside conveyances show that a husband represented himself as being worth $20,000 at the time that the indebtedness was incurred, that he had nothing shortly afterwards and that some of the conveyances were kept off the record for a long time, and where the husband and the grantees and vendees in the conveyances refuse to take the stand and show the bona

¶ 615. On a bill to quiet title to real estate which one of defendants claimed was originally deeded him by his father with the understanding that he should furnish his two brothers money whenever they wanted it, evidence held insufficient to establish fraud in inducing the execution of a deed by one of the plaintiffs, wife of one of the brothers, to whom such defendant had conveyed the property, to her husband.—Prentis v. Prentis, 189 Mich. 1.

¶ 616. On a bill to set aside an attachment levy, and a cross-bill asking to have a deed to complainant set aside as fraudulent as to creditors of grantor, evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that the conveyance was not bona fide and was void as to creditors of grantor under Comp. Laws 1897, § 9533, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 11417.—McRae v. Sleeper, 188 Mich. 168.

¶ 617. A defendant in a justice's court suit filed for record January 7, 1908, a mortgage on his real estate running to his brother. The mortgage was dated January 4, 1908. Judgment was had against defendant in the suit January 6, 1908. The certificate of deposit which represented the loan made to defendant by his brother was canceled January 7, 1908. Defendant and his brother were heard to say that they had fixed things so that the judgment could not be collected. In a bill by complainant in aid of the execution, held, the mortgage should be set aside as fraudulent.—Shepard v. Schrutt, 163 Mich. 485.

¶ 618. On a bill in aid of execution by the seller of land against the purchaser and her husband, where a judgment at law had been obtained against the purchaser for fraudulent representations as to the value of exchanged property, evidence held sufficient to show that the conveyance was made to the purchaser and her husband at the request of the purchaser.—Lipp v. Jacobs, 198 Mich. 357.

Excessive mortgages as question for jury, see ante ¶¶ 151, 153.

Extension of credit on property transferred as question for jury, see also ante ¶ 446.

Fraudulent intent as question of fact, see Comp. L. 1915, § 12001.

¶ 619. Fraud against creditors in a sale of goods by a debtor is a question of fact and not of law, except in the very few cases where a transaction is intrinsically incapable of a legal and honest effect; and except in those cases it should be submitted to the jury, under proper instructions.—Lewis v. Rice, 61 Mich. 97; Bedford v. Penney, 65 Mich. 667; Wessels v. Beeman, 66 Mich. 343.

¶ 620. Suspicious circumstances attending an alleged sale of goods to plaintiff in replevin, which sale is claimed to be fraudulent, are matters for the jury.—Morse v. Denton, 77 Mich. 693.

¶ 621. The weight of evidence is for the jury where the plaintiff insists that the sale in question was made in good faith and the defendant avers that it was fraudulent, and each gives testimony tending to support his claim.—Gordon v. Alexander, 122 Mich. 107.

¶ 622. The questions whether the mortgage was filed before the persons complaining of it became creditors of the mortgagor are for the jury; so, also, are the questions whether a garnishee has possession of assets belonging to the principal defendant, and whether he holds by a title fraudulent as against the plaintiff in the character of a creditor.—Fearey v. Cummings, 41 Mich. 376.

¶ 623. It is necessary to submit a proper jury question whether a sale of goods was fraudulent as to creditors although the sale attacked embraced some cigars as to which it was void as made in violation of the United States revenue laws.—Wessels v. Beeman, 66 Mich. 343.

§ 136. Instructions and direction of verdict.

Instructions as to form and manner of transfer and intent or effect to hinder and defraud, see also ante § 21.

Instructions as to notice and participation of transferee in fraud, see also ante § 30.

Instructions as to transfers to family, relatives or business associates, see ante § 66.

¶ 624. Where the question was as to the validity, against creditors other than the mortgagee, of two chattel mortgages, the second of which was given and received to secure a compromise based in part at least upon the supposed validity of the first, an instruction directing the jury's attention entirely to the first mortgage on the ground that if it was fraudulent and void so also would the second be, while if it was valid the mortgagee would prevail even though the second were fraudulent and void, was sustained.—Anderson v. Cook, 100 Mich. 621.

¶ 625. It is error to instruct the jury, in a suit by a vendee to recover the value of goods from the attaching creditors of his vendor, that plaintiff has made out a prima facie case by proving the sale to him of the goods, other facts being shown by plaintiff's testimony which might also have weight with the jury in determining the bona fides of the purchase.—Hutchinson v. Poyer, 78 Mich. 337.

¶ 626. In replevin by mortgagees against an attaching officer who raises the defense that the mortgage was fraudulent as to creditors, it is proper, where the defendant produces no evidence of fraud, to instruct the jury that the evidence does not warrant a finding that the mortgage was fraudulent, the burden being on defendant.—Hyde v. Shank, 93 Mich. 535.

¶ 627. On an issue of fraud upon creditors in a chattel mortgage after the evidence is received tending to show fraud on the debtor's part, the court will direct a verdict accordingly; if no evidence indicates fraud and if the mortgagee is not shown to be chargeable with it the jury will be so instructed; but it cannot be excluded when offered because there is no evidence to connect the mortgagee with it.—Heath v. Koon, 130 Mich. 54.

¶ 628. Where, in a case involving the bona fides of a chattel mortgage the mortgagees introduce evidence to show that at the request of the mortgagor, made subsequently to the execution of the mortgage, they did not ship the goods ordered, but credited the price of the same upon the mortgage, and the mortgagor claims that the writing containing such request was made by him at the instance of the mortgagees, and that the goods mentioned had never been ordered, it is error for the court to refuse to instruct the jury, at the request of the attaching creditors of the mortgagor, that any arrangement between the parties, by which the amount of the mortgage was reduced to the sum actually due, would not save the security, if the mortgage was fraudulent in its inception.—Rosenthal v. Bishop, 98 Mich. 527.

¶ 629. Where the question was whether a transfer of goods was fraudulent as to creditors, an instruction that in the absence of direct or positive proof of fraudulent acts the proof must be clear and convincing, of the kind and amount to create in the mind a hearty conviction that the charge of fraud is true, was misleading; proof of facts and circumstances is sufficiently clear if it creates a belief that a fraud has been perpetrated.—Gumbert v. Treusch, 103 Mich. 543.

¶ 630. An instruction on the validity of two mortgages was sustained, which charged that if the first mortgage was valid when plaintiff, the mortgagee, demanded the property from attaching officer, neither the latter nor the plaintiff in attachment could have been injured by coupling the second mortgage, even if fraudulent, with the first, it appearing that the first mortgage alone exceeded the appraised value of the property.—Anderson v. Cook, 100 Mich. 621.

¶ 631. On a conflict in evidence tending to show that plaintiff falsely claimed to have bought the horses in suit of the debtor, thereby intending to assist him in defrauding his creditors, and that the defendant officer had delivered them to the debtor at plaintiff's instance, an instruction assuming a valid purchase by plaintiff and an unauthorized delivery of the property to the debtor, as claimed by plaintiff, should be refused.—Mears v. Cornwall, 73 Mich. 78.

C. JUDGMENT AND RELIEF.

Receivership or other ancillary relief, see post § 138.

Necessity for judgment or lien to entitle creditor to relief, see ante §§ 101-103.

Diligence and laches in securing relief, see ante, II, B.

Requisites of decree setting aside fraudulent transfer in bankruptcy, see Bankruptcy ¶ 64.

Parties entitled to appeal from decree, see Appeal § 61.

Finality of decision under the Bulk Sales Act, to operate as res adjudicata, see Former Adjudication ¶ 97.

Sufficiency of decree that fraudulent grantee satisfy all creditors on suit by representative to annul transfer, see Estates of Decedents ¶ 323.

Necessity for saving questions for review, see Saving Questions.

¶ 632. A bill of a judgment creditor and in aid of execution set out that the judgment debtor had caused certain land to be conveyed to himself and wife in fraud of creditors, and that the consideration therefor, or at least one-half the consideration, was paid by the judgment debtor. Held, the bill would not support a decree of sale of all the land, but only of the debtor's undivided half.—St. Louis Hoop & Stave Co. v. Danforth, 160 Mich. 226.

¶ 633. A bill in aid of execution was filed against land which had been sold in contemplation of the issue of the execution. The land included a homestead, and the purchaser redeemed it from a mortgage against the judgment debtor. Held, that the redemption raised an equity in the purchaser's favor, but as it benefited the homestead as well as the rest, the amount of land subject to sale on execution was what was left after setting apart the homestead parcel and so much besides as was found on appraisal of the whole to be worth that proportion of the redemption money which was paid to release the homestead. Interest on the mortgage was not allowed where it did not clearly appear that the purchaser had not paid it, and it was shown that he had the use of the land long enough to counterbalance his claim therefor.—Rhead v. Hounson, 46 Mich. 243.

¶ 634. A decree for complainant in a bill in aid of execution was not disturbed where it appeared that the debtor regarded the claim as inequitable, and that the conveyance in question was to the debtor's brother, and that no money passed as an outstanding mortgage was assumed and another was given back for the balance of the purchase price, and that the latter was never recorded, and that the papers were drawn by a brother-in-law, and the grantor soon left the county. —Noble v. Laidlaw, 136 Mich. 680.

§ 138. Receivership or other ancillary relief.

General grounds for receivership, see Receivers, I.

Procedure for appointment of ancillary or pendente lite receivers and sufficiency of main pleadings to support appointment, see Receivers, II, A.

¶ 635. Where a sale of a stock of goods has been made by a debtor without complying with the Bulk Sales Law, Act No. 223, Pub. Acts, 1905, his creditor may proceed against him in accordance with sections 10601 and 10632, Comp. Laws 1897, without the intervention of a court of equity, and no receiver need be appointed.—Musselman Grocer Co. v. Kidd, Dater & Price Co., 151 Mich. 478, affirmed in 217 U. S. 461, 54 L. ed. 839, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 606.

¶ 636. Equity has jurisdiction on petition of a creditor of a vendor to appoint a receiver to take possession of a stock sold in violation of the Bulk Sales Act (Act No. 223, Pub. Acts 1905, How. Ann. St., 2nd Ed., §§ 2612-2614), and to permit all other creditors, although their claims have not been reduced to judgment, to intervene.—Humiston, Keeling & Co. v. Yore, 181 Mich. 629; Coffey v. McGahey, 181 Mich. 225. (Ostrander, J., dissenting.)

¶ 637. A man fraudulently transferred his property to his son to anticipate the judgment in a suit pending against him. The son agreed, in the instrument of transfer, to pay his father's debts to certain bona fide creditors, and, while the action was still pending, executed mortgages to them therefor. After the verdict, but before the judgment, he executed other mortgages to brothers of defendant. Held, on a bill filed by the judgment creditor in aid of execution, that the property, relieved of the later mortgages, should be sold on execution and that if the proceeds were not sufficient to pay the judgment and the bona fide claims they should be applied ratably thereon.—Beam v. Bennett, 51 Mich. 148.

¶ 638. Prior liens paid in pursuance of fraudulent agreements stand upon the same basis as actual payments of the purchase price, in proceedings in aid of execution.—Morley Bros. v. Stringer, 133 Mich. 690.

¶ 639. Parties dealing so as to defraud creditors of a principal defendant, and having no preference by legal proceedings, cannot go behind judgments recovered against the principal defendant to inquire into the dates at which debts matured.—Cummings v. Fearey, 44 Mich. 39.

Statutes for "suppression of gaming," see Comp. L. 1915, chap. 148, § 7795 et seq.

¶ 1. A contract cannot be a gambling contract unless both parties concur in the illegal intent.—Gregory v. Wendell, 40 Mich. 432.

¶ 2. Comp. L. 1857, chap. 189, being How. St., § 9387, punishing as a common nuisance the running of horses for bets or rewards, excepting such as are "by special laws for that purpose expressly allowed," it was held that Comp. L. 1857, chap. 54; How. St., § 2306, authorizing agricultural societies to hold fairs and "distribute premiums for the most meritorious animals," did not operate to validate racing for premiums at a horse-fair and accordingly an agreement to pay a purse was invalid.—Bronson Agricultural & Breeders' Ass'n v. Ramsdell, 24 Mich. 441.

¶ 3. Furnishing money to another for betting purposes is a gambling transaction, and suit cannot be maintained for the winnings.—Helber v. Schantz, 109 Mich. 669.

¶ 4. A contract by which a corporation in consideration of $80 paid in weekly instalments of $1.25 each, agrees to give the payor a diamond within three months after the last payment and if desired repurchase the diamond for $125, all payments made to be forfeited in case of default, is not void as a gambling contract.—Barney v. Tontine Surety Co., 131 Mich. 192.

¶ 5. A contract providing for weekly payments of $1.25 until $80 has been paid in, the payments made to be forfeited in case of default, and providing that the other party three months after the last payment is made shall deliver to the first party a diamond which if he so desires can be sold back to the second party for $120, is not within the definition of a gambling contract.—Rehberg v. Tontine Surety Co., 131 Mich. 135.

¶ 6. An agreement with the purchaser of goods by the seller whereby such goods might be secured by the purchaser by a drawing at less than the purchase price, held to be a gambling contract under Comp. Laws 1897, § 9931, How. 2nd Ed., § 14856.—La France v. Cullen, 196 Mich. 726.

§ 2. Dealings in futures.

Nature of dealings as jury question, see post § 7.

Brokerage agreements, see Brokerage.

¶ 7. An agreement for a sale for future delivery is a gambling contract, and as such not enforceable where the intention is that there shall be no actual sale, but only that at the time fixed for delivery the parties shall settle, and the purchaser pay or receive the difference between the agreed price and the market price at that time according as the market price is less or greater.—Gregory v. Wendell, 39 Mich. 337.

¶ 8. If one of the parties to a bargain of sale contemplates an actual sale, the transaction may be perfectly valid irrespective of any illegal purpose entertained by the other.—Gregory v. Wendell, 40 Mich. 432.

¶ 9. Under Comp. Laws 1897, §§ 11373, 11374, relating to brokers' contracts, the intention of the parties entering into the contracts is the controlling factor in determining their lawfulness, and contracts are only made void by said statute where there is no intention of receiving and paying for the property bought, or of delivering the property sold; and the absence of a bona fide intention of one side only will not serve to make void the contract with respect to the rights of the other party.—E. B. Cadwell & Co. v. Lean's Estate, 169 Mich. 117.

¶ 10. It is lawful to buy merchandise for future delivery even if at the time of purchase the seller has none to deliver.—Gregory v. Wendell, 39 Mich. 337; Gregory v. Wendell, 40 Mich. 432.

¶ 11. Defendant made an arrangement with plaintiff brokers at Detroit under which the latter were to buy and sell grain for him on the Board of Trade at Chicago. Plaintiffs made such purchases and sales through brokers at Chicago. The Chicago brokers charged a certain percentage for making the purchases and sales and assessed the charge irrespective of whether defendant lost or won by the transaction. Plaintiffs in turn assessed said charge against defendant and sued to recover for charges so accumulated. Under the contracts made in defendant's behalf by said brokers, defendant was entitled to call for the actual delivery of the grain, and all the evidence indicated that it was the intention of the parties to make sales of said character. Held, under Comp. Laws 1897, §§ 11374, 11375, relating to the duties of brokers, plaintiffs were entitled to recover.—E. B. Cadwell & Co. v. Lean's Estate, 169 Mich. 117.

¶ 12. Where a commercial "operation" is a purely gambling transaction, and understood to be so by both parties, neither can sue the other on it.—Gregory v. Wendell, 40 Mich. 432.

¶ 13. A guessing contest prior to a presidential election, under the terms of which the publisher of a periodical agrees to pay a certain sum to the one guessing nearest to the number of votes cast for the office of President of the United States and a certain other sum to the one giving the next nearest correct estimate, provided a certain sum was paid at the time of the making of the estimate for a subscription to the periodical, constituted a "lottery" within the prohibition of Comp. L. 1897, § 11344, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 14856, providing that every "person who shall set up or promote, within this state, any lottery or gift enterprise for money, or shall dispose of any property, real or personal, goods, chattels or merchandise, or valuable thing, by the way of lottery or gift enterprise" shall be subject to a certain punishment; and the winner of a prize cannot enforce payment.—Waite v. Press Pub. Ass'n, 155 Fed. 58.

§ 4. ——Action for recovery of stake or money.

Presumptions and evidence, see post § 6.
Jury questions, see post § 7.
Implied contract for money or property wagered, see Contracts § 96.
Statutory right of action for recovery from winner of stakes paid over, see Comp. L. 1915, § 7795.
Oath of defendant to discharge himself, see Comp. L. 1915, § 7797.

¶ 14. If the loser of money, deposited upon an unlawful wager, claim his money before it has been actually paid over by the holder, even though it be after the wager has been decided, the stakeholder is bound to return it to him, and is liable to an action therefor if he refuses.—Whitwell v. Carter, 4 Mich. 329.

¶ 15. Recovery of money lost by gambling, How. St. § 2023, which provides for the recovery of money lost "by playing or betting on cards or by any other device in the nature of such playing or betting," does not cover betting on the result of an election.—Lassen v. Karrer, 117 Mich. 512.

¶ 16. A slot machine, by the operation of which, if the dial stops in a certain position the player will win, and, if it does not, the owner will win, and by which, if the player wins, the money is delivered to him automatically by the machine, and, if he loses, the machine retains the coin deposited by him, constitutes a gambling device within Comp. Laws 1897, § 5929, How. 2nd Ed., § 5272, providing that any person that shall lose any sum of money or any goods or articles of value by the playing or betting on cards "or by any other device, in the nature of such playing or betting" and shall pay or deliver the same or any part thereof to the winner, the person so paying or delivering the same may sue for and recover such money.—Raymond v. Green, 194 Mich. 639.

¶ 18. The fact that an agent of a railroad company has embezzled funds which are used by him in gambling with a slot machine does not deprive him of the right to recover the sum lost under the provisions of Comp. Laws 1897, § 5929, How. 2nd Ed., § 5272.—Raymond v. Green, 194 Mich. 639.

§ 5. Effect of invalidity on collateral or substituted obligations.

Furnishing money for another to bet, see also ante ¶ 3.
Effect of illegality of contract, see Contracts, IV, D.
Right to recover money lent to make "corner," see Contracts ¶ 388.

¶ 19. "Margin" cannot be recovered back in case of a decrease in the price of the goods, where both vendor and purchaser contemplated a merely gambling contract; it cannot be recovered to the extent of the loss where both intended an actual sale; if the purchaser alone acted in good faith he can recover back whatever he has advanced.—Gregory v. Wendell, 39 Mich. 337.

¶ 20. "Dealing in options," though contrary to public policy to such an extent as to render negotiable paper based upon it invalid for want of consideration, is not "gaming" or "betting" as those terms are commonly understood, or within the meaning of Comp. L. 1871, § 1996, How. St., § 2027, which is of a penal nature and declares all notes, etc., in which any part of the consideration shall be for goods won by any betting or gaming, or for reimbursing moneys knowingly advanced for betting or gaming, shall be void as between the parties and all persons except bona fide holders without notice.—Shaw v. Clark, 49 Mich. 384.

¶ 21. One who lends or advances money to be used for the purpose of making a corner in wheat cannot recover it back by any legal measures.—Raymond v. Leavitt, 46 Mich. 447.

¶ 22. Act No. 336, Pub. Acts 1907, prohibiting gambling contracts, does not prevent a plaintiff who contracted in good faith with a defendant broker for the purchase of stocks, from recovering for the latter's failure to deliver same.—Goodspeed v. Smith, 162 Mich. 641.

¶ 23. Where money is loaned to a customer by the operator of a "hand-book business" for the purpose of betting at races and is repaid by the customer to an agent of the lender, the latter can be required to account for the money received, since the contract of agency, created upon receipt of the money, is not vitiated by the illegal contract between the principal and his customer.—Sheahan v. McClure, 199 Mich. 63.

¶ 24. The parties to an arrangement for speculating in options have the right as between themselves to settle their mutual dealings as they please; and a loan from one to the other, agreed upon by them in making such settlement, would not be affected by the nature of their previous operations.—Stanley v. Nye, 51 Mich. 232.

¶ 25. A defense to an action for failure to deliver a telegram, for the reason that such message was in furtherance of a gambling contract, and invalid under the statute (How. St., § 9354f) is not conclusive where the evidence is in dispute as to whether the plaintiff intended to actually buy the grain ordered, it being the rule that every contract for a future delivery of grain is not a gambling contract.—Carland v. Western Union Tel. Co., 118 Mich. 369.

§ 6. Presumptions and evidence.

General law of evidence, see Evidence.

Cross-examination to show that sale was a gambling contract, see Examination of Witnesses § 50, ¶ 291.

¶ 26. Suit under Comp. L. 1857, § 1582, How. St., § 2023, which autnorizes the loser of money by betting, "who shall pay and deliver the same" "to the winner," to "sue for and recover such money, in an action for money had and received." The parties had made a wager upon the result of an election, depositing their negotiable notes for the amount instead of money. When the result was determined the stakeholder delivered the notes to the winner—the defendant—who afterwards sold plaintiff's note at a discount. Plaintiff then brought assumpsit against defendant for money had and received, and on the trial produced his note as evidence that he had paid it. Held, that the production of the note was not sufficient evidence of its payment by plaintiff to authorize him to maintain the statutory action.—Buckley v. Saxe, 10 Mich. 328.

¶ 27. In an action to recover embezzled funds, which had been used in gambling, in a slot machine, from the proprietor where it appeared that the plaintiff, who was an agent of a railroad company, took a certain sum from the company during the period in question, and that during that time his salary was a specified sum, and he showed various expenditures for living and other purposes during the same period, and the amount deposited in the machine was arrived at by deducting the expenditures from the total sum, held that the evidence was sufficient to sustain the finding of the jury in favor of plaintiff.—Raymond v. Green, 194 Mich. 639.

Gambling nature as jury question, see also Contracts ¶ 1430.

¶ 28. In an action by a broker to recover for loss on a sale of wheat for future delivery, where there is a conflict of testimony as to whether the contract was a lawful contract, or unlawful under Comp. L. 1897, § 11373, making it unlawful to buy or sell stocks, etc., without the intention of receiving and paying for the property sold or delivering the property bought, the question becomes one for the jury and the appellate court will not disturb their judgment.—Donovan v. Daiber, 124 Mich. 49.

¶ 29. Whether a purchase of wheat for future delivery and on margins was a bona fide purchase or a mere gambling contract and prohibited by Comp. L. 1897, § 11373, was properly for the jury though it appeared that the purchaser had no use for the wheat and that none was delivered to him and that the brokers during the many years they had done business had never actually delivered any wheat to the customers who had dealt with them.—DeMary v. Burtenshaw's Estate, 131 Mich. 326.

¶ 30. Whether a plaintiff who contracts for the purchase of stocks and puts up the margins intends to make a binding contract or is merely gambling, contrary to Act No. 336, Pub. Acts 1907, is a question of fact for the jury.—Goodspeed v. Smith, 162 Mich. 641.

GARNISHMENT.

TREATS of the process by which a debtor or bailee of the principal defendant in an action is warned that the debt or the property supposed to be in his hands is attached for the satisfaction of the judgment recovered or sought against such principal defendant, and of the proceedings upon garnishment and the trial of issues raised by the garnishee. The equitable remedy in aid of execution or by ordinary creditors' suit is distinct and is treated in Creditors' Suits or in Fraudulent Conveyances. Garnishment before justices of the peace is treated in Justices of the Peace.

¶ 1. Garnishment proceedings are not in the ordinary course of law, as they involve consequences that could not otherwise arise at law or in equity.—Blake v. Hubbard, 45 Mich. 1.

¶ 2. Garnishment process is in the nature of an equitable attachment of assets belonging to a defendant but held by a third person, the purpose of the attachment being to apply such assets in discharge of defendant's debt.—Bethel v. Superior Court Judge, 57 Mich. 379.

¶ 3. The object of the garnishee law is to furnish reasonable facilities for reaching property of the debtor due him, or held for him by third persons.—Karp v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 76 Mich. 679.

¶ 4. Garnishment proceedings do not contemplate the enforcement of a lien upon the property and moneys garnisheed, but simply the application of the plaintiff's demand when that is established, and alternatively and contingently the personal liability of the garnishee.—Childs v. N. B. Carlstein Co., 76 Fed. 86.

¶ 5. A garnishment proceeding is a proceeding by which a third party is involuntarily drawn into litigation for which he is not responsible and in which he has no interest, the ultimate object being to compel him to pay a contractual indebtedness to another than a creditor to whom he owes the debt. It is a proceeding substantially in rem by which the garnishee defendant's indebtedness is impounded or taken into custody of court for the benefit of his creditor and he made an involuntary stakeholder, receiver, agent, or trustee of the court to hold the fund or res until it is determined in the litigation who is entitled to it, or he is otherwise relieved of his trust.—Katt v. Swartz, 199 Mich. 51.

§ 2. Ancillary nature of the proceeding.

Discontinuance of garnishment on failure of main case or for delay therein, see post §§ 97, 98.
Garnishment as remedy to reach shares for benefit of creditors of distributees, see Estates of Decedents § 382.

¶ 6. The service of a writ of garnishment is not the commencement of an action. Garnishment is ancillary to the action.—Milwaukee Bridge & Iron Works v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 73 Mich. 155.

¶ 7. Garnishment proceedings are special and ancillary, and jurisdiction to render judgment against the garnishee depends upon an observance of the statutory prerequisites.—Heritage v. Armstrong, 101 Mich. 85.

¶ 8. Garnishment is a special auxiliary remedy for the more effectual recovery of debts. The primary object of it is to reach the res in the hands of third persons against whom there is no foundation for a personal claim when the summons issues.—Newland v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 85 Mich. 151.

§ 3. Strictness of remedy; construction of statutes.

Statutory grounds as exclusive of others, see post § 4.

¶ 9. The act authorizing proceedings against garnishees being in derogation of the common law must be strictly construed.—Maynards v. Cornwell, 3 Mich. 309; Hanselman v. Kegel, 60 Mich. 540.

¶ 10. The remedy is purely statutory and artificial, and the mode of conducting it is regulated and defined by enactment.—People ex rel. Townsend v. Cass Circuit Judge, 39 Mich. 407; Smith v. Holland, 81 Mich. 471.

¶ 11. The proceedings under the garnishee statute are in derogation of the common law, and there is no authority for any action or prohibition of action outside of the statute.—Hanselman v. Kegel, 60 Mich. 540.

¶ 12. Garnishment proceedings are purely statutory, and for every step taken until jurisdiction is acquired authority must be found in the garnishment law.—Milwaukee Bridge & Iron Works v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 73 Mich. 155.

¶ 13. Garnishee proceedings must follow the statutes strictly, and cannot be extended beyond the plain letter thereof.—Kennedy v. McLellan, 76 Mich. 598.

¶ 14. Garnishee proceedings are harsh, and the statutes authorizing them must be strictly followed.—King v. Harrigan, 145 Mich. 436.

¶ 15. Garnishment proceedings are statutory and in derogation of the common-law, and the statute must be strictly followed to bind the principal defendant.—Crisp v. Fort Wayne & E. R. Co., 98 Mich. 648; Foster v. Kent Circuit Judge, 116 Mich. 285.

¶ 16. Garnishment proceedings are statutory, subject to strict construction, and not entitled to special favor, and no presumption can be raised in support of plaintiff's claim; and this is especially so where the object sought is within the scope of equity jurisdiction.—Folkerts v. Standish, 55 Mich. 463.

§ 4. Grounds, jurisdiction and conditions.

Jurisdictional requisites, see also ante ¶ 7.
Strict construction of the statutes, see ante § 3.
Necessity that there be an existing debt or obligation to the principal defendant, see post § 5.

¶ 17. The proceedings cannot be extended to cases not provided for by statute.—Sievers v. Woodburn Sarven Wheel Co., 43 Mich. 275; Ford v. Detroit Dry Dock Co., 50 Mich. 358.

¶ 18. Garnishment is a harsh and peculiar remedy and should not be resorted to without sufficient reason or when redress can be had at common law.—Weimeister v. Manville, 44 Mich. 408; Iron Cliffs Co. v. Labais, 52 Mich. 394.

¶ 19. The remedy is a harsh one and is supported by no such equitable considerations as appeal to the court to give it effect in doubtful cases.—Farwell v. Chambers, 62 Mich. 316.

§ 5. ——Existence or admission of indebtedness to principal defendant.

Contingent and immature claims and demands as subject of garnishment, see post § 24.
Debts not due wholly to principal debtor, see post §§ 28-30.
Necessity and sufficiency of averments in affidavit, see post §§ 39-42.
Sufficiency of evidence of existence of the debt and of ownership of it, see post § 80.
Liability to plaintiff as depending on state of claim when served, see post § 103.

¶ 20. No jurisdiction in garnishment attaches where the real parties interested, before either of the principal defendants had been notified of the proceedings, and before they themselves have been notified, have paid over the full amount due.—Hamilton v. Rogers, 67 Mich. 135.

¶ 21. Where a garnishee had delivered to a defendant a non-negotiable draft before a writ of garnishment had been served upon him, and the defendant had already transferred the draft to a bank for full value, there was no indebtedness on the part of the garnishee.—Patek v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 147 Mich. 377.

¶ 22. In order to find for the plaintiff in a garnishment proceeding it is essential that the fund garnished be owing to the principal defendant.—Robbins v. Vandermeiden, 182 Mich. 674.

¶ 23. Where by a tripartite agreement a stockholder who owes the corporation a $500 note is released and agrees to pay a $300 note the corporation owes a bank there is a novation, the stockholder is no longer a debtor of the corporation and cannot be garnisheed for its debts.—Clay Lumber Co. v. Harts Branch Coal Co., 174 Mich. 613.

¶ 24. Where a stockholder of a corporation is to be released from payment of a $500 note upon payment of $300 note given by the corporation to a bank and indorsed by the stockholder, the agreement is executory until the $300 note is paid, and the stockholder is liable in a garnishment suit to a creditor of the corporation on the $500 note in the same manner as he is to the corporation.—Clay Lumber Co. v. Harts Branch Coal Co., 174 Mich. 613.

¶ 25. One is not liable to garnishment where he is not individually indebted to the principal defendant, but is indebted to him merely as a member of a partnership.—Wellover v. Soule, 30 Mich. 481.

§ 6. ——Resort to or exhaustion of other remedies.

See also post ¶ 84.

¶ 26. No previous proceedings need be taken to exhaust other remedies before proceeding to garnish assets that are covered by an unrecorded mortgage made before the debt was incurred for which the mortgagee was garnished.—Crippen v. Jacobson, 56 Mich. 386.

§ 7. Actions, suits and judgments sustaining garnishment.

Debts and properties subject to garnishment, see post § 20 et seq.

Necessity that main action be commenced by service or otherwise, see also post § 38.
Necessity of judgment in main case before trial of garnishment issues, see post § 73.
Objections going to main case, process or judgment, see post § 91.
Discontinuance of garnishment on failure of main case, see post §§ 97-99.
Statutory enumeration of actions and judgments on which garnishment lies, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 1; Comp. L. 1915, § 13122.

¶ 27. To give jurisdiction for proceedings in garnishment, there must be service within the county upon either the person, property or credits of the principal defendant; taking out a summons without serving it is not enough. —People ex rel. McCloskey v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 26 Mich. 100.

¶ 28. Laws 1879, Act No. 256, did not authorize garnishment in suits begun by declarations (Act 1 of 1881, How. St., § 8058, permits it).—Weimeister v. Manville, 44 Mich. 408.

¶ 29. Laws 1879, Act No. 256 (How. St., § 8058), allowing process in garnishment to be issued after judgment "in all personal actions arising upon contract, express or implied, brought in the several circuit courts or municipal courts of civil jurisdiction," and on "any judgment or decree rendered in any of the several courts hereinbefore mentioned," is meant only to cover cases in which the process could not have been issued before judgment, and does not apply to transcribed judgments from justices' courts but only to judgments of courts whose jurisdiction is similar to that of circuit courts.—Weimeister v. Singer, 44 Mich. 406.

¶ 30. A judgment by default against a nonresident defendant will entitle the plaintiff to proceed against garnishees indebted to him, even though the notice of the garnishment proceedings was served upon the principal defendant outside of the jurisdiction (How. St. §§ 8087, 8106).—Moore v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 55 Mich. 84.

¶ 31. Under the statutes relating to garnishment, How. St., c. 277, § 8058 et seq. (as amended by How. St., p. 3751), a proceeding in garnishment to collect an amount due on a decree in equity may be maintained on the law side of the court.—United States ex rel. Mudsill Min. Co. v. Swan, 65 Fed. 647.

§ 8. Jurisdictional amount or subject of controversy.

Fraudulently transferred assets, see post § 16.

¶ 32. Garnishment process in the circuit court may be based on several non-negotiable contract claims held by assignment, and aggregating enough to bring the principal action within the jurisdiction of the court.—Crippen v. Jacobson, 56 Mich. 386.

¶ 33. The right given by Comp. L. 1871, § 6498 (How. St., § 8091) to assail titles and conveyances set up by garnishees as fraudulent as against creditors is confined to titles and conveyances of such property as the garnishees have in possession at the time of making the affidavit on which they are attacked.—Fearey v. Cummings, 41 Mich. 376.

§ 9. Proper county or venue.

Averments in affidavit for writ to another county, see post § 43.
Place for service to attach jurisdiction, see post § 49.
Venue of actions in general, see Venue.

¶ 34. When both plaintiff and the principal defendant are nonresidents of Michigan, suit may, under How. St., § 8087, be maintained in this state, and such defendant's credits may be subjected to the jurisdiction of our courts in the county where a debtor of his resides. The garnishment proceedings in such case must be taken in a county where the principal defendant has property or credits subject to garnishment.—Stern v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 105 Mich. 685.

¶ 35. The fact that the writ of garnishment was in the first instance issued against a resident of one county, and was afterwards discontinued, does not give the court jurisdiction over a resident of another county who was joined as a garnishee in an action between nonresidents.—Stern v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 105 Mich. 685.

¶ 36. The fact that a garnishee corporation may be a resident of another county than that in which the principal action is brought would not deprive the circuit court of the latter county of jurisdiction in the garnishment proceeding.—Nichol v. Nevers, 196 Mich. 203.

¶ 37. A garnishee served with summons in another county than that in which the principal action is brought who respects the writ and makes disclosure thereby submits to the jurisdiction of the court, if an act of submission is necessary, and cannot object on appeal to the jurisdiction.—Nichol v. Nevers, 196 Mich. 203.

§ 10. Who entitled to garnish.

¶ 38. The word "plaintiff," as used in How. St., § 8058, providing that, in all cases where there remains any sum unpaid upon any judgment or decree, a writ of garnishment may issue on the affidavit of the "plaintiff," his agent or attorney, refers to the party moving in the garnishment proceeding; and, therefore, a defendant who has recovered judgment against the plaintiff is entitled to sue out the writ.—Esler v. Kent Circuit Judge, 108 Mich. 543.

§ 11. ——Nonresidents.

Default judgments against nonresidents as basis for garnishment, see ante § 7.

¶ 39. Under How. St., § 8087, authorizing garnishment proceedings where the principal defendants are nonresidents permits such proceedings be instituted by plaintiffs who are also nonresidents.—Newland v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 85 Mich. 151.

II. PERSONS, CHOSES AND PROPERTY SUBJECT TO GARNISHMENT.

§ 12. Persons and corporations liable.

Municipal corporations and public officers, see post § 13.
Receivers, administrators and trustees, see post § 14.
Common carriers, see post § 15.
Fraudulent transferees having property or assets of debtor, see post § 16.

¶ 40. The right to hold a garnishee depends upon the state of the claim, as one garnishable or not, at the time of serving process.—Old Second Nat. Bank v. Williams, 112 Mich. 564.

¶ 41. Whether a corporation could be summoned as a garnishee under Comp. L. 1871, § 5290, quære.—Hewitt v. Wagar Lumber Co., 38 Mich. 701.

¶ 42. Prior to the enactment of Laws 1889, Act No. 266 a foreign corporation could not be garnished.—Milwaukee Bridge & Iron Works v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 73 Mich. 155.

¶ 43. A foreign corporation is not exempt from garnishment in Michigan where by the express terms of the garnishee law, any corporation, other than municipal, may be garnished, because exempt by the law of its home state; to hold otherwise would be putting a foreign corporation upon a better footing in this state than domestic corporations.—First Nat. Bank v. Burch, 80 Mich. 242.

Exemptions of levying officers and of public officers accountable for money, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 37; Comp. L. 1915, § 13158.

¶ 44. Garnishment proceedings are not allowed against municipal corporations. It is against public policy to allow the wages of persons in public employments to be reached by garnishment.—Marathon School Dist. No. 4 v. Gage, 39 Mich. 484.

¶ 45. Act No. 257, Pub. Acts 1899, providing that "all corporations of whatsoever nature, whether foreign, domestic, municipal or otherwise, except counties, may be proceeded against as garnishees in the same manner and with like effect as individuals under the provisions of this act," etc., authorizes garnishee proceedings against municipal corporations where the principal is an officer or employee of such municipality. (By a divided court, per Brooke; Grant, Hooker and Moore, JJ., concurring; Blair, C. J., Ostrander, Montgomery and McAlvay, JJ., dissenting.)—Dunkley v. City of Marquette, 157 Mich. 339.

¶ 47. While the payment of a liquor tax in instalments is unauthorized (How. St., § 2283c7), a county treasurer to whom such payments have been voluntarily made, and who has turned the same into the treasury, cannot be garnished at the suit of a creditor of the liquor dealer, since the latter could not himself maintain an action to recover the moneys.—Bay City Brewing Co. v. McDonell, 106 Mich. 172.

Right to garnishee assignor on ground that assignment for creditors is avoided, see also Bankruptcy ¶ 38.

¶ 48. Whether a receiver appointed after the dissolution of a corporation can be held on garnishment for the dividend of one of three joint claimants will depend upon the proofs showing or failing to show a separable claim.—Van Bianchi v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 124 Mich. 462.

¶ 49. A receiver appointed in proceedings for the dissolution of a corporation Comp. L. 1897, chap. 300, is subject to garnishment. —Van Bianchi v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 124 Mich. 462.

¶ 50. A member of an insolvent mutual benefit association incorporated in Indiana will not be allowed to subject, through garnishment proceedings instituted after the appointment of a receiver in Indiana, though before the appointment of an ancillary receiver here, the society's property in Michigan to a judgment upon a certificate that matured after insolvency proceedings were begun, but before a receiver was actually appointed; the title vests in the domiciliary receiver and as of the time of commencing receivership suit.—Wheeler v. Dime Sav. Bank, 116 Mich. 271.

¶ 51. A register in chancery with whom money has been deposited by a receiver under order of court cannot be garnished on account thereof, even though the proceedings under which the money was paid have been determined.—Voorhees v. Sessions, 34 Mich. 99.

¶ 52. An administrator cannot be garnished.—White v. Ledyard, 48 Mich. 264.

¶ 53. Administrators and executors are, as a general rule, exempt from process of garnishment.—Hudson v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 114 Mich. 116.

¶ 54. Although an administrator cannot be garnished he may be made a party to a bill in equity to subject assets in his hands to the payment of debts due from heirs of the estate.—Earle v. Kent Circuit Judge, 92 Mich. 285.

¶ 55. Possession of property under a valid common-law assignment for the benefit of creditors does not give the creditors the right to garnish the assignee.—Cook v. Rogers, 31 Mich. 391.

¶ 56. Garnishment proceedings cannot be sustained against a judgment debtor where it appears that the judgment, prior to the institution of the suit, had been assigned by the principal defendant to a third party in trust for certain of his creditors, unless it is established that the assignment was fraudulently made.—Blumenthal v. Simons, 110 Mich. 42.

¶ 57. It is a question whether a trustee is garnishable where the principal debtor no longer controls the property in the trust.—Keppel v. Moore, 66 Mich. 292.

§ 15. Common carriers and bailees.

To whom carrier is bound to deliver goods, see Carriers, II, C, D.

Property in carrier's possession under bills of lading, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 8197, 8206.

¶ 58. A common carrier cannot be charged as a garnishee for goods consigned to defendant, when it does not know whether they belong to defendant or not.—Walker v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 49 Mich. 446.

§ 16. Fraudulent transferees and bulk sale buyers.

Assignees for creditors holding assets, see ante § 14.

Burden of proof of fraud, see post § 78.

Evidence of the fraud, see post §§ 79, 80; and see Fraudulent Conveyances, I, V.

Court and jury questions as to fraudulency of transfer, see post § 82.

Instructions on fraudulency, see post § 84.

Suits to set aside and other remedies to reach fraudulently transferred assets, see Fraudulent Conveyances, V; Creditors' Suits.

Liability of transferee as garnishee independent of right of principal defendant to maintain action, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 32; Comp. L. 1915, § 13153.

Effect of service to bind transferees, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 2; Comp. L. 1915, § 13123.

¶ 59. Property conveyed in fraud of creditors may be reached by process of garnishment (Comp. L. 1871, § 6498, How. St., § 8091).—Fearey v. Cummings, 41 Mich. 376; Farrington v. Sexton, 43 Mich. 454; Cummings v. Fearey, 44 Mich. 39; Blake v. Hubbard, 45 Mich. 1.

¶ 60. Laws of 1889, Act No. 244, which amends How. St., §§ 8059, 8091, so as to enable creditors to reach the value of the principal defendant's property received and held under a conveyance or title void as to creditors, and which he has disposed of, applies to garnishment proceedings instituted after the act took effect, although the goods were received and disposed of prior to that date.—Heineman v. Schloss, 83 Mich. 153.

¶ 62. Where a creditor takes a deed and bill of sale purporting to convey to him absolutely all of his debtor's property, to whom he gives a secret defeasance, and, acting under such deed and bill of sale as absolute owner, takes possession of the property, the value of which is largely in excess of his debt, and, after being summoned as garnishee of his debtor, sells the property as his own, and on the trial of the statutory issue refuses to state the value of the property, or what he sold it for, the transaction is a fraud upon the other creditors, and he is chargeable as garnishee for property and effects in his hands or under his control belonging to the principal defendant.—Meigs v. Weller, 90 Mich. 629.

¶ 63. Where garnishees had taken chattel and real estate mortgages upon property of the principal defendant and kept them from record, and during the time they were so kept from record, plaintiff extended credit to the principal defendant, and where thereafter the principal defendant, the mortgagee in the chattel mortgage and a prospective purchaser got together and "taking the mortgage into consideration," managed a sale, the garnishees releasing the mortgage, and where the record showed that the proceeds of such sale received by the garnishees were in fact the proceeds of such mortgage; the transaction was within How. St., § 8091, providing that if any person garnished shall have received and disposed of property of the principal defendant which is held by conveyance or title that is void as to his creditors, he may be adjudged liable as garnishee on account of such property.—Baker v. Parkhurst, 119 Mich. 542.

¶ 64. A creditor of a vendor may garnishee the vendee where the latter fails to comply with the Bulk Sales Statute (No. 223, Pub. Acts 1905).—National Grocer Co. v. Plotler, 167 Mich. 626.

¶ 65. Under How. St., § 8091, providing that if any person garnisheed shall have in his possession any of the property of the principal defendant, which he holds by a conveyance or title that is void as to creditors, or if any person garnisheed shall have received and disposed of any of the property of the principal defendant which is held by a conveyance or title that is void as to creditors of the defendant, he may be adjudged liable as a garnishee on account of such property and for the value thereof, a creditor, by and through the agency of a garnishment proceeding, may reach and subject to the payment of his judgment against the principal debtor property or the proceeds thereof which the garnishee may hold by conveyance or title that is fraudulent as to creditors of such debtor, and the effect of such statute is not to enlarge the liability of the garnishees but to render them liable at law in all cases where they could be reached in equity.—Treusch v. Ottenburg, 54 Fed. 867.

Foreign corporations, see ante § 12.
Sufficiency of service to give jurisdiction, see post § 49 et seq.
Sufficiency of notice or service on resident garnishee to give jurisdiction of debt owing to nonresident, see post § 54.
Sufficiency of evidence of nonresidence, see post § 80.
Inapplicability of statute relating to examination of garnishee, see post ¶ 197.

¶ 66. How. St., § 8087, providing for garnishment proceedings in cases where the principal defendant is a nonresident, does not apply to a case where there are several defendants some of whom are residents, and who are personally served with process within the jurisdiction.—Wilson v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 82 Mich. 169.

¶ 67. Michigan courts may by garnishment acquire jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant in order to subject a debt due to him from a citizen of the state to the payment of plaintiff's demand.—Serviss v. Washtenaw Circuit Judge, 116 Mich. 101.

§ 18. Joining garnishees.

Joining mortgagees as garnishees, see post § 19.
Garnishment of two insurers under common name, see post ¶ 268.
Necessity of serving all joint garnishees or debtors, see post § 50.
Impropriety of garnishment of debt belonging to several parties, see post §§ 28, 29.
Statutory provisions for joinder, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 33; Comp. L. 1915, § 13154.

¶ 68. Several persons cannot be held as joint garnishees unless their liability is joint, and this is so whether the garnishment proceeding is based upon a debt or upon the possession of property.—Ball v. Young, 52 Mich. 476; Lyon v. Ballentine, 63 Mich. 97.

§ 19. ——Joint proceeding against mortgagees.

¶ 68a. Where an agent for the collection of a debt that is secured by mortgage takes possession of the mortgaged property, he cannot be held with the creditor as a joint garnishee in a proceeding in which the debtor is principal defendant.—Ball v. Young, 52 Mich. 476.

¶ 69. A joint action of garnishment against the mortgagees may be maintained by parties who hold separate and distinct chattel mortgages which were executed and filed at the same time and where the mortgagors had acted jointly in taking possession of the property.—Black v. Dawson, 82 Mich. 485.

§ 20. Garnishable debts and properties.

State of the claim at time of service as test, see also ante § 12.
Debts paid before service of the writ, see also ante ¶ 20.
Present state of the debt as measure of liability to plaintiff, see post § 103.
Effect of prior assignment or novation, see post § 108.
Money or property acquired by tort, see post § 21.
Foreign debts and obligations, see post § 22.

Immature, contingent and accountable demands, see post §§ 23, 24.
Property held as security or under mortgage, see post §§ 25, 26.
Earnest money or conditional payments, see post § 27.
Debts due in part to third persons or affected with equities, see post §§ 28-31.
Negotiable paper, bank deposits and insurance, see post §§ 33-35.
Certificates of stock, see post § 36.
Verdicts and judgments, see post § 37.
Exemptions, see post § 32.
Descriptive averments of debt in affidavit, see post § 40.
Properties and choses bound by service of the writ, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 2; Comp. L. 1915, § 13123.

¶ 70. A claim is not subject to garnishment unless the creditor can maintain an action at law for the same if due, or when it becomes due.—Farwell v. Chambers, 62 Mich. 316.

¶ 71. An item of indebtedness arising out of an admitted mistake in bookkeeping, which constitutes a present legal demand in favor of the creditor, may be reached by garnishment.—Gumberg v. Treusch, 110 Mich. 451.

§ 21. ——Money or property acquired by tort.

¶ 72. Moneys in the possession of a jailer, wrongfully taken from the person of a prisoner, are not subject to garnishment against such prisoner.—Hubbard v. Garner, 115 Mich. 406.

§ 22. ——Foreign debts and obligations.

Moneys in hands of ancillary receiver of foreign corporation, see ante ¶ 50.
Exemptions following the debt, see post ¶ 101.
Of foreign debt by foreign parties, jurisdiction of action, see also Courts § 46.

¶ 73. By a contract made in New Mexico between residents of that territory and a resident of Michigan, the latter was to make certain payments at an ascertainable date at a bank in the territory and was thereupon to receive deeds for property sold. Held, that as a payment in Michigan to third persons would not fulfil the agreement, and would not entitle him to performance, such resident of Michigan is not liable as a garnishee in the courts of this state.—Hamilton v. Rogers, 67 Mich. 135.

§ 23. Debts not yet due.

See also ante ¶ 70.
Subsequent debts, see post ¶ 329.
Nonliability on demands not existing when served, see post § 105.
Necessary averments of affidavit as to maturity of debt, see post § 40.

¶ 74. A tenant is not garnishable for rent payable in the future and not absolutely due at the time of garnishment.—Thorp v. Preston, 42 Mich. 511.

¶ 75. The purchaser of a flock of sheep cannot be garnished as a debtor of the vendor until the flock has been delivered, unless some payment has been made or credit given, and something passed by way of earnest.—Case v. Dewey, 55 Mich. 116.

§ 24. Contingent, uncertain or accountable demands.

Shares payable on dissolution of corporation, see ante ¶ 48.
Debts due in part to several persons, see post §§ 28-30.
Negotiable paper and bank deposits, see post §§ 33, 34.
Allowance of offsets and credits to garnishee, see post § 106.

¶ 76. Garnishment process cannot reach sums that will not come due until the performance of a contract at some future time; and claims for the payment of such moneys are not "contingent" within the reason of Laws 1879, Act No. 256 (How. St., § 8058), which permits contingent claims to be garnished.—Webber v. Bolte, 51 Mich. 113; Kiely v. Bertrand, 67 Mich. 332.

¶ 77. Comp. L. 1871, § 6503, subd. 3 (since amended by L. 1879, Act No. 256, see How. St., § 8096), in providing that demands to become due, absolutely, may be garnished, referred only to claims which were already fixed in amount or capable of being fixed, and not dependent for their validity or amount on anything to be done or earned in the future, or the continued liability for which might be changed by events.—Thorp v. Preston, 42 Mich. 511.

¶ 78. Garnishment does not lie upon an unperformed executory logging contract upon which nothing is due when writ issues and under which owner of logs may retain part of price until logs are put afloat and may apply final payment upon labor claims, that would become liens.—Kiely v. Bertrand, 67 Mich. 332.

¶ 79. One cannot be garnished for an indebtedness that he owes to a firm in which he and the principal defendants are copartners, and that is, therefore, subject to an accounting and settlement of the firm business.—Farwell v. Chambers, 62 Mich. 316.

§ 25. Property or money held as security.

Deposits with secretary of state by itinerant vendors, see Comp. L. 1915, § 6999.

¶ 80. Garnishment process will not reach property transferred absolutely and in good faith by a public officer to a surety on his official bond to enable the latter to secure his own and his principal's liability.—Spear v. Rood, 51 Mich. 140.

¶ 81. A bank which held property as security for a debt, was not required to relinquish its security and could not be charged as gar-nishee until its debt was paid.—Gregg v. First Nat. Bank of Durand, 135 Mich. 285.

§ 26. ——Mortgaged property.

Joining several mortgagees as garnishees, see ante § 19.

Extent of mortgagee's liability, see post § 107.

Evidence as to possession at time of service, see post § 79.

Garnishment of chattels subject to chattel mortgage lien, see also Chattel Mortgages § 77.

¶ 82. The possession of a mortgagee of chattels cannot ordinarily be disturbed by garnishment process for the sake of reaching a surplus after the lien is satisfied; and the receiver provided for by How. St., § 8065 can, at most, exercise no greater power over such chattels than a sheriff could in levying execution.—Smith v. Menominee Circuit Judge, 53 Mich. 560.

¶ 83. Garnishment process cannot affect the contract rights of mortgagees, and cannot reach goods mortgaged by the principal defendant but in the mortgagee's possession.—Daggett v. McClintock, 56 Mich. 51.

¶ 84. Garnishment process will reach assets that are covered by an unrecorded mortgage made before the debt was incurred for which the mortgagee is garnished. And no previous proceedings need be taken to exhaust other remedies.—Crippen v. Jacobson, 56 Mich. 386.

¶ 85. Chattels were seized and in the sheriff's hands for the foreclosure of two mortgages upon them to secure three different firms and separate debts. The mortgagees were garnished by creditors of the mortgagor. They never had any actual possession and none bore any liability towards the mortgagor at the time. Held, that they could not be held as garnishees.—Lyon v. Ballentine, 63 Mich. 97.

¶ 86. Where the garnishee had taken the principal's goods in payment of a debt and was therefore not accountable for them, he is not garnishable for their value over his debt though he also held a chattel mortgage on them; since his right was not derived under the mortgage.—Crusoe Bros. Co. v. Kudner, 136 Mich. 583.

¶ 87. Where a mortgagee of chattels has replevied the mortgaged goods he cannot repudiate the ownership thus asserted in proceedings against him as garnishee.—Cummings v. Fearey, 44 Mich. 39.

§ 27. Earnest money or conditional payments.

See also ante ¶ 75.

¶ 88. Earnest money put up to bind a contract for the sale of a homestead was not subject to garnishment for a debt of the husband, where the wife refused to join in the deed.—H. Stern, Jr., & Bros. Co. v. Wing, 135 Mich. 331.

§ 28. Debts due in part to third persons.

Joint and several demands, see post § 29.

Demands belonging to one of several defendants, see post § 30.

Debts owing to firm of which defendant is a partner, see also ante ¶ 25.

¶ 89. A demand due in part only to the principal defendant cannot be reached by garnishment.—Kennedy v. McLellan, 76 Mich. 598; Markham v. Gehan, 42 Mich. 74.

¶ 90. The garnishment law does not contemplate proceedings to determine the relative rights of several joint defandants where some of them might be entitled to contribution from the others for an excess of property taken beyond their shares.—Ford v. Detroit Dry Dock Co., 50 Mich. 358.

§ 29. ——Joint and several demands.

Joining garnishees, see ante § 18.

¶ 91. Where insurance policies payable to A. and B. jointly are held by C. as collateral security from A., they cannot be subjected to garnishment for B.'s debt without making A. a party to the proceedings.—Kennedy v. McLellan, 76 Mich. 598.

¶ 92. A demand due to two parties jointly could not be garnished in a suit against one of such parties alone.—Stone v. Dowling, 119 Mich. 476.

¶ 93. A demand due to a partnership, could not be garnished in a suit against one of the partners alone.—Stone v. Dowling, 119 Mich. 476.

¶ 94. Where a suit is brought against a principal defendant and a garnishee defendant, and another person is joint owner with the principal defendant of the debt due from the garnishee defendant, the garnishment proceedings must fail.—Nachtegall v. Reilley, 165 Mich. 347.

§ 30. ——Demands belonging to one of several defendants.

Demands belonging in part to persons not joined as parties, see ante §§ 28, 29.

Effect of dismissal of infant member of firm sued as principal defendant, see post ¶ 301.

¶ 95. Garnishees cannot be held in a suit against joint defendants if their disclosure shows an indebtedness to only a part of the defendants.—Ford v. Detroit Dry Dock Co., 50 Mich. 358.

¶ 96. As to the effect of the amendment to How. St., § 8058, by Laws 1885, Act No. 128, on the rule that garnishment as a debtor of two defendants is bad if the debt is to only one, quaere.—Farwell v. Chambers, 62 Mich. 316.

¶ 97. An indebtedness due to one of several defendants is, under § 10600, Comp. Laws 1897, § 13436, How. St., 2nd Ed., subject to garnishment in an action against all of them.—Roof v. Blake, 187 Mich. 38.

§ 31. Equities and trust interests.

Funds in hands of receivers, see ante § 14.
Immunity or liability of trustee to garnishment, see ante § 14.
Property in hands of fraudulent transferees, see ante § 16.
Creditors' suits to reach equitable assets, see Creditors' Suits.

¶ 98. Garnishment proceedings will not avail to reach a trust of the vendor's equity in a land contract where several years prior to the sale the land had been placed in the hands of a trustee who had made the sale and subsequently assigned his cestui's interest as vendor to the garnishee to secure a loan and subsequent to that the garnishee had supplanted the original trustee; such an interest must be reached by bill in equity.—Peninsular Savings Bank v. Union Trust Co., 127 Mich. 355.

¶ 99. Whether under the garnishment laws it was meant to permit the creditor to reach demands to which the debtor had no equitable right, though retaining the legal title, quære.—Kane v. Clough, 86 Mich. 436.

§ 32. Exempted debts or property.

Who entitled to object, see post § 92.
Right of principal defendant to intervene to urge exemptions, see post ¶ 357.
Persons entitled to exemptions and exemptions in general, see Exemptions, I.
Statutory exemption of wages due and owing, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 37; Comp. L. 1915, § 13158.
Claims under Employers' Liability Act, see Comp. L. 1915, § 5451.

¶ 100. Property exempt from execution cannot be reached with garnishment process.—Wilson v. Bartholomew, 45 Mich. 41.

¶ 101. An exemption follows the debt into another jurisdiction where the debtor himself has not been personally subjected to such jurisdiction.—Drake v. L. S. & M. S. R. Co., 69 Mich. 168.

§ 33. Negotiable instruments and money represented thereby.

Bank deposits, see post § 34.
As to non-negotiable instrument, see also ante ¶ 21.
Liability of the garnishee to plaintiff, see also post ¶ 325.
Rights and liabilities on negotiable paper, see Negotiable Instruments.

¶ 102. Negotiable paper not overdue is not liable to be reached by garnishee process against the maker.—Littlefield v. Hodge, 6 Mich. 326.

¶ 103. A promissory note may be garnished after maturity.—Somers v. Losey, 48 Mich. 294.

¶ 104. A promissory note past due is subject to garnishment.—Serviss v. Washtenaw Circuit Judge, 116 Mich. 101.

¶ 105. A draft purchased by a firm of liquor dealers, and made payable to the treasurer of the proper county, and delivered to a third person for delivery to the payee in payment of their liquor tax, is held subject to garnishment at the suit of their creditors while in the hands of such third person.—Elser v. Rommel, 98 Mich. 74.

¶ 106. Money represented by a draft payable to and received by a garnishee in return for a check which he has forwarded to a bank upon request of the defendant is subject to garnishment.—Weaver v. Irons, 129 Mich. 368.

§ 34. Bank deposits.

Bills, checks and notes, see ante § 33.
Sufficiency of affidavit, see post ¶ 122.
Sufficiency of evidence of right to deposits, see post § 80; and see also Banking, II.
Ownership as jury question, see post § 82.
Rights and liabilities between banker and depositor, see Banking, II-V.

¶ 107. Where a bank and its depositor have agreed that he shall maintain a balance of $1,000 to cover liability on account of drafts credited to him, but which, if returned, are to be charged back, it cannot be charged as his garnishee for a credit, at the time of garnishment, of less than $1,000, which is more than offset by drafts afterwards returned.—Rice v. Third Nat. Bank, 97 Mich. 414.

¶ 108. The garnishee bank would be liable, under How. St. § 8059, for moneys belonging to the principal defendant, a corporation, paid to it without authority as interest upon the individual debt of the defendant's president, if it received such moneys with knowledge that they were corporate funds.—Ferry v. Home Sav. Bank, 114 Mich. 321.

¶ 109. If a man with his wife's knowledge and consent mingles his own funds with hers in a bank, upon the understanding that the entire fund is to be treated as his, the whole is garnishable for his debt.—McIntyre v. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank, 115 Mich. 255.

§ 35. Claims under insurance policy or certificate.

Policies payable jointly, see ante § 29.
Exemptions of benefits payable by fraternal associations, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 256, chap. IV, § 21.

¶ 110. Under Comp. L. 1871, § 6508, subd. 3, a claim under an insurance policy was not garnishable if the company had the right to elect whether to pay for the property lost or replace it.—Martz v. Detroit Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 28 Mich. 201; Thorp v. Preston, 42 Mich. 511.

§ 36. Certificate of stock.

Attachment or levy of execution on corporate shares, see Corporations §§ 287, 288.

Garnishment of corporations, see ante § 12; and see Corporations § 197.

¶ 111. A certificate of stock in a corporation is subject to garnishment under How. St., § 7697, providing that such stock may be taken and sold on execution, and sections 8058, 8059, providing for charging a garnishee with the property, money, goods, chattels, and effects in his hands; since the cited statutes are broad enough to support that construction in the absence of any more express statute.—Old Second Nat. Bank v. Williams, 112 Mich. 564.

§ 37. Verdicts and judgments.

Sufficiency of affidavit, see post ¶ 123.

¶ 112. A recovery for libel does not furnish an indebtedness that can be garnished until judgment is entered on the verdict.—Detroit P. & T. Co. v. Reilly, 46 Mich. 459.

¶ 113. The statute authorizing writs of garnishment to issue "in all personal actions arising upon contract, express or implied," permits garnishment in an action upon a foreign judgment; such action is one upon contract.—Wattles v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 117 Mich. 662; Union Nat. Bank v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 117 Mich. 678.

III. AFFIDAVIT AND PROCEEDINGS FOR ISSUANCE OF WRIT.

§ 38. In general; commencement of action.

Proper action or judgment to form basis for garnishment, see ante § 7.

What constitutes commencement, see post ¶¶ 138, 139.

Averments of affidavit as to commencement or pendency of action, see post § 39.

Time for issuance of the writ relative to the commencement of the action, see post § 48.

Delay in perfecting service in main case as ground for discontinuance of garnishment, see post § 98.

Waiver of delay in completing service in main case, see post ¶ 308.

When action is deemed to be "commenced," see Actions § 6; Limitations, V.

Leave to garnish receivers, see Receivers, IV, C; and see also Creditors' Suits ¶ 133.

¶ 114. To give jurisdiction for the purpose of supporting proceedings against a garnishee some sort of service as to the principal defendant must be made within the county, either upon the person, or upon property or credits. Merely taking out a summons which is never served is not enough.—People ex rel. McCloskey v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 26 Mich. 100.

§ 39. Affidavit and application for writ.

Averments as to debt or demand owning, see post § 40.

Averments as to joint and several demands, see post § 41.

Averments against corporations, see post § 42.

Affidavits before justices, see Justices of the Peace, IV, C.

Matters relating to affidavits in general, see Affidavits; Oaths.

¶ 115. Under How. St., § 8058, the affidavit for garnishment need not state that a suit which it alleges to have been commenced by defendant against the principal defendant is still pending; such pendency being presumed from the fact of commencement.—State Sav. Bank v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 95 Mich. 100.

¶ 116. An affidavit for a writ of garnishment, made upon the same day with the commencement of the original suit, and reciting that the suit is "about to be commenced," is sufficient under How. St., § 8058, providing that the affidavit shall be filed "at the time of or after the commencement of suit," but not specifying the time for making it.—Millard v. Lenawee Circuit Judge, 107 Mich. 134.

¶ 117. It was error for the circuit court to quash a writ of garnishment and the proceedings thereunder because the affidavit for the writ embraced the allegation that the garnishee had property, goods, chattels, credits, or effects in his hands or under his control belonging to defendants, and further alleged that the garnishee was indebted to the defendants as partners; the fact that the garnishee may be indebted to the principal defendant and have property in his possession or under his control belonging to the principal defendant are matters which may be tried in one suit, the statute not requiring separate proceedings and separate affidavits to reach the property and indebtedness, and a judgment may be rendered conformable to the facts developed on the trial.—Peninsular Stove Co. v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 85 Mich. 400.

§ 40. ——Averments of contract and indebtedness.

Combining affidavits for debt and property in one, see ante ¶ 117.

Description in the writ, see post § 47.

Statutory contents of affidavit, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 1; Comp. L. 1915, § 13122.

¶ 118. Under the statute the affidavit must state whether the principal suit is on an express or implied contract, and must distinctly connect the garnishee's indebtedness sworn to with a suit or contract.—Weimeister v. Manville, 44 Mich. 408; Conway v. Ionia Circuit Judge, 46 Mich. 28.

¶ 119. An affidavit for a writ of garnishment which, while averring an action arising upon contract, does not show whether the contract is express or implied, and fails to aver an indebtedness upon such contract, is fatally defective.—Coe v. Hinkley, 109 Mich. 608.

¶ 120. The affidavit is not required by the statute (How. St., § 8058) to show that the debt upon which the principal action is brought is due at the time the garnishee proceedings are begun.—State Sav. Bank v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 95 Mich. 100.

¶ 121. A corporation cannot be garnished merely on evidence that the debtor has been doing a job for it and that its books indicate that a balance on the contract with him remains unpaid; it should also appear whether the balance has yet become an actual debt against the corporation, and if so whether the claim still belongs to the principal debtor or has been assigned to some other person.—Hewitt v. Wagar Lumber Co., 38 Mich. 701.

¶ 122. An affidavit in garnishment which states that the garnishee, a bank, has money, etc., under its control belonging to the principal defendant, is sufficient to charge the garnishee with money belonging to the principal defendant which such defendant, with intent to defraud a creditor, has withdrawn from deposit in his own name and has redeposited in a third person's name.—Connor v. Third Nat. Bank, 90 Mich. 328.

¶ 123. An affidavit is not contradictory because stating that the cause is a personal action, arising upon an implied contract, and also that it is upon a judgment rendered in a foreign court of record.—Union Nat. Bank v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 117 Mich. 678.

§ 41. ——Against joint or several garnishees.

Combining affidavits for garnishment of debts and property in one, see ante ¶ 117.

¶ 124. Under How. St., § 8092, one affidavit severally charging two or more defendants with being "severally liable" to the principal defendant may be filed for writs of garnishment against such persons; each then answers for himself and the issues are framed and tried thereon.—State Sav. Bank v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 95 Mich. 100.

§ 42. ——Against corporations.

Responsiveness of writ to affidavit, see post ¶ 134.

Pleading corporate existence in general, see Corporations §§ 189, 193.

¶ 125. No jurisdiction in garnishment is acquired where the affidavit merely names the "F. Insurance Company" but does not show that the company named as garnishee is a party amenable to the laws of this state; whether it is a corporation, domestic or foreign; whether it is located in this state or in another state or country; and whether it ever did business or had any legal existence.—Ettelsohn v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 64 Mich. 331.

§ 43. ——For writ to another county.

Proper county for garnishment proceedings, see ante § 9.

¶ 126. An affidavit for a writ of garnishment to another county than that in which the principal action is brought should specify whether the garnishee is a resident of such other county or a foreign corporation.—Nichol v. Nevers, 196 Mich. 203.

§ 44. Affidavits by agents and attorneys.

Sufficiency to support amendment, see post § 46.

¶ 127. The affidavit, when made by an agent or attorney, need not state affirmatively that the affiant is such agent or attorney. The statement by way of recital is sufficient.—Wetherwax v. Paine, 2 Mich. 555.

§ 45. Knowledge, beliefs and fears of affiant.

¶ 128. An affidavit for a writ of garnishment is defective if based upon the apprehension of any other person than the actual affiant.—Weimeister v. Manville, 44 Mich. 408.

¶ 129. An affidavit made by one of the plaintiffs in the original suit, in which affiant avers that plaintiffs are justly apprehensive of the loss of the debt unless the writ issue, is sufficient, his personal knowledge of that fact being presumed.—Williams v. International Grain Stock Board, 99 Mich. 80.

¶ 130. An affidavit in garnishment, made by an attorney stating that the plaintiff (not the affiant) is justly apprehensive of a loss of the debt unless a writ of garnishment issue is not sufficient to confer jurisdiction to issue the writ.—Duryea v. Raymond, 146 Mich. 488.

§ 46. Amendment of affidavit.

Amendment of return to writ, see post § 56.

¶ 131. Where, through a clerical error shown by the record the affidavit for garnishment was dated June 3, 1895, though in fact sworn to June 3, 1897, an amendment was properly allowed.—Wattles v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 117 Mich. 662.

¶ 132. And where the affidavit was erroneously dated April 11, the record showing that no suit was in fact commenced until April 12, an amendment should have been permitted.—Union Nat. Bank v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 117 Mich. 678.

¶ 133. An affidavit in garnishment, made by an attorney stating that the plaintiff (not the affiant) is justly apprehensive of a loss of the debt unless a writ of garnishment issue, not being sufficient to confer jurisdiction to issue the writ in the first place, is not amendable.—Duryea v. Raymond, 146 Mich. 488.

IV. THE WRIT, SERVICE, RETURN, AND NOTICES.

§ 47. The writ and its contents.

Sufficiency of the writ to make disclosure binding, see post § 63.
Effect of error in name of garnishee, see also post ¶ 279.
Time for issuance of the writ, see post § 48.
Service of the garnishment writ, see post §§ 49-53.
Notice to or service on principal defendants, see post § 54.
Return to the writ, see post § 56.
Receivership of the garnished property or debts, see post § 55.
Sufficiency of jurisdictional process in garnishment for purpose of binding garnishee, see also Courts ¶ 133.
Nature and requisites of the writ under the statute, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 1; Comp. L. 1915, § 13122.

¶ 134. The writ must describe a corporate garnishee, responsively to the affidavit, thereby showing it to be one amenable to the jurisdiction.—Ettelsohn v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 64 Mich. 331.

¶ 135. A writ of garnishment is not defective because the day of the week and the day of the month named as the return day thereof do not correspond; the day of the month controls.—State Sav. Bank v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 95 Mich. 100.

¶ 136. A defendant in garnishment cannot be held on the ground that he has property belonging to the principal defendant, when the process simply charges him with being indebted to the principal defendant, and vice versa.—Botsford v. Simmons, 32 Mich. 352.

§ 48. Time for issuance.

¶ 137. How. St. § 8058 authorizing a writ of garnishment to issue "at the time of or after the commencement of suit," refers to the filing of the declaration or other act entitling plaintiff to process.—McDonald v. Alanson Mfg. Co., 107 Mich. 10.

¶ 138. Filing the affidavit and issuing the writ of garnishment at the time of filing the declaration and entering a rule to plead is a sufficient compliance with Session Laws 1881, p. 1, relating to time for issuance of the writ.—Hurd v. Stone, How. N. P. 1.

¶ 139. Under How. St. § 8058, authorizing the issue of a writ of garnishment "at the time of or after the commencement of suit," suit is commenced when declaration is filed or other act done entitling plaintiff to process.—McDonald v. Alanson Mfg. Co., 107 Mich. 10.

§ 49. Service of writ or summons on garnishees.

On persons jointly liable, see post § 50.
On foreign corporations, see post § 51.
Copy for service, see post § 52.
Proper or qualified persons to make service, see post § 53.
Service of notice on the principal defendant, see post § 54.
Return to the writ, see post § 56.
Service of writ as commencement of liability to plaintiff, see post § 103.
Effect of service of the writ, see also ante ¶ 6.
Effect of service before existence of debt, see post § 90.
Effect of disclosure before proper service completed, see post § 63.
Service of writ from justice of the peace, see Justices of the Peace, IV, C.
General rules for service of original process, see Process, II.
Agents for service of corporations, see Process, II, B.
Service outside of county in other county, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 36; Comp. L. 1915, § 13157.

¶ 141. Where an affidavit in garnishment proceedings set up that the plaintiff was a resident of the county where the venue was laid and that the defendants were residents of another county, and the writ was served on the garnishee in the county of his residence, and on the other defendant outside the state, and no service of any kind made in the county of venue the service of the writ on the garnishee was insufficient to confer jurisdiction over him.—Fell v. Gorman, 144 Mich. 521.

§ 50. ——Persons jointly liable.

¶ 142. All persons jointly liable to the principal debtor on the claim must be summoned.—Wetherwax v. Paine, 2 Mich. 555.

¶ 143. Garnishment process cannot reach a joint debt where there is service on only one of the joint debtors.—Wetherwax v. Paine, 2 Mich. 555; Hirth v. Pfeifle, 42 Mich. 81.

¶ 144. The garnishee statute, if valid at all against non-residents, has no provision for reaching joint debtors when all of them are not notified.—Hamilton v. Rogers, 67 Mich. 135.

§ 51. ——On foreign corporations.

See also ante ¶ 140.

¶ 145. Laws 1873, Act No. 155, § 7, How. St. § 4368, Comp. L. 1897, § 10021), entitled "An act relative to the service of process upon insurance companies not incorporated under the laws of this state," which provides that "the word 'process' in this act shall include any writ, declaration, summons, order, or subpoena whereby any action, suit, or proceeding at law or in chancery shall be commenced against any such insurance company," etc., includes a summons in garnishment.—German-American Ins. Co. v. Chippewa Circuit Judge, 105 Mich. 566.

¶ 146. The mode of service of garnishee process upon foreign corporations is absolutely within the discretion of the legislature; and their right to do business in this state is dependent upon a compliance with How. St. § 8086, which authorizes such service to be made upon any officer or agent of the corporation found within this state, whether here upon corporate business or not.—First Nat. Bank v. Burch, 80 Mich. 242.

¶ 147. The provision of How. St. § 7086, that "in all cases of proceedings by garnishment against corporations, whether foreign or domestic, service of any process in the manner above provided for in case of foreign corporations [i. e., on any officer, member, clerk, or agent thereof within this state], shall have like force and effect as personal service upon natural persons," is by its title limited in its application to garnishment proceedings in which the original suit is commenced by attachment.—Kirby Carpenter Co. v. Trombley, 101 Mich. 447.

§ 52. ——Copy and sufficiency thereof.

¶ 148. The omission of the date of the issuance of a writ of garnishment from a copy served upon the garnishee and the want of the clerk's signature to such copy is not a fatal error where the garnishee is duly informed by the original that the writ had been issued and an examination of the original alone would have disclosed a mere mistake, and the garnishee defendant appears specially and moves that the writ be quashed.—Lyon v. Baldwin, 194 Mich. 118.

§ 53. ——Who may make service.

Powers and functions of sheriffs, constables and their deputies, see Sheriffs, II, V.

¶ 149. Whether or not the garnishment statute makes it necessary for a garnishee precept to be served by some officer commissioned to serve process, or by some person deputed to make the particular service, it is safer to intrust service to such persons.—Johnson v. Delbridge, 35 Mich. 436.

§ 54. Notice to or service on principal defendants.

Notices of trial of issues, see post § 72.
Notice of interpleader, see post ¶ 360.
Necessity of plea in addition to appearance by principal defendant in order to entitle him to notice, see post ¶ 204.
Manner and sufficiency of service of principal summons on principal defendant, see Process, II.
Propriety and sufficiency of substituted or constructive service on nonresident party, see Process, II, C.
Statutory provisions for service on nonresident principal defendants, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 29; Comp. L. 1915, § 13150.

¶ 150. A writ of attachment and garnishment, returned on the day of issue not served upon the principal defendant, cannot bind him.—Kraft v. Raths, 45 Mich. 20.

¶ 151. The joint debt of two nonresidents cannot be reached by garnishing their debtor in this state unless both are served with notice within the statutory period.—Landsberg v. Bullock, 79 Mich. 278. See Hamilton v. Rogers, 67 Mich. 135.

¶ 152. The validity of the substituted form of service on the principal defendant in garnishment proceedings, where he is a nonresident, provided by How. St. § 8087, does not depend upon the disclosure of the garnishee, although no judgment can be had in such case against the principal defendant unless some credits are found in the garnishee's hands; as the existence or nonexistence of such credits is the subject of inquiry under section 8068.—Serviss v. Washtenaw Circuit Judge, 116 Mich. 101.

¶ 153. In garnishment proceedings an objection to the judgment against the principal debtor, that in the copy of the declaration served the name of the county was omitted in the entitling, was held to be of no force.—Allen v. Hazen, 26 Mich. 142.

§ 55. Receivership of property or choses garnished.

Power of receiver of mortgaged chattels, see also ante ¶ 82.

Mandamus to vacate order for payment to receiver, see Mandamus, II.

Common law and chancery receivers, see Receivers.

Delivery of notes, bills and the like or other property to commissioner or other receiver, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, §§ 7, 8; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 13128, 13129.

¶ 154. A receiver, provided for by How. St. § 8065, has no more power to disturb a mortgagee in possession by garnishment process to reach a surplus after the lien is satisfied than a sheriff would have in levying an execution.—Smith v. Menominee Circuit Judge, 53 Mich. 560.

¶ 155. The receiver provided for in garnishment proceedings to take possession of chattels mortgaged by the principal debtor, but in the hands of the mortgagee (How. St. § 8065), may properly be empowered to examine and inventory the property for the purpose of an intelligent sale; but he must give bond, and all his proceedings must be at the expense of the fund realized on the sale, and not at that of the mortgagee. And no sale can be made unless more than the mortgage secures can be realized, and if made at all, it must be a sale in gross, subject to the mortgage lien, and not a sale in parcels.—Smith v. Menominee Circuit Judge, 53 Mich. 560.

§ 56. Return and amendments or further returns.

Effect of erroneous date in return, see post § 90.

Amendment of affidavit, see ante § 46.

Trial of issue of truth of return on motion to quash, see post ¶ 294.

Duty to return, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 1; Comp. L. 1915, § 13122.

¶ 156. Jurisdiction is not conferred on the court by a return to a writ of garnishment against a corporation which does not show that the person served was an officer of the company.—McCain v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 187 Mich. 73.

¶ 157. An amendment of the return of a service of a writ of garnishment will not be deemed to be a nullity because the amendment is, in form ordered by the court, and is not made by the officer, where the application for such amendment is based upon the affidavit of the officer.—Lyon v. Baldwin, 194 Mich. 118.

¶ 158. After a motion by a corporation to vacate its default and to set aside a judgment against it because the return to a writ of garnishment did not show service on an officer of the company, a motion by the plaintiff to amend the return so as to show a proper service, comes too late to cure the want of jurisdiction to render the judgment.—McCain v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 187 Mich. 73.

V. APPEARANCE, ANSWER OR DISCLOSURE, AND SPECIAL INTERROGATORIES.

§ 57. Appearances and making disclosure.

Dismissal on appearance and motion for that purpose, see post ¶ 277.

Default for nonappearance or disclosure, see post § 71.

Making disclosure before service on or appearance by principal defendant, see post ¶ 182.

Contents and sufficiency of disclosure, see post §§ 59, 60.

Necessity of making disclosure to take objection, see post § 95.

Appearance as waiver of defective service, see post § 93.

Appearance as waiver of time for trial, see post ¶ 211.

Appearances to actions in general, see Appearance.

Making disclosure as general appearance, see Appearance § 8, ¶ 31.

Plea in abatement by attorney and not in proper person as general appearance, see Appearance ¶ 20.

Appearance to main action, effect to admit validity of garnishment proceedings, see Appearance § 12, ¶ 56.

Appearance to challenge process or service of the garnishment, see Appearance § 9, ¶ 39.

Attorney appearing for defendant as attorney for garnishee, see Attorneys ¶ 58.

Time for disclosure specified in writ, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 1; Comp. L. 1915, § 13122.

Extension of time for further disclosure, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, §§ 3, 4; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 13124, 13125.

Time for disclosure in response to special interrogatories, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 4; Comp. L. 1915, § 13125.

Extension of time for disclosure by court commissioner or judge, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 6; Comp. L. 1915, § 13127.

Appearance to submit to examination, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 4; Comp. L. 1915, § 13125.

§ 58. Nature and function of disclosure.

Contents and sufficiency of disclosure, see post §§ 59, 60.

Completeness of disclosure as dispensing with trial of issues, see post § 72.

¶ 159. The disclosure of a garnishee is the answer of a party, and analogous in its functions to an answer in chancery; it does not stand upon the same footing as the testimony of a witness, and whatever it admits may be regarded as established.—Allen v. Hazen, 26 Mich. 142.

§ 59. Contents, construction, and sufficiency of disclosure.

Separate disclosures to affidavit against joint garnishees, see ante ¶ 124.

As to the debt or liability admitted or denied, see post § 60.

Objections and modes of completing or perfecting disclosure, see post § 66 et seq.

Amendments of disclosures and further or supplemental disclosures, see post §§ 67, 68.

Sufficiency of belated disclosure, see also post ¶ 339.

Clearness of disclosure requisite to judgment, see also post § 80.

As to matters not in affidavit, see also post ¶ 192.

Penalty for false disclosure or answer, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 40; Comp. L. 1915, § 13161.

¶ 160. The disclosure may state every fact within the garnishee's knowledge having any legitimate tendency to show that he should not be charged.—Drake v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 69 Mich. 168.

¶ 161. A garnishee's disclosure is to be taken altogether, and no part of it can be excluded merely for being made on information and belief.—Sexton v. Amos, 39 Mich. 695.

¶ 162. The purchaser of a flock of sheep was garnished as the vendor's debtor, and in his disclosure stated that on the day the summons was served the sheep were "delivered" to him and he helped drive them to the scales. But it also appeared that they were to be paid for by weight and had not been weighed when the summons was served. Held, that there had been no complete delivery and the purchaser was not therefore garnishable.—Case v. Dewey, 55 Mich. 116.

§ 60. ——As to debt or liability.

¶ 163. It is a garnishee's duty when he makes a disclosure to set forth the true condition of the liability.—Hirth v. Pfeifle, 42 Mich. 31; Hosley v. Scott, 59 Mich. 420.

¶ 164. A disclosure that does not show that a garnishee had or controlled any personal property belonging to the principal defendant, or was indebted to him, will not support a judgment against the garnishee.—People ex rel. Townsend v. Cass Circuit Judge, 39 Mich. 407.

¶ 165. Persons cannot be held as garnishees upon a disclosure which admits neither an indebtedness nor the possession of property belonging to the principal defendant.—Ball v. Young, 52 Mich. 476.

¶ 166. A disclosure admitting an indebtedness to the principal defendant of a stated sum unless the garnishees had become liable to other parties upon certain orders drawn on them by the principal defendant aggregating a certain larger sum is sufficient to enable plaintiff to demand a trial of the statutory issue thus framed under How. St., § 8068; and plaintiff is not required to file special interrogatories.—Hobson v. Kelly, 87 Mich. 187.

¶ 167. Judgment cannot be rendered against a garnishee, whether he appeared on the return day of summons or not, if his disclosure does not prima facie show a liability.—Hackley v. Kanitz, 39 Mich. 398.

¶ 168. A disclosure in garnishment setting out that the principal defendant had left with the garnishee a check payable to a third person and indorsed in blank, and that the garnishee had sent it to the bank and received a draft in return, is sufficient to make out a prima facie case for judgment against the garnishee.—Weaver v. Irons, 129 Mich. 368.

¶ 169. A garnishee cannot be held on a disclosure that he has nothing except a draft payable to the wife of the principal defendant.—Kraft v. Raths, 45 Mich. 20.

¶ 170. A garnishee's statement that he does not know whether he owes the principal defendant or some one else for certain work, and that the defendant told him he only wanted enough money to pay expenses, and that the rest was to go to another person, is not such a disclosure as will sustain a judgment against the garnishee.—Lyon v. Kneeland, 58 Mich. 570.

¶ 171. A railway company, being garnished, disclosed by its agent that as common carrier it had in its possession goods consigned to the principal defendant, but the agent did not know whether they belonged to such defendant and had no personal knowledge of his business or other consignments. Held insufficient to make the company liable as garnishee in a proceeding before a justice.—Custer v. White, 49 Mich. 262.

¶ 172. A disclosure which sets out the giving of a warranty deed of certain lands by the garnishee to the principal defendant for a consideration named, and the dispossession of the principal defendant by legal proceedings under paramount title, makes the garnishee liable for the amount of the consideration money; and the deed is sufficiently proved thereby.—Allen v. Hazen, 26 Mich. 142.

¶ 173. Under the statutes treating the affidavit as a declaration and the disclosure as a plea thereto, a disclosure in garnishment that garnishee received goods from the principal debtor in March is not an admission that he retained the goods at the end of July; and the burden remains on the plaintiff to show that the goods were in the garnishee's possession in July when the writ was served upon him. There was no presumption that the goods continued in the garnishee's possession four or five months after they were admitted to be in his possession.—Bethel v. Linn, 63 Mich. 464.

¶ 174. A garnishee is not charged by his admission that he has in his possession property which he had hired from the principal defendant, where he also states that a third person had since told him that he had bought it from the defendant.—Sexton v. Amos, 39 Mich. 695.

§ 61. Conclusiveness and effect of disclosure or admissions.

Evidence to impeach disclosure, see post § 79.
Taking disclosure as a whole, see also ante ¶ 161.
Effect of admissions, see also ante ¶ 159.
Admission in general terms overcome by specific averments in disclosure, see ante ¶¶ 162, 173, 174.

Construction and interpretation of the disclosure, see ante §§ 59, 60.
Construction of admission of debt at specific earlier time, see ante ¶ 173.
Disclosures by agents and corporate officers, see post § 62.
Disclosure under invalid or defective writ, see post § 63.
Effect of disclosure upon plaintiff or principal defendant, see post §§ 64, 65.
Answer to controvert disclosure and form issues for trial, see post § 75.
Scope of the issues for trial, see post § 77.
Power of garnishee to waive errors and defects in procedure, see also post § 93.
Payment into court with disclosure to obtain release, see post § 117.
Privilege against use of disclosure in prosecution for crime except perjury in the making thereof, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 27; Comp. L. 1915, § 13148.

¶ 175. The garnishee is not permitted to show errors and mistakes in his disclosure except by permission of the court.—Allen v. Hazen, 26 Mich. 142.

¶ 176. Where a garnishee discloses voluntarily that he has given a warranty deed to the principal defendant, and states the consideration therefor, any objection to this manner of proving the deed and consideration is waived by him; since his disclosure has the effect of an answer.—Allen v. Hazen, 26 Mich. 142.

¶ 177. A garnishee's disclosure cannot be made less conclusive by allowing a jury, upon the trial of an issue demanded by the garnishee, to consider inconclusive testimony as to what such garnishee had previously said in answer to unauthorized inquiries as to whether he had received possession of the principal defendant's property before or after the entry of the judgment against him.—Quinn v. Blanck, 55 Mich. 269.

¶ 178. On garnishment of a building owner as debtor of the principal defendant, contractor, a disclosure, that though the work is done nothing is due because it had not been accepted and no architect's certificate was issued and that money is owing for labor which may become a lien, may be controverted by proof that the contract has been fully performed and that the certificate has been waived or is improperly withheld; since that would show that the money is due from the garnishee.—McMillan v. Schneider, 147 Mich. 258.

§ 62. ——Disclosures by agents and corporate officers.

Sufficiency of disclosure aided by other evidence, see also post § 81.

¶ 179. A garnisheed bank is not bound by disclosures not made by its proper officers.—Karp v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 76 Mich. 679.

¶ 180. A disclosure made and filed by a recognized agent of a foreign corporation, after service of garnishee process under How. St., § 8086, admitting the liability of the principal, is binding upon the corporation.—First Nat. Bank v. Burch, 80 Mich. 242.

§ 63. ——Disclosure under defective or invalid writ.

¶ 181. The disclosure has no effect if no garnishee was described in the writ.—Ettelsohn v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 64 Mich. 331.

¶ 182. A disclosure in garnishment before jurisdiction of the principal case has been obtained is of no force, and the subsequent appearance of the principal defendant does not cure it.—Iron Cliffs Co. v. Lahais, 52 Mich. 394.

¶ 183. Where a bank is served with a writ of garnishment which is defective and is subsequently properly served, but in the meantime has paid out the money involved, it is not estopped by its disclosure from showing the exact condition of things at the time of the alleged defective service.—Dunn v. Detroit Sav. Bank, 118 Mich. 547.

Effect on principal defendant, see post § 65.

¶ 184. Where a garnishee in the circuit court makes disclosure denying plaintiff's claim, and then claims an issue under Comp. L. 1871, § 6475 (How. St., § 8068), the denial made in the disclosure is not conclusive on the plaintiff; but he is entitled to prove an indebtedness from the garnishee to the principal defendant, and even to show that it is collusive and intrinsically dishonest.—Fearey v. Cummings, 41 Mich. 376.

¶ 185. Disclosures by garnishees are not conclusive, the plaintiff having the right to an examination and trial upon which he may establish the garnishee's liability over their denial.—National City Bank v. Torrent, 130 Mich. 259.

¶ 186. A disclosure by a garnishee that he does not know whether or not a past due note executed by him to the principal defendant was still in the latter's hands at the time of service of process is not conclusive against his liability to plaintiff, since the statute (How. St., § 8068) provides for a trial of the issue framed by the affidavit and the disclosure.—Serviss v. Washtenaw Circuit Judge, 116 Mich. 101.

§ 65. ——Effect on principal defendant or third persons.

Effect on plaintiff, see ante § 64.

¶ 187. The garnishee may by his disclosure admit away his own rights, but he cannot thus admit away or prejudice the rights of others.—Hebel v. Amazon Ins. Co. of Cincinnati, 33 Mich. 400.

¶ 188. A garnishee cannot waive or admit away the rights of the principal defendant, as by disclosing that the debt was due to some other person.—Hirth v. Pfeifle, 42 Mich. 31.

¶ 189. The garnishee cannot waive the rights of third parties.—Tabor v. Van Vranken, 39 Mich. 793.

§ 66. Objections to disclosure; motion or demand for further disclosure.

Examination of garnishee, see post § 69.

Sufficiency of disclosure unless objected to within ten days, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 3; Comp. L. 1915, § 13124.

¶ 190. Where a garnishee's disclosure in the circuit court is not satisfactory, the only authorized course is to proceed under Comp. L. § 6467 (see How. St., § 8060) to obtain a further disclosure; otherwise the case must rest on the showing as first made.—People ex rel. Townsend v. Cass Circuit Judge, 39 Mich. 407.

¶ 191. The disclosure of a garnishee is deemed sufficient unless further inquiry is prosecuted as provided by the statute governing such proceedings.—Smith v. Holland, 81 Mich. 471.

¶ 192. Where the answer of a garnishee is full and explicit to the allegation in the affidavit on which the writ of garnishment issues, there is no room for an exception for insufficiency; nor can a disclosure be required concerning matters not alleged in the affidavit.—Mack v. Brown, 20 Mich. 335.

§ 67. Amendment of disclosure.

Further and supplemental disclosures, see post § 68.

¶ 193. It is within the power of the court to open a case and allow the amendment of a disclosure by a garnishee, at any time before judgment, upon due notice to the opposite party.—Dunn v. Detroit Sav. Bank, 118 Mich. 547.

§ 68. Further or supplemental disclosure.

¶ 194. A garnishee may make a further and supplemental disclosure.—Drake v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 69 Mich. 168.

¶ 195. A garnishee may make a supplemental disclosure on being summoned to show cause why judgment should not be rendered.—Allen v. Hamburg-Bremen Fire Ins. Co., 121 Mich. 86.

§ 69. Examination of garnishee.

Submission to examination as waiver of defects in process and service, see post ¶ 289.

Of foreign corporate garnishee, see post § 70.

Refusal to answer interrogatories as contempt, see Contempt § 8.

Service and filing of special interrogatories, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 4; Comp. L. 1915, § 13125.

Statutory provisions as to examination on demand, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 4; Comp. L. 1915, § 13125.

Examination respecting negotiable paper in garnishee's hands, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, §§ 24-26; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 13145-13147.

¶ 197. How. St., § 8061, providing that a garnishee shall submit to an examination upon a notice of not less than three nor more than ten days, cannot be construed to include nonresident garnishees, inasmuch as such construction would entail undue hardship upon nonresidents.—Raniville v. Kent Circuit Judge, 118 Mich. 196.

§ 70. ——Of foreign corporation garnishee.

Statutory provisions as to examination and testimony of agents and officers, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 4; Comp. L. 1915, § 13125.

¶ 198. How. St., § 8061, requiring a garnishee to appear before a circuit judge or circuit court commissioner and submit to a personal examination touching his liability as garnishee, does not apply to a foreign corporation when summoned as garnishee.—Shafer Iron Co. v. Iron Circuit Judge, 88 Mich. 464.

¶ 199. A circuit judge has no power to order any or all of the officers of a foreign corporation, against which garnishment proceedings are pending, to appear and bring before him the books and papers of the corporation, and submit to an examination on oath concerning its liability as such garnishee.—Shafer Iron Co. v. Iron Circuit Judge, 88 Mich. 464.

§ 71. Defaults.

Default in making further disclosure, see post ¶ 248.
Default by plaintiff as discontinuing garnishment, see post ¶ 298.
Sufficiency of affidavit of default, see also Defaults ¶ 36.
Nature of motion to set aside judgment by default against garnishee, see Defaults ¶ 125.
Opening default for want of showing that proper officer of corporate garnishee was served, see Defaults ¶ 89.
Time for application to vacate default, see also Defaults ¶¶ 122, 123.
Grounds for relief in equity against judgment founded on default, see Judgments, VI.
Mandamus to compel vacation of default, see Mandamus, II.
Defaulting garnishee for want of disclosure or examination, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 5; Comp. L. 1915, § 13126.
Provisions for default of foreign corporations on failing to answer or disclose, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 46; Comp. L. 1915, § 13167.
Necessity of taking default against principal defendant to prevent discontinuance of garnishment, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 45; Comp. L. 1915, § 13166.

¶ 200. After a garnished corporation puts in its answer it is not in default, and judgment cannot be rendered against it unless the answer discloses a liability.—Lorman v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 33 Mich. 65.

¶ 201. Notice of a garnishee's default after service or notice of assessment of damages is not required in order to enter judgment of default on motion.—Nichol v. Nevers, 196 Mich. 203.

¶ 202. Circuit Court Rule 12 providing that no default shall be set aside unless the application shall be made within six months after personal service, applies to judgments against garnishee defendants.—Caille Bros. Co. v. Saginaw Circuit Judge, 155 Mich. 480.

VI. TRIAL OF ISSUES, JUDGMENT AND EXECUTION.

§ 72. In general; demand for trial and notice.

Time and stage of action for trial, see post §§ 73, 74.
Formation and joinder of issues, see post §§ 75, 76.
Scope of the issues and inquiry, see post § 77.
Presumptions, burden of proof, admissibility and sufficiency of evidence on the trial, see post §§ 78-81.
Court and jury questions and instructions on the trial, see post §§ 82-84.
Verdicts, findings and judgment, see post §§ 85-88.
Executions, see post § 89.
Sufficiency of disclosure to support demand for trial of issues, see ante ¶ 166.
Examination of garnishee, see ante § 69.
Calendars for trial of causes and proceedings to place cause on trial calendar, see Calendar.
Before justices of the peace, see Justices of the Peace, IV, C.
Completion of issues for trial and demand for trial, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII. § 11; Comp. L. 1915, § 13132.

¶ 203. Where the only question raised under a disclosure in garnishment is whether the fund belongs to the principal defendant or to a third party claimant, a demand for the trial of the statutory issue under How. St., § 8068, is unnecessary as against the garnishee.—Muncey v. Sun Ins. Office, 109 Mich. 542.

¶ 204. Under the provisions of 1897, C. C. Rule 35, relating to notice of future proceedings in a cause where appearance has not been followed by "plea or demurrer," defendant having pleaded is not entitled to have the writ of garnishment dismissed because he has not been served in advance with notice of an intention to issue the same or of subsequent proceedings thereunder.—Ketcham v. Kent Circuit Judge, 115 Mich. 60.

§ 73. Time and stage for trial.

Time for entry of judgment, see post § 86.
Waiver of time for trial, see post § 74.
Time when garnishment issues shall stand for trial as dependent on stage of the main case, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 12; Comp. L. 1915, § 13133.
Time and stage for trial after affirmance of judgment against principal defendant, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 17; Comp. L. 1915, § 13138.
Notice by principal defendant of intention to move for new trial or to remove case on writ of error as requisite to prevent garnishment issues from coming on for trial, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII. § 13; Comp. L. 1915, § 13134.

¶ 205. A garnishee who has only disclosed claims of creditors held under assignment wherein he has no personal interest can be held only upon the trial of an issue; and such issue is not ripe for trial before judgment in the principal case.—Conway v. Ionia Circuit Judge, 46 Mich. 28.

¶ 206. A garnishee cannot be forced to trial within two days from the trial of the principal suit (How. St., § 8070); and if the principal defendant appeals, a judgment in garnishment, if rendered, can be stayed until the judgment appealed from is disposed of.—Crippin v. Jacobson, 56 Mich. 386.

¶ 207. Where the right to proceed to the trial of an issue against a garnishee depends on the state of the principal case, the court is at liberty to consider the record in that case without separate proof.—Farrington v. Sexton, 43 Mich. 454.

¶ 208. The trial of the statutory issue in garnishment proceedings should be postponed pending the appeal in the principal suit, although How. St. § 8070 providing that the statutory issue shall stand for trial unless the principal defendant shall within two days after judgment, serve upon the garnishee notice of a motion for new trial, or of his intention to remove the case to the supreme court was not complied with by the service of a notice; and though an appeal in the principal case was seasonably prosecuted, in view of section 8074 indicating that if the principal case is appealed the issue should not be tried until after the determination of the appeal.—Wattles v. Wayne Circuit Court, 119 Mich. 356.

§ 74. ——Waiver of time.

¶ 209. It seems that the issue in garnishment can be tried on the same day with the principal suit if the garnishee is willing; and if such trial is had without objection at the time it cannot afterwards be said to have been premature.—Crippen v. Jacobson, 56 Mich. 386.

¶ 210. A garnishee defendant waives the right secured to him by How. St. §§ 8069, 8070, to have the statutory issue tried at the same term at which judgment is rendered against the principal defendants, by noticing the case for trial for a subsequent term.—Cluett v. Rosenthal, 100 Mich. 193.

¶ 211. The garnishee defendant did not waive his right under the statute (Comp. L. 1897, § 10610) to 10 days after the filing of the oral examination in which to demand a trial of the cause, by appearing and arguing the case at the time the disclosure was filed; where both the disclosure and the oral examination deny liability, and the record merely shows that judgment was rendered after hearing the proof offered and the argument of counsel for the respective parties.—King v. Harrigan, 145 Mich. 436.

§ 75. Formation of issues; answer.

Function of disclosure, see also ante § 58.

Formation of issues on joint garnishment, see ante ¶ 124.

Affidavit for writ as statutory declaration, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 11; Comp. L. 1915, § 13132.

Statutory effect of disclosure to form issues, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 11; Comp. L. 1915, § 13132.

¶ 213. Garnishment proceedings do not become adversary until the plaintiff contests under the statute, the answer of the garnishee.—Barlow v. Lincoln-Williams Twist Drill Co., 186 Mich. 46.

§ 76. ——Bill of particulars.

Bills of particulars of pleadings in general, see Pleading, V.

¶ 215. A bill of particulars of what is to be established against a garnishee is not a matter of right, especially where the garnishee has made disclosure.—Strong v. Hollon, 39 Mich. 411.

§ 77. Scope of issues and inquiry.

Issues triable on motion to quash, see post § 96.

Effect of general issue by garnishee, see post ¶ 288.

Admissible evidence on the trial, see post § 79.

Intervention and interpleader of adverse claimants, see post §§ 114, 115.

¶ 216. The inquiry in a garnishment proceeding is whether any sum is owing by the garnishee defendant to the principal defendant.—Robbins v. Vandermeiden, 182 Mich. 674.

¶ 217. In a proceeding against a garnishee to whom a chattel mortgage had been given before he was put in possession of the property, questions as to the validity of the mortgage were immaterial so long as there was no showing that he took possession by virtue of it.—Folkerts v. Standish, 55 Mich. 463.

¶ 218. In an action of garnishment where the principal issue was whether a benefit certificate held by the garnishee defendant was exempt, the question as to the amount of property which the principal defendant has is immaterial.—Recor v. Commercial & Sav. Bank of St. Clair, 142 Mich. 479.

¶ 219. The right of a plaintiff in garnishment to try the title to a fund, the existence of which was disclosed by testimony taken under How. St. § 8085, should extend to any stage where the disclosure and examination show a disputed claim to a fund in the garnishee's possession, which plaintiff claims to be the property of the principal defendant or owing to him; and there is no reason for limiting the application of the statute to cases where the fact appears in the disclosure so called.—Marx v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 119 Mich. 19.

¶ 220. It is immaterial to a garnishee plaintiff as against the garnishee defendant whether a resolution of the principal defendant transferring to the garnishee the title to its property on which he held a chattel mortgage was in effect a common law assignment for creditors void because preferential, where the mortgage itself was a fraudulent hindrance to plaintiff and other creditors.—Wood v. Eldredge, 147 Mich. 554.

¶ 221. The trial of a garnishment, being essentially between the garnishee and the creditor, does not properly admit of interference by subsequent attaching and garnishing creditors or third persons as parties, but the garnishee may show the condition of his holding.—Keppel v. Moore, 66 Mich. 292.

¶ 222. On the trial of a garnishment, although the affidavit in garnishment was technically defective but the defect may have been waived by the garnishee, testimony was admissible to aid in determining whether the garnishee had not become bound by his conduct and acquiescence to answer for the property in his hands to apply upon plaintiff's debt, so as to make plaintiff stand preferred to subsequent garnishing creditors.—Keppel v. Moore, 66 Mich. 292.

Effect of disclosure to admit facts, see ante § 61 et seq.

Burden of proof and evidence of frauds on creditors, see generally Fraudulent Conveyances, I, V.

¶ 223. Under How. St. § 8059, which provides that from the time of the service of the writ the garnishee shall be deemed liable to plaintiff in the amount of property which such garnishee holds by conveyance, transfer or title that is void as to the creditors of the principal debtor, plaintiff must show that the transfer to the garnishee from the principal defendant was fraudulent as to creditors of the latter.—Bethel v. Linn, 63 Mich. 464.

¶ 224. Where the principal debtor is alleged to have made a transfer to the garnishee defendant in fraud of creditors of whom plaintiff is one, and the whole right of plaintiff depends on that fact, he must establish it else the garnishee will not be liable regardless of the question whether he had anything subject to garnishment.—Bethel v. Linn, 63 Mich. 464.

Scope of the issues on trial of garnishment, extraneous claims, see ante § 77.

Evidence on interpleader of claimant, see post § 115.

Sufficiency and weight of the evidence, see post §§ 80, 81.

Proper contents of disclosure, see ante §§ 59, 60.

Effect of disclosure to waive formal proof of deed, see also ante ¶ 176.

[Note. Generally speaking the substantive rights and liabilities of garnishees are provable in the same manner and means as those of other parties to actions claiming the same rights. Therefore the specific topics treating of the right, title or interest asserted or topics treating of the relation between the principal defendant and the garnishee should be consulted. Thus evidence of a sale of goods and of the amount due for the price will be treated in Sales, and evidence of payment will be treated in Payment.]

General law of evidence, see Evidence.

Mode of proving principal judgment, see Evidence § 545.

Res inter alios evidence of settlements, see also Evidence ¶ 531.

Admissibility of principal debtor's self-serving statement in garnishment proceedings, see Evidence ¶ 2550.

Admissibility of collateral evidences of fraud against garnishee as dependent on his knowledge of the facts, see Fraud ¶ 269.

Statutory provisions as to admissibility, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 14; Comp. L. 1915, § 13135.

¶ 225. The judgment against the principal debtor may be shown by the judgment entry.—Strong v. Hollon, 39 Mich. 411.

¶ 226. Upon a trial of a suit against a garnishee, proof of the admissions or declarations of the garnishee, as to his indebtedness to or possession of property of the principal debtor, is inadmissible.—Maynards v. Cornwell, 3 Mich. 309.

¶ 227. The plaintiff's judgment against the principal defendant, having been attacked by the garnishee on the ground that it was based upon a note received by plaintiff after maturity, and without consideration, it was error to exclude testimony offered by him to show that the note was given for a bona fide indebtedness, which existed prior to the application of money in its hands as payments by the garnishee.—Ferry v. Home Sav. Bank, 114 Mich. 321.

¶ 228. On a plaintiff's impeaching the good faith of a garnishee's disclosure the entire antecedents of the dealings between the garnishee and principal defendants and their agents, and all transactions regarding the property and its disposal, are admissible in evidence, fraud on the part of the garnishee as against the creditors of the principal defendant being in question.—Cummings v. Fearey, 44 Mich. 39.

¶ 229. Where, in garnishment proceedings the only material issue was whether the principal defendants were indebted to a person to whom, before the garnishment, they had assigned their claim against the garnishee, it was not error to exclude testimony bearing upon their insolvency.—Childs v. Nordella, 116 Mich. 511.

¶ 230. A garnishee may give in evidence matters of hearsay, even, touching his liability to the principal defendant.—Drake v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 69 Mich. 168.

¶ 232. In garnishment, where the garnishees claimed to have purchased the stock of groceries in question from creditors of plaintiff's debtor to whom it had been transferred in payment of a debt, but where there was testimony tending to show that the relation of vendor and vendee existed between such debtor and the garnishees, and that the latter had made statements supporting such relationship and had made no objection when informed of plaintiff's intention to garnish; a contract drawn by such creditor's bookkeeper providing for the sale of the stock to the garnishees, which was delivered to and kept by the garnishees until after the garnishment and then turned over unexecuted to such creditor and a different contract executed by the debtor, was admissible as a circumstance, although the garnishees claimed that it was erroneously drawn and that the bookkeeper had no instructions to draw it as he did.—Seitz v. Starks, 136 Mich. 90.

¶ 233. In garnishment proceedings against a chattel mortgagee, as bearing upon the issue whether the garnishee was in possession at the time of the service of the writ, evidence that, on the day after such service he made a written demand for the possession of the goods, and that the board of directors of the mortgagor, a corporation, formally acted upon such demand, and turned the goods over to him, is admissible.—Krementz v. Howard, 109 Mich. 466.

¶ 234. Upon the defense that money due for goods has been paid over by the defendants in a garnishment proceeding, it is competent to show that the money is still within the defendant's control.—Harris v. Chamberlain, 126 Mich. 280.

§ 80. Sufficiency and weight of evidence.

Sufficiency of admissions in disclosure, see ante §§ 59, 60.

Sufficiency of disclosure aided by other evidence, see post § 81.

Questions of law and fact, see post § 82.

Direction of verdict on the evidence, see post § 83.

On intervention and interpleader issues, see post § 115.

¶ 235. A judgment cannot be maintained against the garnishee without proof of the money value of the property, works of art, disclosed to be in the garnishee's hands.—Keppel v. Moore, 66 Mich. 292.

¶ 236. Unless the liability of a garnishee is clear and unqualified as shown by his disclosure, answers to interrogatories and oral examination, no judgment can pass against him.—Smith v. Holland, 81 Mich. 471.

¶ 237. A garnishee is plaintiff's witness so far as his answers are responsive, and though they are not conclusive if met by adequate testimony, they constitute part of the evidence in the case.—Whitfield v. Stiles, 57 Mich. 410.

¶ 238. In garnishment proceedings, claimant declaring, in trover, the findings of the trial court that the contract for work on which money was due was made with the claimant was held to have been supported by evidence, where there was testimony that the husband at the time had lost everything he possessed except a few articles of personalty, which were incumbered and of little value, and that he had used money belonging to her and turned his property over to her that she might continue the business, and the husband thereafter acted solely as her agent, and she testified positively that he had no interest in the contract and that it was her contract, therefore she was entitled to the money.—Dietz v. Bignall, 86 Mich. 292.

¶ 239. Where the officers of a bank garnished by a depositor's creditor have testified to an agreement with the depositor that he should at all times keep a balance to his credit of $1,000 to cover liability on returned drafts, such agreement is not negatived by testimony that both before and after service of garnishment the balance was far less than $1,000.—Rice v. Third Nat. Bank, 104 Mich. 176.

¶ 240. In garnishment against a wife upon a judgment against the husband, where both were present at the hearing, and where neither was sworn and no testimony was offered on their behalf, and where the only question of fact was whether the garnishee defendant had property or effects in her hands belonging to her husband sufficient to pay the judgment and the testimony strongly tended to show that she had, the verdict of the jury in favor of plaintiff will not be disturbed.—Morgan v. Sprague, 124 Mich. 131.

¶ 241. There was nothing due the contractor that could be reached by garnishment, where, in an action against a garnishee of such contractor, it appears that the contract under which such contractor was installing heating and plumbing work for garnishee provided for payment of a certain sum of money when the work had reached a certain stage, and the remainder of the contract price when the work was completed, and that such first payment had been made and the work was not yet completed.—Simmons Hardware Co. v. Rose, 140 Mich. 123.

¶ 242. A building contractor was to finish his job at a certain date, but was to forfeit a certain sum to his customer for every day that it should remain unfinished afterward. A creditor of the contractor garnished the customer and the latter disclosed that the job was still unfinished; that a certain amount of the contract price remained unpaid, and that he was entitled to a certain sum every day from the contractor. It did not appear whether the job would ever be finished, or whether anything more would be due to the contractor, or whether there would be any liability outside of the express contract. Held, that the garnishee was entitled to judgment.—Hopson v. Dinan, 48 Mich. 612.

¶ 243. The rule that a plaintiff cannot be permitted to recover a fund, the ownership of which is in doubt, had no application to a garnishment where plaintiff claimed that defendant had purchased the stock of groceries in question from plaintiff's debtor, and defendants claimed to have purchased from a creditor of such debtor other than plaintiff and that there was danger that they might be compelled to pay twice if plaintiff recovered, the assumption being that the jury would find the same in both cases as all the parties knew all of the facts connected with the transaction.—Seitz v. Starks, 136 Mich. 90.

¶ 244. That a franchise of the assignor in the Associated Press was transferable only with the consent of the association, and that its business had for several years been conducted at a loss, is insufficient to show that the franchise and good will were properly disregarded in the transfer as of no value; it being for the jury to determine, upon proper evidence in garnishment proceedings, whether their inclusion without compensation was in fraud of creditors.—Long v. Evening News Ass'n, 113 Mich. 261.

¶ 245. In attachment proceedings where the defendant had been garnished, and exemption was claimed evidence that the debtor was indebted to plaintiff for board and lodging furnished prior to January 9, 1906, and at that time he left her house taking all his clothes saying that he expected to leave town and accept a position on a railroad in the West and she had not seen him since, is sufficient to warrant a finding that the garnishee was a nonresident.—Kelson v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 146 Mich. 563.

Conclusiveness and effect of disclosure, see ante §§ 61-65.

Right of plaintiff to controvert disclosure, see ante § 64.

Right of principal defendant to controvert disclosure, see ante § 65.

Evidence contradictory of admissions in disclosure, see also ante ¶ 177.

Effect given to parts of disclosure based on information and belief, see ante ¶ 81.

¶ 246. A garnishee's disclosure, even if it does not positively confess liability, may establish it when aided by other evidence.—Lyon v. Kneeland, 58 Mich. 570.

¶ 247. A disclosure in garnishment showed that the garnishee had a contract with the principal defendants for a house, on which he owed them, or would owe them, a specified sum, less any damages he might have against them for nonfulfillment. Held, that upon satisfactory proof of the completion of the contract by the contractors and plaintiffs, as their assignees, substantially within the contract period, the plaintiffs were entitled to recover; the garnishee being bound to pay for the house if built properly. It did not concern him, when it was so built, whether it was done by the contractors or by plaintiffs as their assignees.—Zimmer v. Davis, 35 Mich. 39.

¶ 248. A disclosure made by an agent of a foreign insurance company, as garnishee, is sufficient to justify the finding of an indebtedness, although an incomplete disclosure was made on the return day, and an adjournment was taken to permit a further disclosure, and although the garnishee did not appear on the adjourned day, the supplemental showing being made on a summons to show cause. The court did not lose jurisdiction by a failure of the garnishee to appear on the adjourned day and the agent was in duty bound to represent the garnishee.—Allen v. Hamburg-Bremen Fire Ins. Co., 121 Mich. 86.

§ 82. Questions of law or of fact.

Propriety of directed verdict, see post § 83.

Particular questions and issues as jury questions, see specific topics treating of such matters, e. g., Contracts, X, C; Payment, V; Sales, VIII, IX.

¶ 249. A draft came to the garnished bank, indorsed by one of its directors as secretary and treasurer of the principal defendant, a corporation, and was forwarded for collection. Nearly one-half of the proceeds were used to pay an overdraft due the bank from the principal defendant, and the balance was credited to the teller of the bank, as agent of the director who indorsed the draft. It was so credited when process was served in the garnishment proceeding, and was subsequently turned over to the treasurer of the corporation upon the teller's check. The bank at the time held as security all of the stock of the principal defendant, except three shares, and had possession of its books. It was undisputed that the money belonged in fact to the principal defendant. Held, that it was for the jury to determine whether the bank had knowledge of the ownership of the fund; because, if the bank when served with process, knew that the fund belonged to the principal defendant it would be liable, although the deposit stood in a third person's name.—Ferry v. Home Sav. Bank, 114 Mich. 321.

¶ 250. In garnishment against a bank to reach moneys deposited in the name of the debtor's wife, the fact that, the bank having paid the fund to the wife after service of the writ, the loss, in case plaintiff should prevail, would fall upon the bank, and not the wife, is not a defense for the garnishee or a material fact that the parties are entitled to have brought to the attention of the jury in the instructions.—Sykes v. City Sav. Bank, 115 Mich. 321.

¶ 251. In garnishment the question was for the jury where defendant claimed to have purchased the stock of groceries in question from creditors of plaintiff's debtor to whom it had been transferred in payment of a debt, but where there was testimony tending to show that the relation of vendor and vendee existed between such debtor and the defendants, and that the latter had made statements supporting such relationship and had made no objection when informed of plaintiff's intention to garnish.—Seitz v. Starks, 136 Mich. 90.

¶ 252. In garnishment proceedings where it was claimed that the garnishee defendants were indebted to the principal defendants for groceries and fixtures, and the defense was that there was no sale made to the garnishee defendants but to a creditor of the principal defendants from whom the garnishee defendants bought, the claim that this defense is a subterfuge and pretense presents an issue of fact for the jury.—Seitz v. Starks, 144 Mich. 448.

See also ante ¶ 222.

General rules as to directing verdicts, see Directing Verdict.

¶ 253. Where it appears that some of the goods were in the hands of the garnishees at the time of the service of the writ, it is improper to take the case from the jury on the ground that there is no proof that any of the goods were in their possession.—Bethel v. Linn, 63 Mich. 464.

¶ 254. In garnishment proceedings the question being whether the indebtedness referred to was due at the time of the trial, it was held that under the evidence a verdict was properly directed against the grantees.—Hobson v. Kelly, 87 Mich. 187.

¶ 255. Where, upon the burning of a manufacturing company's property which had been taken possession of by a mortgagee in trust for creditors, a compromise was effected between the mortgagor, the mortgagee, and an insurance company that had written insurance policies payable to the mortgagee, whereby the company agreed to pay part of the insurance, and where, in garnishment against the company at the suit of one of the mortgagor's creditors, there was evidence that the amount of the insurance as agreed upon would not satisfy the debts secured by the mortgage, and no evidence that the compromise was fraudulent, a verdict was properly directed for the garnishee.—Williams v. Buchanan Mfg. Co., 102 Mich. 49.

¶ 256. A directed verdict against a garnishee, who disclosed that as owner of a building he owed nothing because, though the work was done, it had not been accepted and no architect's certificate had been issued as required, and because labor claims were unpaid and might become a lien, is supported by testimony that the architect stated that he would never issue a certificate until the claim of the plaintiff was paid, and by a concession on appeal that when the writ was served the full contract price was owing to the defendant contractor, and where there is no evidence but the disclosure that the work was not completed or not accepted.—McMillan v. Schneider, 147 Mich. 258.

General law of instructions, see Instructions.

Instructions on particular subjects, see topics treating of such subjects.

¶ 257. In instruction entitling a plaintiff to recover property belonging to a debtor if in the hands of a garnishee was sufficient under the evidence although nothing was said about the liability of the garnishee in case it was indebted to the debtor.—Sloman v. Goebel Brewing Co., 118 Mich. 442.

¶ 258. An instruction that a bill of sale was bona fide and was not fraudulent unless executed with an intent to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors, held to sufficiently present the question of good faith in an action where the plaintiff garnisheed property and the garnishee claimed title under a bill of sale.—Sloman v. Goebel Brewing Co., 118 Mich. 442.

¶ 259. In garnishment where the issue was whether defendant purchased the property in question from plaintiff's debtor or from a creditor of such debtor to whom it had been transferred in payment of a debt, it was error to refuse a request stating that it was immaterial whether at some time during the negotiations defendants may have supposed they were getting the property of the debtor, provided the jury believed that the debtor actually sold to the other creditor.—Seitz v. Starks, 136 Mich. 90.

¶ 260. In garnishment where the issue was whether defendants purchased the property in question from plaintiff's debtor or from another creditor, it was error to tell the jury that an unsigned contract indicating a sale between the debtor and defendants, which had been admitted as circumstantial evidence although claimed to have been drawn without authority by a bookkeeper, was a valid contract regardless of its not being signed.—Seitz v. Starks, 136 Mich. 90.

¶ 261. In a proceeding by judgment creditors under How. St., § 8091, which makes a garnishee liable on account of and for the value of any of the property of the principal defendant in his possession, or which he has received and disposed of, and which is or was held by a conveyance or title void as to creditors of the principal defendant, it is error for the court, in its instruction to the jury, to predicate the right of recovery upon fraud perpetrated, not upon general creditors by the transfer of the property, but upon individual creditors, other than plaintiffs, from whom the property had been purchased by the principal defendant.—Gumberg v. Treusch, 103 Mich. 543.

Report of judge, commissioner or receiver as to order for delivery of property and as to value of same, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 10; Comp. L. 1915, § 13131.

¶ 262. It is suggested that in garnishment proceedings plaintiff should specially ask the jury what property of the principal defendant was in the garnishee's possession when the writ was served, and also what was the value of the property.—Bethel v. Linn, 63 Mich. 464.

Proper judgment where garnishee is chargeable with property of principal defendant, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, §§ 19, 20; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 13140, 13141.
Right to have review or setting aside of garnishment judgments as with ordinary judgments, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 42; Comp. L. 1915, § 13163.
Right to deduct costs, fees and expenses on making disclosure, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 39; Comp. L. 1915, § 13160.

¶ 263. Judgment cannot be rendered against a garnishee until he has been summoned to show cause to the contrary, or has consented in person or by attorney (How. St. § 8038).—Iron Cliffs Co. v. Lahais, 52 Mich. 394.

¶ 264. Judgment can be rendered against a garnishee either upon disclosure made or upon default for want thereof.—White v. Ledyard, 48 Mich. 264.

¶ 265. A judgment against a garnishee defendant for the amount of the judgment against the principal defendant, rendered on the same day that the oral examination of such garnishee defendant was filed, was erroneous, since under Comp. L. 1897, § 10610, he was entitled to 10 days thereafter to demand a trial of the cause.—King v. Harrigan, 145 Mich. 436.

¶ 266. Under Comp. Laws 1897, § 10610, where the admissions of a garnishment defendant in his oral examination clearly show his liability, judgment may be entered against him at any time after final judgment against the principal defendant on motion of the plaintiff and without further notice to said garnishee.—Heald v. Montcalm Circuit Judge, 166 Mich. 297.

¶ 267. No judgment can be rendered against garnishees unless it will discharge them from any liability to the principal defendants.—Hamilton v. Rogers, 67 Mich. 135.

¶ 268. Two insurance companies which issue policies together under a common name to wit, "Cincinnati Underwriters," may be garnished under such name by creditors of a policy-holder for the amount due under his policy, and a single judgment taken (How. St. § 8092), although it appear upon the trial that, by the terms of the policy, the liability of the companies is several for their proportionate share of the loss.—Ferry v. Cincinnati Underwriters, 111 Mich. 261.

¶ 269. A money judgment cannot be rendered against a person cited under How. St. § 8057a, to defend his claim to money, etc., due from, etc., a garnishee, the object of the statute being merely to conclude such person by a verdict that he is not entitled to the fund, from recovering from the garnishee; in case the plaintiff fails to take proper steps to charge the garnishee, no binding judgment can be rendered.—Pecard v. Peter Home & Co., 91 Mich. 346.

Rights of plaintiff against garnishee, see post IX.

Rights between garnishee and principal defendant, see post X.

Rights of third persons, see post XI.

Conclusiveness on plaintiff notified to defend of judgment had against garnishee, see also Former Adjudication § 60, ¶ 315.

Effect of judgment to release garnishee, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 35; Comp. L. 1915, § 13156.

¶ 270. The lawful owner of a claim cannot be estopped by garnishment proceedings unless in them the garnishee has been put by regular course of law into a position to bind such owner.—Hebel v. Amazon Ins. Co. of Cincinnati, 33 Mich. 400; Hirth v. Pfeifle, 42 Mich. 31.

¶ 271. A judgment against a garnishee defendant does not bind his actual creditors where his indebtedness was to them and not to the principal defendant. And there is no need of a motion to vacate such a judgment unless, perhaps, where the debt was itself a judgment and proceedings to collect it had been stayed.—First Nat. Bank v. Mellen, 45 Mich. 413.

¶ 272. A judgment in a garnishment action in favor of a particular garnishee is not binding upon the creditor in a subsequent suit under the Bulk Sales Act, Pub. Acts 1905, No. 223, How. 2nd Ed., § 2612 et seq., where such particular garnishee is not a party to such suit.—Humiston, Keeling & Co. v. Bridgman, 195 Mich. 82.

¶ 273. Under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 10, 685, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 13741, providing that the "judgment against any person, as a garnishee, shall acquit and discharge such garnishee * * * from all demands by the principal defendant * * * for all such money or property, as aforesaid, paid or delivered by the garnishee by force of such payment; and if any garnishee shall be sued therefor or for anything done by virtue of the provisions of this chapter, he may, under the general issue, give the special matter in evidence," a judgment by a creditor against a bank as garnishee does not exonerate the principal defendant from liability to plaintiff and cannot do so until paid by the bank, and hence does not constitute a novation.—In re Ransford, 194 Fed. 658.

Dissolution of lien by subsequent bankruptcy, see Bankruptcy § 9.

Effect of nonintervention by trustee in bankruptcy to avoid garnishment, see Bankruptcy § 18, ¶ 111.

¶ 274. A judgment in an action of garnishment rendered within four months from the filing of an involuntary petition in bankruptcy against the defendant, disposing of a fund belonging to him, is automatically vacated by the subsequent rendition of a judgment vesting the right to such fund in the bankrupt's trustee.—Wilson v. Van Buren County Farmers' Mut. Ins. Co., 184 Mich. 530.

§ 89. Executions.

Sale by receiver, see ante ¶ 155.

General law of executions, see Executions.

General statutory rule as to executions, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 31; Comp. L. 1915, § 13152.

Provisions for executions against principal defendant for unsatisfied balance, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 34; Comp. L. 1915, § 13155.

Against goods to have been delivered by garnishee to principal defendant, or against other property of garnishee on failure to expose them to levy, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, §§ 22, 23; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 13143, 13144.
Executions to other counties, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 36; Comp. L. 1915, § 13157.

¶ 275. Notice of an application for an order for execution against them need not be given to sureties in the bond filed by the principal defendant under Comp. L. 1871, § 6512, to obtain discharge of garnishment. Their undertaking is to be bound by what binds their principal, and that in case of judgment against him execution may issue directly against them.—People ex rel. Loh v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 26 Mich. 186.

VII. OBJECTIONS TO WRIT; QUASHAL OR DISSOLUTION, DISMISSAL, ABATEMENT, AND REVIVAL.

Appealability of garnishment proceedings, see Appeal § 16.
Objections to the disclosure, motions for further disclosure, and special interrogatories, see ante § 66 et seq.
Assertion of right to exemptions and procedure to enforce them, see Exemptions, III.

§ 90. Defects in writ or garnishee process.

Omission of date of issuance in copy of writ left for service, see ante ¶ 148.
Omission of name of county in copy served, see ante ¶ 153.
Effect of disclosure under defective or invalid writ, see ante § 63.
Defects in the main case, see post § 91.
Amendments ordered but not formally made, see ante ¶ 157.

¶ 276. When the affidavit upon which the writ of garnishment is sued out is defective in stating the statutory grounds no presumption arises in favor of the proceeding to help out such deficiency.—Weimeister v. Manville, 44 Mich. 408.

¶ 277. Where proceedings in garnishment are based upon an affidavit that is jurisdictionally defective under the garnishee law of 1879, but the garnishee appears and discloses assigned claims in which he has no personal interest, it is within the court's discretion to dismiss the proceedings on motion made by the garnishee before judgment is entered in the principal case, especially if the affidavit is not amended after notice to dismiss and the garnishee's conduct has not caused prejudice.—Conway v. Ionia Circuit Judge, 46 Mich. 28.

¶ 278. A mere clerical error as to the month in the return day of a summons in garnishment is waived by appearance and answer on the day intended, and is not fatal to the proceedings, and the summons might be amended in this regard after answer, or the mistake be disregarded.—Wellover v. Soule, 30 Mich. 481.

¶ 279. A garnishee summons which, by a clerical mistake, warns the agent of the plaintiff who made the affidavit, instead of the garnishee, to pay no more money to the principal defendant, is not fatally defective, but may be amended so as to conform with the statute.—Millard v. Lenawee Circuit Judge, 107 Mich. 134.

¶ 280. The writ must describe a garnishee, otherwise a disclosure has no effect.—Ettlesohn v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 64 Mich. 331.

¶ 281. A garnishee defendant is properly discharged if it appears that the summons in garnishment was delivered for service before the garnishee had become indebted by the delivery of the goods for which he had bargained with the principal defendant.—Hitchcock v. Miller, 48 Mich. 603.

§ 91. Defects in principal action, process or judgment.

Discontinuance of garnishment on failure of or fatal defect in main case, see post §§ 97-99.
Nunc pro tunc entry of judgment against principal defendant, see Judgments, III.

¶ 282. The fact that the service of process upon a principal defendant is made outside the state affords no ground for quashing the garnishment proceedings where the garnishee is served within the state.—Nachtegall v. Reilley, 165 Mich. 347.

¶ 283. An alias summons can be taken out against the principal defendant in a garnishment proceeding, even though the return of the first summons was informal; the return may be amended.—Axtell v. Gibbs, 52 Mich. 639.

¶ 284. In garnishment proceedings it is no objection to the judgment against the principal defendant that the order of default purports to be based on a return by the undersheriff in his own name, or that, in the copy of the declaration served, the name of the county was omitted in the entitling.—Allen v. Hazen, 26 Mich. 142.

¶ 285. The judgment against a principal defendant is not void for slightly exceeding the sum named in the statement of the defendant in garnishment; it is not a jurisdictional fault, but is open to correction on error or appeal.—Bigalow v. Barre, 30 Mich. 1.

§ 92. Person or party entitled to make objection.

¶ 286. Where municipal corporation is garnished exemptions from garnishment belong to the person whose debt is garnished rather than to the debtor, and the garnishee cannot waive objection to the jurisdiction. —Marathon School Dist. No. 4 v. Gage, 39 Mich. 484.

§ 93. Waiver, estoppel or cure of objections.

Waiver of time for trial of garnishment issues, see ante § 74.

Waiver of discontinuance or discharge, see post § 99.

Necessity of objections to prevent disclosure being taken as sufficient, see ante § 66.

Variance of main judgment in amount from that in writ of garnishment, see ante ¶ 285.

Alias summons in main case to cure defect, see ante ¶ 283.

Propriety of trial of issues where defect in affidavit may have been waived by garnishee, see ante ¶ 222.

General law as to waiver of errors and preclusion to urge them on review, see Appeal, XI, D; Saving Questions.

¶ 287. Where the garnishee, being a trustee so empowered, has full authority to bind the principal debtor, he has power to waive the formalities in the proceedings as to the principal as well as to himself.—Keppel v. Moore, 66 Mich. 292.

¶ 288. By pleading the general issue to a declaration in assumpsit for money had and received, based on a disclosure of indebtedness, the garnishee defendant does not waive the right to object to the proceedings in the original suit as void for want of jurisdiction, but may raise such objections on appeal.—Segar v. Muskegon Shingle & Lumber Co., 81 Mich. 344.

¶ 289. A garnishee defendant by appearing in court, submitting to an examination, being represented by counsel and not objecting to the jurisdiction waives irregularities as to the issuance and service of the process in garnishment.—Chamberlain v. Wallace, 176 Mich. 609.

§ 94. ——Amendments to cure defects.

See also ante ¶ 277.

Amendments of affidavits, see ante § 46.

Amendments of returns and further returns, see ante § 56.

Amendments of disclosures, see ante § 67.

Amendment of name of garnishee, see ante ¶ 270.

Supplying jurisdiction by amendment, see also ante ¶ 158.

¶ 290. An amendment of proceedings in garnishment so as to make the christian name of the principal defendant "Jonathan" instead of "John" cannot be sustained against an intervening claimant whose rights were acquired in good faith before the amendment was made.—Moore v. Graham, 58 Mich. 25.

§ 95. Mode of proceeding to object.

¶ 291. Where a garnishee defendant, without filing his disclosure, moves to dismiss the proceeding on the ground that his creditor is a bankrupt, and that the plaintiff and the trustee in bankruptcy are seeking to impound the same assets, and that the assets in his hands, if there are any, passed to the trustee upon the adjudication of bankruptcy, such motion should be dismissed without requiring plaintiff to traverse the facts set up in the motion; the garnishee should be required to file his disclosure, upon which the inquiry should proceed in the manner provided by statute.—Starr v. Whitcomb, 150 Mich. 491.

¶ 292. Plaintiff brought garnishment against James Reilley, principal defendant, and one Perkins, garnishee defendant. A written compromise agreement had been made between plaintiff and James Reilley and Eugene Reilley by which a fund of $1,000 was to be placed in the hands of said Perkins to be paid over upon the performance of certain conditions by James Reilley. It did not clearly appear whether the $1,000 was to be paid by Perkins to James Reilley or to James and Eugene Reilley jointly. Defendant James Reilley made a motion to quash the suit on the ground that the $1,000 was due jointly to himself and Eugene Reilley. At the instance of said Perkins, Eugene Reilley had been interpleaded. Held, the trial court was in error in granting the motion to quash, and should have ordered an issue to be formed as to the ownership of the said $1,000 and to proceed to trial.—Nachtegall v. Reilley, 165 Mich. 347.

§ 96. Motions to quash or set aside return.

Trial of issue of ownership as better practice where title is disputed, see ante ¶ 292.

Finality of order of quashal for purposes of review, see Appeal § 32, ¶ 126.

¶ 293. In an action of garnishment the question as to whether the indebtedness arose prior or subsequent to the death of the defendant's husband is one which cannot be decided on a motion to quash the writ of garnishment, being an issue which the plaintiff is entitled to try on its merits.—Recor v. Commercial & Sav. Bank of St. Clair, 142 Mich. 479.

¶ 294. On a motion to set aside the return of service of a writ of garnishment based upon an affidavit of an officer of the garnishee that the original writ was not shown, where the return of the officers indicated that the original writ was shown to the person served, held that it was proper for the court to try the question on motion and affidavit and not to frame an issue of facts, there being no suggestion by the moving party that an issue of facts ought to be framed, and that the conclusion of the court denying the motion, being supported by evidence, would not be disturbed on appeal.—Lyon v. Baldwin, 194 Mich. 118.

§ 97. Discontinuance by outcome of main case.

Discontinuance for failure to prosecute main case, see post § 98.

Waiver of discharge or discontinuance, see post § 99.

General law as to discontinuances and dismissals, see Discontinuance.

Statutory provision that garnishment shall discontinue on failure to recover in main case, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 41; Comp. L. 1915, § 13162.

Discontinuance of garnishee proceedings at instance of garnishee for plaintiff's delay in prosecuting main case, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 45; Comp. L. 1915, § 13166.

Discontinuance by filing of bond for stay, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 44; Comp. L. 1915, § 13165.

¶ 295. Garnishment proceedings fall when the judgment in the principal case is set aside.—Withington v. Southworth, 26 Mich. 381.

¶ 296. Garnishment proceedings are ancillary to the principal case, and if that is defective go down with it.—Iron Cliffs Co. v. Lahais, 52 Mich. 394.

¶ 297. Where the judgment against the principal defendant is void, the garnishee proceedings must fall with it—Segar v. Muskegon Shingle & Lumber Co., 81 Mich. 344.

¶ 298. Garnishment proceedings are ended by plaintiff's failure to appear on the return of a summons to the garnishee to show cause why judgment should not be entered against him; and the subsequent appearance of both plaintiff and garnishee cannot affect rights acquired by a third person as assignee of the debtor's demand against the garnishee, even though the assignment was made on the same day the writ of garnishment issued.—Johnson v. Dexter, 38 Mich. 695.

¶ 299. A change of parties to the record in the principal case does not defeat garnishment process, if at the date of service the claim was garnishable, and if plaintiff in the principal case has recovered judgment (How. St. § 8059).—Bethel v. Superior Court Judge, 57 Mich. 379.

¶ 300. Garnishees are not discharged nor are the proceedings against them discontinued by any such change in the record of the principal case as would result from the death of a joint defendant therein.—Bethel v. Superior Court Judge, 57 Mich. 379.

¶ 301. Where the principal defendant is a firm, a verdict discharging one of the partners because he is an infant does not release the garnishee, who would be fully protected as against the firm by paying a judgment against him. The infant could not individually sue the garnishee for firm property.—Bethel v. Superior Court Judge, 57 Mich. 379.

§ 98. ——For delaying principal suit.

Effect of payment to plaintiff after abandonment of suit, see post ¶ 368.

¶ 302. Garnishment proceedings must be dismissed if service upon the defendant in the principal case has not been obtained within the statutory period, whatever steps have been taken to keep the principal suit alive for the recovery of a personal judgment.—Axtell v. Gibbs, 52 Mich. 640.

¶ 303. The garnishee act contemplates a speedy determination of the garnishee's liability; and any considerable delay by plaintiff, not consented to or acquiesced in by the garnishee, will be cause for a dismissal of the proceedings against him.—Kiely v. Bertrand, 67 Mich. 332.

¶ 304. Pendency of a cause for fifteen months will not, of itself, warrant the dismissal of garnishment proceedings if the defense has raised no question of laches.—Webber v. Bolte, 51 Mich. 113.

¶ 305. Garnishment proceedings against an assignee for the benefit of creditors were allowed to rest for two years until plaintiffs had obtained a decree on a bill in aid of execution which they had filed after taking out garnishment process. Plaintiffs then attempted to bring the garnishment issue to a hearing. Held, that the proceedings in garnishment could not have been kept open without either a formal continuance or some action equivalent to consent by the garnishee; and even consent might not be allowed to cut off intervening rights, as a garnishee cannot waive the rights of other persons.—Blake v. Hubbard, 45 Mich. 1.

§ 99. ——Waiver of discharge or discontinuance.

¶ 306. Where the garnishee's attorney applied for and obtained an attorney fee as costs of a continuance, this was a waiver of such delay as would otherwise have entitled the garnishee to a discharge.—Kiely v. Bertrand, 67 Mich. 332.

¶ 307. Laches on plaintiff's part in failing to bring the statutory issue, framed in a garnishee case, to trial at the next term after the rendition of judgment against principal defendant, held to have been waived by the failure of garnishees to deny the truth of the statement, made by plaintiff's attorney on the hearing of garnishee's motion to dismiss at the next succeeding term, that he had forfeited his right to a dismissal by consenting that the case stand from day to day, and not be taken up for trial before the first day of such succeeding term.—Meigs v. Weller, 90 Mich. 629.

¶ 308. Service upon the principal defendant after the time within which, under How. St., § 8087, jurisdiction of a nonresident principal defendant must be acquired to support garnishment proceedings in an action commenced by the filing of a declaration and entry of rule to plead, will support a judgment subsequently entered against the garnishee, where he did not avail himself of his right to a discharge.—Coe v. Hinkley, 109 Mich. 608.

§ 100. Abatement and revival of writ.

Effect of change in parties to the main action, see ante § 97.
Discontinuance of garnishment with failure of main case, see ante §§ 97-99.
Effect of assignment to abate garnishment, see also Abatement ¶ 20.
Substitution of personal representatives in general, see Estates of Decedents, XI, A.
Avoidance of judgment by bankruptcy, see ante § 88.

¶ 309. Garnishment process is not defeated by a change of parties to the record if at the date of serving process the claim was subject to garnishment and the plaintiff in the principal case has recovered judgment.—Bethel v. Superior Court Judge, 57 Mich. 379.

¶ 310. Where a garnishee dies before disclosure made or default taken, his administrator cannot be brought in since he could make no disclosure.—White v. Ledyard, 48 Mich. 264.

VIII. OTHER SUITS AND PROCEEDINGS PENDING GARNISHMENT; STAY; CONTINUANCES; ETC.

§ 101. Other suits in general affecting garnishment.

Effect of other suits and proceedings on the writ, see post § 101.
Another action pending as ground for abatement, see Abatement.
Mode of pleading pendency of other suits or proceedings in abatement, see Pleading, III.

¶ 311. Where, after a receiver had been appointed in Indiana for the benefit of the creditors of a mutual benefit association organized under the laws of that state but having local branches in Michigan, garnishment was instituted (prior, however, to an ancillary receivership in this state), in aid of suits commenced against the association upon matured certificates issued to Michigan members, an injunction to restrain such proceedings was properly refused as the plaintiff in garnishment had a right to be heard therein; but the local receiver was also entitled to be heard in order to protect the fund.—Baldwin v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 101 Mich. 432.

¶ 312. Where, on the same day that a receiver was appointed in Indiana for a mutual benefit association organized there, but having local branches here, a Michigan member brought suit, accompanied by garnishment, upon a matured certificate issued by one of said local branches, it was held, that in the absence of proof that the receiver's appointment preceded the institution of the garnishment proceedings, the pendency of the suit in which the appointment was made did not deprive plaintiff of his remedy.—Cohen v. Supreme Sitting of Order of Iron Hall, 105 Mich. 283.

¶ 313. As nothing that had its origin in transactions subsequent to the issue of garnishment can be reached in a garnishee's hands, the objection by garnishee that a former suit is pending in another circuit court has no force.—Wattles v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 117 Mich. 662.

¶ 314. A chancery suit in aid of execution begun after garnishment process could not affect the validity of the proceeding in garnishment, and a final decree by the supreme court in favor of the creditor could not preclude further investigation at law as to whether he had not waived his right to complain of the assignment.—Blake v. Hubbard, 45 Mich. 1.

¶ 315. The garnishee on being sued after disclosure by an assignee of the principal debtor should notify the plaintiff in garnishment to defend the assignee's action, whereupon the plaintiff will be bound by the result of the action.—Butler v. Wendell, 57 Mich. 62.

§ 102. Stay of proceedings and continuances.

Stay of garnishment judgment pending appeal of main case, see also ante ¶ 206.
Postponement of trial of garnishment issues pending disposal of main case, see also ante ¶ 208.
Stay pending outcome of foreign suit against garnishee, see Stay of Proceedings.
Provisions for stay on bond, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 44; Comp. L. 1915, § 13165.

¶ 316. Comp. L. 1897, § 1009 suspending a creditor's right of action for money garnished during the pendency of the proceedings, applies to actions to recover possession of premises for nonpayment of rent, even though the tenant had notice of the landlord's claim that the rent was exempt, and acted in collusion with the plaintiff in the garnishee proceedings.—O'Connor v. White, 124 Mich. 22.

¶ 317. Under the statute providing that no suit shall be maintained by the defendant in the principal action while garnishment is pending, pendency of garnishment proceedings does not prevent a wife's replevying exempt property in the garnishee's hands.—Hanselman v. Kegel, 60 Mich. 540.

¶ 318. Pending garnishment does not bar another action, but may be pleaded in abatement.—Near v. Mitchell, 23 Mich. 382.

¶ 319. Garnishment proceedings may be pleaded in abatement of an action brought by the principal defendant against the garnishee, but they are not an absolute bar unless judgment has been obtained against the garnishee.—Grosslight v. Crisup, 58 Mich. 531.

IX. RIGHTS, DEFENSES AND LIABILITY OF GARNISHEE TOWARDS PLAINTIFF.

§ 103. In general.

[Note. Since the liability of the garnishee to the plaintiff is measured by the liability to the principal defendant, it will be necessary to consult other specific topics dealing with the various contracts and other obligations. See generally Contracts; Negotiable Instruments; Sales; Implied Contracts; and other topics treating of rights and liabilities.]

Nature of lien or claim created, see also post ¶ 340.

Liability of bank for corporate money deposited or paid to officer as individual, see also ante ¶ 108.

Effect and conclusiveness of disclosure and right of plaintiff to rebut it, see ante §§ 61-65.

Proper scope of issues on trial of garnishment, see ante § 77.

Liability of plaintiff to refund money received under false disclosure, see post § 113.

Liability for failure to deliver property or choses in action, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 9; Comp. L. 1915, § 13130.

Nature and extent of garnishee's liability under executory contract for goods or property other than money, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, §§ 19-21; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 13140-13142.

¶ 320. The garnishee is liable from the time of the service of the summons.—Maynards v. Cornwell, 3 Mich. 309.

¶ 321. Under the Wisconsin laws, which are conformable to the general doctrine, the service of a garnishee process creates a lien upon the property of the principal defendant in the hands of the garnishee defendant, entitling the plaintiff to hold such property for the satisfaction of his claim.—Rickman v. Rickman, 180 Mich. 224.

¶ 322. The right to hold a garnishee defendant liable depends upon the state of the claim as one garnishable or not, at the time of the service of the writ of garnishment.—Martz v. Detroit Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 28 Mich. 201; Bethel v. Superior Court Judge, 57 Mich. 379.

¶ 323. A garnishee's liability is limited by the amount of the judgment against the principal debtor, and a verdict for an excess would not be binding.—Strong v. Hollon, 39 Mich. 411.

¶ 324. Plaintiff in a garnishment suit seeking to reach money due the principal defendant from the garnishee defendants, has no different or greater rights than the principal defendant.—Clay Lumber Co. v. Harts Branch Coal Co., 174 Mich. 613.

¶ 325. A bank garnished in respect of negotiable certificates of deposit issued by it to the principal debtor is not compelled to hunt up possible holders or to pay any person but the holder.—Karp v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 76 Mich. 679.

§ 104. Defenses open to garnishee.

See generally such topics as Fraud; Duress; Mistake; Payment; Limitations; Frauds, Statute of; Accord; Releases.

Right of garnishee to assail plaintiff's right as assignee for creditors, see Assignments for Creditors § 34.

Waiver by principal defendant of right to claim discharge in bankruptcy, see Bankruptcy, ¶¶ 60, 61.

¶ 326. Where plaintiff in a garnishment suit seeks to reach money due the principal defendant on a note, the garnishee defendants may interpose any defense they have against the principal defendants on the note.—Clay Lumber Co. v. Harts Branch Coal Co., 174 Mich. 613.

¶ 327. A garnishee defendant cannot set up the defense that the fund held by him is secured by a labor lien in favor of the principal defendant.—Keister v. Donovan, 173 Mich. 328.

§ 105. Rights and demands accruing after service and disclosure.

Presumptive liability from and after disclosure, see also ante ¶ 223.

Statutory effect of service of writ to bind garnishee, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 2; Comp. L. 1915, § 13123.

¶ 328. A garnishee cannot be held if he is not shown to be indebted to the principal defendant at the time the proceeding was instituted; the establishment of his liability afterwards is not enough.—Hopson v. Dinan, 48 Mich. 612.

¶ 329. Garnishee process cannot reach an indebtedness created after the writ is issued.—Cogswell v. Mitts, 90 Mich. 353.

§ 106. Amount of indebtedness; offsets and credits.

See also ante ¶ 828.

Right to claim credits as depending on proper disclosure, see also post ¶ 354.

Accountable demands and demands subject to adjustment as subject of garnishment, see ante § 24.

Deposits in bank, see ante § 34.

Individual debt to firm reducible by accounting, see also ante ¶ 79.

Assigned demand and cross demand remaining unpaid, see post ¶ 338.

Admissibility of evidence as to reality of plaintiff's debt, see ante ¶ 227.

Liability of bank where contingent liabilities more than offset balance to account of defendant, see also Banking ¶ 69.

Statutory right of offsets, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 38; Comp. L. 1915, § 13159.

Right to deduct allowable costs and expenses and fees, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 39; Comp. L. 1915, § 13160.

¶ 330. The garnishee's right, under Comp. L. 1871, § 6504 (How. St. § 8097), to deduction of any demand to which he may be entitled as against the principal defendant does not apply where the property in his hands was wrongfully obtained, as under a chattel mortgage, which, by reason of being kept from record, was fraudulent as against other creditors.—Cummings v. Fearey, 44 Mich. 89.

¶ 331. Where A. has agreed to do a job of logging for B., who has agreed to pay the labor claims of A.'s men, B. cannot be garnished by A.'s creditor and compelled to pay the price for the job before paying such claims.—Kiely v. Bertrand, 67 Mich. 332.

¶ 332. Where the assignee of a garnisheed claim intervenes in garnishment proceedings brought against a guarantor of the claim assigned, and obtains vacation of a judgment, but permits the case to proceed and a valid judgment is rendered later against the guarantor, from which no appeal is taken by the intervenor, the amount of such judgment must be credited to the guarantor in reduction of the claim.—Coe v. Hinkley, 109 Mich. 608.

§ 107. ——Mortgagee's or lienholder's liability for surplus.

Liability of property held for security to be garnished, see ante §§ 25, 26.

Rights of mortgagee taking mortgaged goods in payment of distinct debt, see also ante ¶ 86.

Preclusion of mortgagee to deny mortgage right after taking goods by replevin, see also ante ¶ 87.

Rights and powers of receiver, see ante ¶¶ 154, 155.

Rights of chattel mortgagee as against garnishment or involuntary transfer, see also Chattel Mortgages § 77.

¶ 333. A mortgage or other security holder cannot be held liable as garnishee until he has foreclosed his security and received either the property or money in excess of the money loaned.—Merchants' Nat. Bank of Toledo v. Barrett, 122 Mich. 650.

§ 108. Effect of assignment and novation.

See also ante ¶ 57.

Rights of assignees or transferees, see post § 112.

Right to garnishee assignee for creditors, see ante § 15.

Transfer or novation as barring garnishment, see also ante § 5.

Notice to plaintiff to defend suit by assignee, see ante ¶ 315.

General rights of assignees as against third persons, see Assignments, III.

Nature and requisites of novation, see Novation.

¶ 334. A garnishee whose indebtedness has been assigned before the suit, and who has been notified of the assignment after the suit was begun but before his disclosure, is not liable.—Tabor v. Van Vranken, 39 Mich. 793.

¶ 335. Whether a garnishing creditor's claim upon a fund garnished without notice of an assignment, and where the garnishee had no notice of it, would or would not be valid, quære.—Newell v. Blair, 7 Mich. 103.

¶ 336. A debt actually due under an existing contract can be orally assigned with the debtor's consent, and, if so assigned in good faith to a creditor of the assignor to protect his claim, the debtor cannot then be charged as garnishee of the assignor.—Neumann v. Calumet & H. Min. Co., 57 Mich. 97.

¶ 337. The fact that labor claims may become liens upon one's logs if not paid constitutes a good consideration for his promise to a contractor to pay the latter's laborers, as against a creditor garnishing the promisor as debtor to the contractor.—Kiely v. Bertrand, 67 Mich. 332.

¶ 338. The assignee of a cause of action may garnish his assignor, where the latter remains indebted to the defendant on a cross demand.—Barlow v. Lincoln-Williams Twist Drill Co., 186 Mich. 46.

X. RIGHTS, DEFENSES AND LIABILITY OF GARNISHEE TOWARDS DEFENDANT.

Inconclusiveness of disclosure on principal defendant, see ante § 65.

Effect of the judgment on the principal defendant, see ante § 87.

Judgment as discharge from liability, see ante ¶ 267.
Errors and defects in procedure waivable by garnishee, see ante § 93.
Scope of issues on trial of garnishment, see ante § 77.
Liability of garnishee paying plaintiff under invalid judgment, see post § 119.
Claims by others in opposition to garnishment parties, see post XI.
Manner of obtaining discharge from or release from the proceedings, see post XII.
Stay of other actions by principal defendant against garnishee pending outcome of garnishment, see ante § 102.
[Note. With respect to the obligations which may subsist between the garnishee, as a debtor or bailee and the principal defendant, see topics treating of the contract, debt, bailment, or obligation garnished. It is not the purpose to treat here the general law which determines one's liability to his creditor.]
Exemption in garnishment proceedings, see Exemptions § 40.
Collusive garnishment of money while yet in lender's hands as ground for canceling mortgage, see Fraud ¶ 581.

¶ 339. Owing to sickness a garnishee failed to answer for more than two months after being summoned—the case being adjourned from time to time—and then made affidavit that he "is indebted" to the principal defendant, and paid the money in court. Held a sufficient admission that the indebtedness existed at the time of service; and the garnishee was not thereafter liable to the principal defendant.—Barber v. Howd, 85 Mich. 221.

¶ 340. Garnishment does not create a lien upon effects or credits in the same sense that attachment by direct seizure creates a lien upon property, but it does create a lien of such a character that, so long as it continues and the garnishee seeks to preserve his own rights he cannot pay to the principal defendant, nor can the principal defendant collect his debt from him the inchoate lien created by it takes effect from the time of service and can be perfected only by judgment, on the rendition of which the garnishee becomes a judgment debtor of the creditor; though the lien is not absolute, but a qualified one, which may at any time be divested by the payment of the judgment by the debtor or by any one acting in his interest.—In re Ransford, 194 Fed. 658.

¶ 341. It is no defense to a suit on a joint note that one of the defendants had been garnished in a former suit as indebted to the husband of the plaintiff in the later one, and had admitted that he was indebted to the husband on the note in suit, since such garnishment was defective for want of parties. —Hirth v. Pfeifle, 42 Mich. 31.

XI. CONFLICTING AND PARAMOUNT CLAIMS; INTERPLEADER AND INTERVENTION.

Inconclusiveness of disclosure as affecting rights of third persons, see ante § 65.
Scope of issues and matters properly triable on issues joined with garnishee, see ante § 77.
Rights and title of adverse claimants to bank deposits, see Banking §§ 7, 8.
Multifariousness of bill for accounting and relief from garnishment suits, see also Equity ¶ 272.
Effect on foreclosure of garnishment proceedings against mortgagor by creditors of mortgagee, see Foreclosure § 7.
Actions of trover or replevin or assumpsit based on disregard of garnishment by third person, see Assumpsit; Conversion; Replevin.

¶ 342. The garnishment statute does not attempt to cut off the rights of strangers to the litigation.—Walker v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co., 49 Mich. 446.

§ 111. Priorities among creditors and claimants.

Impropriety of trying priorities in the garnishment proceeding, see also ante ¶ 221.
Burden of proof of priority, see post § 115.
Priority of attachments, see Attachment, VIII.
Priority of executions, see Executions, V.
Lien and priority of chattel mortgages, see Chattel Mortgages, III.
See also other topics treating of liens or claims to preference.
Statutory priority of mechanics' liens, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14804.

¶ 343. Whether a trustee who has taken the principal debtor's property for benefit of others can be garnished at all, if the trust is recognized as valid, quære. Certainly the process gives plaintiff no preference over other creditors having rights secured by the trust.—Keppel v. Moore, 66 Mich. 292.

¶ 344. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 10711, requiring both the husband and wife jointly to sign a contract for the improvement of land held jointly by them in order to create a mechanic's lien, both homesteads and lands held jointly are classed together; and where the wife failed to sign she cannot by consent to the entry of a decree establishing a lien postpone the rights of a garnishing creditor of the contractor.—McMillan v. Schneider, 147 Mich. 258.

§ 112. Rights of assignees or transferees.

Effect of assignment or novation, see ante §§ 5, 108.
Necessity of judgment in main case before trial of issues against garnished assignee, see ante ¶ 205.

Duty of garnishee to notify plaintiff to defend suit by assignee, see ante ¶ 315.
Burden of proof of assignment, see post § 115.

¶ 345. If a garnishee notified that his debt was assigned before suit thereafter admits an indebtedness without disclosing his knowledge of the assignment, and pays over the money, he cannot, when sued by the assignee, defend on the ground of former recovery.—Tabor v. Van Vranken, 39 Mich. 793.

¶ 346. Whether, when a garnishee who has disclosed and paid over is sued by an assignee of the principal debtor, he cannot show that the assignment was invalid as against the creditors who garnished him, quære.—Wood v. Losey, 50 Mich. 475.

¶ 347. Where a garnishee has no possession when garnished, and the title to the property has to be litigated to show the plaintiff's interest, the property cannot be followed into the hands of strangers nor its proceeds into the garnishee's.—Folkerts v. Standish, 55 Mich. 463.

¶ 348. Where B. purchases goods of A. and sells them to C., who is not a creditor of A., nor a representative of any of A.'s creditors, and who does not take the goods as A.'s bailee or vendee, C. cannot defend against payment for the goods on the ground that he has been garnished by A.'s creditors. and such garnishment proceedings will not deprive B. of his remedy in trover against C. for a conversion of the goods, B. not being a party to the proceedings.—McAuliffe v. Farmer, 27 Mich. 76.

¶ 349. Where, after being notified of an assignment of the account, the debtor is garnished as the assignor's debtor, and, claiming to be in doubt as to the fact of the assignment, pays the debt to the garnishing plaintiff without waiting for a summons to show cause, he is not protected against the true creditor.—Union Bank v. Hanish, 97 Mich. 404.

§ 113. Accountability to true creditor or owner.
See also ante ¶ 349.
Effect of the judgment upon rights of real creditor, see ante § 87.

¶ 350. Creditors are interested in the character of the disposition made of the debtor's assets by a garnishee, and if unreasonable, and the price realized is below the fair value, it seems that they are entitled to have the account between the debtor and the garnishee stated as though the assets had brought their fair value, and to hold the garnishee answerable over accordingly, if found indebted to the defendant thereon.—Fearey v. Cummings, 41 Mich. 376.

¶ 351. If a garnishee wrongly assumes to be the debtor of the principal defendant, the proceeding will not protect him against his true creditor.—Hosley v. Scott, 59 Mich. 420.

¶ 352. When a judgment against a garnishee, rendered upon a false disclosure is vacated in the discretion of the court, if the garnishee has already made payment it will not protect him against the claim of his actual creditor. The plaintiff, also, will hold the money paid as to the creditor's use, and the latter is entitled to have it refunded to him on demand.—First Nat. Bank v. Mellen, 45 Mich. 413.

¶ 353. One who has obtained a judgment against a garnishee upon a false disclosure must refund the money paid thereon to the garnishee's actual creditor upon the latter's demand after the judgment is vacated. And the plaintiff cannot retain the amount of the attorney fee paid to the garnishee's attorney.—First Nat. Bank v. Mellen, 45 Mich. 413.

¶ 354. The respondent in a criminal case deposited with his lawyer some money belonging to his employer, to secure bail. The lawyer turned the money over to the bondsman, and the latter, being afterward garnished by creditors of the respondent, paid out the money to satisfy their claims, though he had known, when garnished, that it was the money of the employer. Held, that he should have so disclosed, and that in a suit against him by the employer, as for money had to plaintiff's use, he could not set up the application of the money in payment of the claims of the creditors.—Kimball v. Macomber, 50 Mich. 362.

¶ 355. Money paid by garnisheed maker of a note to sheriff after disclosure, and by sheriff paid over to garnishing plaintiff, is not recoverable from latter by an indorsee of such note as money had and received.—Corey v. Webber, 96 Mich. 357.

§ 114. Intervention and interpleader of claims.
Quashal of proceeding or trial of ownership as proper practice, see also ante ¶ 292.
Impropriety of trial of issues with garnishee where conflicting claim is sole issue, see ante ¶ 203.
Effect of amendment as against intervening claimant, see ante ¶ 290.
Form of judgment against person cited to defend claim, see ante § 86.
Right of intervention in general, see Parties.
Interpleader suits in general, see Interpleader.
Right of partnership doing business without statutory affidavit to assert rights as claimant, see Trade Marks, V.
Statutory provisions as to trial of third party claims, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 28; Comp. L. 1915, § 13149.

¶ 356. Where the answers of a garnishee to interrogatories and his oral examination show that his indebtedness to the principal defendant is evidenced by a promissory note, which is claimed by a third party, plaintiff may interplead not only the principal defendant, but such claimant (Laws 1885, Act No. 178).—Smith v. Holland, 81 Mich. 471.

¶ 357. The principal defendant has the right, at least in the absence of objection by the garnishee, to intervene in garnishment proceedings, and urge the exemption of the garnished fund, by reason of a mortgage to a third person.—McDougall v. Lamb, 113 Mich. 69.

¶ 358. Under How. St., § 8085, providing that if any person shall claim any property in the hands of a garnishee, the court may permit or cause him to appear and maintain his rights, and that the testimony of the principal defendant and others may be taken and attached to the disclosure, etc., it was proper to order the interpleader of a copartnership consisting of the debtor and his brother, where after the garnishee in its disclosure had denied that it had a fund of the debtor, its subsequent examination under the statute disclosed that it had a fund deposited by the debtor in the name of such partnership.—Marx v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 119 Mich. 19.

¶ 359. How. St. § 8085, providing that a claimant of property in the hands of a garnishee may appear and maintain his right in such mode as the court shall direct, is not limited to cases where the interest of the third person or his claim is revealed by the disclosure, but extends to one where examination of the garnishee after disclosure reveals the claim.—Marx v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 119 Mich. 19.

¶ 360. Interpleading the principal defendant's copartner after a garnishee's disclosure showing that it had money belonging to them as a copartnership, but none to the defendant alone, and without notice of such interpleader to the defendant is erroneous at most and not void; and without meritorious reason will not be ordered to be vacated because of such error.—Marx v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 119 Mich. 19.

¶ 361. Payment of the money into court by the garnishee is not a prerequisite to interpleading a claimant to it, as allowed by How. St. § 8085.—Marx v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 119 Mich. 19.

§ 115. ——Burden of proof and evidence.

¶ 362. One interpleaded in garnishment proceedings under Comp. L. 1897, § 10627, as claimant of the fund garnished, has the burden of sustaining his claim.—Jackson v. People's Savings Bank, 120 Mich. 702.

¶ 363. When the intervener claims an assignment of a claim prior in point of time to the institution of garnishment proceedings, the burden of proving priority rests with him, and such is a reasonable application of the rule that the burden of proof should rest with the party who is presumed to be in possession of the facts.—Burnham v. Home Ins. Co., 119 Mich. 588.

¶ 364. Where upon intervention in a garnishment proceeding the garnishee defendant paid the fund into court, and the parties agreed to try the case upon the theory that the intervening claimant should be considered the plaintiff and the original plaintiff the defendant, a charge that the burden of proof was on the plaintiff, was correct.—Kahn v. Minthorn, 178 Mich. 312.

¶ 365. In garnishment proceedings evidence that the money due was the purchase price for beans grown on a farm belonging to the defendant's wife, that she had made inquiry concerning the price of the beans and that her husband had taken the beans to market without any definite statement on his part as to the ownership, is sufficient to show the property in the wife as an intervening claimant.—Bullard v. Avery, 126 Mich. 711.

XII. RELEASE OR DISCHARGE OF GARNISHEE; VOLUNTARY PAYMENT.

§ 116. Release and discharge as garnishee; bonds.

[Note. In a sense a payment before service of the writ is a discharge or release. More technically it extinguishes the debt and leaves no ground for garnishment. See ante §§ 5, 20.]

Rights and liabilities of garnishee towards principal parties in the action resulting from the service of the writ and the judgment, see ante IX, X.

Accountability to true creditor after payment, see ante § 113.

Discharge by paying into court, see post § 117.

Effect of payment before judgment or under invalid judgment, see post §§ 118, 119.

Inefficacy of former defective garnishment as discharge, see ante ¶ 341.

Payment before service as bar to attainment of jurisdiction, see ante ¶ 20.

Execution against sureties on release bond, see ante § 89.

Bond to release and discontinue garnishment, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 44; Comp. L. 1915, § 13165.

Effect of judgment as release and acquittal, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 35; Comp. L. 1915, § 13156.

§ 117. Right to pay into court.

See also ante ¶ 339.

Necessity of payment into court in order to interplead, see ante ¶ 361.

General law of payments into court, see Payment, I, B, IV.

¶ 366. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 10627, a defendant in garnishment may at once file the disclosure admitting his liability, pay the money into court and then relieve himself from liability for interest; and the failure of the garnishee to avail himself of this statute makes him liable for interest.—Stephens v. Pennsylvania Casualty Co., 135 Mich. 189.

¶ 367. A garnishee defendant who has made disclosure, showing that B was a claimant, and the latter was cited but failed to appear and make good his claim, may set up such garnishment proceedings as a bar pro tanto in an action by B, to the extent of money paid into court for the benefit of other creditors whose claims were allowed, since Comp. L. 1897, § 1017 expressly provides that in such case the garnishee shall be discharged.—Bryant v. Wilcox, 137 Mich. 669.

§ 118. Right to pay before judgment.

Effect of payment before valid service of writ, see also ante ¶ 183.

Right to pay before suit commenced but after informal notice that one would be commenced, effect of such notice, see Notice and Record of Title, I.

Plaintiff as agent of principal defendant to receive goods deliverable under contract, see Jud. Act, chap. XXVIII, § 22; Comp. L. 1915, § 13148.

¶ 368. When garnishment proceedings are dropped on disclosure and are not carried to judgment the garnishee acts at his peril in making payment to the plaintiff.—Hitchcock v. Miller, 48 Mich. 603.

¶ 369. If a promissory note owned by the principal defendant is garnished after maturity, the garnishee's liability becomes fixed by the disclosure, and he will be protected in paying over the money after judgment against the principal defendant without waiting for a formal judgment against himself. Comp. Laws 1871, § 6445 (How St., § 8037).— Somers v. Losey, 48 Mich. 294.

§ 119. Payment under void judgment.

Accountability to true creditor, see also ante § 113.

GAS.

TREATS of manufacture and distribution to the general public of illuminating or fuel gas.

Analysis.

§ 1. In general; franchises and corporations.
§ 2. Connections, service and rates.
§ 3. ——Regulation by the public.
§ 4. Injuries from gas or use of gas.

[Note. The portions of the topic Electricity which correspond to this should be consulted for such analogies as it may contain.]

§ 1. In general; franchises and corporations.

Franchises in general, granting power, construction and effect, conditions, and transfer, see Franchises.

Powers of municipalities to provide for public lighting or to own gas producing and selling systems, see Municipal Corporations.

Nature of municipal function exercised in providing by contract for gas service, see Municipal Corporations, III, VIII.

Right to lay pipes as easement, see Easements § 2.

Mandamus to compel grant of permit to use streets, see Mandamus, III.

Crimes against or relating to gas pipes and lines, see Crimes; Indictment.

General law of corporations, see Corporations.

Incorporation of gas companies, see Comp. L. 1915, § 9017.

Consolidations of gas lighting corporations, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8571 et seq.

Statutes relating to pipe line corporations, see Comp. L. 1915, chap. 163.

¶ 1. The statute (Comp. L. 1871, chap. 96, How. St., §§ 4168-4181) for the incorporation of gas companies contemplates that permission to lay pipe in the streets will not be refused or burdened unreasonably.—People ex rel. Maybury v. Mutual Gas-Light Co. of Detroit, 38 Mich. 154.

¶ 2. The right to lay gas pipes in the streets is not a state franchise, but a local easement resting only on a contract or license, the violation of which does not concern the state and is open to legal remedy.—People ex rel. Maybury v. Mutual Gas-Light Co. of Detroit, 88 Mich. 154.

¶ 3. An ordinance authorizing a gas company to supply the city declared that, if it should enter into any combination with any company concerning rates, the ordinance should be void, and if it sold its property, franchises or privileges to any other gas company, it should forfeit its property. The company mortgaged its property and afterwards made an arrangement with another company to divide the city between them. On foreclosure of the mortgage the company's property, rights and franchises were bought in by an individual who transferred it to a new corporation. On a bill to enjoin both companies from supplying the city, it was held that they could not be subjected to the forfeiture of the city's consent to supply gas, or of their property, as such a measure of damages was not recognized either at law or in equity, and the bill was accordingly dismissed.—Detroit v. Mutual Gas-Light Co., 43 Mich. 594.

¶ 4. It is incumbent upon a purchaser of the franchise of a gas company organized to supply gas to a given city, which franchise, by its terms, is notice that certain of its essential features are limited to a period of time which has elapsed at the time of the purchase, to examine the records at hand for the purpose of discovering what new arrangements were made with the city at the expiration of such period, and if he fails, through no misrepresentation of the seller, to make such examination, he is estopped from complaining that certain corporate privileges, which he believed to be perpetual, were limited by subsequent agreements.—Lewis v. Weidenfeld, 114 Mich. 581.

Regulations of service, see post § 3.
Construction of rate ordinance, see post ¶ 10.
Measure and elements of damages for unlawful disconnection and removal of meter, see Damages ¶ 470.
Right to recover money paid for service at excessive or illegal rates as money illegally exacted, see Payment, VI.

¶ 5. A gas company is of a public nature if it exercises its rights by virtue of a state law and local ordinances; and wherever, within its assigned limits, it has connected its mains and service pipes with the pipes and fixtures of individuals, it is bound to supply them with gas, on reasonable conditions, when they ask for it.—Williams v. Mutual Gas Co., 52 Mich. 499.

¶ 6. A gas company can require those who wish for gas to give security for the payment thereof, or to deposit a fair sum in advance, as a reasonable condition to supplying them. So held where the consumer used about sixty dollars' worth a week, and the company required him to keep one hundred dollars on deposit with them. But the requirement that the consumer should also make a special contract with them would be unnecessary, as the law would imply whatever contract was needed.—Williams v. Mutual Gas Co., 52 Mich. 499.

¶ 7. A gas company has the right to remove its meter from a consumer's premises on the consumer's failure to pay the cost of the service pipe in accordance with the agreement under which the meter was put in place, just as it might do for failure to pay for gas used, and may maintain replevin if delivery is denied.—Detroit Gas Co. v. Moreton Truck & Storage Co., 111 Mich. 401.

¶ 8. Where a citizen using gas for fuel purposes is lawfully charged eighty cents per thousand feet, he cannot bring a bill to enjoin unjust discrimination on the ground that the gas company is charging only sixty cents for gas for power purposes.—Boerth v. Detroit City Gas Co., 152 Mich. 654.

Application of restrictions to corporate successor, see ante § 1.
Public service regulations in general, see Public Service.
Municipal regulative power, see Municipal Corporations, IX.
Reasonableness of rate regulations by ordinance or by the Railroad Commission, see Municipal Corporations, V, IX; Public Service.
Judicial review of rate regulations, see Public Service.

¶ 9. Municipalities may not act arbitrarily or captiously in fixing the rates required of a gas company as a condition for use of the streets, but when a reasonable condition upon the use of the street is imposed the public utility is at liberty to accept or reject it, and, if it rejects, it may not occupy the streets, and if already in possession under an expired franchise may be ousted.—City of Kalamazoo v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 200 Mich. 146.

¶ 10. Where an ordinance admitting a gas company to the streets prescribes that it shall not charge over ninety cents per 1,000 feet for gas, the company is thereby authorized to charge any figure up to ninety cents.—Boerth v. Detroit City Gas Co., 152 Mich. 654.

§ 4. Injuries from gas or use of gas.

¶ 1. Money remitted by one brother to another for relief of an indigent and imbecile sister, and disbursed by the latter brother through the sister's daughter is a gift and not a debt, and therefore is improperly included in a mortgage given by the daughter to cover further advances by the disbursing brother; where it appears on conflicting evidence that a mortgage was made to include it in order to protect the sister from other children, and that the mortgage was made by her as guardian under judicial sanction; and on a bill to redeem and for an account such sum originally intended as a gift and included in the mortgage by defendant's wrongful act was deducted.—Gordon v. McGinnis, 92 Mich. 97.

¶ 2. Under the circumstances of the case, certain allowances made to a widow by her father-in-law, who held her distributive share of her husband's estate, were held to be allowances and not payments on her share where the sum was within the income realized and no other sum was paid for support.—In re Ward's Estate, 73 Mich. 220.

¶ 3. A payment of money by an aged parent to a child held to be a gift or advancement, and not made in consideration of future support.—Moeller v. Notter, 184 Mich. 355.

¶ 4. Where a father deposits money in a bank and a certificate is indorsed upon the ledger sheet of a bank ledger stating that the sum deposited to the account belongs to the father and daughter jointly, and that it is understood that each may withdraw on his or her individual order during their joint lives and that any balance remaining upon the death of either shall go to the survivor, and signed by both, a gift inter vivos of the property of the father, and not a testamentary disposition thereof is created, and it is immaterial that the father retains the pass book in his possession.—Negaunee Nat. Bank v. Le Beau, 195 Mich. 502.

¶ 5. A voluntary deed is good as between the parties and successors claiming in the right of the grantor.—Warren v. Tobey, 32 Mich. 45; Wallace v. Harris, 32 Mich. 380; Gale v. Gould, 40 Mich. 515; Barber v. Milner, 43 Mich. 248.

¶ 6. In an action upon a note no further consideration need be shown for the transfer thereof than that the transferee was the daughter of the payee who gave it to her during his last illness.—Latourette v. McKeon, 104 Mich. 156.

§ 3. Conditions.

Irrevocability, see post §§ 8, 26.

Effect of conditions and reservations, see post § 23.

¶ 7. Testimony that the fiancée received as a Christmas present from the fiancé a watch with her initials engraved upon it, indicates that it is her absolute property and the giver is not entitled to the property upon termination of the engagement.—Richmond v. Nye, 126 Mich. 602.

¶ 8. The doctrine requiring the return of presents where the recipient breaks an engagement to marry the giver has no application to a case where the parties mutually agree to break the engagement and enter into an agreement recognizing the right of the recipient in the presents.—Richmond v. Nye, 126 Mich. 602.

¶ 9. An attempt to sustain an assignment of a mortgage by a mother to her son as a gift inter vivos fails where it appears that it was given upon the understanding that the mother should have all payments made thereon during her lifetime, and only the amount remaining unpaid at her death to go to the assignee.—Snyder v. Snyder, 131 Mich. 658.

¶ 10. A statement signed by a decedent that he was about to leave town and if anything should happen to him his wife should have his property is insufficient on its face to constitute a gift inter vivos, since it is upon condition, and such a gift must be not only immediate, but absolute and irrevocable.—In re Reh's Estate, 196 Mich. 210.

§ 4. Gift causa mortis.

Public policy as to gifts causa mortis, see post ¶ 98.

Evidence of intent, see post § 9.

Sufficiency of evidence of the gift, see post § 33.

Necessity and sufficiency of delivery, see post III.

¶ 11. It is not essential to a gift causa mortis that the donor is in extremis and certain of speedy death, but it is sufficient if he is apprehensive of death from present malady or imminent peril, as from a necessary surgical operation which he intends to voluntarily undergo in hope of relief.—In re Reh's Estate, 196 Mich. 210.

¶ 12. A gift causa mortis is limited to personal property and may be made without writings, provided the evidence of what was said and done established the requisites for its validity.—In re Reh's Estate, 196 Mich. 210.

¶ 13. Where the owner of a certificate of deposit, in anticipation of death, delivered the certificate to his wife with the intention of giving her the entire fund in the event of his death, there is a complete gift causa mortis, subject only to revocation by his recovery.—State Bank of Croswell v. Johnson, 151 Mich. 538.

§ 5. Subjects of gift.

Validity of gift of unstamped draft, see Execution of Instruments ¶ 22.

¶ 14. The gift, by a father to his minor son, of a contract for the purchase of land, which he had before made in his son's name without his knowledge, will not entitle the son to recover back from the vendor the payment which the father had before made on the contract. The right to repudiate a contract is not a subject of gift.—Armitage v. Widoe, 36 Mich. 124.

¶ 15. Gifts causa mortis of choses in action are not prohibited.—Ellis v. Secor, 31 Mich. 185.

¶ 16. No mere contract, liability or obligation of the party himself can be the subject of a gift causa mortis by him; and therefore an unaccepted bank check, which, if not paid, merely creates a liability against the drawer, cannot be valid as a gift by him causa mortis. —Second Nat. Bank of Detroit v. Williams, 13 Mich. 282.

¶ 17. The doctrine of donatio mortis causa extends to notes, bonds, certificates of stock, certificates of deposit and other choses in action.—In re Morse's Estate, 170 Mich. 114; Caldwell v. Goodenough, Id.

¶ 18. A leasehold interest for a term of years, held not to pass as a gift causa mortis. —In re Reh's Estate, 196 Mich. 210.

¶ 19. The fact that the law of survivorship does not apply in the case of joint ownership of personal property, does not affect the right of the donor to make a gift to his surviving wife.—State Bank of Croswell v. Johnson, 151 Mich. 538.

¶ 20. A promise on consideration by a son to a father to pay a daughter a sum on the father's death is a chose in action subject to gift in praesenti between father and daughter, and the agreement of the son in the presence of both father and daughter to pay the daughter completes the transfer.—Ebel v. Piehl, 134 Mich. 64.

§ 6. Executory gifts or promises to give.

Binding promise or promise of gift, see also Contracts ¶ 435.

¶ 21. A gift resting merely in intention, even though evidenced by a promise, cannot be enforced and may be recalled.—Sanilac County Sup'rs v. Auditor General, 68 Mich. 659.

¶ 22. One who took a promissory note with knowledge at the time that the maker then deceased gave it to the payee as the payee's share in the maker's estate cannot enforce the note against the estate; since it is in effect nothing but an executory gift.—Conrad v. Manning's Estate, 125 Mich. 77.

§ 7. Kind of gift; inter vivos or causa mortis.
Condition as index of gift causa mortis, see ante ¶¶ 9, 10.
Requisites of intent, see post, II.

¶ 23. Where a gift is made with the intent that it shall take effect immediately and irrevocably and is fully executed by an unconditional delivery it is valid as a gift inter vivos though at the time the donor is in extremis and dies soon after.—Keller v. McConville, 175 Mich. 479.

¶ 24. Where the owner of a certificate of deposit directed that it should be changed and made payable to himself and wife, or the survivor of them, the transaction will be regarded as partaking of the nature both of a gift inter vivos and of a gift causa mortis.—State Bank of Croswell v. Johnson, 151 Mich. 538.

¶ 25. A father transferred land to one of his sons, taking in payment his son's note secured by mortgage on the land, and payable four years after the father's death to his legal heirs, the interest during the grantor's life payable to him. Held, that this was a gift inter vivos of the note of the heirs, and that at the grantor's death the proceeds of the note went to his heirs and not to his administrator.—Love v. Francis, 63 Mich. 181.

II. INTENT TO GIVE.

Concurrence of intent with delivery, see post § 11.
Presumptions and evidence as to intent, see post §§ 10, 11.
Effect of executory promise to make gift, see ante § 6.

¶ 26. To make a good inter vivos gift, there must be a delivery, actual or symbolical, of the subject-matter, unless it is already in the possession of the donee, with an intent on the part of the donor to presently devest himself of all title and dominion over the same, and an acceptance by the donee.—Chamberlain v. Eddy, 154 Mich. 593.

¶ 27. To constitute a valid gift mortis causa the gift must be full and complete at the time it is claimed to have been made, and possession of the property or the recognized evidence of its ownership carrying title must be given by the donor to the donee, with the intent of the party delivering up such possession to transfer complete ownership by gift to the other party, passing from donor to donee legal power, title, and dominion over the thing intended to be given.—In re Morse's Estate, 170 Mich. 114; Caldwell v. Goodenough, Id.

¶ 28. An alleged gift claimed by a daughter to have been made by her father, consisting of more than half his property, must, in order to be sustained against the father's estate, be consummated by a delivery, either actual or constructive, such as places the property beyond the control of the father, and his intention in the matter must be clearly apparent.—Campbell v. Sech, 155 Mich. 634.

§ 9. Presumptions and evidence.

See also ante ¶ 28.
Evidence as to delivery and acceptance, see post § 20.
Evidence of gift in general, see post §§ 31-33.
Of mistake in amount of certificate of deposit intended to operate as gift, see post ¶ 142.
General law of evidence, see Evidence.

¶ 29. An intention to make a gift will not be presumed from the mere fact that a bank deposit was made in the name of another.—Peninsular Savings Bank v. Wineman, 123 Mich. 257.

¶ 30. Testimony by a wife that from her accumulated savings she gave her husband from time to time various sums, sometimes depositing it in his bank account, and that the "understanding" was that he should repay such sums, of which there was no strict account kept but which were testified to have exceeded the amount of his bank balance later checked out to her, will suffice to support a finding that a loan to him and not a gift of her savings was intended.—Sykes v. City Savings Bank, 115 Mich. 321.

¶ 31. Upon the question of whether a father agreed to give a house to a child, the fact that the taxes were assessed against the father is not conclusive evidence, while the fact that the child paid them is a significant circumstance in his favor.—Fairfield v. Barbour, 51 Mich. 57.

¶ 32. A gift inter vivos of a note and mortgage is shown where a mortgagee handed a bundle of papers to another, among which were the papers in question, stating that he wanted the latter to have them, although he did not specifically mention the note and mortgage.—Hoyt v. Gillen, 181 Mich. 509. (Kuhn, Stone and Ostrander, JJ., and McAlvoy, C. J., dissenting.)

¶ 33. A gift causa mortis must, in order to be valid, be consummated by an actual or constructive delivery, and it must be clearly established that it was the donor's intention to place the property beyond his control.—Lerche v. Kishpaugh, 180 Mich. 617.

¶ 34. A conveyance in absolute form by a man 84 years old to his son-in-law cannot be sustained where it appears, from the fact that the son was at that time indebted to the grantor, the fact that the deed recited a substantial consideration, and the further fact that the claimed consideration was an agreement to furnish support, that the consideration was inadequate, and, from the fact that the grantor understood and requested that grantee would pay certain sums to other children, it further appears that the conveyance was not intended to be an absolute one.—Ladensack v. Johnson, 143 Mich. 535.

¶ 35. The deceased before his death, by suicide, put certain certificates of deposit in his sister's safe, and told her she might get the money on them and use it, and send some to him if he needed it. The evidence showed a veiled purpose on the part of deceased to commit suicide, and to give this and other property to his favorite brother and sister. Held, under this and other evidence and circumstances, that there was no intent to transfer title absolutely so as to make a good gift inter vivos.—Chamberlain v. Eddy, 154 Mich. 593. (Blair, Moore and McAlvay, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 36. The deceased had an officer of the bank write upon her savings bank book that in the event of her death, the account should be payable to her daughter. Shortly before her death she sent for the daughter, handed her the bank book, and said she wanted to give it to her. The daughter showed the book to the bank before the death of the deceased. The deceased after the delivery of the book told friends she had divided her property. Held, these facts were sufficient to support a finding of the trial court that the present ownership of the fund was intended to be conveyed to the daughter.—Union Trust & Savings Bank v. Tyler, 161 Mich. 561.

¶ 37. Upon the question whether a donor has made a valid delivery of personal property to the donee, her subsequent declarations and admissions are admissible to strengthen other evidence that she intended to part with the title.—Garrison v. Union Trust Co., 164 Mich. 345.

§ 10. Questions of fact and instructions.

See also post ¶ 149.
On delivery and acceptance, see post § 21.
As to validity and effect or existence of gift, see post § 34.

¶ 38. In a suit by an administrator against the maker of a note delivered by the intestate to a priest to pay for masses, held, that the question of whether the intestate intended a gift or a bequest was for the jury.—Malone v. Doyle, 56 Mich. 222.

¶ 39. Where an administrator claimed that money evidenced by pass books handed to him by the deceased was a gift, but where there was no evidence showing either a promise or a subsequent delivery; an instruction that a gift required an intent to transfer title presently to the deposits named in the pass books, and that the intent must be manifested in some usual and well understood manner, as by the delivery of the books with words indicative of an intent to pass title at once, was not erroneous as excluding the theory that delivery might have been made subsequently to the use of the words showing a gift.—Casserly v. Casserly, 123 Mich. 44.

Change of possession or lack of it as factor of proof, see post § 33.
Under contracts of sale, see Sales.
Under statute of frauds, see Frauds, Statute of.

¶ 40. A gift not completed by delivery to the donee is void for want of consideration.—Powell v. Eckler, 96 Mich. 538.

¶ 41. To constitute a sufficient delivery to support a gift, there must be an absolute delivery, with the intention of making a gift and passing title, and the delivery must be according to the nature of the property.—Shepard v. Shepard, 164 Mich. 183.

¶ 42. To constitute a valid gift inter vivos, there must be a gratuitous and absolute transfer of the property from the donor to the donee, taking effect immediately, and fully executed by a delivery of the property by the donor and an acceptance thereof by the donee.—Garrison v. Union Trust Co., 164 Mich. 345; Shepard v. Shepard, 164 Mich. 183.

¶ 43. In the case of a gift inter vivos or causa mortis there must be either an actual or constructive delivery, and the donor must part with his dominion over the property so that no further act is required of him to vest the title in the donee.—State Bank of Croswell v. Johnson, 151 Mich. 538.

¶ 44. To constitute a valid gift inter vivos, it must take effect at once and pass entirely beyond the control of the donor.—Snyder v. Snyder, 131 Mich. 658.

¶ 45. Plaintiff's intestate, a few days before his decease, put into the hands of defendant a sum of money, with instructions to pay certain bills with a portion of it, and to dispose of the balance to suit himself. Defendant paid out a small sum before the intestate's death, and it was held that there was no absolute disposition of the money by the intestate to prevent its becoming assets of his estate.—Bigelow v. Paton, 4 Mich. 170.

¶ 46. An agreement by the holder of a note with the maker that only the interest need be paid during the life of the holder and that on the death of the holder it would be "his" (the maker's) is of no force as a gift, where the note remains in the holder's hands.—Trombly v. Klersy, 141 Mich. 73.

§ 12. Delivery to or through intermediary.

¶ 47. Property put by a father in the hands of a third person to be delivered to his daughter upon his death is sufficiently appropriated to belong to her after his death occurs.—Bostwick v. Mahaffy, 48 Mich. 342.

¶ 48. The delivery of a mortgage by its owner to one person, with instructions to deliver the same to another after the owner's death, is a sufficient delivery to meet the requirements of a valid gift inter vivos.—Hagerman v. Wigent, 108 Mich. 192.

¶ 49. Where a piano previously given is at the donee's request exchanged for another which is moved into the donor's house where the donee lives, there is a sufficient delivery of the second instrument from donor to donee.—Colby v. Portman, 115 Mich. 95.

§ 13. Retention or resumption of possession or joint possession.

¶ 50. Although delivery is essential to perfect a gift, it is not necessary that the donee should retain the property in his possession, and the subsequent possession by the donor, while it may in some cases tend to throw suspicion upon the transaction as being in fraud of creditors, is not necessarily incompatible with the donee's dominion over the property, and if satisfactorily explained, will not divest the donee of the title to the property when once it has been acquired by him.—Shepard v. Shepard, 164 Mich. 183.

¶ 51. A father handed over securities to his two sons, who marked them and left them with the father, and they were put in the father's safe. The sons had access at any time to them and for years treated them as their own. Held, there was a valid delivery so as to constitute a good gift.—Shepard v. Shepard, 164 Mich. 188.

¶ 52. If there has been an actual or constructive delivery of the subject-matter of the gifts, with the intent to vest title, the fact that the donor retains possession of the same for any purpose is not sufficient to defeat the gift; nor is the gift defeated by the fact that the donor reserved to himself the use or income from the subject-matter of the gift.—Shepard v. Shepard, 164 Mich. 183.

¶ 53. There may be a good gift inter vivos of personal property despite the fact that the donor keeps possession of it until her death.—Garrison v. Union Trust Co., 164 Mich. 345.

§ 14. Taking in trust for donee.

Necessity of acceptance by donee, see post ¶ 71.
Putting title in donee's name, see post § 15.
General law of trusts, see Trusts.

¶ 54. Under some circumstances a donor may constitute himself a trustee for the donee, and in such case no further delivery is necessary.—Shepard v. Shepard, 164 Mich. 183.

¶ 55. To constitute a gift inter vivos there must be a delivery of the thing given, either actual or constructive, but it need not be delivered to the donee directly, though such a disposition must be made in the donee's favor as effectuates the object and places the jus disponendi beyond the donor's power to recall. Under some circumstances the donor himself may constitute himself trustee of the thing for the donee's benefit.—Love v. Francis, 63 Mich. 181.

¶ 56. Placing money or property in another's name is not in itself an irrevocable gift to him; much less is an arrangement for convenience between a bank and a depositor whereby the latter deposits his own money in the name of a third person but subject to his own check.—Davis v. Lenawee County Sav. Bank, 53 Mich. 163.

¶ 57. A constructive delivery of a note payable to the heirs of the donor is effected by recording the mortgage which secured the note, notwithstanding the donor kept the note and foreclosed on default in interest.—Love v. Francis, 63 Mich. 181.

§ 16. Choses in action, deposits and partial interests.

¶ 58. In the case of the gift of a chose in action, the law requires a written assignment, or some equivalent instrument to effect the transfer.—Shepard v. Shepard, 164 Mich. 183.

¶ 59. A constructive delivery of a note to his heirs as donees was effected by a grantor's receiving it and recording a mortgage to secure it, the note being payable to his "heirs" and being a gift by him of the proceeds to them though he kept it in his possession until his death and meanwhile foreclosed the mortgage.—Love v. Francis, 63 Mich. 181.

¶ 60. A gift inter vivos of a note and mortgage may be established without an indorsement of the note or a written assignment of the mortgage.—Hoyt v. Gillen, 181 Mich. 509. (Kuhn, Stone and Ostrander, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 61. The delivery of a certificate of deposit with intent to donate the fund represented by it, is a valid gift of the deposit, although it is not indorsed.—State Bank of Croswell v. Johnson, 151 Mich. 538.

¶ 62. A valid gift of the money deposited in a savings bank may be effected by the delivery to the donee of the depositor's passbook, with intent to give the donee the deposit represented by it.—Union Trust & Savings Bank v. Tyler, 161 Mich. 561.

¶ 63. Though delivery and acceptance are essential to the validity of a gift inter vivos, where tangible personal property, admitting of actual delivery, is concerned, and probably where the notes or bond of a third person are the subject of the gift; yet where the gift is only a part of the sum due, and is made to the debtors themselves, it does not admit of a technical delivery, and the intention of the donor ought not, on that ground, to be defeated.—Green v. Langdon, 28 Mich. 221.

¶ 64. A gift of an insurance policy to be exchanged by the donor's consent for one drawn according to the donor's wishes, held to be sufficiently consummated by delivery, when the policy was handed to the donee and returned, to be forwarded to the insurance company by the donor's order, and exchanged without objection on the part of the donor.—Crittenden v. Phoenix Mut. Life Ins. Co., 41 Mich. 442.

¶ 65. The delivery of a book of deposit in a savings bank or a certificate of deposit, though not indorsed, with intent on the part of the party making the delivery to donate the fund and give the amount of money represented thereby to the donee, is a valid gift of the money deposited.—In re Morse's Estate, 170 Mich. 114; Caldwell v. Goodenough, Id.

Change of beneficiary in fraternal society as gift, see Fraternal Beneficiary Associations ¶ 132.

¶ 66. Indorsements of part payment made upon a mortgage at the direction and in the presence of the mortgagee, as a species of testamentary act, in consideration of kindness received from those who were bound by the mortgage and in accordance with his deliberate and expressed intention to make a gift of his property to them, are, in the absence of any rule of law to prevent his intention from taking effect, sustained as an extinguishment or forgiving of the mortgage debt to that extent.—Green v. Langdon, 28 Mich. 221.

¶ 67. Delivery is no more necessary for gifts causa mortis than for any gifts, and though at common law tradition or some equivalent seems to have been necessary to pass chattels by gift, yet it was always competent to transfer them by writing.—Ellis v. Secor, 31 Mich. 185.

¶ 68. A declaration written on a slate, by a woman who died alone, was found after the writer's death, subscribed with her name and running as follows: "I wish Dr. L. S. Ellis to take possession of all, both personal, real and mixed. Rachael Hill. I am so sick I believe I shall die. Look in valise." In the valise was this paper, addressed by the deceased to Dr. Ellis: "I wish you to take possession of all my effects, to do with them as you see fit. Dunlap has the Higgins and Parr papers; the rest you will find in my valise. I have paid Dunlap $34 (thirty-four dollars) in advance. Push these according to your own judgment. All I have said about them is true. If James H. Wing should ever call on you, give him $1,000, or whatever your judgment dictates, but to no one else, for I have given the others all I ever intend to. Rachael Hill. Manistee, December 19, 1869. To Dr. L. S. Ellis." Held, that if this paper had been actually delivered it would have been a sufficient assignment on its face to pass title; that deceased did all in her power under the circumstances to create a gift causa mortis, and fully intended it, and that her written declaration must prevail as a valid appointment to the uses indicated as fully as if there had been manual delivery of the securities.—Ellis v. Secor, 31 Mich. 185.

¶ 69. The retained possession by a donor of a voluntary writing of gift is not inconsistent with its enforcement, if intended to be effectual and if capable of transferring title by its terms; but where, if delivered, it would not have been operative as an assignment, it will fail because amounting to no more than an executory agreement.—Ellis v. Secor, 31 Mich. 185.

¶ 70. The indorsement of a certificate of deposit representing a fund, and the delivery thereof with intent to make a gift, as specified in the indorsement, is as effective to pass title as if a new certificate is issued in accordance with the indorsement.—State Bank of Croswell v. Johnson, 151 Mich. 538.

§ 18. Acceptance.

Time for acceptance, see post § 19.
Presumption of acceptance, see post § 20.

¶ 71. Acceptance by the donee is necessary to perfect a gift, except where the donor makes himself trustee for the donee.—Higman v. Stewart, 38 Mich. 513.

¶ 72. Where the donor and donee reside together, as in the case of husband and wife, parent and child, etc., it is not required in order to make a good delivery that the thing given should be removed from their common residence.—Shepard v. Shepard, 164 Mich. 183.

§ 19. Time for acceptance.

¶ 73. The acceptance of a gift need not be immediate, but is sufficient if made before the gift is revoked by death or otherwise.—Love v. Francis, 63 Mich. 181.

§ 20. Presumptions and evidence.

Presumption as to acceptance of instrument when delivered, see Execution of Instruments, III.

¶ 74. Where a gift, otherwise complete, is beneficial to the donee, an acceptance will be implied.—O'Neil v. Greenwood, 106 Mich. 572.

¶ 75. Acceptance of a beneficial gift being presumed unless the contrary appears, such a gift was valid, where the subject of it, notes, was delivered to donor's widow as a gift to her and two other donees.—In re Dunlap's Estate, 94 Mich. 11.

¶ 76. In the absence of proof that a donee did not accept a gift which was secured by a mortgage, the rule is that a gift to the donee will be presumed to have been accepted.—Holmes v. McDonald, 119 Mich. 563.

¶ 77. Acceptance of a gift of money in the bank will be presumed, though the donee did not know of it until after the death of the donor, where the donor wrote a check, which was taken to the bank, placed to the credit of the donee, and donee's pass book kept in the bank with other customers' books subject to call by such donee.—Bangs v. Browns, 149 Mich. 478.

¶ 78. Reception and retention of a deed of gift are not conclusive evidence of its acceptance. There must be intelligent assent.—Higman v. Stewart, 38 Mich. 513.

¶ 79. Acceptance of a gift of a note payable to "heirs" is evidenced by the fact that it was given by a son as the price of land bought from the donor of the note and that such son sold his interest in the note as one of the "heirs" of the donor.—Love v. Francis, 63 Mich. 181.

¶ 80. Less positive and equivocal testimony is required to establish the delivery of a gift from a father to his children than between persons not related.—Love v. Francis, 63 Mich. 181.

¶ 81. It requires less positive and unequivocal testimony to establish the delivery of a gift by a parent to a child than it does between persons not related, and in cases where there is no suggestion of fraud or undue influence very slight evidence will suffice.—Union Trust & Savings Bank v. Tyler, 161 Mich. 561; In re Morse's Estate, 170 Mich. 114; Caldwell v. Goodenough, Id.

¶ 82. A gift to a wife is not proven where her husband in his lifetime, without her knowledge directed his bank to transfer his deposit in the bank to her whereupon a pass book was issued in her name and retained by the husband until his death, and where the husband never afterwards had a deposit with the bank but made a deposit to the credit of the wife, and where three checks were paid out of the account, two being signed by the wife at the request of the husband and the proceeds used by him, and one being paid without her signature upon the statement of the husband that it was not convenient to obtain it.—Peninsular Savings Bank v. Wineman, 123 Mich. 257.

¶ 83. Where a man, who had been taking care of his mother, took away a broken stove and replaced it with a new one, saying to a third person that he wanted to have a good one there for his mother, it was held that the statement, by itself, was insufficient evidence of a gift to her.—Nugent v. Foster, 49 Mich. 434.

¶ 84. The delivery of certain notes and mortgages to defendant to take present effect, is properly found in defendant's favor by the jury in an action of trover by the donor's administrator, wherein it was shown that at the time of making what was designed to be an ante mortem distribution of his estate they were handed to defendant, a son, that there was a general assignment to him of all "mortgages, notes and demands which I may die seized of * * * to be paid in accordance with the amounts specified in notes to my several children" shortly before that, and where the son carried out the plan.—Beardslee v. Reeves, 76 Mich. 661.

¶ 85. A debtor in anticipation of death sent an agent to adjust a claim of a creditor to whom he had conveyed land by a deed absolute in form many years before. The agent was also directed to secure a reconveyance of the land, and adjusted the claim and took a quitclaim deed of the land in the name of the debtor's wife. On the agent's return and report of what he had done, and the debtor expressed himself as satisfied, and the debtor thereupon executed a deed to his daughter, his only child, of other land owned by him, such being done to distribute his estate between the wife and the daughter. Held, that the conveyance to the wife was valid as against the daughter's heirs, where no collusion was shown between the wife and the agent, and the agent acted in good faith and in accordance with his instructions, and the debtor could not be presumed to have been ignorant of the action of his agent.—Crittenden v. Canfield, 87 Mich. 152.

¶ 86. Contradictory testimony by the claimant of money as a gift, it having been kept by deceased donor in a box, the claimant testifying before commissioners on claims that there was no delivery or surrender of possession and on the trial in the circuit that there was a delivery of the box and the key and that the gift was to her and another jointly, which another witness testified was not the case and that the gift was solely to her, does not establish a gift causa mortis of money.—People's Sav. Bank v. Look, 95 Mich. 7.

¶ 87. Where unindorsed notes were after the payee's death found in his house among the effects of his housekeeper, her failure to assert her ownership at the time of her executing a sworn petition for another's appointment as special administrator, which petition said that the notes belonged to the estate, her remark at the reading of the payee's will (which compensated her services) that it was not what she had expected, and the fact that the payee, a business man, had made no transfer to her by indorsement or writing, were held conclusive evidence against her claim that the notes had been given to her.—Bellis v. Lyons, 97 Mich. 398.

¶ 88. That money was taken from the room of a sick woman shortly before her death, apparently without her knowledge, does not show a delivery sufficient to establish a gift causa mortis.—Lerche v. Kishpaugh, 180 Mich. 617.

¶ 89. A gift of notes and mortgages inter vivos is defeated by evidence that the giver never parted with possession of the subject-matter or delivered an assignment which it is claimed he made out, that he kept them in his safe and that the donee never saw the notes or mortgages or the assignment and could not state what securities were included.—Chaddock v. Chaddock, 134 Mich. 48.

¶ 90. Delivery of notes by way of gift from a father to his sons is not established by the fact that the father credited them with interest paid to him on the notes, nor by the fact that he took the notes in their names or indorsed them to the sons.—Shepard v. Shepard, 164 Mich. 183.

¶ 91. Plaintiff's aunt at a dinner party took a diamond ring from her finger and handed it to plaintiff, saying, "I will give you this ring, Jim." Plaintiff slipped it on his finger and remarked that it did not quite fit but that he could get a jeweler to fix it. He also thanked her for the ring. The aunt then said, "Jim, let me wear it till I am through with it, but the ring is yours." She kept it in her possession until her death. She stated on subsequent occasions that the ring belonged to plaintiff. Held, that there was a valid gift inter vivos to plaintiff.—Garrison v. Union Trust Co., 164 Mich. 345.

(4 Mich. Dig. 18)

¶ 92. Evidence showing that the decedent deposited money in a bank, receiving certificates of deposit therefor in the name of his brother, with admissions of decedent that he was loaning money to his brother, does not show a gift of such deposits to the brother, where the certificates never came into the brother's hands, but were retained and used by decedent as his own property.—Lattin v. Lattin's Estate, 156 Mich. 223.

§ 21. Questions of fact and instructions.

As to validity, effect or existence of gift, see post § 34.

¶ 93. Upon the question whether a donor has made a good gift inter vivos, the trial court properly refuses to instruct the jury that if the donor kept possession of the property until her death, no valid gift to the donee took place.—Garrison v. Union Trust Co., 164 Mich. 345.

¶ 94. A gift by a father to his son of certain notes and mortgages, accompanied by actual delivery and retained possession, is valid, and vests the title to the securities in the son as against the heirs of the donor, or the administrator of his estate.—Beardslee v. Reeves, 76 Mich. 661.

¶ 95. The expressed wish of a deceased wife as to the disposal of her estate cannot be maintained either as a will or as a donatio causa mortis in prejudice to the statutory right of her husband to one-half of the residue of her personal property, after deducting necessary expenses. How. St. § 5847, subdv. 7.—Hughes v. Pealer, 80 Mich. 540.

§ 23. ——Conditions or reserved rights.
Conditional gift, see ante § 8.

¶ 96. An absolute gift of land made subject to a parol trust in the grantor's favor has the effect of an unconditional gift, the trust being void.—Palmer v. Sterling, 41 Mich. 218.

¶ 97. A solvent donor's parol gift of land in 1859 followed by immediate, continued and adverse possession in the donee and in reliance thereon by the making of improvements by her, was sustained in 1882 as against subsequent grants and incumbrances from the donor, except such as were acquiesced in by the donee while the title stood in the donor's name.—Potter v. Smith, 68 Mich. 212.

§ 25. Gifts in view of death.
Burden of proof and evidence, see post §§ 30-33.
Court and jury questions, see post § 34.

¶ 98. Gifts causa mortis are not to be held void as contrary to public policy where the facts are clearly shown, nor can the law properly be said to treat these with disfavor, except in the sense that such transactions are scrutinized carefully to ascertain whether freely and intelligently done, since there is much room for fraud and mistakes.—Ellis v. Secor, 31 Mich. 185.

§ 26. Revocability.
Conditional gift, see ante § 3.
Irrevocability of delivery, see ante § 11.

¶ 99. That which is purely a gift may be retracted by the donor, even if it is a receipt, or a release of a mortgage, since there is no consideration, the absence of which may be shown even in the presence of a seal.—Green v. Langdon, 28 Mich. 221.

¶ 100. A solvent donor's parol gift of land followed by immediate, continued and adverse possession in donee for more than twenty years, was sustained as against subsequent grants from donor.—Potter v. Smith, 68 Mich. 212.

¶ 101. A gift resting merely in intention, though evidenced by a promise, may be recalled.—Sanilac County Sup'rs v. Auditor General, 68 Mich. 659.

¶ 102. Where the holder of a certificate of deposit gives an equal interest therein to his wife, through an indorsement of a direction upon the certificate to issue a new certificate payable to himself and wife, or to the survivor, he cannot subsequently dispose of his wife's interest in the fund without her consent.—State Bank of Croswell v. Johnson, 151 Mich. 538.

¶ 103. A mortgage by a father to his sons, conditioned upon the payment of annual interest during the life of the father, and the payment of $500 to his daughter upon his death, duly recorded and followed by statements made by the father to the daughter that she was to be paid said amount after his death, constituted a gift inter vivos, which it was beyond the power of the father to recall by the discharge of the mortgage and the execution of a new one which omitted the provision for the daughter; and the latter had the right to foreclose the first mortgage upon the failure to make payment to her upon the death of the father.—Holmes v. McDonald, 119 Mich. 563.

§ 27. Unfair or unnatural gifts.
Gift encroaching on statutory rights of surviving spouse, see ante ¶ 95.
Meretricious gifts, see post § 29.
Unfair wills, see Wills.

¶ 104. If a grantor acts understandingly in executing deeds in favor of his son a short time before his death he has a right to so dispose of his property though such disposition may be inequitable to other children.—Reagan v. Murray, 176 Mich. 231.

¶ 105. A transfer of personalty in the nature of a bequest cannot be set aside merely because it shows an unnatural disposition on the donor's part and is wrong in morals, so long as there is no evidence that it was brought about by fraud or undue influence, and that the grantor was not of a sufficiently sound mind to dispose of his property.—Twist v. Babcock, 48 Mich. 513.

¶ 106. Deeds to a second wife and a daughter excluding other children of grantor, are valid, where all the deeds were recorded either upon the day of their execution or within a few days thereafter, and where the testimony failed to show either undue influence or mental incompetency.—Warner v. Warner, 119 Mich. 456.

¶ 107. Where satisfactory provision was made for the widow a gift to a child by a former wife by discharging a mortgage and taking a new one in trust for the child is not fraudulent.—Trabbic v. Trabbic, 142 Mich. 387.

§ 28. Meretricious gifts.

Evidence of undue influence, see post § 32.
Instructions to jury, see post § 34.

¶ 108. A gift is not invalid as against the heirs of the donor because of the existence of illicit relations between him and the donee.—Frank v. Morley's Estate, 106 Mich. 635.

¶ 109. Meretricious relations between the assignor of certain mortgages, and his assignee would not alone, as a matter of law, defeat the assignee's title to the mortgages, claimed by her as a gift in consideration of past faithful services as an employee.—Peirson v. McNeil, 137 Mich. 158.

¶ 110. The question in determining whether a gift has been made is not what the donor had contemplated or intended, but whether his intentions were carried into effect; and to accomplish this an intelligent will directing or assenting to the act done is essential.—Duncombe v. Richards, 46 Mich. 166.

Presumptions as to intent, delivery and acceptance, see ante §§ 9, 20.
Admission of executory gift by insufficient allegations in petition for surrender of property by executor to donee, see Evidence ¶ 2053.

¶ 111. One who claims property as a gift causa mortis and brings suit therefor after the death of the alleged donor has the burden of clearly establishing such ownership.—People's Sav. Bank v. Look, 95 Mich. 7.

¶ 112. Where one, whether a child or stranger is intrusted with funds of another to deposit in his own name or in their joint names, and the funds have been thus treated, no presumption of a gift arises from the fact that the funds are deposited in the name of the alleged donee, especially when originally deposited in the donor's name and withdrawn and redeposited by the donee without the donor's consent.—Campbell v. Sech, 155 Mich. 634.

¶ 113. Mere possession of a mother's savings bank book by a daughter raises no presumption of the daughter's ownership of the same.—Union Trust & Savings Bank v. Tyler, 161 Mich. 561.

¶ 114. Where a gift is claimed to have been made to a spiritual adviser of a person in extremis the burden of proof to show the good faith of the transaction rests upon the donee.—McPherson v. Byrne, 155 Mich. 338.

¶ 115. Successive transfers of property, consisting of mortgages, were procured by a nephew from his uncle within a few days before the latter's death, and while he was in an enfeebled condition and in the absence of his near relatives except the beneficiary. The uncle was eighty-two years old, had made his home with his nephew, and was said to be estranged from his other near relations. He was a temperate and thrifty bachelor who had little society. The nephew was neither temperate nor thrifty and was not a money maker and what he possessed came from gifts of the uncle. Held, that as the assignments were made on the donor's death-bed, they were open to suspicion, and on a bill to set them aside the beneficiary had the burden of showing their fairness.—Duncombe v. Richards, 46 Mich. 166.

¶ 116. Parol evidence is usually needed for applying any gift or sale to the person or thing intended.—Kinney v. Kinney, 34 Mich. 250.

¶ 117. Evidence of a custom among old French settlers to give their farms to eldest sons is not admissible to establish such a gift in a particular case, where no direct evidence of such gift had been given.—Gilman v. Riopelle, 18 Mich. 145.

¶ 118. In a suit involving the right of a son to certain notes and a mortgage, claimed to belong to his father's estate, and which he claims to own through a gift to him by his father of all of his notes and mortgages, a prior deed to the son by his father of his farm, on certain conditions, as also other antecedent transactions of the father looking towards the distribution of his property among his children, are admissible in evidence as bearing upon the intent, nature, extent and character for the later disposition under which the son claims title.—Beardslee v. Reeves, 76 Mich. 661.

¶ 119. The testimony of an alleged donee of a note from a decedent, that, at the time she produced the note in response to the executor's request, she stated that it was hers by gift from the testator, is admissible to rebut any inference of an admission against her ownership, arising from the production of the note in response to such request but so far as direct proof goes it is self serving.—Harris v. Cable, 113 Mich. 192.

¶ 120. An executor is not entitled to have a verdict directed in an action for the conversion of a promissory note alleged to have belonged to the estate, where defendant's claim that the note was a gift to her from testator in his lifetime is supported by evidence that he had deposited to her credit amounts equal to the several payments of interest upon the note on the same days that interest was paid to him, that he had inquired of her in the presence of third parties as to what she wished done with the moneys from such note, that the note bore testator's indorsement, and that defendant produced it, after the testator's death, from among her own private papers.—Harris v. Cable, 113 Mich. 192.

¶ 121. It is evidence against a gift of a promissory note payable to the alleged donor or his order that it bore no indorsement and that after his death the claimant (donee) petitioned for letters on donor's estate stating that he left personal estate of a value which could not have been made up unless such note was regarded as having belonged to him.—Kimball v. Green, 148 Mich. 298.

¶ 122. The receipt by a mortgagee of a smaller sum and the giving of a receipt for full interest on a mortgage each year indicates a gift of the balance of the interest due for those years.—Holmes v. Holmes, 129 Mich. 412.

¶ 123. Upon a question of right of property in a replevin suit, proof of friendly relations between plaintiff's intestate and the defendant who was such intestate's housekeeper, and who claimed certain of the property as a gift, is admissible if there is testimony directly tending to show the gift, otherwise not.—Moore v. Machen, 124 Mich. 216.

¶ 124. In an action by an administrator for the conversion of two certificates of deposit, where the defendant claimed them as a gift, statements of the testator showing a hostile feeling towards defendant, limited to show the relations of the parties, is properly received in evidence to show a state of feeling inconsistent with the gift theory.—Pease v. Jennings, 180 Mich. 682.

Upon an issue as to whether defendant had given a specified sum to plaintiff, which she afterwards intrusted to him for investment, evidence of a promise by defendant "to give" plaintiff a similar sum, made eleven years thereafter, during which period the parties had been living in criminal intimacy, is admissible, having no tendency to support the claim made.—Frank v. Morley's Estate, 106 Mich. 635.

§ 33. Sufficiency of proofs.

As question for jury, see post § 34.
Evidence requisite to decree for rescission or cancellation in general, see Fraud, I, B; Mistake; Duress; Rescission, VI.

¶ 126. Bill by the widow and heir at law of A., against the widow, heirs at law and administrator of B. (who was the father of A.), to compel the conveyance to complainants of certain premises alleged to have been given by B. to A. in consideration of natural affection, but not conveyed. Held, that in such a case conveyance would only be decreed on the most conclusive proof of the gift, and of some satisfactory reason why it was not consummated by a conveyance.—Jones v. Tyler, 6 Mich. 364.

¶ 127. Possession of the premises by A., a son of the donor, subsequent to an alleged gift would be sufficiently explained by the relationship between the parties, and could not avail complainants claiming under the son who had no deed.—Jones v. Tyler, 6 Mich. 364.

¶ 128. In determining whether a gift has been made, the question of change of possession must be considered in connection with the other facts in the case, as where it passes between married persons living together.—Davis v. Zimmerman, 40 Mich. 24.

¶ 129. Evidence of declaration and admissions of the donor are not sufficient to establish a gift, and are only admissible in corroboration of other testimony.—Campbell v. Sech, 155 Mich. 634.

¶ 130. While very slight evidence is required to establish a gift from the parent to a child, where there is no suggestion of fraud or undue influence, yet such rule does not apply where the child stands in a fiduciary relation with the parent, and has access to and control over his property.—Campbell v. Sech, 155 Mich. 634.

¶ 131. Conclusive evidence of a gift from parent to child is not necessary.—Union Trust & Savings Bank v. Tyler, 161 Mich. 561.

¶ 132. Upon the issue whether or not eight hundred dollars deposited in a bank in defendant's name belonged to her as a gift from her father, or to her father's estate, the evidence showed that deceased had bequeathed eight hundred dollars to defendant in his will, and that he had stated that he had given his daughter eight hundred dollars. Held, that this statement by a layman, is as consistent with the idea of a will as of a previous gift.—Campbell v. Sech, 155 Mich. 634.

¶ 133. On a bill to set aside assignments of mortgages made on the grantor's deathbed and claimed by the transferee to have been made as a gift, testimony that the donor, though shown to be a prudent and sensible man, had confidentially disclosed to inferiors and strangers what he intended to do with his property, can give little support to a suspicious case; nor can testimony that he had once handed over to the transferee a box of mortgages, saying: "I give you all my personal property," there being no reason to suppose that he afterwards considered himself divested of the property or that the supposed donee considered himself owner; nor can testimony that after the transfers were made the donor was heard to say that the donee should have his property when he was done with it.—Duncombe v. Richards, 46 Mich. 166.

¶ 134. Evidence that a decedent had stated positively that she had given certain specified property to her sons and had previously declared an intent to give it, and that one of the sons remained at her house until her death, warrants a finding of a complete gift in præsenti, and at all events a finding that all parties understood that there was a complete gift with no intention of revocation and such possession as was possible.—Harris v. Hopkins, 43 Mich. 272.

¶ 135. A church trustee gave his note secured by a mortgage on the property of the church society to raise money which he used in his own business. There was evidence tending to show that the other trustees consented to the mortgage on his assurance that he would pay off certain debts of the society He aided the society largely and probably fulfilled his promise. He afterwards gave as additional security a mortgage on other property, and upon this foreclosure bill against his assignee in bankruptcy was sustained, as the proof tended to show that the money paid by him to the church was by way of donations, and that the original mortgage was given to raise money for him exclusively and not in part for the benefit of the church society.—Carpenter v. Buttrick, 41 Mich. 706.

¶ 136. In a claim by a daughter against the estate of her father for the gift mortis causa of a pocketbook containing money, a savings bankbook and a certificate of deposit, the evidence indicated that the father felt great affection towards the claimant for her kindness in caring for him in his old age; that he expressed to his doctor and nurses his intent to give his property to claimant; that he knew he was about to die; and that, being in sound mind, and in anticipation of death, he called his daughter, directed her to get the pocketbook, certificate and bankbook in question, and to take good care of same. Held, the evidence was sufficient to sustain a verdict finding a good gift mortis causa. In re Morse's Estate, 170 Mich. 114; Caldwell v. Goodenough, Id.

¶ 137. Where a decedent wrote and signed a certain so-called "statement" declaring he was about to leave town for his health and in case anything should happen to him, as he was a sick man, his wife was the owner of everything they possessed, and nobody else, and delivered same, together with certain leases, bank books and other papers, to his wife, and died eight days thereafter, held that such statement and contemporaneous facts stamped the transaction as a donatio causa mortis. In re Reh's Estate, 196 Mich. 210.

¶ 138. In an action by an administrator to recover the proceeds of a mortgage transferred by decedent in his lifetime to defendant, upon the ground of undue influence and mental incompetency, evidence that decedent was eighty-one years of age at the time of the transfer was almost wholly blind, and quite feeble, and that he had been under the custody and influence of defendants for more than a year, and that the transaction complained of was a departure from an understanding which had been reached at a conference between defendants, decedent, and all of the other persons interested in the estate, is sufficient to justify a verdict setting aside the conveyance.—Adsit v. Ide, 150 Mich. 367.

¶ 139. The cancellation of a debt by gift is sufficiently shown where the note evidencing it is returned to the debtor canceled, and by a letter to the debtor stating that the debt was forgiven though the note could not be found.—Leggett v. Davison, 131 Mich. 77.

¶ 140. Parol gift of land by a father to his children is not established by evidence that they had been in possession for many years and had made necessary improvements, and that the father had stated that he had given a home to his children, where it appeared that he continued to pay the taxes and that he was familiar with real estate matters and knew that a deed was necessary to pass title.—Moross v. Moross, 131 Mich. 389.

¶ 141. A gift inter vivos of money deposited in a bank is not shown by testimony that testator had the money deposited under an arrangement permitting his wife to draw it as well as himself, that he had said to the cashier that it was her money as well as his, to the notary who drew his will, "That belongs to my wife, it is already settled," and to his spiritual adviser that it was in the name of himself and wife and that she had the same control over that money as he had, and that it was his intention that it should be at her control, since such testimony establishes only an intention to allow her to use the fund, and such authority terminated at his death.—Burns v. Burns, 132 Mich. 441.

¶ 142. A man 85 years of age and ill, on the day before his death expressed a desire to give a domestic $500 in recognition of faithful service, and the next day the cashier of a bank was sent for who produced certificates of shares in the bank aggregating $4,500 which were indorsed in pencil to the domestic. Held that the transfer was an error and not intended by the donor and should be set aside except as to the amount of $500.—Crippen v. Adams, 132 Mich. 31.

¶ 143. A completed gift of farm personal property was not shown by testimony that decedent in question stated in substance that he gave the property to the claimant for a certain purpose and that it was to be left in his hands; particularly where after the making of the statements, the decedent recovered sufficiently to be about his duties on the farm and conducted the business the same as before.—Sparling v. Smeltzer, 133 Mich. 454.

¶ 144. A gift held in trust by the donor for the donee is refuted by the circumstances that the donor, an experienced business woman of property, continued to hold the notes and mortgages which were subject of it and regularly collected the interest on them, keeping them with her other properties and securities, that the notes were executed by the person claiming as donee, that the donee was not related by blood to donor but nevertheless was made a legatee in donee's will on the same basis as blood relatives, that numerous letters passing between them made no reference to any intent to forgive the indebtedness, that donor's wealth made her independent of any need for the interest for support, that the will made no mention of the notes, and that she never mentioned a gift to her close friend who was appointed executor, though in opposition to such circumstances a witness testified that she had once declared that she had made a gift of them to the maker and had kept them in her own possession for the purpose of collecting the interest.—Botsford v. Bradfield, 141 Mich. 370.

¶ 145. In an action for an accounting from the defendant for the principal and income from certain real estate mortgages claimed to have been assigned in writing by plaintiff's mother as a gift, papers prepared before any difference arose and indicating a gift sufficed to establish one, although the oral testimony was very contradictory.—Poppleton v. Poppleton, 143 Mich. 208.

¶ 146. A gift from an old man to his daughter was sustained on evidence from which it could be inferred that it was by way of dividing his estate equally among his children, to others of whom he had given notes owing by that daughter's husband; although such husband, as it appeared, had obtained a deed to himself of other property by fraud and as a witness was not candid in explaining his dealings, where books of account and other evidence showed that the notes were all that such husband was owing to the grantor, and where on the whole the gift seems to be supported by good reason.—Ladenback v. Johnson, 143 Mich. 585.

§ 34. Questions of fact and instructions.

General law of instructions, see Instructions.

¶ 147. In an action to recover the balance of a loan, the defense of a gift was set up, but the court below found that such gift was obtained by undue influence, and these findings the supreme court refused to review because the evidence upon which it was based was not given in the record.—Fisher v. Seventh-Day Adventist Pub. Assoc., 85 Mich. 472.

¶ 148. Plaintiff presented a claim against the defendant estate, based on an alleged gift of money shortly after the birth of her illegitimate child, of which deceased was the father, which sum she subsequently returned to him to be invested, and that he had not accounted therefor. The court instructed the jury that, if deceased had sustained illicit relations with the claimant, and was the father of her child, and in consideration thereof gave her the sum mentioned for the support of herself and child, that would be a sufficient consideration in law for the transfer of the money to her, and it would become hers; and that if she afterwards transferred the money back to the deceased for investment, and he took the same, promising to invest it and to account to her therefor, claimant was entitled to recover. Held, that the charge was not open to the objection that it gave the jury to understand that the illicit relations between the parties imposed an obligation upon the deceased.—Frank v. Morley's Estate, 106 Mich. 685.

¶ 149. The question whether or not certain notes given by a decedent and indorsed by him several days before his death and left in custody of his wife, such notes having been given in part payment of a house and lot deeded by the wife and later confirmed by a deed from both the husband and wife, constituted a gift to the wife, is for the jury, where the evidence was not conclusive as to the intention of the deceased.—Hall v. Wortman, 123 Mich. 304.

¶ 150. Where a case involving a gift mortis causa is tried by a jury, the court is not called upon to weigh the evidence and determine whether the gift as claimed was actually made, but is required to find whether there is any competent testimony legally intended to establish the essentials of such a gift.—In re Morse's Estate, 170 Mich. 114; Caldwell v. Goodenough, Id.

¶ 151. In an action by an administrator for the conversion of certificates of deposit claimed by defendant as a gift causa mortis from decedent, the refusal of the court to direct a verdict for defendant was held proper.—Pease v. Jennings, 180 Mich. 682.

¶ 152. Though there was no direct contradiction of testimony for plaintiff, suing in conversion for a horse, that it was a gift from her husband, since deceased, to her, it was proper to submit to the jury whether there was a gift, the evidence thereof being statements and admissions out of court by the husband which could be taken by the jury in different senses.—Parke v. Nixon, 141 Mich. 267.

¶ 153. In an action of trover by an administrator to recover from a spiritual adviser of decedent property which he claims was given to him by decedent in her last sickness, where the testimony shows that in parting with the property decedent attempted to make a gift for charitable purposes with the charity wholly indefinite, and where defendant's counsel conceded on the trial that the transaction could not be sustained as a gift unless the property was given to defendant for his own use or for a definite charity, there is no question of fact left to be submitted to the jury, and it is unnecessary to consider errors alleged in the charge of the court.—McPherson v. Byrne, 155 Mich. 338.

¶ 154. A requested instruction on the issue of a gift of money sued for by executors of a deceased person to recover money in the possession of defendant, the alleged donee, if the testator before her death directed her attorney to draw a check for the money, to be cashed, and the proceeds to be delivered to her, and sent by the legatee, is substantially included in an instruction given which states that, "if you find in this case that the money was to be returned," to the testator, "if you find that," such testator, "signed the check, and desired," her attorney, "to get the check cashed and send the money home,—have the money sent home to her,—then and under those circumstances the plaintiffs in this case would be entitled to recover the sum of $1,000 with interest."—Reilly v. Conway, 121 Mich. 682.

¶ 155. A requested instruction entitling executors of a deceased person to recover money claimed as a gift in the possession of a legatee, if the testator was dead when her attorney paid the money to such person, is properly refused where one of several persons testifies definitely that the testator died about three-fourths of an hour later, which evidence is not contradicted, and where the jury found that the money was paid to the legatee to aid her as directed by the testator.—Reilly v. Conway, 121 Mich. 682.

General statutory provisions relative to grand juries see Comp. L. 1915, § 15702 et seq., § 15766.

¶ 1. The recorder's court of the city of Detroit has no authority to order the summoning of a grand jury for such court under its charter.—Jasnowski v. Detroit Recorder's Court Judge, 195 Mich. 269.

¶ 2. A formal order signed by the circuit judge and entered on the journal, ordering that a grand jury be drawn is a substantial compliance with How. St. § 9554, which provides that grand juries shall not be drawn unless the judge "shall so direct by writing under his hand and filed with the clerk of said court."—People v. Reigel, 120 Mich. 78.

¶ 3. How. St. § 9554 which dispenses with grand juries unless specially called, and section 7562 which provides for the drawing of juries at least 14 days before the term, do not limit the power of the court in relation to calling grand jurors during the term as provided by section 7578.—People v. Reigel, 120 Mich. 78.

¶ 4. The court has discretion to increase the number of grand jurors after they are sworn and charged to any number not greater than twenty-three.—People v. Lauder, 82 Mich. 109.

¶ 5. An indictment is not to be abated because one of the grand jurors was an attorney and was then acting as assistant prosecuting attorney in a contempt case against a third person.—People v. Lauder, 82 Mich. 109.

¶ 6. A member of the grand jury may act as its stenographer and receives extra pay from the county for his services.—People v. Lauder, 82 Mich. 109.

¶ 7. The provisions of the Wayne County jury act (Pub. Acts 1887, No. 95, § 23) do not modify the general statutes (How. St. §§ 7562, 9494) in regard to the number of persons required to be sworn in the county to constitute a legal grand jury, and therefore an indictment found and presented by a grand jury in Wayne County composed of less than 23 persons was valid.—People v. Thompson, 122 Mich. 411.

¶ 8. In a criminal prosecution for embezzlement where the accused pleaded in abatement that one of the grand jurors was a "prosecutor or complainant" upon the charge against him, in that such grand juror, before he was called to serve on the grand jury, had minutes of testimony taken by him in bankruptcy proceedings, and as a United States commissioner had made an investigation, including a consultation with the United States District Attorney, concerning the issuing of a federal warrant against accused, but it was not alleged that such grand juror issued any warrant against accused, held the grand juror was neither "prosecutor nor complainant" within the meaning of Comp. L. 1897, § 11881, How 2nd Ed., § 15052.—People v. Lay, 193 Mich. 17.

¶ 9. Members of a grand jury held not to be prosecutors or complainants within Comp. L. 1897, §§ 11881, 11882, How. 2nd Ed., §§ 15052, 15053, limiting the accused to a single ground of challenge that some one summoned to serve upon the grand jury is a prosecutor or complainant against him.—People v. ¶ 11. A challenge either to the array or to the poll can only be made by a person who shows that he is under prosecution, and that his case is about to be brought before the jury.—Thayer v. People, 2 D. 417.

§ 3. Discharge and resummons.

¶ 12. Where a grand jury has finished its business, and been dismissed before the adjournment of the court without day, it may be resummoned at any time during the term to inquire into an offense committed subsequent to its discharge; and grand jurors who were originally summoned, but did not appear, may be resummoned, and, on appearing and being sworn and impaneled, may act with their fellows. A grand juror who appears after the jury have been sworn and received the charge of the court may or may not be sworn, in the discretion of the court, where there are enough jurors without him.—Findley v. People, 1 Mich. 234.

§ 4. Functions and powers.

Propriety and relevancy of matter in report, see post § 5.

Finding and filing the indictment, see Indictment, I, A.

¶ 13. A grand jury, as is indicated by the prescribed oath in Comp. L. 1897, § 11876, How. 2nd Ed., § 15047, must have the power and be at liberty to inquire for the whole county.—Jasnowski v. Detroit Recorder's Court Judge, 195 Mich. 269.

¶ 14. Except when followed by an indictment a grand jury is without authority, irrespective of the truth or falsity of the charge, to file with the circuit court a report casting reflections of the gravest character upon the conduct of the prosecuting attorney.—Bennett v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 183 Mich. 200.

¶ 15. Although Comp. L. 1897, § 11885, contemplates that the work of the grand jury will be done during the term to which it is summoned, its continuance into the succeeding term and recognition by the court as a lawful jury, and the reception of indictments found by it, constituted the jury a de facto grand jury while thus holding over.—People v. Morgan, 133 Mich. 550.

§ 5. Investigations and reports.

Scope of matters subject to inquisition, see ante § 4.

Failure to appear as witness with books as contempt, see Contempt, §§ 5, 15.

Right of witness to have counsel, see Constitutional Law § 200.

Keeping records, right of access, and correction or expurgation of matter, see Records.

¶ 16. A report filed with the court by a grand jury which contains reflections of the gravest character upon the conduct of the prosecuting attorney, should be expunged from the records on his motion.—Bennett v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 183 Mich. 200.

§ 6. Secrecy and privilege of proceedings.

Testimony by a grand juror as to evidence received when refreshed in memory by minutes made as secretary of grand jury, see Examination of Witnesses ¶ 128.

Secrecy and privilege of proceedings before grand jury, see Grand Jury § 6.

Privilege of witness against self crimination or immunity from subsequent prosecution on testimony given, see Examination of Witnesses, IV; Witnesses, I; Constitutional Law, IX.

¶ 17. Comp. L. 1897, § 11887, How. 2d Ed., § 15058, providing that "in no case can a member of a grand jury be obliged or allowed to testify or declare in what manner he or any other member of the jury voted on any question before them or what opinions were expressed by any juror in relation to any such question," has no application to such members testifying as to such matters in an action against them for libel in making and filing an unprivileged report.—Bennett v. Stockwell, 197 Mich. 50.

¶ 18. Public policy does not make the disclosure of the grand jury's purpose to the court a bar to the punishment for contempt of a witness, who refuses to produce his books of account before the jury in furtherance of that purpose.—In re Archer, 134 Mich. 408.

GUARANTY.

TREATS of undertakings to answer secondarily for the debt or obligation of another. It excludes undertakings to indemnify against loss or accruing liability, which do not depend necessarily on any principal debt or obligation (see Indemnity, I), and also excludes undertakings of suretyship, wherein the undertaking is primary and the surety is co-obligor with the principal to the creditor (see Suretyship). The necessity for and sufficiency of a writing to evidence a promise of guaranty is treated in Frauds, Statute of. The general law of contracts is treated in Contracts. Secondary liabilities of indorsers and acceptors of commercial paper are treated in Negotiable Instruments. Warranties of things sold or assigned are treated in Sales, VI; Negotiable Instruments; Assignments.

¶ 1. H. promised W., on behalf of several lumbermen whose logs needed floatage, that if W., who owned a dam, would let go the floods the lumbermen would pay him, and he (H.) would see him paid. Held, that this was not an absolute and original promise to pay, but one by way of guaranty, or a collateral promise to make good the obligation of the lumbermen.—Hall v. Woodin, 35 Mich. 67.

¶ 2. By a contract executed and delivered on the same day as a lease from A to B. (on the back of which lease it was written), C. became "surety for the punctual payment of the rent and performance of the covenants" in the lease, and agreed to pay the rent and damages on default. Held, that C.'s contract was not one of guaranty, but the two instruments formed a single joint obligation.—Preston v. Huntington, 67 Mich. 139.

¶ 3. An agent for sale of property who knowingly receives worthless notes in violation of his agreement with his employer and then turns them over to the principal who is ignorant of their worth, makes himself liable as guarantor of the paper.—Clark v. Roberts, 26 Mich. 506.

¶ 6. A sufficient legal consideration is essential to a valid guaranty, and thus where a debtor transfers notes of a third person to his creditor guaranteeing payment thereof, a creditor must accept such notes and credit them to the debtor in order to hold him upon his guaranty.—Brown v. Spiegel, 156 Mich. 138.

¶ 7. Where a bank extends credit to a person in reliance on a letter written him by the defendant in which the latter promised to guarantee the payment of certain advances, an indemnifying bond subsequently executed by the defendant to the bank, is based on a sufficient consideration.—State Nat. Bank of Albuquerque v. Wernicke, 185 Mich. 281 (Ostrander, Kuhn and Stone, JJ., dissenting).

¶ 8. A contract guaranteeing payment for goods shipped by a foreign corporation to an agent within the state to be stored by him until sold, is void under § 6 of Act No. 310, Pub. Acts 1907, § 9652, How. St., 2nd Ed., where the corporation failed to obtain a certificate of authority from the state to do business therein.—E. A. Lange Medical Co. v. Brace, 186 Mich. 453.

¶ 9. Recovery may be had on a contract guaranteeing the payment of money deposited by a county treasurer in a private bank, though depositing county funds in such bank was prohibited by statute and the treasurer guilty of a felony in so doing, the statute being for the protection of the public and not available as a defense by one guaranteeing its payment.—Buhrer v. Baldwin, 137 Mich. 268.

¶ 10. Contracts of guaranty are to be construed like other contracts, and the intent of the parties, as collected from the whole instrument and the subject-matter to which it applies, is to govern.—Locke v. McVean, 33 Mich. 473; Morris & Co. v. Lucker, 158 Mich. 518.

¶ 11. It seems that for the purpose of finding out what the contract is the same rules of construction apply as in other mercantile contracts, but when it is ascertained what was agreed then the rules and principles appropriate to the relation apply.—Locke v. McVean, 33 Mich. 473.

¶ 12. A guarantor is not liable beyond the express terms of his contract; but in the case of commercial guaranties drawn by artless persons, unlearned in the law, the terms are not to be construed technically to the disadvantage of the sureties and contrary to their intent.—Columbus Sewer Piper Co. v. Ganser, 58 Mich. 385.

¶ 13. A contract of guaranty should be so construed as to carry into effect the intention of the parties; and such intention must be ascertained from the language of the instrument and the facts and circumstances attending its execution.—Mathews v. Phelps, 61 Mich. 327.

¶ 14. A bond claimed by one party to be a continuing guaranty, and denied by the other to have that effect, was given that effect which best accorded with the intention of the parties as manifested by the terms of the guaranty, taken in connection with the subject-matter to which it related.—Home Sav. Bank v. Hosie, 119 Mich. 116.

¶ 15. One who agrees to be responsible for the payment, to a certain amount, of a bill of merchandise ordered, is not concerned in the question whether all the goods or the precise goods ordered were sent, if the extent of his liability is not increased.—Feustmann v. Gott's Estate, 65 Mich. 592.

§ 6. Amount, items and extent of guaranty.

¶ 16. A written assurance that "we here agree to pay every man you have in your employ * * * that stays by you until you put in your logs" does not cover persons not employed till after it was received.—McDonald v. Bewick, 43 Mich. 438.

¶ 17. One who agrees in writing to pay to the payees of a note "all the balance due and unpaid" means by the expression that he will pay all the balance due and unpaid after an effort made to collect from the makers and indorsers.—DeCamp v. Schofield, 75 Mich. 449.

¶ 18. Where A. agrees to sell certain goods to be shipped during a specified period, B. agreeing in consideration thereof, and of a guaranty by C. of the fulfillment of the contract on A.'s part, to make certain advances, such guaranty covers loss by reason of the advances.—Sweet v. Newberry, 92 Mich. 515.

¶ 19. A guaranty of "the prompt payment" of certain bonds, "both principal and interest, at the time and times specified in the bonds and in each of them," does not hold the guarantors liable for the payment of the principal of the bonds before their maturity, although the mortgage which secures the bonds and which is of even date with the guaranty by C. of the fulfillment of the conelect to treat the whole amount as due upon default in the interest.—Union Trust Co. v. Detroit Motor Co., 117 Mich. 631.

¶ 20. On a guaranty of an agency contract for sale of sewing machines by which guaranty it was undertaken that the agent should well and truly perform, there was no liability for the agent's nonpayment of notes running for six months after date and drawing interest from four months after date, where the terms of the agency contract called for notes to run for four months without interest but with the privilege of a sixty-day extension, if desired, with interest.—Locke v. McVean, 33 Mich. 473.

¶ 21. One who becomes guarantor for such notes of a specified description as another shall give in pursuance of a written contract is not liable for notes differing materially from those for which the contract provided. And where the contract, the performance of which is guaranteed, provides for notes at four months without interest, to be renewed, if desired, for sixty days, at eight per cent, the guarantor is not holden for notes running six months, with interest for four months at seven per cent, and thereafter at eight nor for six months' notes with interest at eight per cent after four months; the variance is a substantial one, as affecting a surety's rights.—Locke v. McVean, 33 Mich. 473.

¶ 22. Under a guaranty of "the value of a consignment of jewelry to the extent of $1,000 to be on memoranda for six months and all re-orders to be paid in cash" the guarantor is not liable for the debt of the consignee where there were several successive consignments amounting to $1,700 and the consignee paid more than $1,000 as the goods were sold.—Fogel v. Blitz, 128 Mich. 503.

§ 7. Limited or single guaranty.

Continuing, conditional or optional guaranties, see post § 8.

Evidence to show whether guaranty continuing or limited, see post § 26.

Parol evidence to show whether guaranty is limited or continuing, see Evidence ¶¶ 878, 879.

¶ 23. Where a guaranty contains no express limitation as to either time or amount, and there is nothing in the instrument itself from which it can be inferred that it was the guarantor's intention to leave it open as to both, the guaranty must be understood as referring to a single transaction.—Gard v. Stevens, 12 Mich. 292.

¶ 24. The following was held not to be a continuing guaranty, but to be limited to a single purchase or transaction: "St. Joseph, Sept. 18, 1858. Joseph Gard: Dear Sir—If you will let the bearer have what leather he wants, and charge the same to himself, I will see that you have your pay in a reasonable length of time. J. E. Stevens."—Gard v. Stevens, 12 Mich. 292.

¶ 25. A bond reciting that the principal "has arranged and is about to purchase on credit" certain goods, and declaring it to be void if he shall pay "for all goods purchased or that he may hereafter purchase of [the obligee] according to the terms of purchase," otherwise to be "in full force and effect for the amount of his said indebtedness, not exceeding three thousand dollars," was construed as a commercial guaranty limited to the amount of a single purchase, or at most to what was necessary for the completion of a particular transaction to which the sureties understood the guaranty to relate.—Columbus Sewer Pipe Co. v. Ganser, 58 Mich. 385.

¶ 26. A guaranty of the payment to an employer of moneys collected for him by an employee is properly limited to the amount due at the end of the year's employment provided for in the agreement to which the guaranty refers.—John A. Tolman Co. v. Clements, 98 Mich. 6.

¶ 27. Where a guaranty is limited to a single purchase or transaction the first moneys received by the creditor on the debtor's general account, after a purchase under this guaranty, should be applied upon such purchase.—Gard v. Stevens, 12 Mich. 292.

§ 8. Continuing, conditional or optional guaranties.

¶ 28. A bond was executed by defendant to plaintiff, reciting: That, whereas, P. C. & Co. were then or might thereafter become indebted to plaintiffs in divers sums of money, and might become liable from time to time to pay plaintiffs divers sums of money, to the amount of $3,000, by means of notes, discounts and overdrafts made and indorsed by said P. C. & Co. and for their benefit, and conditioned that if said P. C. & Co. should pay or cause to be paid to plaintiffs all and singular the notes, etc., made by said P. C. & Co., and for their benefit, to the amount of $3,000, and should pay or cause to be paid to plaintiffs all said liability assumed by the said P. C. & Co. to the amount of $3,000, then said obligation to be void, otherwise to remain in full force and effect for three years from January 1, 1837, unless notice to the contrary should sooner be given to the plaintiffs. Held, that the bond was a continuing guaranty and intended to cover successive notes, discounts and overdrafts, made by P. C. & Co. at any time within the three years, as often and whenever the antecedent transactions were discharged.—Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Kercheval, 2 Mich. 504.

¶ 29. A guaranty of payment for goods to be sold "from time to time" to an amount not exceeding a specified sum is continuous until the sums remaining unpaid reach the designated limit, even though the aggregate of purchases far exceeds it. It would be different if the guaranty contemplated a single transaction.—Crittenden v. Fiske, 46 Mich. 70.

¶ 30. When the amount of the guaranty is limited, and the time is not, the contract should be construed as a continuing guaranty.—Mathews v. Phelps, 61 Mich. 327.

¶ 31. An agent was employed by plaintiff to sell cigars upon an agreed commission, the agent to account for all moneys received on such sales, and defendant agreed in writing "to become his surety for the sale of cigars to plaintiff to the extent of $200." Held, that the guaranty was intended to continue so long as the agent sold cigars for plaintiff, or until ended by notice from the surety; and that the surety was liable to plaintiff for the proceeds of the sales, such liability being limited to $200.—Mathews v. Phelps, 61 Mich. 327.

¶ 32. A guaranty of payment indorsed upon a note, in promising the payment of "all costs and expenses paid or incurred in collecting the same," applies only to definite legal costs, and not to uncertain allowances for the creditor's trouble in dunning the maker of the note.—Wetherbee v. Kusterer, 41 Mich. 359.

¶ 33. A guaranty of payment of all moneys collected by one V for account of the guarantees, and of all moneys which they might from time to time advance to V, and of any and all indebtednes due or to become due the guarantees in excess of the amount due said V, "as per the present or any future agreement between them," is a continuing contract, covering changes and modifications in the agreement as originally made between the principal and the guarantees.—John A. Tolman Co. v. Griffin, 111 Mich. 301.

¶ 34. The liability of a continuing guarantor cannot be extended to include an indebtedness growing out of transactions which, as manifested by the situation of the parties and the subject-matter with reference to which the guaranty was given, were entirely foreign to those originally contemplated.—John A. Tolman Co. v. Griffin, 111 Mich. 301.

¶ 35. Where the mortgagee of a stock of goods, then under a writ of replevin, guaranteed that, if he should get possession under his mortgage, certain notes made by the owners of the stock should be paid from its proceeds, it was held that his getting a part only of the proceeds and not enough to satisfy his mortgage did not make him liable upon the guaranty.—Lieberman v. Barman, 36 Mich. 380.

§ 9. ——Acceptance or election by creditor.

Sufficiency of guaranty contract, see § 2.
General law as to offer and acceptance of contracts, see Contracts, III.

¶ 36. A guaranty in blank of a promissory note becomes fixed whenever any one takes the note upon the guarantor's credit.—Nevius v. Lansingburgh Bank, 10 Mich. 547.

¶ 37. Making sales in reliance on a guaranty of payment amounts to an acceptance of it.—Crittenden v. Fiske, 46 Mich. 70.

¶ 38. Where the defendant agreed in writing to guarantee advances made by a bank to a third person, and for that purpose executed a bond prepared by the bank, there was sufficient acceptance of the offer to bind the guarantor.—State Nat. Bank of Albuquerque v. Wernicke, 185 Mich. 281. (Ostrander, Kuhn and Stone, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 39. If a guaranty is signed by the guarantor without any previous request of the other party, and in his absence, no consideration moving between them except future advances to be made to the principal debtor, the guaranty is, in legal effect, an offer or proposal on the part of the guarantor, needing an acceptance by the other party to complete the contract.—Detroit Free Press v. Pattengill, 155 Mich. 272.

§ 10. ——Notice of acceptance or indebtedness.

Nature and sufficiency of guaranty contract, see ante I.

¶ 40. Notice of acceptance of a guaranty by the creditor is not required to be given to the guarantor.—Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Kercheval, 2 Mich. 504.

¶ 41. Where a guaranty of payment is absolute in its terms and waives notice of times or amounts of sales or of defaults or delays in payment, the guarantor is not entitled to notice of its acceptance.—Crittenden v. Fiske, 46 Mich. 70.

¶ 42. Notice of acceptance is essential to bind as guarantors persons who, in response to the request of the principal, sign a guaranty for the payment of goods to be sold him on credit, where the offer of the guaranty to sell the goods was conditional upon his approval of the guarantors after investigation.—De Cremer v. Anderson, 113 Mich. 578.

¶ 43. Notice of acceptance of a contract of guaranty is not necessary to bind the guarantor where the contract recites a consideration, even though such consideration is merely nominal.—Buhrer v. Baldwin, 137 Mich. 263.

¶ 44. Where a writing is not a perfect and conclusive guaranty, but only an offer thereof, notice of acceptance is necessary, and in the absence of such acceptance the relation of guarantor and guaranty is not created.—Brown v. Spiegel, 156 Mich. 138.

§ 11. ——Withdrawal or revocation of guaranty.

¶ 45. An absolute guaranty of payment for future purchases binds neither party until it has been acted on, and until then it may be withdrawn, or delivery of goods may be refused, even though orally promised.—Crittenden v. Fiske, 46 Mich. 70.

¶ 46. There is no revocation of a guaranty where the guarantor writes the creditor about another guaranty and requests its return because the debtor is not doing business with the creditor and inquires about the guaranty in question, expressing a desire to know all about it and to have it returned if the debtor has settled his account, and the creditor replies, and sends the other guaranty and states that the debtor on the guaranty in question has not settled and requests an acknowledgment, but the guarantor fails to reply, and makes no futher attempt at revocation, although he knows that the debtor is continuing to do business with the creditor.—American Steel & Wire Co. v. Richardson, 191 Mich. 549.

§ 12. Contemporaneous and subsequent guaranties.

Subsequent guaranty of notes as merger of earlier fraud, see Fraud § 86.

¶ 47. Contemporaneous and subsequent guaranties have the same contract force, and differ only as to what considerations sustain them.—Freeman v. Ellison, 37 Mich. 459.

¶ 48. A general guaranty of payment according to the tenor of the instrument, indorsed upon a bond payable to a specified person or bearer, if not strictly negotiable, is at least transferable by delivery, subject to equities.—Owen v. Potter, 115 Mich. 556.

¶ 49. A general guaranty of payment indorsed on a bond and running to a specified person or bearer is transferable by delivery. —Owen v. Potter, 115 Mich. 556.

¶ 50. In an action for the price of land against one who was a guarantor of payment according to the terms of a contract to purchase it, the liability of the guarantor is for the difference between the value of the land and the price to have been paid, where no deed was ever accepted by the purchaser and the legal title of the land is in the plaintiff.—Stewart v. McLaughlin's Estate, 126 Mich. 1.

¶ 51. Guarantors who in their guaranty have agreed to accept as final and correct a verified statement as kept on plaintiff's regular books of the account between plaintiff and an employee for whom the guaranty was given, cannot impeach an item on account of losses a part of which the employee agreed in his contract with plaintiff to bear.—John A. Tolman Co. v. Clements, 98 Mich. 6.

¶ 52. Guarantors under a continuing guaranty are not precluded from attacking the account required to be kept and rendered for items included therein relating to other business than that covered by the guaranty. —John A. Tolman Co. v. Griffin, 111 Mich. 301.

¶ 53. After making demand upon the district officers for some claimed extras, a contractor threatened to give up his contract to build a school house. An arrangement was made to go on with the work, the contractor to be in charge, but not to handle the money. The contractor and his sureties then joined in a writing, addressed to the architect and school officers, reciting the making of the contract, the giving of the bond, etc., and waiving any and all conditions stipulated in the contract, plans and specifications, with the further stipulation, "we further agree that said contract, plans, and specifications, and bond hereinbefore referred to, are binding and of full force and effect, and shall so remain under any conditions or changes by us herein or heretofore authorized." Held, that the sureties by contract in writing were estopped to deny liability on the bond for goods of material men furnished after the later agreement, or to deny that the contractor was acting in the capacity of contractor.—People ex rel. Reynolds v. Banhagel, 151 Mich. 40.

§ 15. Proceedings to fix liability; demand and notice.

Collateral nature of guarantor's contract, see ante § 1.

Allegations as to proceedings against the principal, see post § 23.
Showing waiver of due diligence in proceeding against principal, see post § 24.
Burden of showing that proper proceedings to fix guarantor's liability have been taken, see post § 25.
Sufficiency of showing of diligence in collecting guaranteed note, see also post § 27.
Conditions precedent to action on warranty of note, see Negotiable Instruments, VII.

¶ 54. No general rule can be laid down in respect to demand and notice in case of guaranties; but where, from the terms of the guaranty, or the facts disclosed in a given case, demand and notice are required, the omission cannot be available as a defense unless the defendant can show that he has been damnified thereby.—Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Kercheval, 2 Mich. 504.

¶ 55. In the case of a continuing guaranty demand of the principal and notice to the guarantor at the close of the period covered by the guaranty was held unnecesary.—Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Kercheval, 2 Mich. 504.

§ 16. ——Action or suit, judgment and execution on principal debt.

¶ 56. The assignor of a note and mortgage covenanted with the assignee that in case the latter should fully prosecute the note to judgment, and foreclose the mortgage, and should not collect a specified sum, with costs, and if upon execution or foreclosure the mortgaged lands should be taken for sale or set-off, then the assignor would pay said sum. The mortgage was foreclosed in chancery; and it was held, in a suit upon the covenant, that the assignor could not set up, in defense, a mere irregularity in the foreclosure.—Barnes v. Baker, 2 Mich. 377.

¶ 57. Decree having been taken for the sum due, and execution awarded for any deficiency after sale of the mortgaged premises, this was held a sufficient compliance with the condition of the covenant that the note should be prosecuted to judgment.—Barnes v. Baker, 2 Mich. 377.

¶ 58. Before the assignee of a note secured by a mortgage could sue the guarantor of collection upon the covenant he must exhaust his remedy against the mortgagor by issuing execution to the county of his residence.—Barnes v. Baker, 2 Mich. 377.

¶ 59. Where the amount of a note guaranteed is such that suit may be brought upon it either in justice's court or the circuit court, the condition of a guaranty of collection is complied with by obtaining judgment in a justice's court and making due endeavor to collect it by execution.—Thomas v. Dodge, 8 Mich. 51.

¶ 60. It is not necessary that a transcript of a justice's judgment upon a guaranteed note should be filed in the circuit court, and execution issued against lands thereon, where it clearly appears that the judgment debtor has no real estate liable to execution.—Thomas v. Dodge, 8 Mich. 51.

¶ 61. Where one guarantees the collection of a note which is secured by a collateral mortgage, and at the same time assigns the mortgage with the note, he is not liable upon his guaranty until resort has been had to the mortgage as well as to the note for collection of the moneys secured.—Barman v. Carhartt, 10 Mich. 338.

¶ 62. A guarantor of the collection of a note cannot be sued until legal proceedings to enforce its collection have been taken against the maker of the note without effect. —Bosman v. Akeley, 39 Mich. 710.

¶ 63. A guaranty of payment "when all legal means to collect * * * shall have been used" without success does not furnish a ground of action unless plaintiff shows that he has fully exhausted his remedy at law by recovery of judgment, issue and return of execution unsatisfied at return day, and, if suit was begun in justice's court, by the filing of a transcript of judgment in the circuit court and issue and return of execution thereon. An offer to show that such proceedings would be fruitless would not be enough.—Schermerhorn v. Conner, 41 Mich. 374.

¶ 64. A guaranty of the collection of a debt secured by mortgage does not bind the guarantor to pay until after foreclosure and failure to obtain payment from the mortgaged premises or otherwise from the debtor.—Johnson v. Shepard, 35 Mich. 115.

¶ 65. Where a declaration upon a guaranty of collection is framed on the basis of a diligent and unsuccessful prosecution of all the principal debtors to judgment and execution, the record of an action against such principal debtors, which, as to two of them, shows no more than the institution of a suit which was afterward stayed, is insufficient to establish a right of recovery.—Aldrich v. Chubb, 35 Mich. 350.

¶ 66. Proof of an action seasonably commenced against principal debtors, and carried on diligently and in good faith against them all to final judgment and execution, but without avail, is sufficient to establish the creditor's right to demand payment from a guarantor of collection.—Aldrich v. Chubb, 35 Mich. 350.

¶ 67. In suing on a guaranty of the collection of a note plaintiff must show, as an indispensable preliminary, that he has been unable, though reasonably diligent, to collect from the maker; and where there are several principal debtors he must show this as to each and all of them.—Aldrich v. Chubb, 35 Mich. 350.

¶ 68. Under a "guaranty of the within note and mortgage as one contract; will pay deficiency on mortgage sale," defendant's liability as guarantor was fixed as soon as the deficiency arose on the foreclosure, and plaintiff was not bound to exhaust his remedy on the note.—Briggs v. Norris, 67 Mich. 325.

¶ 69. In foreclosing a chattel mortgage of which the collection is guaranteed, the mortgagee need not foreclose against property covered by the mortgage, but to which the mortgagor has no right, and when he has unsuccessfully tried to replevy such property he may proceed against the guarantor.—Briggs v. Norris, 67 Mich. 325.

¶ 70. An agreement by which the assignor of notes and accounts warrants that a certain amount—less than their face—shall be realized thereon, conditioned that vendee shall "use due diligence in their collections," amounts to a guaranty of collection, and requires resort to legal process to collect each account before recourse to the guarantor; and no showing of diligence is sufficient that does not include proof that each account has been put in judgment and execution thereon returned unsatisfied.—Clark v. Kellogg, 96 Mich. 171.

¶ 71. A guarantor of the payment of a mortgage sold by him, who secures the guaranty by a trust deed of land, cannot require the exhaustion of the land covered by the mortgage before resorting to that deeded to secure the payment of the mortgage, when a bill is brought to foreclose the mortgage and enforce the security of the guaranty.—Miller v. McLaughlin, 141 Mich. 425.

§ 17. Release or discharge of guarantor.

Question whether new note was substituted for guaranteed one, for jury, see post § 28.

General law as to modification and discharge of contracts, see Contracts, VIII.

What constitutes mistake in signing instrument, see Mistake.

¶ 72. The guarantor of the payment of a note is not released by the holder's failure to give him notice of its non-payment or to sue the maker, nor, though he had no such notice, is he released by the maker's becoming insolvent some time after the maturity of the note.—Roberts v. Hawkins, 70 Mich. 566.

¶ 73. Re-employment of an agent whose accountability was guaranteed for a fixed time, to the end that he might work out an amount owing at the end of that period and covered by the guaranty, does not release the guarantor.—John A. Tolman Co. v. Clements, 98 Mich. 6.

¶ 74. A guarantor of the payment of bonds secured by a trust mortgage is not released because the property, instead of being subjected to mortgage foreclosure, is sold in bankruptcy proceedings on the petition of the obligees.—Owen v. Potter, 115 Mich. 556.

¶ 75. Where a married woman executed a mortgage as a security for the amount of $1,000 according to the conditions of an agreement between her husband and another for coal and wood to be sold not to exceed $1,000 at any one time, sales to be made from time to time, the undertaking is not that she should become surety for the first $1,000 sold her husband but an undertaking to secure $1,000 of credit, and she is not discharged by the first $1,000 paid by her husband to the mortgagor on account.—Rundle v. Scully, 144 Mich. 62.

¶ 76. Where a person becomes guarantor on a demand note given as collateral for the payment of notes by a then solvent corporation, which continued solvent during the lifetime of the guarantor and for two years after his death, a delay in demanding payment upon the collateral note for a period of five years after the death of the guarantor releases him and his estate from liability.—In re Kelley's Estate, 173 Mich. 492.

¶ 77. Delay in the shipment of goods ordered by a corporation, will not relieve its officers on a guaranty of payment, where the delay was caused by their failure to promptly furnish security at the request of the seller.—Sheldon Axle Co. v. Landman, 186 Mich. 61.

§ 18. ——Alterations in or departure from principal contract.

Legality of principal contract, see ante § 4.

¶ 78. Guarantors of collection are released by any dealings between the creditor and debtor substantially changing their contract relations before the guarantor's liability is finally settled.—Johnson v. Shepard, 35 Mich. 115.

¶ 79. A guarantor upon a contract of agency cannot be held, if after signing a draft of the agreement to be submitted to the principal, the latter so alters it as to enlarge the agent's liability, as by requiring him to become responsible for more property or less salable property than at first contemplated.—Osborne v. Van Houten, 45 Mich. 444.

¶ 80. Where a guaranty covered advances agreed to be made for goods to be delivered thereafter, it was held that the giving of acceptances due at the time stated in the contract guaranteed did not constitute such a departure from the contract as released the guarantor, even though such acceptances were given before the time specified for the first advancement.—Sweet v. Newberry, 92 Mich. 515.

¶ 81. Where the performance of a contract by A. to sell and ship a certain number of barrel hoops to B. has been guaranteed by C. so that C. becomes liable for advances made upon hoops that are not delivered, and where such contract provides for the payment of interest on advances until their repayment "by shipment of hoops or otherwise," held, that B.'s acceptance of a note for a part of the advances maturing after the time when by the terms of the contract full payment for the advances should have been made by shipment of hoops, which note was discounted and not held by B. at that date, is equivalent, as between B. and C., to a payment on the advances of the amount of the note, and to that extent but no further it discharges the guarantor.—Sweet v. Newberry, 92 Mich. 515.

¶ 82. One who is jointly liable with the lessees for the payment of rent under a lease, if the lessee defaults, is not discharged by an agreement to which he is not a party, to reduce the rent, subsequently entered into by the lessors with the lessees.—Preston v. Huntington, 67 Mich. 139.

¶ 83. Those who have guaranteed the payment of the principal and interest of bonds "at the time specified in the bonds," are not released from liability, either as to matured interest or as to the principal when due, by the election of the bondholders' representative, under a provision in the mortgage securing the bonds, to declare the principal immediately due for default in interest; such election being ineffectual as to the guarantors, and not varying their contract.—Union Trust Co. v. Detroit Motor Co., 117 Mich. 631.

¶ 84. The bond of a public contractor, conditioned to pay if the principal does not, for material and labor entering into the construction of the contract work, is not rendered inoperative as to sureties by an alteration in the contract as to the time or manner of paying the contractor.—People ex rel. Reynolds v. Banhagel, 151 Mich. 40.

§ 19. ——Extending time to principal.

¶ 85. If the creditor gives time to the principal without the consent of the guarantor the latter is discharged.—Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Kercheval, 2 Mich. 504.

¶ 86. If one of several principals gives his own obligation for the original debt, and time is given him without the guarantor's assent, the latter is discharged.—Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Kercheval, 2 Mich. 504.

¶ 87. Where a guarantor obligated himself to pay all the liabilities, up to a sum certain, of the principal, for advances by way of notes, etc., if the principal should fail to pay the same, such obligation "to remain in full force and virtue for the space of three years from the first day of January, 1837," and, for the notes so constituting the indebtedness guaranteed, new notes were taken within the three years, falling due after the three years, it was held that such credit to the principal beyond the time limited in the bond discharged the surety.—Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Kercheval, 2 Mich. 504.

¶ 88. The guarantor is equally discharged though the renewal notes be signed by and binding upon one only of several principals constituting a partnership.—Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Kercheval, 2 Mich. 504.

¶ 89. Where a debtor wrote to his guarantor saying that the creditor would extend the time if he received a payment on the debt, and asking the guarantor to make it, which he did, it amounts to a consent and the guarantor could not set it up as an extension without his consent.—Briggs v. Norris, 67 Mich. 325.

¶ 90. An extension of time by the payee of a note must, to operate as a release of a surety or guarantor, be more than a mere agreement to indulge or forbear. It must present the essentials of a binding contract, reasonably definite as to time and for a valid consideration, and payment of interest in advance is a sufficient consideration.—In re Kelley's Estate, 173 Mich. 492.

¶ 91. Where one becomes guarantor on a demand note given as continuing security and collateral for the payment of other existing short-time paper, which paper is from time to time renewed, the death of such guarantor known to the holder is notice to the holder of revocation and terminates the progressive element of the guaranty as to him and his estate, and it becomes the duty of the holder to grant no further extensions of the paper for which such note is collateral, and further extensions release the deceased guarantor and his estate.—In re Kelley's Estate, 173 Mich. 492.

¶ 92. Where one became guarantor on a demand note given as continuing security and collateral for the payment of other existing short-time paper, the bank before renewing the paper should exercise sufficient diligence to ascertain if the guarantor is alive.—In re Kelley's Estate, 173 Mich. 492.

§ 20. ——Misapplication of proceeds or change of securities.

¶ 93. Accommodation guarantors of a note payable to a bank, who sign the note with the understanding that other notes of an equal or greater amount shall be deposited with the bank as collateral security, and that, when paid, the proceeds shall be applied on the note guaranteed by them, are released from liability where the bank, without their consent, accepts in place of the notes originally deposited as collateral new notes executed by only one of two makers, and extends the time of payment of the same.—First Nat. Bank v. Walker, 115 Mich. 484.

¶ 94. One Butler purchased of defendant personal property and gave to the latter a chattel mortgage to secure a note given to defendant in payment therefor. Defendant with Butler's consent removed a portion of the mortgaged property and appropriated the same. In a foreclosure suit, the court credited on the note the value of the property removed. Held, that complainant, who guaranteed the payment of a portion of the sum due on the note, was not released by said removal of the property.—Latham v. Savage, 166 Mich. 300.

¶ 95. The fact that a guaranty of future advances is used to satisfy an existing indebtedness held not to discharge the guarantor.—State Nat. Bank of Albuquerque v. Wernicke, 185 Mich. 281. (Ostrander, Kuhn and Stone, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 96. Where a guaranty of advances was given without any representations by the obligee as to the debtor's existing liabilities, and the guarantor made no inquiries with respect thereto, the fact that the guaranty was applied to an existing indebtedness does not amount to fraud sufficient to discharge the guarantor.—State Nat. Bank of Albuquerque v. Wernicke, 185 Mich. 281. (Ostrander, Kuhn and Stone, JJ., dissenting.)

¶ 97. Where A.'s contract to sell and ship a certain number of barrel hoops to B. has been guaranteed by C., the fact that the first hoops shipped were by agreement between A. and B. applied in payment of an old debt of A. to B. does not violate the contract performance of which has been guaranteed by C.; for that contract relates to no specific hoops, and A.'s duty to ship the full amount provided for in such contract is not changed by the agreement making such application.—Sweet v. Newberry, 92 Mich. 515.

§ 21. ——Performance or tender of performance by principal.

Evidence as to payments made on guaranteed contract, see post § 26.

¶ 98. The guaranty by a former owner of the collection of a note purchased when overdue is discharged by the refusal of the purchaser to receive the money when offered to him by the makers.—Sears v. Van Dusen, 25 Mich. 351.

¶ 99. Where a county treasurer gave a check to his successor in office for an amount due the county from a bank in which he had deposited the funds and the successor redeposits it, the transaction does not amount to a payment of the amount deposited so as to relieve a guarantor of its payment.—Buhrer v. Baldwin, 137 Mich. 268.

Actions upon vendor's guaranty of the character and productivity of land, see Vendor and Purchaser.

¶ 100. One who is sued as a guarantor of notes is not entitled to have them returned to him as a condition precedent to judgment against him, where he took them as agent in payment for goods sold and in so doing violated instructions not to take any but collectible paper in payment.—Clark v. Roberts, 26 Mich. 506.

§ 23. Pleading.

General law of pleading, see Pleading.

¶ 101. A declaration on a guaranty within the purview of the statute of frauds need not aver that it was in writing, or that the undertaking guaranteed was made with the formalities required by that statute.—Dayton v. Williams, 2 D. 31.

¶ 102. A declaration on a guaranty of the collection of a note is demurrable if it does not state that legal proceedings have been taken to enforce collection without effect.—Bosman v. Akeley, 39 Mich. 710.

¶ 103. That the averment in a declaration on a guaranty of notice to the defendant of nonperformance by his principal omits to state when or where the notice was given is no ground for arresting judgment, but only of special demurrer.—Dayton v. Williams, 2 D. 31.

§ 24. ——Issues and variance.

¶ 104. A claim based upon defendant's alleged original liability as principal debtor will not sustain a recovery against him as guarantor.—Lyon v. Chamberlain, 41 Mich. 119.

¶ 105. When a declaration upon a guaranty of collection avers that plaintiff used due diligence, it in effect avers that plaintiff pursued the course imposed on him by law to charge the guarantor, and an alleged subsequent waiver by defendant, excusing plaintiff's failure to use such diligence, cannot be shown unless counted upon.—Clark v. Kellogg, 96 Mich. 171.

§ 25. Presumptions and burden of proof.

Necessity of showing that remedies against principal have been exhausted, see ante §§ 15, 16.

General law as to presumptions and burden of proof, see Evidence, II.

Presumptions as to guaranty of note, see Negotiable Instruments.

¶ 106. Where suit is brought upon a guaranty of a promissory note the presumption that the plaintiff is the promisee will prevail in his favor, at least until rebutted by showing that the guaranty had previously been operative in other hands.—Nevius v. Lansingburgh Bank, 10 Mich. 547.

¶ 107. Where a declaration upon a guaranty of collection avers the guarantor's liability to have been fixed by the prosecution of all the principal debtors to judgment and execution, without obtaining satisfaction, the plaintiff is bound to maintain this allegation by proof of the facts alleged; and the record of an action which, as to two of the debtors, shows no more than the institution of a suit which was afterwards stayed, is insufficient. —Aldrich v. Chubb, 35 Mich. 350.

§ 26. Admissibility of evidence.

Evidence of facts and circumstances attending execution of the guaranty, see also ante § 5.

Evidence variant from the pleadings, see ante § 24.

Best and secondary evidence of principal contract in action on guaranty, see Evidence ¶ 655.

Parol evidence to show true consideration, see Evidence § 161.

Parol to show that absolute notes and mortgage were merely by way of guaranty, see also Evidence § 181, ¶ 1079.

¶ 108. The actual consideration for a guaranty being averred in the declaration, it may be proved by parol, notwithstanding the guaranty is expressed to be "for value received." —Jones v. Palmer, 1 D. 379.

¶ 109. In an action on a written guaranty to pay an attorney for services rendered the guarantor's son, evidence is admissible to show that a payment made by a third person, and which was not shown by the plaintiff's bill of particulars, was not in payment of the plaintiff.—Barkworth v. Campbell, 183 Mich. 34.

¶ 110. Although the indemnitor is not notified of the former suit, a judgment against the indemnitee is prima facie evidence of the amount of damages for which the indemnitor is liable.—Clark v. Clune, 172 Mich. 323.

¶ 111. Where it is doubtful whether a mercantile guaranty was meant to be continuing or limited, it is proper to show by a surety what was said, when it was executed, as to the time it should run, if such showing does not contradict its terms but aids in its interpretation.—Columbus Sewer Pipe Co. v. Ganser, 58 Mich. 385.

¶ 112. The sureties on a commercial guaranty limited to a single transaction should be allowed to show what credit was to be given and what were the terms of the purchase as understood by them at the time the bond was given.—Columbus Sewer Pipe Co. v. Ganser, 58 Mich. 385.

¶ 113. In an action on a written guaranty to pay for goods sold by plaintiff to a third party, the original order for the goods need not be produced to identify what goods were sold and delivered to the vendee; that may be shown by other evidence.—Feustmann v. Gott's Estate, 65 Mich. 592.

See also post § 122.

Statements on employers' books as conclusive upon guarantors of employee, see ante § 14.

Sufficiency of proceedings to fix guarantor's liability, see ante § 15.

¶ 114. A showing of diligence in collecting the amount of guaranteed notes from the person primarily liable is not sufficient unless it includes proof that each account has been put in judgment and execution thereon returned unsatisfied.—Clark v. Kellogg, 96 Mich. 171.

¶ 115. In an action against a guarantor of the payment of the agreed price for land, which purchaser did not accept and which plaintiff has title to, failure to prove the value of the land entitles defendant guarantor to verdict where there was no tender of deed before suit and consequently no basis for recovery.—Stewart v. McLaughlin's Estate, 126 Mich. 1.

¶ 116. Where the original order and other correspondence show defendant to be simply a guarantor of payment for, and not a purchaser of goods, but the plaintiff's agent testifies that in a telephone conversation at the time of the transaction the defendant agreed to be the buyer, the question is one for the jury, and the court will not disturb a verdict based on the testimony of plaintiff's agent, making defendant primarily liable.—Saginaw Milling Co. v. Mower, 154 Mich. 620.

¶ 117. Where defendant guarantees plaintiff partner that the other partner will pay all demands against the partnership and afterwards a judgment is obtained against the partnership which plaintiff pays, proof of the judgment against plaintiff establishes a prima facie case against defendant on the guaranty without proof that plaintiff notified defendant of the pendency of the suit in which the judgment was secured.—Clark v. Clune, 172 Mich. 323.

¶ 118. A finding that goods ordered by a corporation were received and accepted by it with the knowledge of the defendants, its officers, who guaranteed payment therefor, held sustained by the evidence.—Sheldon Axle Co. v. Landman, 186 Mich. 61.

¶ 119. Where the original order and other correspondence shows defendant to be simply a guarantor of payment for, and not a purchaser of goods, but the plaintiff's agent testifies that in a telephone conversation at the time of the transaction the defendant agreed to be the buyer, the former evidence is not conclusive, but may be modified by the testimony as to the telephone conversation.—Saginaw Milling Co. v. Mower, 154 Mich. 620.

¶ 120. Where complainant signs a guaranty on a $3,000 note, agreeing to be responsible for the payment of any deficiency up to the amount of $1,500, and so signs after another guarantor has agreed to be responsible for a like amount, the trial court under conflicting testimony is justified in finding that complainant agreed to be bound with respect to the second $1,500 and not merely with respect to the first $1,500.—Latham v. Savage, 166 Mich. 300.

§ 28. Questions of law and fact; directing verdict.

See also ante § 116.

General law as to questions of law and fact, see Trial, VI.

Of price by factor as jury question, see Brokers § 44, ¶ 213.

¶ 121. In a suit against the guarantors of a promissory note, where the testimony is conflicting as to whether or not a new note was substituted for the original one, thus releasing the guarantors, the question should be submitted to the jury.—R. L. Polk Printing Co. v. Smedley, 155 Mich. 242.

¶ 122. In a suit on a guaranty to recover the cost of reconstructing a sidewalk which was defectively laid by defendants, a statement of account showing the cost of said reconstruction was referred to by a witness and he testified independently of the account that the cost was a certain sum. Defendants made no suggestion that the proof was insufficient. Held, a verdict directed for plaintiff for the said certain sum would not be reversed as being based on insufficient proof of the reasonableness of the cost of reconstruction.—A. M. Campau Realty Co. v. Lenhardt, 164 Mich. 83.

General law as to instructions, see Instructions.

¶ 123. Conflicting testimony was given as to whether defendant promised to pay for goods sold in the first instance, or simply guaranteed payment. The court charged in substance that in the first case the defendant would be liable as purchaser, but in the second he would be only a collateral promisor and not liable, since he made no guaranty in writing. Held, that all the instructions taken together presented this charge, and were correct.—Saginaw Milling Co. v. Mower, 154 Mich. 620.

§ 30. Verdict and findings.

¶ 124. In a suit on a guaranty of collection a finding that shows an apparent exhaustion of legal remedies, but does not describe or identify the note or show that the plaintiff is still a holder, amounts to a mistrial.—Gray v. Pike, 38 Mich. 650.

GUARDIANS AD LITEM AND NEXT FRIENDS.

TREATS of guardians appointed for the purpose of a specific litigation to defend the infant or other incompetent defendant and of next friends (sometimes called guardians ad litem) who carry on litigation for persons non sui juris. It excludes special guardianships pending the appointment or disqualification of the general guardian (see Guardianship) and also excludes the functions and power of the general guardian to sue or defend for the ward (see Guardianship, IV).

Objection on writ of error that plaintiffs, being infants, should have acted through next friend, see Appeal ¶ 360.

¶ 3. The prochein ami for an infant plaintiff must be appointed by the court. If the suit is commenced by declaration without such appointment, it will be dismissed on motion.—Haines v. Oatman, 2 D. 430.

¶ 4. Before suit is instituted in behalf of parties, all of whom are infants, a next friend must be appointed for them, that defendant may have some one responsible to him for costs.—Sick v. Michigan Aid Ass'n, 49 Mich. 50.

¶ 5. A guardian ad litem should be appointed to protect interests of infant party in partition.—Prince v. Clark, 81 Mich. 167.

¶ 5a. Where infants are sued they are to be defended by a guardian ad litem and not by a general guardian.—Bearinger v. Pelton, 78 Mich. 109.

¶ 6. Where suit was brought on a policy of insurance taken out for the benefit of a wife and minor children, and these beneficiaries sued as coplaintiffs, the fact that the mother was not designated as next friend was held no ground for abatement. Her appointment as next friend would have been a mere formality.—Sick v. Michigan Aid Ass'n, 49 Mich. 50.

Appointment to avoid undue continuances, see Continuances ¶ 18.
Appointment and tenure of general guardian, see Guardianship, II.

¶ 8. The practice of appointing next friends to prosecute actions for infants was of statutory origin, and was apparently provided to avoid the difficulty of obtaining the application of the infant for the appointment of a guardian.—Baker v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 142 Mich. 497.

¶ 9. A next friend need not be appointed by the court; it is only necessary that the court should recognize his representative capacity and not dissent.—Sick v. Michigan Aid Ass'n, 49 Mich. 50.

§ 5. Persons qualified and eligible for appointment.

¶ 10. Any proper person may present himself and be accepted as next friend if there is nothing against it.—Sick v. Michigan Aid Ass'n, 49 Mich. 50.

¶ 11. Where the interests of an infant defendant are identical with those of the complainants, and his codefendant is charged in the bill with defrauding said infant as well as the complainants, the codefendant should not be appointed as guardian ad litem for the infant.—Damouth v. Klock, 29 Mich. 289.

¶ 12. In appointing a guardian ad litem for an insane person, the court should appoint the general guardian, or some person who can be relied upon to actively protect the insane person's interest, and not the register of the court or other person who would be naturally expected to make a merely perfunctory defense.—Erwin v. Fay, 165 Mich. 503 (reported sub nom. Love v. Merrill).

¶ 13. On appeal from an order confirming the sale of land, it appeared that certain infants petitioned under Comp. Laws 1897, § 534, for appointment of a next friend, that an order of sale was granted and the land sold. The person nominated was father of three and was stepfather of the fourth, the appellant. It did not appear that he was either guardian or near relative of appellant. Held, that the sale as to the appellant was ordered and made without authority.—In re Flynn's Estate, 171 Mich. 136.

¶ 14. One who has procured a quitclaim of interest which heir of a deceased minor may have cannot sue as next friend at expense of surviving minors, he being directly interested in result of suit.—Crittenden v. Canfield, 87 Mich. 152.

¶ 15. How. St., § 8124, providing that, before any process shall be issued in the name of an infant who is sole plaintiff, a "competent and responsible" person shall be appointed as next friend for the infant in such suit, who shall be "responsible for the costs," does not mean that the person so appointed must be financially responsible to pay the costs, but only that he shall be liable to respond therefor the same as though he were the party in interest; it being necessary to construe said section in connection with How. St., § 8989, under which, as amended, it is discretionary with the court to order security for costs in such cases.—Rabidon v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 110 Mich. 297.

§ 6. Procedure for appointment.

Right of infant over fourteen years of age to nominate his guardian, see Jud. Act, chap. XII, § 30; Comp. L. 1915, § 12381.

Appointment of next friend or guardian ad litem in justice court actions, see Jud. Act, chap. LXVII, §§ 22-26; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14199-14203.

Appointment of guardian ad litem to represent unborn, unascertained or legally incompetent persons in accounting of trustee in probate, see Jud. Act, chap. LXI, § 37; Comp. L. 1915, § 14088.

¶ 16. The appointment of next friend is sufficient, if made in writing by the complainant, accompanied by the written consent of the next friend, and the appointment and consent annexed to the bill.—Markham v. Markham, 4 Mich. 305.

¶ 17. Proceedings for the appointment of a guardian ad litem of an infant defendant were valid where personal service of subpoena was made upon the infant defendant and his mother who was his natural guardian and thereafter no application for the appointment of a guardian ad litem was made by or for the infant defendant within the statutory period after the return day of the process and where upon the petition of the plaintiff an order of appointment was made by the court, which became absolute after certified copies thereof had been duly served personally upon the defendant infant and his mother and also upon their counsel and no appearance to ask for the appointment of a guardian was made by or on behalf of the infant defendant within the statutory period of ten days after such service.—Peck v. Kent Circuit Judge, 98 Mich. 639.

¶ 18. It is improper in a bill for divorce against an insane wife to permit the husband complainant to select the guardian ad litem for the wife.—Frieseke v. Frieseke, 138 Mich. 458.

¶ 19. Complainant in a foreclosure suit had a subpoena issued against the defendant, who was mentally incompetent. The sheriff in his return stated that he was unable to serve the subpoena because of the defendant's concealment within the state. Complainant filed an affidavit stating the substance of the sheriff's return, and stating his desire to make application for an order of publication in accordance with sections 485-487, Comp. Laws 1897, and also stating his desire to give notice to said defendant and to her guardian that if she or they did not procure the appointment of a guardian ad litem for said defendant, to appear in the cause within twenty days after the time fixed in the order of publication for her appearance, complainant would apply to the court for a guardian ad litem for her without further notice. The order of publication entered provided that a copy of said order, together with the notice to have said guardian ad litem appointed, should be served on defendant's guardian within twenty days from the date of the order. The order and notice were personally served on the guardian. Held, the aforesaid proceedings gave the court jurisdiction of the person and property of the defendant so as to support its foreclosure decree.—Erwin v. Fay, 165 Mich. 503 (reported sub nom. Love v. Merrill).

¶ 20. Where in a foreclosure suit against an insane person, the court has obtained jurisdiction of the person and subject-matter, and has caused the order of publication to be served upon the daughter of the defendant as general guardian, thereby affording her an opportunity and making it her duty to appear and procure the appointment of a guardian ad litem, the appointment of the register as such guardian ad litem does not deprive the court of jurisdiction to render the decree and cannot be contested upon an application for a writ of assistance.—Erwin v. Fay, 165 Mich. 503 (reported sub nom. Love v. Merrill).

§ 7. Appointment during pendency of action.

Amendment on error to substitute name of infant as party, see Appeal § 523.

Appointment during pendency of action, see Jud. Act, chap. XII, § 31; Comp. L. 1915, § 12382.

¶ 21. It is not error for the circuit court, on the trial of an appeal from a justice's judgment in favor of a mother and her daughter, to appoint the mother next friend of the daughter, whose infancy is for the first time brought to the attention of the court, no objection having been raised in the court below.—McDonald v. Weir, 76 Mich. 243.

¶ 22. An appointment by a justice of the peace of a next friend for an infant plaintiff upon plaintiff's motion after issue of process is valid.—Dillon v. Howe, 98 Mich. 168.

¶ 23. A declaration in the name of a guardian may be amended after plea by making the ward the plaintiff, suing by her next friend, the guardian aforesaid.—Morford v. Dieffenbacker, 54 Mich. 593.

¶ 24. Where suit was brought on a policy of insurance taken out for the benefit of a wife and minor children and these beneficiaries sued as coplaintiffs, the failure to have the mother designated as next friend would be cured by a verdict, and after verdict the court should have allowed an amendment instead of turning the minors out of court.—Sick v. Michigan Aid Ass'n, 49 Mich. 50.

¶ 25. Upon an appeal from an action of the probate court on an administration account, the circuit court would have authority, if deemed necessary, to appoint a new guardian ad litem.—Walker v. Hull, 35 Mich. 488.

¶ 26. Failure to appoint a guardian ad litem for infant legatees, on application made in their behalf to the circuit court for leave to appeal from an order of the probate court allowing the executor's account, is a mere irregularity, which may be cured by the appointment of such guardian in the circuit court after an appeal from its decision on the first-mentioned appeal.—In re Sanborn's Estate, 109 Mich. 191.

¶ 27. Authority given by an infant to an agent to enforce his claim under the Log Lien Law is not void because no next friend has been appointed, since the agent is, so far as the infant is concerned, his next friend, and the court may at any time during the proceedings formally approve the selection.—Craig v. Brown, 171 Mich. 256.

§ 8. Furnishing security to ward.

Authority of next friend to receive judgment money paid in settlement of action brought in infant's name, see also post ¶ 34.

Necessity that general guardian give security to guardian ad litem for his compensation before receiving guardianship funds, see post ¶ 35.

Bond to be furnished by next friend, see Jud. Act, chap. XII, § 29; Comp. L. 1915, § 12380.

Necessity for guardian ad litem and next friend to furnish security to ward before receiving any money or property belonging to ward, see 1916 C. C. Rule 63.

§ 9. Presumptions and evidence of appointment, and conclusiveness of same.

¶ 28. A petition for the appointment of a guardian ad litem, purporting to have been signed by the infants, and calendar entries showing that on the day it was filed the order prayed for was made, and an answer signed by the guardian ad litem as such, and a decree referring to the answer of the infant defendants, naming them, by their guardian ad litem, sufficiently evidence the making of the order of appointment, and it will be presumed that the necessary proofs were before the court when the order was made.—Stevenson v. Kurtz, 98 Mich. 493.

¶ 29. A cause in which the plaintiff has appeared by his next friend having been appealed by the defendant from the judgment of a justice of the peace to the circuit court, and no question having been made in the appeal papers as to the regularity of such appearance, it must be assumed for all further purposes in the appellate court that the appointment of the next friend and his appearance before the justice were regular.—Kearney v. Doyle, 22 Mich. 294.

¶ 30. Fraud in the foreclosure of a mortgage against infant defendants is not inferable from the fact that their step-mother, who is a sister of the complainant, acted as their guardian ad litem.—Stevenson v. Kurtz, 98 Mich. 493.

¶ 31. Where the purchaser at a sale knows that she is purchasing real estate from a next friend, she is presumed to have knowledge of the proceedings.—In re Flynn's Estate, 171 Mich. 136.

¶ 32. A ward is concluded by the failure of his general guardian to appeal from the appointment of a guardian ad litem.—Landon v. Comet, 62 Mich. 80.

¶ 33. Guardians ad litem cannot bind infant litigants except in strict accordance with the rules framed for their protection.—Sheahan v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 42 Mich. 69.

¶ 34. The next friend of an infant who has recovered a judgment in the infant's name has authority to receive payment therefor and to satisfy the judgment under Comp. L. 1897, § 10458.—Baker v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 142 Mich. 497.

¶ 35. A court should not give up control of a fund belonging to infant litigants without securing the rights of their guardians ad litem or his solicitor by requiring that proper security be given before such fund is turned over to the general guardian.—Sheahan v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 42 Mich. 69.

¶ 36. It seems that the guardian ad litem of an infant litigant or his solicitor has a lien upon the infant's funds in court.—Sheahan v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 42 Mich. 69.

§ 11. Admissions, waivers or relinquishments.

Admissions by guardian as binding on ward, see Evidence § 426.

¶ 37. An infant is not bound by any attempted relinquishment of its rights by its next friend.—Burt v. McBain, 29 Mich. 260.

¶ 38. The guardian ad litem of an infant defendant cannot bind her by his admissions against her.—Cooper v. Mayhew, 40 Mich. 528.

¶ 39. The next friend of an infant plaintiff cannot bind her by an accord and satisfaction in pursuance of which a slander suit is discontinued, so as to prevent her from bringing another suit on the same cause of action, since only parties to the action can make such contracts binding.—Burt v. McBain, 29 Mich. 260.

¶ 40. A guardian ad litem of an infant defendant cannot admit away any of the infant's rights in his answer in a chancery suit, and if, upon the hearing or upon a proper showing, it appears that any such admission has been made, an amendment will be at once granted to correct it.—Peck v. Kent Circuit Judge, 98 Mich. 639.

¶ 41. A decree in foreclosure against minor defendants rendered upon stipulation with their guardian ad litem waiving irregularities, notices and time to make answer, and allowing decree to be taken at once without answer, is void for want of jurisdiction.—Taylor v. McConnell, 53 Mich. 587.

¶ 42. Decree cannot be granted against an infant upon the admissions of his guardian ad litem.—Thayer v. Lane, W. 200; Ballentine v. Clark, 38 Mich. 395; Chandler v. McKinney, 6 Mich. 217.

¶ 43. It is irregular practice for a guardian ad litem of an infant defendant in foreclosure to join in an answer with other defendants.—Wood v. Truax, 39 Mich. 628.

¶ 44. A bill to restrain the sale of land on execution by one who obtained a judgment as guardian is not demurrable on the ground that the ward is not made a party, under a guardian ad litem, where it does not show that the ward is interested.—Wight v. Roethlisberger, 116 Mich. 241.

GUARDIANSHIP.

TREATS of the relation of guardian and ward and its incidental rights, liabilities, powers, custody, and disabilities, whether the guardianship by judicial appointment, natural relationship or otherwise. It excludes the relation of parent and child and its incidents (see Parent and Child), the general law of Infants, the general law of Trusts, and Guardian ad Litem, all of which see. The status of persons as sane or insane and the commitment of such persons when found insane or incompetent is treated in Insane Persons.

¶ 1. Persons who can be safely trusted with taking care of themselves are seldom, if ever, liable to guardianship. Nor is one incompetent because so sick or crippled as to be compelled to leave his affairs in the hands of servants or agents.—Storick's Case, 64 Mich. 685.

¶ 2. The probate court has no power to appoint a guardian for the person or estate of a mentally competent person not a minor, even though all her relatives and friends should request it, and she desire and consent to it.—North v. Joslin, 59 Mich. 624.

¶ 4. How. St., §§ 6314, 6315, expressly confine their operation to a person non compos mentis, and whose mind has become affected by old age or other causes, so as to lose its normal condition. The statute does not refer to persons who are sane, but not perhaps as wise or intelligent as some other persons.—Storick's Case, 64 Mich. 685.

¶ 5. To warrant the appointment of a guardian for an incompetent person, there must be an adjudication of record that such person is mentally incompetent to take care of herself and manage her property.—North v. Joslin, 59 Mich. 624.

¶ 6. Measures for appointment of a guardian (How. St. § 6314) were recommended in the case of a weak-minded old man, who cannot give his age exactly, but says it is sixty-odd years, where he attempted to convey by deed his homestead without any consideration.—Raynett v. Baluss, 54 Mich. 469.

§ 4. Special guardians.

Appointment of special guardian, see post § 18.

Powers, duties and liabilities of special guardian, see post § 27.
Special guardian, see Jud. Act. chap. LVIII, § 12; Comp. L. 1915, § 13961.

¶ 7. In a proceeding under Comp. Laws 1897, § 8710, providing for the appointment of a guardian for incompetent persons, the question of appointing a special guardian pending the application for the appointment of a general guardian, or pending any appeal or litigation with relation to such appointment, is addressed to the sound discretion of the court and is determined by the apparent condition of the ward or of his estate, or both.—Wagner v. Wayne Probate Judge, 151 Mich. 74.

§ 5. Foreign guardians.

Guardian for nonresident ward having property in state, see post § 7.
Recognition of foreign guardians, see Conflict of Laws § 38.
Foreign guardians, see Jud. Act, chap. LIX, §§ 34, 35; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14020, 14021.
Bond of foreign guardian acting within this state, see Jud. Act, chap. LVIII, § 28; Comp. L. 1915, § 13977.
Removal from state of property of nonresident ward, see Jud. Act, chap. LVII, § 35; Comp. L. 1915, § 13984.

§ 6. Jurisdiction of probate and chancery courts.

Jurisdictional residence or property in state, see post § 7.
Place or county for guardianship, see post § 8.
Appointment of guardian, see post §§ 13-18.
Discharge from guardianship, see post § 23.

Jurisdiction of circuit court on appeal from probate court in matter of guardianship appointment, see also post ¶ 76.
Estoppel to object on appeal to probate court's jurisdiction by submission of claim to it, see also Court § 83, ¶ 298.

¶ 8. The jurisdiction of the probate court embraces not only the appointment of and control over guardians, but the care and protection of the estate of the wards.—In re Estate of Andrews, 92 Mich, 449.

¶ 9. The power of appointing guardians for infants—vested by statute in the probate courts—was formerly vested in the court of chancery, and must be considered as having been transferred with such of its incidents as can be properly exercised in the new tribunal.—Taff v. Hosmer, 14 Mich. 249.

¶ 10. The code of 1827, p. 57, § 1, defined and limited to the cases therein specified the jurisdiction of the probate court over the appointment of guardians for minors conferred in general terms by said code, p. 55, § 1.—Palmer v. Oakley, 2 D. 433.

¶ 11. Under How. St., § 6322, the probate court has some supervisory control over the acts of a guardian in paying his ward's debts, and the approval of the court to a payment may be asked by any person interested in having the question of such payment passed upon.—State v. Dunbar's Estate, 99 Mich. 99.

¶ 12. On the death of a spendthrift's guardian the probate court has power to appoint a successor.—Norton v. Ohrns, 67 Mich. 612.

¶ 13. Chancery has no jurisdiction of a charge of fraud in a guardian's appointment; the matter pertains to the probate court.—Kellogg v. Aldrich, 39 Mich. 576.

¶ 14. The probate court is the proper forum in which to determine the fact of mental incapacity of a person for whose estate an application is made for the appointment of a guardian.—In re Phillips, 154 Mich. 139.

¶ 15. Under Comp. Laws 1897, c. 33, §§ 646-701, and Comp. Laws 1897 c. 234, §§ 8697-8748, the probate court has exclusive jurisdiction of the settlement of the estates of mentally incompetent persons under guardianship, except where its remedies are inadequate; such jurisdiction is not affected by the provision of Comp. Laws 1897, § 651, as added by Laws 1871, No. 39, that the jurisdiction conferred shall not be construed to deprive the circuit court in chancery of concurrent jurisdiction, as such proviso was not intended to confer upon a court of chancery the powers originally exercised by that court, but merely to declare the existing law, and remove any doubt as to the power of the court to exercise inherent equity powers where the remedies in the probate court were inadequate.—Nolan v. Garrison, 156 Mich. 397.

§ 7. Jurisdictional residence or property in state.

Cause of action for death of parent by wrongful act as property of child sustaining guardianship within state, see Conflict of Laws ¶ 99.

¶ 16. Where it appears that one is incompetent to handle his own affairs, and has coming to him an estate which is likely to be lost or squandered unless put in the hands of a competent person, has no friends or relatives within the state, and is a nonresident of the state, the probate court by virtue of Comp. L. 1897, § 8729, may appoint a guardian of the estate of such nonresident incompetent.—Griffin v. Lenawee Probate Judge, 148 Mich. 516.

§ 8. Place or county for guardianship.

¶ 17. Where a person has left his domicile with no intention of returning, and is killed before he establishes another, the legal character of the old domicile does not necessarily control in matters of policy, and determine the place where a guardian for the decedent's infant child should be appointed.—Rice's Case, 42 Mich. 528.

¶ 18. Where a grandfather had the custody of an infant child for years with the father's express consent in the domicile of the child's origin, and the father went to another county where he died after three months' domicile, the domicile of the child continued to be that of the grandfather, and he could legally be appointed guardian of the child.—Hering v. Mosher, 144 Mich. 152.

¶ 18a. Where it is necessary to make a minor a party to probate proceedings, under section 8708, Comp. Laws 1897, the court of one county may appoint a guardian for a minor of another county.—Brown v. Hannah, 152 Mich. 88.

II. THE PERSON, APPOINTMENT AND TENURE OF THE GUARDIAN.

§ 9. Natural or constructive guardians without appointment.

Persons qualified or eligible for appointment, see post § 10.
Testamentary nomination, see post § 11.
Persons entitled to petition or nominate, see post § 12.

Custody, protection and support of Infants, see Infants, II.
Right of father and mother to custody of minors, see Jud. Act, chap. LVIII, § 6; Comp. L. 1915, § 13955.

¶ 19. Guardianship in socage does not exist in Michigan.—Kinney v. Harrett, 46 Mich. 87.

¶ 20. A father is the natural guardian of his child, charged with his nurture and education.—People ex rel. Workman v. Detroit Board of Education, 18 Mich. 400.

¶ 21. The mother is the natural guardian of infants whose father is dead.—Sick v. Michigan Aid Ass'n, 49 Mich. 50; Monaghan v. Agricultural Fire Ins. Co., 53 Mich. 238.

¶ 22. An equitable wardship arises where a son takes charge of his father's affairs in the belief that the latter is incompetent to manage them, and the father passively submits.—Jacox v. Jacox, 40 Mich. 473.

¶ 23. A son whose parents have turned over their property to him on the consideration that he will support them stands as their guardian and is bound to gain no advantage in dealing with them.—Bowe v. Bowe, 42 Mich. 195.

§ 10. Persons qualified or eligible for appointment.

Testamentary nomination, see post § 11.
Persons entitled to petition or nominate, see post § 12.
As to business qualifications, see also post ¶ 249.
As to residence qualification, see ante § 8, ¶ 18.
Capacity of trust company to act as guardian, see Comp. L. 1915, § 8052.

¶ 24. Who shall or shall not be appointed guardian of an infant is within the discretion of the court; relatives are usually selected, and those nearest of kin are usually preferred when otherwise competent, the controlling purpose being the interest of the ward.—In re Stockman, 71 Mich. 180.

¶ 25. Under the statute no one but the parents is entitled of right to the guardianship of a minor.—Taff v. Hosmer, 14 Mich. 249.

¶ 26. The laws of this state contemplate the appointment of a guardian who shall have custody of the ward's estate whoever has custody of his person, and they do not provide for corporation guardianships.—Rice's Case, 42 Mich. 528.

¶ 27. A married woman is now a competent guardian.—Goss v. Stone, 63 Mich. 319.

¶ 28. Both at the common law and under the code of 1827 a married woman was competent to be a guardian with the assent of her husband, but not without such assent.—Palmer v. Oakley, 2 D. 433.

¶ 29. Letters granted to a married woman without her husband's assent would be voidable merely, not void. And his assent might be presumed from his joining with her in the bond which the statute required the guardian to give before making sale of the ward's real estate.—Palmer v. Oakley, 2 D. 433.

§ 11. Testamentary nomination.

Powers and duties of testamentary guardians, see post § 26.
Construction and interpretation of wills as to testamentary nominations, see Wills, VI, F.
Right of testators to control guardianship by testamentary provision, see Wills, I.
Testamentary nomination, see Jud. Act, chap. LVIII, § 10; Comp. L. 1915, § 13959.

¶ 30. Guardians for infants may be appointed by the parent's last will instead of by the court, and in such case the court will recognize their authority and their control of the ward only so long as it is right and proper, and for the ward's best interest.—In re Stockman, 71 Mich. 180.

¶ 31. The refusal to appoint a testamentary guardian is in the sound discretion of the probate court.—Ohrns v. Woodward, 134 Mich. 596.

¶ 32. The probate court may refuse to appoint a testamentary guardian because of mutual distrust between the mother and said proposed guardian, both of whom are named as guardians in the will.—Ohrns v. Woodward, 134 Mich. 596.

¶ 33. The right of the mother to oppose the appointment of a testamentary guardian for her children under Comp. L. 1897, § 8706, is not waived by her consent to the probate of the will.—Ohrns v. Woodward, 134 Mich. 596.

¶ 34. A testamentary guardian is appointed by statutory right and such a guardian must comply with the statutory limitations intended to safeguard the ward by filing a bond or applying for letters before he can bind the ward by a release of mortgage.—Olmstead v. Taylor, 126 Mich. 316.

¶ 35. Laws 1877, Act No. 7, How. St. § 6311, provides that, where a wife survives her husband, his appointment, by will, of a guardian for minor children shall not be operative until approved by the judge of probate after giving opportunity to the mother to show cause in opposition to it. Held, that this provision is not meant to allow an appointment to be defeated by the death of the mother before probate unless some good reason exists. The objection to the appointment is to be made in the probate court when the will comes up for probate; and if the wife has not otherwise objected, and if no affirmative objection is made, the appointment must stand with the rest of the will.—Carpenter v. Harris, 51 Mich. 228.

¶ 36. The father's testamentary appointment of a guardian cannot deprive a mother of the right to the custody of her child.—Goss v. Stone, 63 Mich. 319.

¶ 37. Under Comp. L. 1857, relating to appointment of guardians, no one could complain of a father's exercise of his testamentary power to appoint a guardian for his infant children, nor could that power be reviewed; but the next of kin may dispute the fact of any choice having been made, and therefore may be proper parties to oppose the probate of a will appointing a guardian on the ground that it is not a valid instrument.—Taff v. Hosmer, 14 Mich. 249.

§ 12. Persons entitled to petition or nominate.

Nomination of guardian by minor over fourteen years of age, see Jud. Act, chap. LVIII, § 3; Comp. L. 1915, § 13952.

When probate judge may nominate guardian for minor over fourteen years of age, see Jud. Act, chap. LVIII, § 4; Comp. L. 1915, § 13953.

Nomination of guardian by judge of probate if minor is under fourteen years of age, see Jud. Act, chap. LVIII, § 3; Comp. L. 1915, § 13952.

Persons entitled to petition for appointment of guardian, see Jud. Act, chap. LVIII, § 2; Comp. L. 1915, § 13951.

¶ 38. The brother-in-law of an alleged incompetent is a proper person to petition for the appointment of a general or special guardian, under Comp. Laws 1897, § 8709.—Wagner v. Wayne Probate Judge, 151 Mich. 74.

¶ 39. Where a mere intermeddler applies for the appointment of a guardian for an alleged incompetent, under Comp. Laws 1897, § 8710, the application will be looked upon with disfavor, and a legal remedy may be found.—Wagner v. Wayne Probate Judge, 151 Mich. 74.

¶ 40. In the use of the terms "relations or friends" in the statute providing for applications for the appointment of guardians for incompetents, it was not the intent of the legislature to employ two different words with equivalent legal meanings, but to designate a class of persons other than relatives who might institute guardianship proceedings in the case of alleged insane and incompetent persons, and the words will be given the generally accepted meaning.—Wagner v. Wayne Probate Judge, 151 Mich. 74.

§ 13. Petition and procedure on appointment.

Notice and persons to be notified, see post § 14.

Hearing, issues and evidence, see post § 15.

Findings and order of appointment, see post § 16.

Appointment of guardian for incompetent or insane, see post § 17.

Appointment of special guardian, see post § 18.

Procedure on appeal in circuit court and appointment de novo, see post § 19.

Record and evidence of appointment, see post § 21.

Petition for appointment, see Jud. Act, chap. LVIII, § 2; Comp. L. 1915, § 13951.

By whom minor's nomination for guardian may be certified, see Pub. Act, 1917, No. 60 amending Jud. Act, chap. LVIII, § 5; Comp. L. 1915, § 13954.

Authority to appoint guardian for spendthrift, see Jud. Act, chap. LVIII, § 1, ¶ 3; Comp. L. 1915, § 13950, ¶ 3.

¶ 41. A petition under How. St., §§ 6314, 6315, cannot give jurisdiction unless it follows the words of the statute or uses language and states facts fully equivalent.—Storick's Case, 64 Mich. 685.

¶ 42. Under How. St., § 6314, a petition stating that petitioner's husband is unable to provide a comfortable and suitable maintenance for his family, that he is not of sufficient ability to manage his personal affairs, and that he is in the habit of making foolish bargains and squanders what he earns, does not confer upon the probate court jurisdiction to appoint a guardian.—Partello v. Holton, 79 Mich. 372.

¶ 43. It is a sufficient averment of the mental incompetency of a person whom it is sought to place under guardianship to state in the petition for the appointment of the guardian that such appointment is necessary because, by reason of extreme old age and other causes, such person "is now mentally incompetent to have the charge and management of his property and has been mentally incompetent for some time past."—Norton v. Sherman, 58 Mich. 549.

¶ 44. A petition under How. St., § 6314, for the appointment of a guardian for a person mentally incompetent, should show what persons will be affected by the proposed action; and this includes the incompetent's presumptive heirs and distributees. If he is married and his wife is living, that fact should appear in the petition.—In re Bansett, 68 Mich. 348.

¶ 45. A petition under How. St., § 6314 sufficiently raises the issue of incompetency when it states that the said B. "is mentally incompetent to have the care and management of his property, though it is followed by unnecessary specifications of such incompetency.—In re Bassett, 68 Mich. 348.

¶ 46. In a petition under Comp. L. 1871, § 4822; How. St., § 6314 for the appointment of a guardian for a person incompetent to manage his own affairs, an allegation that "said A. B. is incompetent to have the care, charge and management of his property; he is old and infirm," is insufficient, as it does not necessarily allege that he is "mentally incompetent." An allegation that A. B. was so addicted to the use of intoxicating drinks as to be liable to become the victim of designing persons, and that through intoxication and foolish speculation he had wasted his estate, though proper in a petition under Comp. L. 1871, § 4825; How. St., § 6317 for the appointment of a guardian for a spendthrift, is mere surplusage in a petition based on mental incompetency.—In re Brown's Estate, 45 Mich. 326.

¶ 47. A petition for the appointment of a guardian for an alleged incompetent person, in order to confer jurisdiction, must show who, if any, the persons are who will be affected by the action sought to be taken, and this will include the presumptive heirs at law.—In re Myers, 73 Mich. 401; In re Bassett, 68 Mich. 348.

¶ 48. A petition for the appointment of a guardian for an alleged incompetent person under sec. 8709, Comp. Laws 1897, need not state the cause of such mental incompetency.—In re Miller's Estate, 173 Mich. 467.

§ 14. ——Notice and persons to be notified.

Notice for discharge from guardianship, see post § 23.

Notice of hearing on petition, see Jud. Act, chap. LVIII, § 2; Comp. L. 1915, § 13951.

¶ 49. The notice required by How. St., § 6314 is essential to give the probate court jurisdiction to appoint a guardian for an insane or incompetent person; it must be in writing, must be given under the order of the probate judge, and must be personally served. It is not enough that the person may have learned of the pendency of the proceedings, or that he appears at the hearing.—North v. Joslin, 59 Mich. 624.

¶ 50. A guardian may be appointed for a minor under fourteen without notice, and if notice is given for a certain day, an appointment made on a previous day is not invalid.—Kelley v. Edwards, 38 Mich. 210.

¶ 51. The probate court has no power to appoint a guardian for a minor over fourteen and within the territory without first citing him to appear and choose his own guardian. And an ex parte application, representing the minor to be under fourteen confers no jurisdiction to appoint without citation, if, in fact, the minor was over that age.—Palmer v. Oakley, 2 D. 433.

¶ 52. On an application for the appointment of a guardian for an alleged incompetent person, a brother of his who holds a mortgage belonging to him under an unrevoked power of attorney is entitled to notice.—Partello v. Holton, 79 Mich. 372.

¶ 53. The incompetent person's presumptive heirs at law must have notice of application for appointment of a guardian.—In re Myers, 73 Mich. 401.

¶ 54. Notice to nonresident heirs of an alleged incompetent person of an application for an appointment of a guardian is not absolutely necessary to the jurisdiction of the court where a majority of the heirs are residents of this state and are duly notified.—Munger v. Kalamazoo Probate Judge, 86 Mich. 363.

¶ 55. Under How. St., § 6798, which authorizes a judge of probate in the absence of a statute directing the manner of giving notice of proceedings in probate court, where notice is required by law, or is deemed by him necessary to be given, to order it to be given in such manner and for such length of time as he shall deem reasonable, a valid notice may be given by publication to nonresident heirs of an application for an appointment of a guardian for an alleged incompetent person.—Munger v. Kalamazoo Probate Judge, 86 Mich. 363.

¶ 56. The probate court is not deprived of jurisdiction in proceedings for the appointment of a guardian for an incompetent person because of the failure to serve notice upon the guardian of a minor heir when the record fails to show such guardian's name and place of residence, and when it appears that such minor was personally served with notice and was old enough to understand what the notice was.—Munger v. Kalamazoo Probate Judge, 86 Mich. 363.

¶ 57. Compiled L. 1897, § 8709, relative to the appointment of a guardian for incompetent persons, providing that the citation shall be served on the alleged incompetent "not less than fourteen days before the time so appointed," includes the day of hearing as one of the fourteen days' notice.—In re Miller's Estate, 173 Mich. 467.

¶ 58. In a proceeding for the appointment of a guardian for an incompetent, Rule 5 of the Probate Court requiring service of the citation on the next of kin "at least fourteen days before the day set for hearing," has reference to fourteen full days' notice.—In re Miller's Estate, 173 Mich. 467.

§ 15. ——Hearing, issues and evidence.

Statutory provision for hearing on petition, see Jud. Act, chap. LVIII, § 2; Comp. L. 1915, § 13951.

¶ 59. On a hearing on a petition for appointment of a guardian for an incompetent woman it is a material inquiry as to whether the woman was married, under Comp. L. 1897, § 8736, which makes specific provision for married women incompetents.—Burgess v. Stribling, 134 Mich. 33.

¶ 60. On a petition for the appointment of a guardian for an incompetent person, an objection to improper service of notice in order to be available, must be made before the probate court on the hearing.—In re Miller's Estate, 173 Mich. 467.

¶ 61. In the absence of a showing in an application for the appointment of a guardian for an insane person, that no evidence of service other than that to the effect that the return of the officer with the admission of service by the wife and children of the alleged insane person was introduced, the regularity of the service and the jurisdiction of the probate court to make the appointment was assumed.—Reason v. Jones, 119 Mich. 672.

§ 16. ——Findings and order of appointment.

Appeals from probate decrees and orders, see Probate Courts, III.

Decree appointing guardian for incompetent married woman, a res adjudicata of the validity of her marriage, see Former Adjudication § 80.

Review of judgment or decree of circuit on appeal from probate, see Appeal § 30.

¶ 62. The law makes no provision for a finding of facts and law by the probate court in proceedings for the appointment of guardians.—In re Phillips, 154 Mich. 139.

¶ 63. In a proceeding for the appointment of a guardian for an incompetent, a finding by a jury that the respondent "is mentally incompetent to have the charge and management of his property" is sufficient, though the further question of his inability to take care of himself has not been submitted to the jury, especially if such inability has been found by the judge (How. St., § 6315).—Norton v. Sherman, 58 Mich. 549.

¶ 64. On proceedings for the appointment of a guardian finding that a person is "mentally incapable" is equivalent to a finding that he is "mentally incompetent" within the meaning of How. St., § 6314, relating to insane persons, the terms are synonymous.—In re Leonard's Estate, 95 Mich. 295.

¶ 65. A decree of the probate court, appointing a guardian, appeared upon its face to have been made upon an application representing the minor to be under fourteen and did not show any citation to the minor. Held to be valid on its face, though showing no formal finding of the fact that the minor was under fourteen; but held, further, that it might be impeached in a collateral action, by showing that the minor was, at the time, over fourteen.—Palmer v. Oakley, 2 D. 433.

¶ 66. Guardianship of an incompetent extends both to the person and the estate of the ward (How. St., § 6316); and an order appointing A. guardian of B., without mentioning B.'s estate, is unauthorized by statute.—In re Bassett, 68 Mich. 348.

¶ 67. To warrant appointment of guardian for incompetent, the order appearing of record should state that the ward is mentally incompetent to take care of himself and manage his property.—In re Bassett, 68 Mich. 348.

¶ 68. A recital in an order appointing a guardian that the person for whom the guardian is appointed "is mentally incompetent to have charge and management of his property and person, and that a guardian should be appointed for the reason that he is mentally incompetent to have the charge and management of his person and estate," sufficiently adjudicates the facts.—Munger v. Kalamazoo Probate Judge, 86 Mich. 363.

¶ 69. The omission, in the order of appointment, of the name of the person appointed guardian of an incompetent person is a mere clerical error which the probate court can correct at any time.—Munger v. Kalamazoo Probate Judge, 86 Mich. 363.

§ 17. Appointment of guardian for incompetent or insane.

Existence and ascertainment of insanity, see Insane Persons, I.

Conclusiveness of probate court adjudication of incompetency, or insanity, see Probate Courts, III.

Custody and commitment of insane persons, see Insane Persons, II.

Guardianship for mentally incompetent, see Jud. Act. chap. LVIII, § 1, ¶ 4; Comp. L. 1915, § 13950, ¶ 4.

¶ 70. The power of appointment of a guardian for an incompetent person by the probate court is derived from the statute, and, in order to obtain jurisdiction, the statute must be strictly pursued.—Partello v. Holton, 79 Mich. 372.

¶ 71. The probate court derives its jurisdiction to appoint guardians for insane and incompetent persons entirely from How. St.. §§ 6314, 6315, and in order to obtain jurisdiction in such cases the provisions of the statute must be strictly pursued.—North v. Joslin, 59 Mich. 624.

§ 18. Appointment of special guardian.

Necessity and occasion for special guardian, see ante § 4.

Powers, duties and liabilities of special guardian, see post § 27.

¶ 72. A proceeding for the appointment of a special guardian for an incompetent, under Comp. Laws 1897, § 8710, is an auxiliary proceeding.—Wagner v. Wayne Probate Judge, 151 Mich. 74.

¶ 73. The appointment of a special guardian pending an appeal for the appointment of a general guardian, under Comp. Laws 1897, § 8710, is not premature, because the appeal from the order appointing the general guardian has not been perfected.—Wagner v. Wayne Probate Judge, 151 Mich. 74.

¶ 74. A proper showing for the appointment of a special guardian for an incompetent, under Comp. Laws 1897, § 8710, may be made by the proofs produced at the hearing upon the original application.—Wagner v. Wayne Probate Judge, 151 Mich. 74.

§ 19. Procedure on appeal in circuit court and appointment de novo.

Certiorari to review circuit judgment on appeal from appointment, see Certiorari § 14.

Conclusiveness of probate orders, findings and adjudications on appeal in circuit court, see Probate Courts, III.

¶ 75. Where, on appeal from a probate order appointing a guardian, the circuit judge makes a new appointment, he is bound to ascertain, as far as possible, the wishes of deceased parents, and all other facts bearing on the selection of a proper custodian; he should hear the next of kin, if they desire, and should regard the family relation and its mutual rights and duties, preferring relations to strangers.—Goss v. Stone, 63 Mich. 319.

¶ 76. On appeal the circuit court is the proper forum in which to determine the fact of mental incapacity of a person for whose estate an application is made for the appointment of a guardian.—In re Phillips, 154 Mich. 139.

§ 20. Bond on qualifying for letters.

Obligation and breach of bonds and liability and actions on same, see post, VII.

Guardian's bond on sale of real estate, see post § 43.

Further security on receipt of award in action, see post § 52.

Necessity for natural guardian to furnish security before exercising control of minor's estate, see post ¶ 97.

Guardianship bonds, see Jud. Act, chap. LVIII, § 13; Comp. L. 1915, § 13961.

Bond of testamentary guardian, see Jud. Act, chap. LVIII, § 11; Comp. L. 1915, § 13960.

¶ 77. Before the court of chancery will order money to be paid to a guardian it must be satisfied that he has given sufficient security for the performance of his trust and that he has not abused it.—Westbrook v. Comstock, W. 314.

¶ 78. The failure to give bonds by a person appointed guardian of minors does not of itself vacate his appointment.—Carpenter v. Harris, 51 Mich. 223.

¶ 79. The word "shall," as used in Comp. L. 1897, § 8704, providing that a guardian shall give bond is construed as mandatory.—Olmstead v. Taylor, 126 Mich. 316.

¶ 80. A married woman may now give bond as guardian if the appointment puts property under her control.—Goss v. Stone, 63 Mich. 319.

¶ 81. If the guardian was a married woman, and united with sureties in executing the bond, it seems that the bond was good, notwithstanding her incompetency.—Palmer v. Oakley, 2 D. 433.

¶ 82. It is not necessary that the guardianship bond, required by code of 1827 (p. 59, § 5), should be executed by the guardian; it was sufficient if a bond, with sufficient sureties, was given.—Palmer v. Oakley, 2 D. 433.

§ 21. Letters, record and evidence of appointment.

Necessity for proof of appointment in suit to foreclose mortgage assigned to guardian, see post ¶ 212.

¶ 83. A letter of guardianship is in the nature of a certificate or commission, and, unless some statute prevents, may be evidence of the appointment without reciting the mode and particulars of the nomination; all reasonable presumptions of its regularity must be indulged.—Burrows v. Bailey, 34 Mich. 64.

¶ 84. A letter of guardianship was held admissible in evidence, where title by guardian's sale was involved, even though it did not show in terms that his wards, who were minor heirs over fourteen years old, had nominated him or had any opportunity to do so. But it would be better to show it.—Burrows v. Bailey, 34 Mich. 64.

¶ 85. The record of the appointment of a guardian showing that the appointment was by consent of the ward, when introduced in evidence in another cause, is not open to contradiction by parol.—Lynch v. Kirby, 36 Mich. 238.

§ 22. Termination of guardianship and discharge.

Notice and procedure for discharge from guardianship, see post § 23.

Notice and procedure on discharge of sureties, see post § 84.

Proper mode of reviewing judgment of the circuit on discharge of guardian of incompetent, see Appeal § 3, ¶ 31.

Retroactive operation of statute providing that marriage should not affect guardianship as to property, see Statutes, VI.

Termination of guardianship of female ward as minor by her marriage, see Jud. Act, chap. LVIII, § 26; Comp. L. 1915, § 13975.

Removal of guardian, see Jud. Act, chap. LVIII, § 25; Comp. L. 1915, § 13974.

Resignation of guardian, see Jud. Act, chap. LVIII, § 25; Comp. L. 1915, § 13974.

¶ 86. Guardianship ends when the ward becomes of age or ceases to be incompetent; the guardian can then do no further act as such.—Tate v. Stevenson, 55 Mich. 320.

¶ 87. Termination of guardianship is equivalent to the discharge of the guardian. —Tate v. Stevenson, 55 Mich. 320.

¶ 88. The relation of guardian and ward usually exists for merely temporary purposes, and it is plain that when these purposes are fulfilled the trust must terminate.—In re Munck's Estate (Lyster's Appeal), 54 Mich. 325.

¶ 89. When a guardian is legally discharged, he has no longer the management of the trust estate. In re Munck's Estate (Lyter's Appeal), 54 Mich. 325.

¶ 90. A guardian is "discharged," within How. St. § 6332, providing that no action shall be maintained against the sureties on a guardian's bond unless commenced within four years from the time the guardian is discharged, whenever the guardianship is in any manner effectually determined and brought to a close, whether by the removal, resignation, or death of the guardian, the marriage of a female guardian, the arrival of a minor ward at the age of twenty-one years, or otherwise.—Perkins v. Cheney, 114 Mich. 567.

§ 23. Notice and procedure for discharge from guardianship.

Mandamus as remedy to compel vacation of order denying application for discharge where notice of hearing was not served on all relatives of incompetent, see Mandamus, II.

¶ 91. The ward of a de facto guardian may invoke the aid of the court which made the appointment in procuring a cancellation of the letters of guardianship for the irregularity in their issuance.—In re Cameron's Estate (Appeal of Smith), 157 Mich. 398.

¶ 92. Notice of the application of an incompetent person, under How. St. § 6329, for his discharge from guardianship on the ground that he has regained competency, must be given to the applicant's next of kin or presumptive heirs.—Storms v. Allegan Circuit Judge, 99 Mich. 144.

III. POWERS, DUTIES AND LIABILITIES.

A. RESPECTING WARD'S PROPERTY AND DEBTS.

§ 24. In general.

Natural, constructive or de facto guardians, see post § 25.

Testamentary guardians, see post § 26.

Special guardians, see post § 27.

Status, title and authority of guardians, see post §§ 28-34.

Enforcement and allowance of claims, see post § 35.

Sale or disposal of real estate, see post §§ 36-50.

Mortgaging ward's estate, see post § 51.

Leases of ward's lands, see post § 54.

Rights and powers of successors, see post § 55.

Respecting ward's person education and support, see post III, B.

Liability on bonds, see post VII.

Items to be charged against guardian on his account, see post §§ 69-75.

Liability of guardian for losses or depreciation, see post § 72.

Powers, duties and liabilities of infants, see Infants.

Powers, duties and liabilities of insane or mentally incompetent persons, see Insane Persons.
Actionable fraud in causing guardian to be remiss, see Fraud ¶ 180.
Powers and duties of guardian over estate of minor ward, see Jud. Act, chap. LVIII, § 8; Comp. L. 1915, § 13957.
Authority of guardian to act for injured minor or incompetent in proceedings under Workmen's Compensation Law, see Comp. L. 1915, § 5444.
Liability of representative to ward for legacy paid to guardian, see Estates of Decedents ¶ 1167.

¶ 93. The general powers of a guardian considered.—Palmer v. Oakley, 2 D. 433.

¶ 94. A guardian has such an interest as entitles him to petition for the probate of a will in his ward's favor.—Morford v. Dieffenbacker, 54 Mich. 593.

¶ 95. Guardianship over several minors is not a joint relation, but involves duties that are several.—Tate v. Stevenson, 55 Mich. 320.

¶ 96. Guardianship of a minor's person does not carry with it the control or possession of the ward's real estate.—Atwood v. Frost, 57 Mich. 229.

§ 25. Natural, constructive or de facto guardians.

Tenure of natural or constructive guardians, see ante § 9.
Duty of de facto guardian to account, see post ¶ 237.
Custody, protection and support for infants, see Infants, II.
Relation of parent and child and its incidents, see Parent and Child.

¶ 97. A natural guardian cannot be given control of the estate of a ward except by judicial proceedings and after giving security for responsible care.—Power v. Harlow, 57 Mich. 107.

¶ 98. A natural guardian has no power to admit away the rights of the ward whose person is in his custody. So, a mother cannot release her child's right of action for an injury by the admission that it had been warned to avoid the danger.—Power v. Harlow, 57 Mich. 107.

¶ 99. If there is no guardian for the estate of minor children, the mother, being a widow, has authority to apply in their behalf for insurance and to pay the premium. —Monaghan v. Agricultural Fire Ins. Co. of Watertown, N. Y., 53 Mich. 238.

¶ 100. A de facto guardian will be held subject to all the duties and liabilities of a guardian.—In re Cameron's Estate (Appeal of Smith), 158 Mich. 174.

§ 26. Testamentary guardian.

Appointment of testamentary guardians, see ante § 11.

¶ 101. The powers of a testamentary guardian are the same as those of a guardian appointed by the court, and are allowed to be exercised or withheld for the same reasons.—In re Stockman, 71 Mich. 180.

§ 27. Special guardian.

Necessity and occasion for special guardian, see ante § 4.
Appointment of special guardian, see ante § 18.
Duties of special guardians, see Jud. Act, chap. LVIII, § 12; Comp. L. 1915, § 13961.

¶ 102. An appointment of a special guardian, being but ancillary to a general guardianship, falls with it when the record of the general guardianship is fatally deficient.—In re Bassett, 68 Mich. 348.

¶ 103. The special guardian of a mentally incompetent person may grant leases of his lands, but such leases will not continue of their own force beyond the life-time of the ward; and if the guardian is paid rent for a longer period and the heir refuses to ratify the lease, the lessee may recover back such rent from the estate.—Campau v. Shaw, 15 Mich. 226.

§ 28. Status, title and authority of guardian.

Collection and reduction of estate to possession, see post § 29.
Compromising claims and making settlements, see post § 30.
Redeeming and removing incumbrances, see post § 31.
Contract powers and dealing for estate, see post § 32.
Disposal of or charge on properties, see post § 33.
Keeping and investment of funds, see post § 34.
Rights and dealings between ward and guardian, see post VI.
Right of guardian to secure personal advantage from use of ward's property, see post ¶ 275.
Amicable partition of lands of infants and incompetents, see Partition.

¶ 104. A guardian's power over his ward's real estate is limited to leasing it and to the reception of rents and profits, and he is not authorized to sign a petition for a local improvement which requires the signatures of a majority of the resident stockholders.—Aplin, Auditor-General v. Fisher, 84 Mich. 128.

§ 29. ——Collection and reduction of estate to possession.

Power of guardian for nuture to bring ejectment for ward's lands, see post ¶ 220.

Authority of guardian to sue at law for property of ward, see also post ¶ 218.
Guardian's authority to collect and receive debts due ward, see Jud. Act, chap. LVIII, § 20; Comp. L. 1915, § 13969.

¶ 105. The guardian of an incompetent is entitled to the income of the trust fund upon his appointment.—Nolan v. Garrison, 156 Mich. 397.

¶ 106. A guardian has the right to collect and receive money due to his ward on a bond and mortgage, in the exercise of his discretion as guardian.—Livingston v. Jones, H. 165.

¶ 107. Money belonging to infant litigants in foreclosure cannot be ordered paid to the solicitors of their general guardian, as they are strangers to the infants and have no claim on nor power to represent them.—Sheahan v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 42 Mich. 69.

¶ 108. Since he is not a party to the contract and the money does not belong to the ward, a guardian cannot maintain an action against the purchaser of land as for money due to an incompetent ward where the ward had no interest in the land, but the purchaser had retained in his hands, to be paid to a proper person, the amount of a debt due the incompetent from the vendor, and which the vendor had agreed to pay the ward out of the proceeds of a sale.—Hidden v. Chappel, 48 Mich. 527.

§ 30. ——Compromising claims and making settlements.

Enforcement and allowance of claims against estate of guardian, see post § 35.
Rescission of guardian's settlement of life insurance policy for less than its face where guardian sought to secure money for his own use and company had knowledge of fraud, see Rescission and Cancellation.

¶ 109. Infant and incompetent wards are not concluded by an agreement between their guardian and the executor of their father's estate, it being the guardian's duty not to settle with the executor without a true account, and without obtaining for the wards, if possible, all that is due them.—Sanborn v. St. Clair Circuit Judge, 94 Mich. 519.

¶ 110. Where money was directed to be paid into court, under a decree, for an infant, and his guardian accepted a deed of lands in lieu thereof, held, that it was not binding on the infant, and that the guardian had no right to receive the money, much less land in lieu of it.—Westbrook v. Comstock, W. 314.

§ 31. ——Redeeming and removing incumbrances.

Right of guardian to redeem lands of his ward from foreclosure sale, see Foreclosure ¶ 778.

¶ 111. A guardian has a right to redeem the lands of his ward from a mortgage sale.—Marvin v. Schilling, 12 Mich. 356.

¶ 112. Where one who claims as assignee of the locator of certain state land is also the guardian of the latter's heirs, and as assignee has redeemed the land from one who purchased it when it became forfeited to the state, the redemption will be sustained as made by the guardian, even though the assignment turns out to be a forgery.—Johnston v. Knapp, 35 Mich. 307.

¶ 113. One who has advanced money to a guardian for redeeming the infant's lands from foreclosure, volunteering thereto, can at the most have no greater requittal than the refunding of the money; he cannot appropriate the land as compensation if refundment is not made.—Tong v. Marvin, 26 Mich. 35.

§ 32. ——Contract powers and dealings for estate.

Presumption against fairness of contract made by guardian with ward, see post ¶¶ 274, 277.
Contracts of infants, see Infants, IV.
Contracts for insane persons, see Insane Persons, IV.
Employment of counsel by guardian to prosecute bastardy proceedings, see Bastards ¶ 13a.
Management of estate, see Jud. Act, chap. LVIII, § 22; Comp. L. 1915, § 13971.
Specific performance by guardian of contract to convey real estate made by person subsequently becoming insane, incompetent or spendthrift, see Jud. Act, chap. LX, §§ 13, 14; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14050, 14051.

¶ 114. A guardian cannot bind his ward by contracting with an attorney for services for the estate.—Lothrop v. Duffield, 134 Mich. 485.

¶ 115. A guardian of an insane person cannot, by contract, bind the estate of the ward for services of an attorney in procuring the release of the ward from the hospital for the criminally insane so as to subject the estate of the ward to a claim for such services, except where authority has been obtained from the probate court in accordance with law.—Nelson v. Sackett's Estate, 194 Mich. 450.

¶ 116. Where a promisor who has power to recall a promise at any time becomes mentally incompetent and a guardian of his person and estate is appointed, such guardian may likewise recall and revoke the promise.—Buhler v. Trombly, 139 Mich. 557.

¶ 117. Where a guardian as such made a mortgage, and upon its foreclosure there was a deficiency, held, that the ward could not be bound unless she had made a distinct promise to complainant based on a sufficient consideration to pay, since the guardian could not charge her.—Wood v. Truax, 39 Mich. 628.

§ 33. ——Disposal of or charge on properties.

Disposal of personalty by guradian, see Jud. Act, chap. LVIII, § 24; Comp. L. 1915, § 13978.

¶ 118. A guardian has a right to sell and assign a bond and mortgage due to his ward as a matter in the exercise of his discretion. —Livingston v. Jones, H. 165.

¶ 119. An executrix, who is also guardian of the testator's infant children and who has in her hands sufficient personal property for their support and maintenance, cannot, by the purchase of necessaries for them, charge their real estate with the indebtedness thereby incurred.—Roscoe v. McDonald, 101 Mich. 318.

§ 34. ——Keeping and investment of funds.

Liability for losses or depreciation on accounting, see post § 72.

Investments of proceeds of private sale of real property for benefit of ward, see Jud. Act, chap. LIX, § 44; Comp. L. 1915, § 14030.

¶ 120. A guardian may properly retain enough of the money of his ward to secure the means of making all necessary outlays; and in investing he may wait until he can find safe investments in sums of reasonable amount, looking not merely to the value of the security, but to the promptness of the borrower.—Gott v. Culp, 45 Mich. 265.

¶ 121. A guardian cannot be censured for honestly investing his ward's money in public securities or at the best legal interest which he finds readily obtainable. He represents the ward in taking securities and he may turn them.—Gott v. Culp, 45 Mich. 265.

¶ 122. Where a guardian of minor children held a mortgage belonging to the children and negotiated a loan as agent of a third person to the mortgagors, said loan to be applied in paying the mortgage, and took as security another mortgage on the same premises, which latter mortgage made no reference to the guardian's mortgage, the guardian had neither express or implied authority to postpone his security to the latter mortgage, a fact the mortgagee was bound to know.—Covey v. Leslie, 144 Mich. 165.

§ 35. Claims against estate and allowance and enforcement of them.

Authority of guardian to compromise or make settlement of claims against ward's estate, see ante § 80.

Guardian's authority and duty to pay debts of ward, see Jud. Act, chap. LVIII, § 19; Comp. L. 1915, § 13968.

¶ 123. How. St., § 6322, which provides for the payment, by the guardian of a minor or of any other person, upon the approval of the judge of probate, of all just debts due from the ward, and all expenses incurred by any county in his care, support, or maintenance, was intended to give to the probate court some supervisory control over the acts of the guardian in paying debts of his ward, and such approval can be asked for by any person interested in having the question of such payment passed upon by the probate judge.—State v. Dunbar's Estate, 99 Mich. 99.

¶ 124. A court of chancery, in the exercise of its auxiliary jurisdiction over the estates of incompetent persons under guardianship, has no greater power than the probate court to allow a preference of one claim over those of other creditors.—Nolan v. Garrison, 156 Mich. 397.

¶ 125. The way to compel a guardian to pay a claim, adjudged as valid, against his ward is by action, not by mandamus.—Smith v. Burton, 48 Mich. 643.

¶ 126. The probate court has no right to entertain a claim against a ward's estate, filed in the name of a creditor who has performed services by agreement with the guardian.—Lothrop v. Duffield, 134 Mich. 485.

¶ 127. Guardianship of an incompetent person cannot, after he has been released therefrom, be revived merely to enable a claim that had been previously filed to be prosecuted against the estate, or to be secured by the guardian's bond.—Lyster's Appeal, 54 Mich. 325.

§ 36. Sale or disposal of realty by guardian.

Estate of insane ward, see post § 37.

Interests and estate salable, see post § 38.

Petition for sale, notice, hearing, and license, see post § 39.

Notice of sale, see post §§ 40, 41.

Guardian's oath and bond, see post §§ 42, 43.

Conduct of sale and report, confirmation and deed, see post §§ 44, 45.

Rights of purchasers and irregularities in title, see post §§ 46-49.

Relief from invalid sale, see post § 50.

Conveyances of infants, see Infants, III.

Disaffirmance of conveyance by infant on attaining his majority, see Infants, III.

Sale of real estate of person under guardianship, see Jud. Act, chap. LIX, § 2; Comp. L. 1915, § 13988.

Extension of credit on sale of real estate by guardian, see Jud. Act, chap. LIX, § 26; Comp. L. 1915, § 14012.

Private sale of real estate by guardian, see Jud. Act, chap. LIX, §§ 42-44; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14028-14030.

Liability of guardian for fraud in sale of real property, see Jud. Act, chap. LIX, § 41; Comp. L. 1915, § 14027.

Liability of guardian for misconduct of sale of real property, see Jud. Act, chap. LIX, § 40; Comp. L. 1915, § 14026.

Appointment of guardian by chancery court on application for authority to convey equitable interest in real property belonging to infant, insane person or incompetent, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, § 42; Comp. L. 1915, § 12696.

Proceedings in chancery court relating to conveyance of equitable interests in lands of minors, insane or incompetents, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, §§ 39-54; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12693-12708.

¶ 128. A guardian of minor heirs has no authority to make a contract for the sale of land belonging to his wards without a license from the probate or other proper court.—Wolf v. Holton, 104 Mich. 107.

¶ 129. The guardian should not make an absolute sale of the real estate of the ward, and then apply to the court to authorize him to do what he has already bound himself to do; and the court will not ratify such agreements. The proper course is to obtain leave of the court in the first instance.—In re Dorr's Petition, W. 145.

¶ 130. Under How. St. § 6727, no conveyance of a ward's real estate could be made, or sale completed, by a guardian, until reported to the court, and sanctioned in each case; although under the petition, the power granted the guardian was a general power to sell.—Jenness v. Smith, 58 Mich. 280.

§ 37. ——Estate of insane ward.

Conveyances of property of insane persons, see Insane Persons, IV.

¶ 131. Under the statutes of Michigan, a guardian can only dispose of the real estate of his incompetent ward through proceedings in and authority granted by the probate court.—King v. Sipley, 166 Mich. 258.

¶ 132. A guardian has no authority to ratify the conveyances of his incompetent ward, either directly or indirectly.—King v. Sipley, 166 Mich. 258.

¶ 133. A guardian may not ratify a conveyance of his incompetent ward by a suit based upon the theory that title has passed to the grantee, who is liable to respond in damages because of inadequacy of consideration, since to permit such a course would enable the guardian to do indirectly what he cannot do directly, and would open up an easy way for disposing of the real estate of incompetent persons.—King v. Sipley, 166 Mich. 258.

§ 38. ——Interests and estates salable.

Sale of interest in contract for purchase of land, see Jud. Act, chap. LIX, § 28; Comp. L. 1915, § 14014.

¶ 134. Contingent estates held by minors may be sold by their guardians under the direction of the court of chancery.—Hovey v. Nellis, 98 Mich. 374.

§ 39. ——Petition for sale, notice, hearing, and license.

Petitioning and procuring sale of lands to pay ancestor's debts as fraud on ward, see Fraud ¶ 577.

Petition for sale of realty and proceedings thereon, see Jud. Act, chap. LIX, §§ 3-13, Comp. L. 1915, §§ 13989-13999.

Time for which license to sell is valid, see Jud. Act, chap. LIX, § 16; Comp. L. 1915, § 14002.

¶ 135. The foundation of jurisdiction in the probate court to make an order allowing a guardian to sell his ward's real estate is a petition specifying the purpose for which such sale is required; and the filing of such petition sufficiently appears from a finding of the circuit judge to that effect.—Schlee v. Darrow's Estate, 65 Mich. 362.

¶ 136. In a petition under the act of February 28, 1840, it was necessary to set forth fully all the facts and circumstances rendering a sale or other disposition of the minor's property necessary, that the court might judge of the propriety of the proposed sale.—In re Dorr's Petition, W. 145.

¶ 137. A petition by the guardian of a minor to the probate court for license to sell the lands of his ward, stating that a part only of the land was under improvement, and the rest unproductive, and that it was necessary a portion of the land should be used to pay certain debts incurred in behalf of the ward, and that, in the opinion of the petitioner, it would be for the interest of the minor to have the land sold and the proceeds, after paying the debts, put out at interest, is sufficient.—Nichols v. Lee, 10 Mich. 526.

¶ 138. Where a petition by a guardian for leave to sell real estate of his wards represents that the whole property of the wards consists of their interest in two certain parcels of land; that over $100 is due and owing towards one parcel; that the other is burdened by a mortgage of $50; that the income of the property is inadequate to pay the debts, interest and taxes, and to maintain, support and educate the wards, it is held sufficient under How. St. §§ 6062 and 6080 to give the probate court jurisdiction to grant a license to sell.—Lynch v. Kirby, 36 Mich. 238.

¶ 139. The petition of a guardian for leave to sell the real estate of his ward, either to pay debts or for the support and education of the ward, or for the purpose of investing the proceeds at interest, is required to state the purpose for which the sale is asked, and to set forth the condition of the estate and the necessity or propriety of the sale; otherwise the probate court gets no jurisdiction to grant a license to sell.—Ryder v. Flanders, 30 Mich. 336.

¶ 140. The fact that some of the statements, in a guardian's petition for leave to sell real estate of his ward, were untrue, could have no bearing upon the question whether the allegations of the petition were sufficient to give jurisdiction.—Lynch v. Kirby, 36 Mich. 238.

¶ 141. A guardian's petition to the probate court for license to sell the real estate of his ward is not fatally defective for not being sworn to; and, as it is not required by statute to be signed, it is sufficient if it describes the guardian and he presents it in person.—Ellsworth v. Hall, 48 Mich. 407.

¶ 142. A guardian's sale is not to be avoided for want of verification of the petition for license to sell.—Pfirrman v. Wattles, 86 Mich. 254.

¶ 143. The fact that the proof of publication of notice of the order for hearing of application for leave to sell real estate was filed on the 5th of April, while the order confirming the sale was made on the 4th, on which date the affidavit of publication is verified, is unimportant.—Schlee v. Darrow's Estate, 65 Mich. 362.

§ 40. Notice of sale.

Affidavit and proof of notice, see post § 41.
Notice of sale of real estate, see Jud. Act, chap. LIX, § 18; Comp. L. 1915, § 14004.
Adjournment of sale and notice of adjournment, see Jud. Act, chap. LIX, §§ 19, 20; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14005, 14006.

¶ 144. Comp. L. 1871, § 4560 (How. St. § 6040), requires notice of a guardian's sale of land to be published in a newspaper printed in the county where the land lies. Held, that an affidavit that it was published in a paper published and circulating in the county, taken in connection with an order of the probate court naming the paper and describing it as printed in the county, is sufficient; and that a publication in a paper printed in the county but not circulating there would not be a compliance.—Dexter v. Cranston, 41 Mich. 448.

¶ 145. Comp. L. 1871, § 4560 (How. St. § 6040) requires notice of a guardian's sale to be published "six weeks successively next before such sale." Held, that each week begins to run on the day of publication, and that if fully six weeks' notice has been given and there is a fraction of a week left before the day of sale, it is not necessary that the notice should be published on the last recurrence of publication day immediately before sale; e. g., where notice of a sale to be held March 4 was first published January 12, it was not necessary to insert it after February 23.—Dexter v. Cranston, 41 Mich. 448.

¶ 146. Publication of a notice of sale in a paper mainly published in the German language, though the notice itself is published in English, is not a proper publication (How. St. § 7251); but it was held not to vitiate a bona fide sale legally made in all other respects collaterally attacked after seventeen years, where there was no evidence showing a want of bidders or any inadequacy of price.—Schaale v. Wasey, 70 Mich. 414.

§ 41. ——Affidavit and proof of publication and posting.

Affidavit of notice of sale, see Jud. Act, chap. LIX, § 21; Comp. L. 1915, § 14007.

¶ 147. Where a statute requires an affidavit of publication of notice of guardian's sale to be made by "the foreman of the printer of the newspaper" in which the notice appears, the objection that it purports to be made by an affiant who describes himself as a foreman of the paper, naming it, is of no force.—Dexter v. Cranston, 41 Mich. 448.

¶ 148. Where notice of a guardian's sale of land was ordered to be posted in three of the most public places in the township, and the proof of notice specified the places where it was actually posted, but did not state that they were the most public places, it was held that the notice and proof together were a sufficient statement of the fact.—Dexter v. Cranston, 41 Mich. 448.

¶ 149. An affidavit of publication of notice of a guardian's sale, made by the "bookkeeper" of the newspaper, if couched in affirmative language, and therefore presumably upon knowledge, is sufficient under How. St. § 6067, though it is not a compliance with How. St. § 7498, which provides that the printer, foreman or clerk of the newspaper may make such proof.—Schlee v. Darrow's Estate, 65 Mich. 362.

¶ 150. Sufficient publication of notice of a guardian's sale may be shown by other evidence than the affidavit thereof, which is for the purpose of a permanent record.—Persinger v. Jubb, 52 Mich. 304.

¶ 151. How. St. § 6040 requires notices of a guardian's sale of real estate to be posted in the ward where the property is situated; but after a lapse of nearly twenty years the court cannot go outside of the record to ascertain whether the statute was complied with.—Schlee v. Darrow's Estate, 65 Mich. 362.

¶ 152. Want of an affidavit of the posting of notice of a guardian's sale is not fatal if the fact is shown in the sworn report of the sale and is recited in the order confirming it.—Persinger v. Jubb, 52 Mich. 304.

§ 42. Guardian's oath on making sale.

Oaths of guardians on sale of real estate, see Jud. Act, chap. LIX, § 14; Comp. L. 1915, § 14000.

¶ 153. The guardian, being imperatively required by Comp. L. 1857, § 3107, to take and subscribe a prescribed oath "before fixing on the time and place of sale" under a license to sell the real estate of his ward, an oath taken only a few days before the sale and after the giving of the notice of the sale was unauthorized and extrajudicial.—Ryder v. Flanders, 30 Mich. 336.

¶ 154. An oath dated and subscribed on the same day as the sale by a guardian under license of court, and recited in the report of sale as taken and subscribed before sale, is presumed to have been made before the sale.—Schaale v. Wasey, 70 Mich. 414.

¶ 155. The oath required in connection with a guardian's sale would be inappropriate to a new guardian, where the one who made the sale has died.—Lynch v. Kirby, 36 Mich. 238.

¶ 156. A guardian's oath is not defective for being entitled "In the matter of the estate of Henry McVay et al., minors," since this identifies the estate, which is the purpose of the title.—Persinger v. Jubb, 52 Mich. 304.

§ 43. Guardian's sale bond or security.

Obligation and breach of and liability on sale bonds, see post § 82.

Actions on bonds, see post § 85.

Bond on qualifying for letters, see ante § 20.

Further bond required on sale of real estate, see Jud. Act, chap. LIX, § 15; Comp. L. 1915, § 14001.

Bond of guardian appointed by chancery court for conveyance of equitable interests in land, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, § 48; Comp. L. 1915, § 12697.

Necessity for general guardian furnishing further security before receiving proceeds of sale, see 1916 C. C. Rule 63.

¶ 157. A bond before sale is indispensable to the validity of the sale, whether formally required by the court or not; its absence makes the sale fatally defective even as against a bona fide purchaser.—Stewart v. Bailey, 28 Mich. 251; Ryder v. Flanders, 30 Mich. 336.

¶ 158. Where a guardian's bond on sale of land was dated November 25, 1868, but the filing upon the same in the probate court was dated as approved and filed November 25, 1869, license having been issued and bond ordered November 24, 1868, such date of filing and approval was held to be a mere clerical error.—Schaale v. Wasey, 70 Mich. 414.

§ 44. Conduct of sale and rights and liabilities of bidders.

Time and place of sale of real property, see Jud. Act, chap. LIX, § 24; Comp. L. 1915, § 14010.

¶ 160. A party claiming to be the highest bidder at a guardian's sale, in order to entitle himself to the rights of a purchaser must tender payment and performance within a reasonable time.—People ex rel. Monroe v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 19 Mich. 296.

¶ 161. A purchaser at a guardian's sale made subject to a mortgage need not give bond to discharge the mortgage where he is the owner of the mortgage at the time of purchase.—Lynch v. Kirby, 36 Mich. 238.

¶ 162. Guardians' sales under Comp. L. 1857, chap. 102, How. St., chap. 230, are to be conducted as provided by Comp. L. 1857, chap. 101, How. St., chap. 229, and the confirmation of the report of sale is essential.—People ex rel. Monroe v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 19 Mich. 296.

¶ 163. A special guardian licensed to sell an infant's land can sell only at the price and terms fixed by the order of sale, and purchasers are presumed to have knowledge of the proceedings, and will be compelled to pay the money they have agreed to pay.—In re Axtell's Petition, 95 Mich. 244.

§ 45. Report, confirmation and deed.

Necessity for confirmation of sale report, see also ante ¶ 162.

Married woman's conveyances as guardian, see Husband and Wife § 136.

Confirmation of sale of real property, see Jud. Act, chap. LIX, §§ 22, 23; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14008, 14009.

Return of sale proceedings by guardian, see Jud. Act, chap. LIX, § 27; Comp. L. 1915, § 14013.

Vacation of sale of real estate where a higher bid may be obtained, see Jud. Act, chap. LIX, § 27; Comp. L. 1915, § 14013.

¶ 164. A guardian's deeds upon sales of land that were not reported to or confirmed by the court are void, and void guardians' deeds cannot be confirmed as such.—Jenness v. Smith, 58 Mich. 280; Winslow v. Jenness, 64 Mich. 84.

¶ 165. A guardian's report of the sale, for a round sum, of two parcels of land, one belonging to each of two wards, is not necessarily to be construed as showing that both were sold together for one sum or to impeach the judge's performance of his duty in satisfying himself as to the facts before confirming the sale.—Persinger v. Jubb, 52 Mich. 304.

¶ 166. Where a widow who is guardian of her three minor children sells real estate which is a part of her husband's estate, under order of the court and does not report the sale to the court nor have it confirmed as provided by sec. 542, Comp. L. 1897, the title of the wards is not conveyed.—Hunt v. Stevens, 174 Mich. 501.

¶ 167. Thirty days after a sale and fifteen days after the deed was executed and delivered, a guardian wrote a letter asking the court to date back his confirmation to September 10th, a date two days after the date of sale. A slip of paper in the files stated the confirmation to have been given September 10th. Held, the confirmation was invalid as being fraudulently procured.—Houlihan v. Fogarty, 162 Mich. 492.

¶ 168. A guardianship sale is void and will be set aside where it is not confirmed by the court.—Hunt v. Stevens, 174 Mich. 501.

¶ 169. Where a guardian, after receiving license to sell, making sale and reporting it to the court, and after the court has confirmed the sale and ordered conveyance, dies, and his successor is appointed and qualifies, the latter may properly be directed and required to complete the transaction by deeding and receiving the purchase price. The act of conveyance is rather official than personal, and more a function of the place than a matter appropriated to any individual.—Lynch v. Kirby, 86 Mich. 238.

¶ 170. A married woman who is a guardian can convey the real estate of the ward without the husband joining in the deed.—Palmer v. Oakley, 2 D. 433.

§ 46. Rights and titles of purchasers, defects and irregularities.

Statutory force and effect of deed, see post § 47.
Guardian as purchaser, see post § 48.
Right to crops on land, see post § 49.
Confirmation fraudulently secured as defect in title of purchaser, see also ante ¶ 167.
Want of confirmation as defect in title of purchaser, see also ante ¶¶ 164, 166, 168.
Irregularities in dates of order for publication of notice of sale and order of confirmation, see also ante ¶ 143.
Failure to verify petition as irregularity, see also ante ¶¶ 141, 142.
Bar or estoppel of infants to repudiate guardian's sale by receipt of purchase money after becoming of age, see Infants.
Inurement of title acquired at guardian's sale to benefit of taker's earlier grantee, see Estoppel ¶ 59.
Detriment or change sufficient to support estoppel to question sale, see Estoppel § 31.
Effect of irregularities in sale proceedings on validity of guardianship sale, see Jud. Act, chap. LIX, §§ 38, 39; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14024, 14025.
Bond of purchaser on sale of contract for purchase of land, see Jud. Act, chap. LIX, §§ 29, 30; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14015, 14016.

¶ 171. Noncompliance by a guardian with the requirements of the statute relative to the notice to be given of the sale of real estate of the ward under license of the probate court, will not affect the title of a bona fide purchaser.—Palmer v. Oakley, 2 D. 433.

¶ 172. One claiming adversely to the title of the ward cannot contest the validity of a sale of lands made by the guardian on the ground that the petition for license to sell was defective.—Marvin v. Schilling, 12 Mich. 356.

¶ 173. One claiming adversely to the ward cannot contest it on the ground that the sale was a fraud upon the ward. The ward, or any one claiming under him, has a right to inquire into anything wrong in the proceedings; but a third person cannot drag the ward's rights into court in a litigation between himself and the purchaser.—Marvin v. Schilling, 12 Mich. 356.

¶ 174. Where proceedings for a sale were initiated without any jurisdictional defect, mere errors or irregularities cannot prejudice the rights of purchasers.—Kelley v. Edwards, 38 Mich. 210.

¶ 175. Where a guardian, whose appointment has been fraudulently secured, redeems the lands of his ward from a mortgage foreclosure, and on that pretext obtains from the probate court a license to sell them, and they are bought by the person who secured for the guardian his appointment and advanced the money for the redemption, it is no justification for this purchaser, in proceedings instituted for the fraud, that if he had not advanced the redemption money the land would have been lost to the infant owner, especially when it does not appear that either the infant or her friends knew of the foreclosure proceedings or the necessity for redemption.—Tong v. Marvin, 26 Mich. 35.

¶ 176. Where the approval of the superintendents of the poor is necessary before a license of sale can be secured for the sale of an incompetent ward's land under sec. 9118, Compiled Laws 1897, a sale to one of those officers is illegal.—In re Miller's Estate, 173 Mich. 467.

¶ 177. Where a probate court has acquired jurisdiction to license the sale of real estate by a foreign guardian under How. St. § 6067, the validity of the sale cannot be collaterally attacked by persons who do not represent the minors and when no one having a right to represent them has complained.—Pfirrman v. Wattles, 86 Mich. 254.

¶ 178. Under How. St., § 6076 the sufficiency of the petition for sale cannot be collaterally attacked provided the guardian was licensed to sell by the probate court having jurisdiction.—Schaale v. Wasey, 70 Mich. 414.

¶ 179. Under sec. 9165, Comp. L. 1897 a deed cannot be attacked collaterally because of clerical errors in the description, when properly executed by a guardian authorized by the probate court.—Arnold v. Brechtel, 174 Mich. 147.

§ 47. ——Statutory force and effect of deed.

Statutory force and effect of guardian's deed, see Jud. Act, chap. LIX, §§ 38, 39; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14024, 14025.

¶ 180. How. St. § 6102, providing that title under guardian's sale shall be incontestable provided certain facts appear, is a statute of repose, has become a rule of property, and its validity cannot now be questioned.—Goodall v. Henkel, 60 Mich. 382.

¶ 181. A guardian's sale cannot be avoided for irregularity in the proceedings if the guardian was licensed to make it by a probate court of competent jurisdiction, Comp. L. 1871, § 4622, subd. 1 (How. St. § 6102), —Dexter v. Cranston, 41 Mich. 448.

¶ 182. A guardian's sale is not invalidated by the fact that the guardian has not signed the report of sale; the defect may be supplied by seasonable amendment under the order of the probate court, Comp. L. 1871, § 4622 (How. St. § 6102).—Ellsworth v. Hall, 48 Mich. 407.

¶ 183. Under How. St. § 6102, to establish the validity of a guardian's sale of land as against a party claiming under the ward it is not necessary to show the making and filing of the petition for the sale, the filing and recording of the license and oath, or the confirmation of the sale.—Blanchard v. De Graff, 60 Mich. 107.

¶ 184. A guardian's sale of real estate duly and regularly confirmed will not be held void as against a bona fide purchaser because the petition for sale did not set out the circumstances of the estate, or because the guardian's oath before sale was not subscribed, or because he failed to give bond before sale where none was required.—Fender v. Powers, 67 Mich. 433.

¶ 185. Under section 9129, Comp. Laws 1897, purchasers in good faith at a guardian's sale are not protected except when all the essential requirements of the statute have been complied with.—Houlihan v. Fogarty, 162 Mich. 492.

¶ 186. In making a sale of real estate a guardian failed to give a sale bond as required by statute. The record showed no taking or filing of the oath required. The notice of sale described the land erroneously, the mistake being corrected later by the guardian, and it did not state the time or place of sale or that the land would be sold to the highest bidder. The purchaser made his bid outside of the county, and was not present on the day of sale. Held, these defects were not mere harmless irregularities, but invalidated the sale.—Houlihan v. Fogarty, 162 Mich. 492.

¶ 187. One Fogarty was appointed both administrator of an estate and guardian of the children of the deceased. He made a sale of real estate. In the deed he described himself as guardian and acknowledged the deed as such guardian. In the notice of sale he described himself and signed as guardian. He signed the attempted report of sale as acting in the same capacity, and as guardian filed an account of the proceeds realized from the sale. Held, the evidence clearly established that he was acting as guardian, and not as administrator and where no license to him as guardian ever issued the sale is invalid.—Houlihan v. Fogarty, 162 Mich. 492.

¶ 188. In the absence of proof to the contrary it must be presumed that the hearing on an application to the probate court for the sale of a ward's lands was properly continued.—Schlee v. Darrow's Estate, 65 Mich. 362.

§ 48. ——Guardian as purchaser.

Rights and dealings between guardian and ward generally, see post VI.

Guardian as purchaser, see Jud. Act, chap. LIX, § 25; Comp. L. 1915, § 14011.

¶ 189. One Fogarty as guardian sold land to one Dinneen. Six months thereafter, while still guardian, he bought a one-fourth interest in the same at the price paid by Dinneen. Held, Fogarty's purchase was void. —Houlihan v. Fogarty, 162 Mich. 492.

¶ 190. Where a guardian conveyed his ward's land after a probate sale of the same, and on the same day took a reconveyance from the purchaser for the same consideration to himself individually, it was held that no title passed by the transaction, there being collusion between the parties.—Winter v. Truax, 87 Mich. 324.

§ 49. ——Right to crops on lands sold.

¶ 191. A guardian of minor heirs gave a person permission to put in a crop on their land and to keep two-thirds of it when harvested. Held, that the guardian had a legal right to make this arrangement; and that upon the sale of the land under a probate license to one who had notice of it, the cropper's rights were not affected. And a removal of the crop by the purchaser, after the cropper had cut it, was a conversion.—Weldon v. Lytle, 53 Mich. 1.

§ 50. Annulment or other relief from invalid sale.

¶ 192. Guardianship proceedings in form under Comp. L. 1897, chap. 244 (§ 9166) culminating in a sale of land of an insane person, will be set aside as a fraud in the view of equity, where the whole proceeding and the sale was colorable and a fiction to carry into execution a voidable contract of sale by the insane person to sell such land and the appraisal for such sale was made as of the time of the contract and below the value of the land in order to have it correspond with the contract price, and no effort to obtain any higher price was made; and the fact that no profit was made by the parties or any bad faith practiced will not affect the validity of the transaction.—DeVries v. Crofoot, 148 Mich. 183.

¶ 193. As to a third person who purchased under a voidable guardian's sale, taking title from the purchaser at such sale, where there is no question of the sufficiency of the record of sale but the attack is for fraud extraneous thereto, the sale was sustained because it was possible to do equity by holding the purchaser as a trustee of the land for the insane ward and accountable to him for the money received from the third person less credits for what was paid to the guardian and for the value of added improvements but with interest on the net balance and costs.—DeVries v. Crofoot, 148 Mich. 183.

¶ 193a. A guardianship sale, made in good faith by the guardian and the purchaser but not confirmed by the court as required by statute, will be declared void and the cloud removed from the title of the wards only on condition that the wards repay to the purchaser the purchase price with interest and taxes.—Hunt v. Stevens, 174 Mich. 501.

Mortgaging ward's estate, see Jud. Act, chap. LIX, §§ 49-51; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14035-14037.

¶ 194. A guardian's mortgage on his ward's property is void if the probate court, in permitting it to be made, has not fixed its amount, rate of interest and duration (Comp. L. 1871, § 4626, How. St., § 6106).—Edwards v. Taliafero, 34 Mich. 13.

¶ 195. The mere addition of the title "guardian" to the mortgagor's name does not invalidate the mortgage where it is manifestly not given as a guardian's mortgage.—Brayton v. Merithew, 56 Mich. 166.

§ 52. Necessity for further security before receiving award in action.

Obligation and breach of bonds and liability and actions on same, see post, VII.

Bond on qualifying for letters, see ante § 20.

Necessity for furnishing security to guardian ad litem for compensation before receiving guardianship funds, see Guardian ad Litem ¶ 35.

Necessity for general guardian furnishing further security before receiving money or property awarded ward in suit or proceeding, see 1916 C. C. Rule 63.

¶ 196. The new security required by chancery rule 94 before money belonging to infant litigants can be turned over to general guardians calls for a responsible showing, and cannot rest on loose oral statements.—Sheahan v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 42 Mich. 69.

§ 53. Recovery of money paid out.

¶ 197. A guardian who has paid over the proceeds of the ward's estate to a suitable person to aid such person in supporting the ward cannot repudiate his contract and maintain an action at law against him to recover back the amount so paid after it has been reasonably expended for that purpose.—Chubb v. Bradley, 58 Mich. 268.

¶ 198. Whether a guardian who has paid over the proceeds of the ward's estate to a suitable person in supporting the ward, can maintain an action at law against him to recover back the amount so paid, in case of fraud or an unreasonable disproportion between the support and the funds, quære.—Chubb v. Bradley, 58 Mich. 268.

§ 54. Leases of ward's lands.

¶ 199. A lease was given by the guardian of a mentally incompetent person for a term of years, and rent for eighteen months was paid in advance. Before the eighteen months had elapsed the ward died. The lessee applied to his heirs to affirm the lease, but they declined to execute an instrument for the purpose, though they were silent as to any intention to disaffirm. Held, that the lessee might treat their action as a refusal to affirm, and recover from the estate the rent paid for the period after the death.—Campau v. Shaw, 15 Mich. 226.

§ 55. Rights and powers of successors.

See also ante ¶ 169.

Jurisdiction of probate court to appoint successor on death of guardian, see ante ¶ 12.

Bond by retiring guardian to successor to pay back converted moneys, see also Bonds ¶ 38.

¶ 200. Where a mortgage was executed to a guardian for his ward's benefit, on the death of such guardian his successor, duly appointed by the probate court, can file a bill to foreclose.—Norton v. Ohrns, 67 Mich. 612.

B. RESPECTING WARD'S PERSON, EDUCATION AND SUPPORT.

§ 56. In general.

Powers of natural guardian, see post § 57.
Support and education of ward, see post § 58.
Possession or control of property as incident to guardianship of ward's person, see ante ¶ 96.
Crime of abandoning or neglecting child, see Crimes § 88.
When guardian to have custody of ward, see Jud. Act, chap. LVIII, § 7; Comp. L. 1915, § 13956.
Powers and duties of guardian over person and education of minor ward, see Jud. Act, chap. LVIII, § 8; Comp. L. 1915, § 13957.
Authority of guardian to apprentice minor ward, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11493.
Duty of guardian to educate minor ward, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 179, § 1, amending Comp. L. 1915, § 5979.
Necessity of consent of guardian for marriage of minor female ward, see Pub. Acts 1917, No. 195, amending Comp. L. 1915, § 1137.

¶ 201. Guardianship of a minor's estate gives no right to the custody of its person.—Matter of Heather Children, 50 Mich. 261.

§ 57. Powers of natural guardians.

Tenure of natural or constructive guardians, see ante § 9.
Powers of equitable or de facto guardian, see also post ¶ 209.
Custody, protection and support of infants, see Infants, II.
Relation of parent and child and its incidents, see Parent and Child.

¶ 202. A natural guardian has the custody of the ward's person only.—Power v. Harlow, 57 Mich. 107.

§ 58. Support and education of ward.

Allowance in account for support and education, see post § 70.
Support and education of minor ward out of estate where father is living, see Jud. Act, chap. LVIII, § 9; Comp. L. 1915, § 13958.

¶ 203. A guardian's discretion in respect to the boarding and schooling of a ward stands on a similar footing with a parent's. He is not bound to prefer mere economy of cost to the welfare and comfort of the ward. —Gott v. Culp, 45 Mich 265.

¶ 204. A guardian's discretion in his expenditures for the clothing of a female ward cannot usually be reviewed if they are not out of proportion to her social position and are made in good faith and do not exceed the ward's means.—Gott v. Culp, 45 Mich. 265.

¶ 205. A guardian whose ward's estate is sufficient to furnish an income that will, with economy, maintain and educate her suitably, should not exceed the income without adequate reason, though if circumstances justify it he may look at future and probable resources as well as at the present and actual income, and though it would be prudent to obtain leave to draw upon the principal, it is not absolutely necessary if the draft is one that ought to be made.—Gott v. Culp, 45 Mich. 265.

¶ 206. The proceeds of real estate belonging to a ward may be used by the guardian, within proper bounds, to enable the ward to be suitably brought up and educated; and such money may be turned over to the ward's adopted parents, to aid them in its support, if necessary.—Chubb v. Bradley, 58 Mich. 268.

¶ 207. One who assumes to act as guardian of the minor son and heir of his deceased partner, whose executor he is, should look after his ward's habits and education, should secure for him the best advantages for business instruction, and should give him such insight into his father's estate and such instruction in relation thereto as will qualify him to manage it successfully.—Perrin v. Lepper, 72 Mich. 454.

¶ 208. A guardian may be allowed to resort to the principal as well as the income of his ward's estate, if required for the ward's welfare.—In re Ward's Estate, 73 Mich. 220.

¶ 209. The oldest son of intestate, being the only child of age, who was appointed guardian of his brothers and sisters, and who took possession of their persons and estates, and reared them, but never qualified, being unable to furnish a bond, was their equitable guardian and as such was entitled to a reasonable allowance from the estate for their support and maintenance.—Alexander v. Hillebrand, 140 Mich. 490.

IV. ACTIONS, SUITS AND PROCEEDINGS.

§ 59. Authority to represent ward.

Name in which to sue or defend, see post § 60.
Remedies and forms of action, see post § 61.
Defenses and set-offs, see post § 62.
Consents and admissions, see post § 63.

Propriety of appointing general guardian as guardian ad litem, see Guardian ad Litem ¶ 12.
Actions by and against infants, see Infants. VII.
Actions by or against insane persons, see Insane Persons, V.

Failure of general guardian to appeal from appointment of guardian ad litem as concluding rights of ward, see Guardian ad Litem ¶ 32.

Protection of the rights of infant heirs by action or summary proceedings by dowress as guardian, see Dower § 48.

Authority of general guardian to appear for and represent ward in suits and proceedings, see Jud. Act, chap. LVIII, § 20; Comp. L. 1915, § 13969.

Authority of general guardian to institute or defend actions in justice court on behalf of his ward, see Jud. Act, chap. LXVII, §§ 22, 24; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 14199, 14201.

Authority of general guardian to bring action on behalf of infant or person under disability, see Jud. Act, chap. XII, § 28; Comp. L. 1915, § 12379.

¶ 210. Under How. St. § 6323, the general guardian of a minor heir may act for her in the matter of a sale of her ancestor's realty for purposes of distribution, without a guardian ad litem being appointed prior to such sale.—Wheelock v. Lake, 117 Mich. 11.

¶ 211. Under How. St., § 6316, conferring upon a general guardian of an incompetent the management of his estate, and section 6323 providing that such guardian shall appear for and represent his ward in all legal suits and proceedings where no other person is appointed for that purpose as guardian or next friend; the power conferred was broad enough to entitle such general guardian to recover property which his ward was incompetent to convey.—Reason v. Jones, 119 Mich. 672.

¶ 212. Proof of guardianship is not necessary to authorize the guardian to bring suit to foreclose a mortgage assigned to him by name as guardian.—Vary v. Chatterton, 50 Mich. 541.

¶ 213. In assumpsit against an incompetent adult under guardianship in which the defendant himself is served, the appearance of the guardian, who was an attorney and conducted the defense, is assumed to be with the approval of the court without the appointment of a guardian ad litem.—Stoner v. Riggs, 128 Mich. 129.

¶ 214. Solicitors of general guardians cannot bind the rights of infant wards in litigation.—Sheahan v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 42 Mich. 69.

¶ 214a. Infants when sued are to be defended by guardian ad litem, not by general guardian.—Bearinger v. Pelton, 78 Mich. 109.

§ 60. Name in which to sue or defend.

Suing or defending in guardianship and in personal capacity in same action, see Parties.

¶ 215. Plaintiff, describing himself as guardian of certain minors, sued defendant railway for negligently injuring an automobile belonging to the minors and in plaintiff's possession. Defendant made no plea in abatement, but pleaded the general issue. At the close of the case defendant moved for a directed verdict on the ground that plaintiff was not the proper party plaintiff. Held, that under Comp. Laws 1897, § 8718, a judgment for plaintiff under these pleadings should not be disturbed on the ground raised.—Newton v. Detroit United Ry., 163 Mich. 373.

¶ 216. The guardian of an infant cannot bring ejectment in his own name for the ward's land; the action must be brought in the ward's name.—Kinney v. Harrett, 46 Mich. 87.

¶ 217. A spendthrift's guardian may sue in his own name as guardian to recover debts due his ward.—Norton v. Ohrns, 67 Mich. 612.

§ 61. Remedies and forms of action.

Equitable relief to set aside default judgment taken against insane person where no notice of action or judgment was given to guardian, see Judgment, VI.

¶ 218. The guardian may sue at law for such part of the proceeds of the personal estate of a decedent as belongs to his ward but remains in the hands of decedent's widow by reason of a family settlement to which the ward's mother was a party; hence a bill will not lie in equity.—Cole v. McFall, 48 Mich. 227.

¶ 219. Equity will not entertain a bill of a guardian on the ground that the construction of an instrument is desired for instruction of the guardian, where the real purpose of the bill is to decide a controversy between the ward, the ward's contractual vendee of realty, and his lessee's assignee.—Detroit Trust Co. v. Hunrath, 168 Mich. 180.

¶ 220. Guardians for nurture cannot bring ejectment for their wards' lands.—Kinney v. Harrett, 46 Mich. 87.

¶ 221. Dictum that the guardian's interest in the real estate is sufficient to enable him to maintain trespass.—Palmer v. Oakley, 2 D. 433.

¶ 222. Dictum, that as the guardian stands to his ward in loco parentis he may maintain an action on the case for seduction.—Palmer v. Oakley, 2 D. 433.

¶ 223. A guardian suing in ejectment for the benefit of wards claiming by descent makes a prima facie case by proving paper title to the ward's ancestor, descent to the ward, and the plaintiff's title as guardian to sue for possession.—Harrett v. Kinney, 44 Mich. 457.

§ 62. Defenses and set-offs.

Defenses in actions on bond, see post § 87.
Torts of infants, see Infants, V.

¶ 224. In defense to an action purporting to be brought by a guardian it may be shown that the guardianship has ceased; and if the plea does not set up such a defense an amendment which would permit such a showing should be allowed.—Chubb v. Bradley, 58 Mich. 268.

§ 63. Consents and admissions.

Authority of natural guardian to admit away rights of ward, see ante ¶ 98.
Authority of guardian to bind infant defendant by admission in annulment suit, see Marriage, IV.
Effect on ward's rights in suit to recover taxes paid under protest of guardian's failure to object to assessment, see Taxes, VIII.

¶ 225. A general guardian cannot bind infant defendants by a consent decree.—Bearinger v. Pelton, 78 Mich. 109.

§ 64. Costs.

Allowance of costs of litigation on account, see post § 73.

¶ 226. Costs of both courts were imposed on the guardian of an incompetent, to be paid by him personally, where it appeared that a bill filed by him as guardian was unjustifiable.—Sikes v. Crissman, 35 Mich. 96.

V. ACCOUNTING, SETTLEMENT AND COMPENSATION.

§ 65. Nature and scope.

Right and duty in general, see post § 66.
Time for accounting, laches and delay, see post § 67.
Accounting suits in equity, see post § 68.
Method of stating and items to be charged or credited, see post §§ 69-75.
Compensation of guardian, see post § 76.
Mistakes, amendments and corrections, see post § 77.
Hearing and procedure on settlement and distribution of estate, see post § 78.
Evidence and presumptions, see post § 79.
Accounting of guardianship by representative of deceased guardian, see Estates of Decedents ¶ 1064.
Accounts of joint guardians, see Jud. Act, chap. LVIII, § 31; Comp. L. 1915, § 13980.

¶ 227. A guardian's accounting is not a legal but is an equitable proceeding, involving not merely the ordinary items of debit and credit, but considerations as to the propriety of charges and investments, and the allowance of compensation, with which a jury cannot meddle. It cannot become a common law controversy on removal from the probate court.—Gott v. Culp, 45 Mich. 265.

¶ 228. A guardian's accounting is an equitable and not a legal proceeding, involving not merely the ordinary items of debit and credit, but considerations as to the propriety of the actions of the guardian and as to the allowance of his compensation, and with these things a jury cannot meddle, but disputed matters of fact may be submitted on proper issues to a jury to determine definitely such specific facts as will, when found, aid the court in determining questions which belong to its equitable discretion.—In re Bristol, 199 Mich. 453.

Necessity for accounting before ward may bring suit on bond, see post ¶ 288.

¶ 229. A guardian of a person formerly insane may settle with his ward after he has recovered his reason, and they are not obliged to have their accounts passed through the probate court.—Hooper v. Hooper, 26 Mich. 435; Tate v. Stevenson, 55 Mich. 320.

¶ 230. Laws 1873, Act No. 95 requires a guardian to account on citation, but contemplates that he shall do so without; but the failure to do so, if not injurious, is not necessarily a cause of forfeiture.—Gott v. Culp, 45 Mich. 265.

¶ 231. Under How. St., § 6760, the probate court has power to cite the administrator of a deceased guardian to render an accounting of the guardianship.—Tudhope v. Potts, 91 Mich. 490.

§ 67. Time for accounting, delay and laches.

Want of notice as excusing delay in suing guardian for default or accounting, see also Equity § 55.

¶ 232. A guardian must be ready to account as soon as his trust ends.—Tate v. Stevenson, 55 Mich. 320.

¶ 233. Undue haste in the settlement of a guardian's accounts is not favored.—Powell v. Powell, 52 Mich. 432.

¶ 234. Laches does not appear in suing a guardian for accounting of pension moneys received in 1873, he dying in 1876, and the ward being ignorant thereof until 1897, when claim was made and an administrator of the guardian appointed for the first time in 1899, whereupon suit was brought. [Official reporter states suit was brought in 1900.]—Murphy v. Cady, 145 Mich. 33.

¶ 235. A ward is interested in fact in the settlement of his guardian's estate, and is a party thereto in law, and is bound, on becoming of age, to prosecute his rights with legal diligence. The probate records of the estate are open to inspection, and are notice to all persons interested.—Robert v. Morrin's Estate, 27 Mich. 306.

§ 68. Accounting suits in equity.

Amendment of trust bill by ward to convert it into bill for accounting, see Equity ¶ 550.

Accounting to chancery court for conveyance of equitable interests in land, see Jud. Act, chap. XIX, § 51; Comp. L. 1915, § 12705.

¶ 236. Accounting in equity is proper against a guardian for failure to account, where there is also a claim against him for damges for neglecting to get in all of the ward's estate.—Dodson v. McKelvey, 93 Mich. 263.

¶ 237. The ward of a de facto guardian may invoke the aid of the court which made the appointment in procuring an accounting of such guardian's administration, without admitting the regularity of the appointment. —In re Cameron's Estate (Appeal of Smith), 157 Mich. 398.

§ 69. Method of stating and items to be charged or credited.

Allowance for support and education of ward, see post § 70.

Charging guardian for services of ward, see post § 71.

Losses or depreciation, see post § 72.

Disbursements and costs of litigation, see post § 73.

Interest, see post § 74.

Expenditures of de facto guardians, see post § 75.

Review of discretion as to allowances in circuit, see Appeal § 418.

Making appraisal of estate, see Jud. Act, chap. LVIII, § 14; Comp. L. 1915, § 13963.

¶ 238. Where a testator's daughter has been made residuary legatee, to be paid on becoming 18 years of age, or on her marriage if at an earlier age, provided anything should remain after paying for her care and tuition, and the testator's brother is appointed guardian by the court, but before the appointment makes expenditures out of his own means for the care and education of the legatee, for which expenditures the executor settles with him after the appointment, the payment in settlement does not have to be accounted for by the guardian as part of the ward's estate.—Perkins v. Tooley, 74 Mich. 220.

¶ 239. If a guardian can include in the final settlement of his account a debt to him incurred by his ward before his guardianship began, he cannot do so where the debt had become barred by the statute of limitations before that period.—Bondie v. Bourassa, 46 Mich. 321.

¶ 240. A guardian who has kept no account of the expense of clothing and maintaining his ward, not having been called upon by the probate court to render annual accounts, may nevertheless be allowed a reasonable sum for such expenditures, if acting in good faith.—Tudhope v. Avery, 106 Mich. 149.

¶ 241. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 8705, authorizing a guardian to pay the ward's expense of maintenance and education out of income or principal of his property as shall be judged reasonable and shall be directed by the probate court, it is not necessary to obtain an order of the probate court before expenditures are made to permit of their allowance in the final report.—In re Hoga's Estate, 134 Mich. 361.

§ 70. ——Allowance for support and education of ward.

Allowance for expenditures made before authority therefor was secured from court, see also ante ¶ 241.

Allowance where no account or record kept of expenditures for support of ward, see also ante ¶ 240.

Power of guardian respecting support and education of ward, see ante § 58.

¶ 242. A guardian who takes his infant ward into his family and cares for her as one of his family for eight years and until her marriage is entitled to a reasonable allowance for her support and maintenance.—Jacobia v. Terry, 92 Mich. 275.

¶ 243. The guardian of an infant ward living in his family can charge her for board and clothing, though she be his niece, and the fact that another member of the family would have boarded her for nothing makes no difference, if the guardian, in the exercise of his best judgment for the ward's own good, has decided that she had better live in his family.—Moyer v. Fletcher, 56 Mich. 508.

¶ 244. A guardian was allowed $25 per year for twelve and one-half years, for clothing, and making of same, for a child who was seven years of age when taken by the guardian, as a just remuneration in the absence of any itemized account of such expenditures.—In re Livernois' Estate, 78 Mich. 330.

¶ 245. Where a step-father is guardian of his step-daughter and receives the income of her estate, it cannot be assumed, without some indication, that he means to charge himself with her whole support, even though she lives in his family.—In re Ward's Estate, 73 Mich. 220.

¶ 246. A parent should not be allowed as guardian a yearly sum for child's care and support while in receipt of child's services when at home or of its wages when working away from home.—In re Livernois' Estate, 78 Mich. 330.

¶ 247. An allowance of $12 per week for 68 weeks for board and care of an incompetent ward 75 years of age who was afflicted with senile dementia, was unable to take care of himself, and had very offensive habits and $68 for shaving him and driving and riding with him around the country was sustained.—Aull v. Peterson, 200 Mich. 99.

§ 71. ——Charging guardian for services of ward.

¶ 248. An infant ward living in the family of her guardian, and cared for as a member of it, is not entitled to pay for household services.—Moyer v. Fletcher, 56 Mich. 508.

§ 72. ——Losses or depreciation.

Liability of guardian generally, see ante, III.
Legal interest as measure of damage for loss due to neglect in matter of investment, see also post ¶ 254.

¶ 249. A guardian is not held responsible ex post facto on the ground, merely, that some other person might have done better; he cannot on an average be expected to be thoroughly versed in law or business, and honesty, kindness and a very ordinary skill in money matters are the most that can generally be required.—Gott v. Culp, 45 Mich. 265.

¶ 250. A guardian is not liable for the loss of funds deposited by him in a savings bank at 4 per cent interest for a little over six months when the bank failed, where the evidence showed that he had sufficient reason for not investing the money elsewhere and the savings bank was considered solvent.—In re Grammel's Estate, 120 Mich. 487.

¶ 251. When a guardian, without an order of the probate court, invests the proceeds of his wards' property in lands, for their benefit, the cestuis que trustent on reaching their majority can repudiate the investment and hold him or his estate for the moneys invested, or they can follow the moneys into the lands purchased and claim the lands as against any subsequent purchaser who had notice that they were purchased with trust-money. But they cannot do both, and the election of either remedy precludes the other.—Rowley v. Towsley, 53 Mich. 329.

§ 73. ——Disbursements and costs of litigation.

Costs in actions, suits and proceedings, see ante § 64.
Allowance to guardian of amount of his reasonable expenses incurred in execution of his trust, see Jud. Act, chap. LVIII, § 30; Comp. L. 1915, § 13979.

¶ 252. Costs of appeals taken by a ward in reference to the guardian's accounting may be allowed to the guardian from the funds due the ward upon final judgment in favor of the guardian.—Moyer v. Fletcher, 56 Mich. 508.

§ 74. ——Interest.

Burden of proof to charge guardian with rate of interest higher than legal rate, see post ¶ 269.
Right to interest in general and computation of interest, see Interest.

¶ 253. A guardian is chargeable with interest upon a ward's money in his hands.—Jacobia v. Terry, 92 Mich. 275.

¶ 254. A guardian intrusted with the investment of a ward's money should not be held for interest not actually received unless his delay to invest has been unreasonable; and he cannot be held for neglect beyond legal interest.—Gott v. Culp, 45 Mich. 265.

¶ 255. As a general rule, interest should not be compounded against a guardian. If he receives more than ordinary interest he should account for it.—In re Ward's Estate, 73 Mich. 220.

¶ 256. Items of interest struck out of both sides of a guardian's account where receipts and disbursements were nearly contemporaneous and stood in open account.—In re Livernois' Estate, 78 Mich. 330.

¶ 257. A guardian is to be charged legal interest only on funds of his ward in his keeping, unless there has been an agreement for a higher rate; and the fact that such funds have been lent occasionally at ten per cent makes no difference where the guardian, though honest, is not accustomed to business and has innocently confused the ward's funds with his own and kept no accounts.—Moyer v. Fletcher, 56 Mich. 508.

¶ 258. A guardian must keep an account of receipts and disbursements as such, and if he fails to account for receipts he may properly be charged interest on the funds in his hands. If he is guilty of gross misconduct or fraud in his management, interest against him may sometimes be made to run with annual or semi-annual rests. And if he cannot show what amount of interest he has received on the ward's funds, he should be charged with legal interest on them from the time when they ought to have been invested.—Moyer v. Fletcher, 56 Mich. 508.

§ 75. ——Expenditures of de facto guardians.

See also ante ¶ 209.
Duty of de facto guardian to account, see ante ¶ 237.

¶ 259. A de facto guardian taking possession of real estate is not to be considered as a lessee from year to year, but is entitled to an equitable credit for expenditures which were made for the ward, and which would have been allowed had the guardian been a legal one.—In re Cameron's Estate (Appeal of Smith), 158 Mich. 174.

¶ 260. A de facto guardian expended money in building fences, hoghouses, corncribs, and in digging wells. Her ward was life tenant and she one of the remainder-men. The farm was in a run-down condition. Held, the expenditure was good husbandry, and the guardian was entitled to the allowance of these items on her account.—In re Cameron's Estate (Appeal of Smith), 158 Mich. 174.

¶ 261. A de facto guardian expended money for cultivating and carrying on the farm of her ward, and spent a small amount for household purposes. Held, these items were proper, and should be allowed on her account.—In re Cameron's Estate (Appeal of Smith), 158 Mich. 174.

¶ 262. A de facto guardian of a life tenant insured a barn and its contents belonging to the estate. The guardian was one of the remainder-men. The barn burned, and sufficient of the insurance money was applied by the guardian to pay the loss of the grain. With the surplus the guardian rebuilt the barn. Held, she was entitled to credit on her account for the money expended in rebuilding.—In re Cameron's Estate (Appeal of Smith), 158 Mich. 174.

¶ 263. A guardian de facto lodged her two children on the farm of her ward and boarded them out of its produce. Held, this expense should be charged against her account.—In re Cameron's Estate (Appeal of Smith), 158 Mich. 174.

¶ 264. A de facto guardian employed her husband at thirty dollars a month to manage and work upon the farm of her ward, and charged ten dollars a month for her own services in caring for her ward, her brother, who was sick and deficient. Held, these items were proper, and should be allowed on her account.—In re Cameron's Estate (Appeal of Smith), 158 Mich. 174.

§ 76. Compensation of guardian.

Right to compensation as question for court, see also ante ¶¶ 227, 228.

Compensation of guardians, see Jud. Act, chap. LVIII, § 30; Comp. L. 1915, § 13979.

¶ 265. A guardian's duties are personal and honorary, and the position is not to be given or assumed with a view of profit, but he is entitled to such reasonable compensation as the circumstances warrant, such as the size and character of the estate, the amount and kind of his services, the duration of the trust, the obligation to maintain an oversight of the person, etc.—Gott v. Culp, 45 Mich. 265.

¶ 266. A guardian's compensation for the care of his ward is not an item of account, but is a matter for the consideration of the court which passes the accounts, and is not in any case to be determined by a jury.—Gott v. Culp, 45 Mich. 265.

§ 77. Mistakes, amendments and corrections.

¶ 267. If a guardian in inventorying his ward's assets in good faith includes the money of another, which he is afterwards compelled to pay over to the owner, the probate court can permit him to correct his inventory.—Martin v. Sheridan, 46 Mich. 93.

§ 78. Hearing and procedure on settlement and distribution of estate.

Evidence and presumptions, see post § 79.

Necessity of notice of hearing to bind sureties on bond as to amount due, see also post ¶ 284a.

Appeals from probate orders and decrees, see Probate Courts, III.

Debt owing as guardian as preferences in bankruptcy distribution, see Bankruptcy ¶ 70.

Conclusiveness of form or basis of account as presented in probate court on appeal in circuit court, see Probate Courts, III.

¶ 268. Where an order for the distribution of assets in a guardian's hands was made without notice of hearing, the probate court, at a subsequent hearing properly noticed, can confirm and make it valid.—Landon v. Comet, 62 Mich. 80.

§ 79. Burden of proof, presumptions and evidence.

Presumptions and evidence in actions on bonds, see post § 88.

Admissibility of book entries by guardian's clerk to show settlement, see Evidence ¶ 2682.

¶ 269. The burden of proof that a guardian has received a higher interest than the legal rate upon his ward's money is on those who represent the ward's interests on an accounting; and they must identify the instances in which such interest has been received.—Moyer v. Fletcher, 56 Mich. 508.

¶ 270. Evidence that a minor was an admitted member of the same family as one who was afterwards made his guardian, and was provided for as such during a period for which the guardian afterwards sought to charge him for board and clothing, is admissible in a proceeding for the settlement of the guardian's accounts.—Bondie v. Bourassa, 46 Mich. 321.

¶ 271. A receipt by a ward for property held by his guardian is no more conclusive than any other receipt; and while it justifies the guardian's discharge, neither the receipt nor the discharge precludes the ward from showing that under a mutual arrangement the guardian has not actually accounted for part of the property.—Powell v. Powell, 52 Mich. 432.

¶ 272. Testimony that a guardian of an incompetent person had access to his ward's papers; that they had never been found in any other person's hands; that he had attempted to make it appear that a third person had written to him claiming to own certain notes given by him to his ward when the latter was competent; that these letters were in a feigned hand, and were written or caused to be written by the appellant; that they became a part of the files in the case; and that he defaced certain postmarks stamped upon the envelopes, which were claimed to support the theory that the letters were written by him or by his procurement, is enough to justify a finding on settlement of his account that he should be charged with the sum due on such notes. If he was guilty of an attempt to suppress testimony by altering a public record, the testimony should be construed strongly against him.—Murray v. Lepper, 99 Mich. 135.

¶ 273. In a suit for an accounting by a ward, receipt of pension moneys belonging to the ward is sufficiently proved by an exemplified copy of the pension vouchers, under U. S. Rev. St., § 882, suppported by an allegation in the guardian's plea of laches that he was guardian and had received pension moneys.—Murphy v. Cady, 145 Mich. 33.

VI. RIGHTS AND DEALINGS BETWEEN GUARDIAN AND WARD.

§ 80. In general; presumptions and policy of law.

Guardian as purchaser on sale of real estate, see ante § 48.

Several character of duties involved in guardianship over more than one ward, see ante ¶ 95.

Ratification of infants' acts by them after attaining majority, see Infants.

Evidence to impeach for duress bond to secure repayment of converted money to ward, see Duress ¶ 54.

Admissibility of parol to contradict receipt by ward, see Evidence § 190.

Status and disabilities of infants in general, see Infants, I.

Contract between wife and guardian of her minor husband, see Comp. L. 1915, § 11467.

¶ 274. A presumption arises against the justice of any bargain made by one in the position of a guardian with a ward incompetent to manage his affairs, and the guardian has the burden of showing that the transaction was fair and for the other's interest.—Jacox v. Jacox, 40 Mich. 473.

¶ 275. Guardians can reap no personal benefit from the use of the ward's funds, any more than other trustees.—Moyer v. Fletcher, 56 Mich. 508.

¶ 276. Where in an action by children and grandchildren to set aside a deed of the father and grandfather on the ground of incompetency, there were a number of witnesses on each side so that their opinions were evenly balanced, and the relation between the grantor and grantee is very largely in the nature of guardian and ward, and in view of the grantor's condition it becomes the grantee's duty to properly care for him and his property, it is the duty of the grantee to show entirely clean hands in the transaction.—Hemphill v. Holford, 88 Mich. 293.

¶ 277. Where as between vendor and purchaser the circumstances disclose that the person under the infirmity was for the time being in place of ward of the other party, or was in a state of submission to the judgment of the other, a presumption arises adverse to the justice of the bargain and the bargainee will be required to show that no advantage was taken, and that in itself the arrangement was not only suitable, fair and conscientious, but one expedient under the circumstances and conducive to the interests of the other.—Noban v. Shoup, 171 Mich. 191.

¶ 278. The rule prohibiting guardians from profiting out of the estate of the ward applies in case of conveyances by minor wards of a portion of their interest in an estate, to their guardian who was also their aunt, in consideration of the care bestowed by her upon such minors and upon their father and mother, and of love and affection, one minor having at the time of the conveyance been still under age and the other having just passed her majority and the guardian's accounts having not as yet been settled.—Williams v. Davison's Estate, 133 Mich. 344.

¶ 279. One who upon a petition conferring no jurisdiction upon the court is appointed guardian of an alleged incompetent person has no standing in court to compel an assignment to himself of a mortgage executed to another person for the ward's use and benefit.—Partello v. Holton, 79 Mich. 372.

¶ 280. In a suit against a guardian for appropriating moneys left in the keeping of his ward, there is no error in excluding defendant's inventory of the ward's property filed in the probate court by him as guardian, or in rejecting the evidence of defendant's clerk as to what particular sums of money were included in the inventory, and as to defendant's good faith, especially if defendant does not offer to show that he has in good faith paid out the money for the ward's benefit, or done any act that would debar him from full protection on the settlement of his guardianship account in the probate court.—Martin v. Sheridan, 46 Mich. 93.

VII. BONDS AND ACTIONS ON SAME.

§ 81. Obligation and breach of and liability on bonds.

On bonds for sale of real estate, see post § 82.

Liability of sureties, see post §§ 83, 84.

Actions and procedure on bonds, see post §§ 85, 86.
Defenses, objections and estoppels, see post § 87.
Presumptions and evidence, see post § 88.
Bond on qualifying for letters, see ante § 20.
Bond by retiring guardian to successor to pay back converted moneys, see also Bonds ¶ 38.
Liability of infant on guardian's bond, see Infants.

¶ 281. A guardian is not liable upon his bond for payments made to him by an executor before the time limited in the will for the payment of a legacy therein bequeathed to the ward, he having at the time no right, in the capacity of guardian, to receive the money.—Perkins v. Tooley, 74 Mich. 220.

¶ 282. Money devised to a ward to be paid to her when she comes of age, but improperly paid over to the guardian while the ward is still a minor, is not received by him as guardian, because he has no business with it, and he is not liable for it on his bond.—Hinckley v. Washtenaw Probate Judge, 45 Mich. 343.

§ 82. ——On bonds for sale of real property.

Necessity and sufficiency of bond on sale of real estate, see ante § 43.

¶ 283. A misapplication by a guardian of the proceeds of a sale of his ward's land is a breach of his bond given upon the sale for which he and his sureties are liable.—Schlee v. Darrow's Estate, 65 Mich. 362.

§ 83. Liability of sureties.

See also ante ¶ 283.
Bond on qualifying for letters, see ante § 20.
Notice and procedure on discharge of sureties, see post § 84.
Obligation and defenses of sureties in general, see Suretyship, II.
Conclusiveness of probate order granting leave to sue on guardian's bond as to liability of sureties, see Probate Courts, III.

¶ 284. A ward's ratification, by executing, on coming of age, a deed to the purchaser, of a guardian's sale voidable for irregularities, does not affect a surety on the guardian's bond given upon the sale, and such surety is liable for the guardian's failure to account for the proceeds of the sale.—Schlee v. Darrow's Estate, 65 Mich. 362.

¶ 284a. An order of the probate court fixing the amount due from the guardian is binding upon the sureties on the bond without notice of the hearing.—Rice v. Wilson, 129 Mich. 520.

§ 84. ——Notice and procedure on discharge of sureties.

¶ 285. Under Comp. L. 1897, § 9501, requiring notice to all persons interested upon petition for discharge of sureties on probate bonds, a discharge of sureties, on a guardian's bond without notice to the ward or his next of kin or without examination or passing upon the account by the court is ineffectual and void.—Rice v. Wilson, 129 Mich. 520.

§ 85. Actions and procedure on bonds.

Applications for leave to sue, see post § 86.
Defenses, objections and estoppels, see post § 87.
Presumptions and evidence, see post § 88.
Bond on qualifying for letters, see ante § 20.
Necessity and sufficiency of bond for sale of real estate, see ante § 43.
Action, suits and proceedings generally, see ante, IV.
Time within which actions on bond barred, see Limitation of Actions.

¶ 286. If a guardian neglects his duty, an action may be brought on his bond, which is the same whether the ward is an infant or an incompetent. (How. St., § 6331.)—In re Munck's Estate (Lyster's Appeal), 54 Mich. 325.

¶ 287. Under Comp. L. 1897, §§ 8711, 8717, 8719, relative to the custody of incompetent wards and administration of their estates by their guardian, the power of a common-law court over a demand against an incompetent under guardianship is exhausted by the rendition of judgment, and payment of such judgment must be enforced by suit on the guardian's bond.—Nolan v. Garrison, 156 Mich. 397.

¶ 288. In the absence of an accounting before the proper tribunal, a suit cannot, save in exceptional cases, be maintained against a surety on a deceased guardian's bond by the ward after attaining her majority.—Tudhope v. Potts, 91 Mich. 490.

§ 86. ——Applications for leave to sue.

¶ 289. No notice is necessary of an application for leave to sue upon a guardian's bond.—Landon v. Comet, 62 Mich. 80.

¶ 290. An application is properly made to the probate court under How. St., § 6331, by the administrator of the estate of an incompetent person, for leave to bring suit upon the bond of the guardian of the deceased, which bond is properly executed to the judge of said court.—Welch v. Van Auken, 76 Mich. 464.

¶ 291. The fact that part of an incompetent person's estate in his guardian's hands consists of securities which the guardian refuses to turn over to the administrator does not affect the probate court's jurisdiction to grant leave to sue upon the guardian's bond, even though resort to chancery may become necessary.—Welch v. Van Auken, 76 Mich. 464.

¶ 292. Upon an application for leave to sue upon a guardian's bond given before sale of real estate, the probate court cannot pass upon the merits of the controversy or fix the liability of any obligor.—Schlee v. Darrow's Estate, 65 Mich. 362.

§ 87. Defenses, objections and estoppels.

Time within which action may be brought against sureties as determined by time of guardian's discharge, see also ante ¶ 90.

¶ 293. An action upon the bond given by a guardian licensed to sell real estate cannot be defeated by showing that the sale was void because of his neglect to publish and post notices and to make proper proof thereof. The bond covers his neglects or omissions to make the sale in a legal manner, though it does not cover any illegalities or defects occurring prior to the granting of the license.—Schlee v. Darrow's Estate, 65 Mich. 362.

¶ 294. Acceptance of appointment as guardian of incompetent person, and taking possession of ward's estate, estop guardian and his surety from questioning regularity of appointment in suit on his bond.—Welch v. Van Auken, 76 Mich. 464.

§ 88. Presumptions and evidence.

¶ 295. It will not be presumed in advance that a guardian of an incompetent will neglect his statutory duty to pay his ward's debts under the supervision of the probate court, but it will rather be presumed that he will do so, and that it will not become necessary to bring suit upon his bond.—Nolan v. Garrison, 156 Mich. 397.

¶ 1. Habeas corpus is the proper remedy for a conviction without jurisdiction.—In re Hamilton's Case, 51 Mich. 174.

¶ 2. Habeas corpus is a proper remedy where a sentence to a certain prison is wholly void.—In re Allen, 139 Mich. 712.

¶ 3. Technical defects in a justice's warrant of commitment are not reviewable in habeas corpus proceedings; redress must be sought in some way prescribed by statute for review by an appellate court.—In re Hamilton's Case, 51 Mich. 174.

¶ 4. Habeas corpus is not the proper remedy to test the validity of an order of the recorder's court of Detroit, made under Comp. L. 1871, § 7957, How. St. § 9570, and committing to the state prison, until further order, one who has been tried in that court for murder and acquitted as insane; the question should be raised by writ of error or other appropriate remedy.—In re Underwood, 30 Mich. 502.

¶ 5. Habeas corpus is not the proper remedy to review the alleged want of a preliminary examination, and the illegal arrest in another state and transportation into Michigan of a respondent who has been convicted and sentenced to state prison.—In re Ellis, 79 Mich. 322.

¶ 6. A conviction under a valid city ordinance, on a valid complaint, by a court having jurisdiction to try and determine the offense charged, cannot be disturbed on habeas corpus.—In re Bushey, 105 Mich. 64.

¶ 7. The writ of habeas corpus will not be granted to review a final judgment in an ordinary criminal cause for errors which are properly reviewable by writ of error, and where that writ is an adequate remedy.—In re Eaton, 27 Mich. 1; In re Coffeen, 38 Mich. 311.

¶ 8. The validity of a conviction and sentence in a common-law proceeding is not to be reviewed on habeas corpus, but rather on writ of error.—In re Coffeen, 38 Mich. 311.

¶ 9. An appellate court can use the writ of habeas corpus as one means of exercising its supervisory power; but tribunals which have no appellate power cannot use it as a writ of error.—In re Hamilton's Case, 51 Mich. 174.

¶ 10. Habeas corpus will not lie to review proceedings of the trial court, where jurisdiction is shown; such review should be taken on writ of error.—In re Lewis, 124 Mich. 199.

¶ 11. Habeas corpus will not lie to release a prisoner on the ground that the commitment, in reciting conviction for larceny "from" a store, failed to charge the statutory crime of larceny "in" a store in the daytime; where the return set up the facts and no objection was made to their consideration, and where the return showed conviction by a court of competent jurisdiction of an offense properly charged which subjected the prisoner to the punishment meted out to him.—In re Lewis, 124 Mich. 199.

¶ 12. When there is a valid conviction and irregular sentence which under the law might have been corrected by a new sentence when the case was reviewed on writ of error, habeas corpus will not be permitted to perform the function of a writ of error; and it is doubtful if in the first instance the question could have been raised on habeas corpus.—In re Butler, 138 Mich. 453.

¶ 13. When there is a valid conviction and an irregular sentence, which may, under the law, be corrected by a new sentence, habeas corpus will not be permitted to perform the function of a writ of error.—In re Vitali, 153 Mich. 514.

¶ 14. An irregularity in a warrant or judgment restraining a person convicted of crime cannot be corrected by an attempt to make the writ of habeas corpus perform the office of a writ of error.—In re Forscutt, 167 Mich. 438.

¶ 15. Petitioner brought habeas corpus for his release against the warden of the state's prison. The order of commitment of petitioner recited that he was convicted of having committed the crime of uttering and publishing a forged and counterfeit instrument. The record of the trial disclosed that petitioner was informed against for an offense described in 3 Comp. Laws 1897, § 11660. The sentence imposed was a proper one for the offense there described. The record further showed that the jury found the petitioner guilty "of uttering and publishing a forged and counterfeit instrument." The judgment entry contained nothing aiding or correcting the record of the verdict. Held, habeas corpus would not lie on account of these irregularities, but they must be asserted in a court of errors.—In re Satt, 164 Mich. 472.

¶ 16. An application for a writ of habeas corpus was refused where it involved the right of a certain person to act as justice of the peace; the court declined to consider that question except in a proceeding instituted against the person himself.—In re Corrigan, 87 Mich. 66.

¶ 17. A juvenile offender sentenced to the reform school at Lansing will be released on habeas corpus where it appears that the report of the county agent was dated five days after the commitment, since Comp. L. 1897, § 2261 requires that such report shall be made after the arrest and before further proceedings.—In re Mills, 131 Mich. 325.

§ 2. To admit prisoners to bail.

Admission to bail in general, see Arrest, VIII.

To admit prisoner to bail pending writ of error in which stay is allowed, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14590.

¶ 18. Where there is good reason to believe that a murder has been committed, and a person is detained on reasonable grounds of suspicion to await examination before a police magistrate upon the charge of having been concerned therein, a higher court will not interfere, pending the examination, to release him on habeas corpus.—In re Peoples, 47 Mich. 626.

¶ 19. The discretion of the circuit court in refusing to admit a prisoner to bail will not be interfered with unless it has been exercised in an arbitrary, unjust or oppressive manner, or where the refusal is clearly erroneous.—In re Tubbs, 139 Mich. 102.

¶ 20. Habeas corpus to obtain petitioner's release upon bail will not be granted where the refusal of the circuit judge was based on a finding that the proof was evident and the presumption great that petitioner was guilty of murder, and the evidence taken before the examining magistrate was sufficient to sustain the finding.—In re Tubbs, 139 Mich. 102.

§ 3. To review capias or contempt proceedings.

Time allowable after service of writ, see post § 8.

To test refusal to quash capias, see also Civil Arrest ¶ 85.

Limitations of statute on right to writ, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXVI, § 8; Comp. L. 1915, § 13460.

¶ 21. The proper remedy to test the legality of an arrest on a capias ad respondendum is habeas corpus, of which the defendant may avail himself before pleading.—Miller v. Rosier, 31 Mich. 475.

¶ 22. Habeas corpus is not the proper remedy to review the regularity of a prima facie regular commitment for refusing to pay alimony; the remedy is by appeal.—Bissell's Case, 40 Mich. 63.

¶ 23. The clerk of the court by inadvertence dated an order of commitment for contempt March 14th, instead of March 15th. The attorney for petitioner in habeas corpus corrected the order, and the court later approved of such correction. Held, the correction was not ground for quashing the commitment.—In re Knott, 162 Mich. 10.

§ 4. To determine rightful custody of children.

¶¶ 24, 25. Whether the writ will issue to a person here to compel the production of a minor child under guardianship here who has been removed from the state and is detained abroad, quære; the court being divided.—In re Jackson, 15 Mich. 417.

¶ 26. Habeas corpus will not be granted as a matter of right to change the custody of children where it does not clearly appear that such change would be for their interest. —Matter of Heather Children, 50 Mich. 261.

§ 5. To investigate commitment as lunatic.

To determine proper custody of child, see ante § 4.
Provision for writ to inquire into detention in asylum for insane, feeble minded or epileptic persons, see Comp. L. 1915, §§ 1344, 1558.

¶ 27. The writ of habeas corpus runs into insane asylums and lies to review the orders of probate courts committing persons to such asylums. — Palmer v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 83 Mich. 528.

¶ 28. Habeas corpus is not the proper remedy to test the validity of an order of the circuit judge, entered after an inquiry into the sanity of one in jail awaiting arraignment on a charge of arson, committing the accused to the asylum for the dangerous and criminal insane until restored to his right mind; and should be denied in view of How. St., § 8575, subd. 2, which provides for remand to custody if it appears that the prisoner is detained "by virtue of the final judgment of any competent court of civil or criminal jurisdiction."—In re Maguire, 114 Mich. 80.

Power of Detroit Recorder's Court, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14649.
Statutory provisions conferring jurisdiction of habeas corpus to testify, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXVI, §§ 1, 3, 4; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 13453, 13455, 13456; see also Comp. L. 1915, §§ 1752, 14586.
Provisions as to persons detained on criminal accusations in Wayne County, see Comp. L. 1915, § 1870 et seq.
Writs to bring in contemptuous prisoners for hearing and punishment, see Jud. Act, chap. V, § 8; Comp. L. 1915, § 12275.

¶ 29. It seems that the writ should be taken out from the supreme court, if that court is to pass upon the evidence in the proceedings.—Corrie v. Corrie, 42 Mich. 509.

¶ 30. The action of a circuit judge in habeas corpus proceedings is strictly judicial where no jury is required and the judge acts personally, and it need not be taken in open court or during term.—Goodchild v. Foster, 51 Mich. 599.

¶ 31. A circuit court commissioner has no authority under Const. art. 6, § 1, to issue the writ of habeas corpus where the inquiry contemplates the review or investigation of the proceedings of a judicial tribunal, since judicial power is vested by the constitution in certain specified courts, and proceedings had in such a case before a commissioner, being void for want of jurisdiction, would not bar like proceedings before the supreme court. The statute authorizing commissioners to issue this writ must be construed in connection with this provision of the constitution.—In re Buddington, 29 Mich. 472; In re Burger, 39 Mich. 203.

¶ 32. A circuit judge at chambers has jurisdiction to issue the writ of habeas corpus to get possession of children sent to the state public school by order of the probate judge.—Goodchild v. Foster, 51 Mich. 599.

¶ 33. Justices of the peace have no power to issue the writ of habeas corpus to enable persons convicted of disorderly conduct to come before them for the purpose of giving bail.—In re Fowler, 49 Mich. 234.

¶ 34. The recorder of Detroit has no authority to issue a writ of habeas corpus to take a prisoner from the reform school, who has been lawfully sentenced there, unless to testify as a witness. He cannot bring the prisoner up for a new sentence on the ground of a mistake as to his age when the former sentence was imposed.—In re Mason, 8 Mich. 70.

§ 7. Petition for writ and issuance, form and contents of writ.

Summary arrest of custodian of prisoner, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXVI, § 53; Comp. L. 1915, § 13505.

Certiorari in lieu of habeas corpus, when proper, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXVI, § 38; Comp. L. 1915, § 13490.

¶ 35. Where a petition by a wife sets out the detention of a child by the husband, it is sufficient, even though it does not allege the unfitness of the husband and the fitness of the petitioner, to care for the child.—In re Knott, 162 Mich. 10.

¶ 36. A petition in habeas corpus filed by a wife against a husband, alleged that a minor child was detained by the husband in Detroit or elsewhere, and that the parents and the child had their home in the county in which the petition was filed. Held, the allegations were sufficient to give the court jurisdiction.—In re Knott, 162 Mich. 10.

¶ 37. A petition in habeas corpus by a wife is sufficient to give the court jurisdiction which alleges that the husband has removed their child under five years from her custody without her consent and is detaining him in the county or elsewhere, and that the husband lives in the county where the petition is filed.—In re Knott, 162 Mich. 10.

¶ 38. Issue of the writ of habeas corpus to give to their guardian the custody of minor children less than fourteen years old is not a matter of right where it does not clearly appear that it would be for the interest of the children.—Matter of Heather Children, 50 Mich. 261.

§ 8. Service and return to writ or objections to it.

Compelling return, post § 9.

Conclusiveness and effect of return, see post § 10.

Mode of service of writ, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXVI, §§ 64, 65; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 13516, 13517.
Manner of executing summary warrant for arrest of prisoner and custodian, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXVI, § 54; Comp. L. 1915, § 13506.
Proper person to serve writ, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXVI, § 62; Comp. L. 1915, § 13514.
Time for return and computation of allowance for distance on writs returnable forthwith, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXVI, § 69; Comp. L. 1915, § 13521.
Duty to produce body of prisoner named in writ, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXVI, § 20; Comp. L. 1915, § 13472.
Proper and necessary contents of return and form of same, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXVI, §§ 18, 19; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 13470, 13471.
Showing in return of reasons of sickness or infirmity for not producing prisoner before court, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXVI, § 37; Comp. L. 1915, § 13489.
Sheriff's statutory fees for bringing up prisoner, see Jud. Act, chap. XLVIII, § 2; Comp. L. 1915, § 13719.
Keeping of prisoner pending judgment on the writ, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXVI, § 33; Comp. L. 1915, § 13485.

¶ 39. The service of a writ of habeas corpus by a copy is void.—Klein v. Klein, How. N. P. 266.

¶ 40. Where the writ is issued on behalf of a party detained in execution, the plaintiff in execution is entitled to four days' notice before any order of discharge is made; and the appearance of his attorney for the purpose of objecting to the want of notice is no waiver.—People ex rel. Moore v. Kehl, 15 Mich. 330.

¶ 41. In habeas corpus proceedings appearing and objecting to the sufficiency of a notice of return to a writ of habeas corpus applied for by a defendant held under a body execution will not waive the sufficiency of such notice.—People ex rel. Moore v. Kehl, 15 Mich. 330.

¶ 42. The person upon whom a writ of habeas corpus is served should set forth in his return the authority for the detention; but on review by certiorari, the order of commitment produced by petitioner was regarded as such authority, no objection having been made.—Palmer v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 83 Mich. 528.

¶ 43. In a habeas corpus by a wife against a husband for the detention of their child under five years, the husband's return is insufficient which states that the child has not been under his restraint and control since the application for the writ, that he has not since said time transferred the custody of the child, and that at the present time he does not know the child's whereabouts.—In re Knott, 162 Mich. 10.

§ 9. ——Compelling return or obedience to writ.

Contempt proceedings in general, see Contempt.
Duty to obey writs, statutory provisions, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXVI, §§ 66, 67; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 13518, 13519.
Attachment proceedings on disobedience of writ, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXVI, §§ 21-25; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 13473-13477.
Penalty for disobedience of habeas corpus ad testificandum, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXVI, § 6; Comp. L. 1915, § 13458.
Concealment of prisoner or evasion of writ by transfer of custody or place as a misdemeanor, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXVI, §§ 49-51; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 13501-13503.

¶ 44. In committing a respondent in habeas corpus proceedings for contempt in refusing to make a complete and explicit return, the court is not exercising the inherent jurisdiction and power of courts to compel obedience to the orders of court, but is following the method which the statute (3 Comp. Laws 1897, §§ 9869-9873) affirmatively requires shall be followed to enforce obedience to the command of the writ.—In re Knott, 162 Mich. 10.

§ 10. Effect and conclusiveness of return.

Effect of return to sustain commitment verbally defective, see ante ¶ 11.
Dismissal of second writ on answer showing no new question, see post ¶ 63.
Conclusiveness of return to certiorari, see Certiorari.
Statutory right of imprisoned person to traverse return, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXVI, § 36; Comp. L. 1915, § 13488.

¶ 45. In a wife's habeas corpus proceedings against a husband for the detention of a child, the husband's return as to the location of the child is traversable.—In re Knott, 162 Mich. 10.

§ 11. Power and jurisdiction to hear.

Proper court to issue writ, see ante § 6.
Disability of judge at chambers to determine on writ, see Courts § 58.
Disability of court commissioners to adjudicate custody of children, see Courts § 86, ¶ 309.

¶ 46. Whether a circuit judge cannot hold court for hearings on habeas corpus at other times than when the circuit court for the county is in session, quære.—In re Buddington, 29 Mich. 472; In re Burger, 39 Mich. 203.

¶ 47. Circuit court commissioners have no power under Const. art. 6, §§ 1, 16, to adjudicate under habeas corpus upon the right to custody of children.—Rowe v. Rowe, 28 Mich. 358.

Matters excluded from hearing, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXVI, § 30; Comp. L. 1915, § 13482.
Mode of hearing on certiorari issued in lieu of habeas corpus, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXVI, § 39; Comp. L. 1915, § 13491.
Hearing and examination on summary arrest of prisoner and custodian, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXVI, § 55; Comp. L. 1915, § 13507.
Proper official to represent state on habeas corpus for inmate of Ionia house of correction, see Comp. L. 1915, § 1919.

¶ 48. In habeas corpus proceedings between parents for the custody of a child there should be full inquiry and examination on oath to enable the court to decide as the welfare of the child may require.—Corrie v. Corrie, 42 Mich. 509.

¶ 49. On habeas corpus, where the petitioner is held by virtue of a commitment fair on its face, charging him with contempt of court in refusing to give evidence, it is competent for him to go behind the commitment and show that the court committing him had no jurisdiction of the proceeding in which he was called as a witness.—In re Morton, 10 Mich. 208; In re Hall, 10 Mich. 210.

¶ 50. In habeas corpus on extradition, the local courts are limited to an examination of the papers before the Governor to determine whether a crime is charged, an inquiry as to the identity of the accused, and the question of flight.—In re Palmer, 138 Mich. 36.

¶ 51. The supreme court, upon a petition of habeas corpus to inquire into the legality of a sentence imposed upon the petitioner upon conviction of a crime cannot impose a proper sentence nor amend nor modify a sentence, but it can only determine whether the petitioner is lawfully imprisoned in view of the judgment and commitment.—In re Hamilton, 188 Mich. 499.

§ 13. ——Evidence or showing and presumptions.
Rule as to re-examination of evidence on review, see post § 15.
General law of evidence, see Evidence.
General presumptions on collateral attack, see Judgments, VI.
Presumptions of regularity attending sentences for crime, see Indictment, XI, XVI, D.

¶ 52. In habeas corpus proceedings, as in others where the attack is collateral, the judgments of a superior court receive different consideration than that accorded to those of inferior tribunals, the general rule being that nothing shall be intended to be out of such jurisdiction, except that which especially appears to be.—In re Lewis, 124 Mich. 199.

¶ 53. Where it appears in the recitals of a body execution issued by a justice of the peace that a judgment was rendered for an amount within the jurisdiction of the justice, giving the date and names of the parties, it will be presumed in habeas corpus proceedings, that all the preliminaries necessary to the issuance of the execution were complied with.—In re Gaskill, How. N. P. 140.

¶ 54. In habeas corpus on extradition, the fact that the affidavits disclosed that the accused was present in the other state at a date shortly before that laid in the indictment but not at that date or since is not sufficient to negative flight.—In re Palmer, 138 Mich. 36.

Provisions as to costs in habeas corpus, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXVI, § 57; Comp. L. 1915, § 13509.

¶ 55. Where it appeared that the petitioner was held by an officer who had no legal authority for that purpose, but that there was authority in the keeper of the state reform school to detain him, under a legal commitment from which he had not been properly discharged, the court would not order him released, but remanded him to the custody of the keeper of the reform school.—In re Mason, 8 Mich. 70.

¶ 56. Where, in proceedings by habeas corpus, the supreme court was equally divided as to the disposition of a case involving a parent's right to the custody of his child, the writ was dismissed without any decision as to the rights of parties and without prejudice to any existing right or adjudication or any future remedy.—Stockman's Case, 56 Mich. 218.

¶ 57. A discharge of a prisoner in habeas corpus proceedings is a final adjudication that his detention was illegal, but is not conclusive that the arrest was illegal where no claim is made in the petition that the arrest was illegal and the discharge was based upon detention for an unreasonable length of time.—Friesenhan v. Maines, 137 Mich. 10.

¶ 58. One committed on failure to comply with an order to give security to keep the peace, and discharged upon habeas corpus for a defect in the commitment, and subsequently be arrested and imprisoned upon a second commitment issued in due form upon said order is lawfully imprisoned (How. St. § 8954, subd. 1).—In re Reinheimer's Case, 97 Mich. 619.

¶ 59. After the correction of the certificate of the circuit judge which was requisite to a valid commitment to the industrial school for boys, so as to accord with the facts, it was proper to remand the petitioners in the habeas corpus proceedings in question, and to cause the return to be amended; and under 3 Comp. L. 1897, § 9898, such action did not operate to put the petitioners in jeopardy a second time for the same cause.—In re Collins, 135 Mich. 91.

¶¶ 60, 61. The determination of a court on habeas corpus as to the custody of children is, as a general rule, conclusive in a subsequent application for the writ, unless some new fact altering the status of the case has occurred.—In re Sneden, 105 Mich. 61.

¶ 62. Where the opinion of the circuit judge makes clear that his decision in habeas corpus proceedings instituted by a father to obtain custody of his child from the grandparents of the child, was based upon the idea of the superior legal right of the parent, and also makes clear that he had in mind the rule that such legal right will not be enforced against the best interests of the child, language indicating a balancing of the rights of the parent and the interest of the child, rather favorable to the parent, will not be sufficient to overturn the conclusion reached by the circuit judge.—Smith v. Kiel, 150 Mich. 417.

¶ 63. On habeas corpus in the supreme court where respondent answers that the same facts and circumstances were before the circuit court on an earlier habeas corpus for custody of the same child, and there is nothing in the petition to show that the testimony on the earlier hearing was irreviewable because not reported or that it was insufficient to support the judgment of the circuit court, or that such judgment was contrary to law, the petition must be dismissed.—In re Sneden, 105 Mich. 61.

§ 15. ——Appeal or review of judgment.

Questions of fact reviewable on certiorari to review habeas corpus, see Certiorari § 55.
Mandamus to review grant or denial of habeas corpus, see Mandamus, II.

¶ 64. The proper remedy for errors committed in proceedings on habeas corpus before a circuit judge is by certiorari or by habeas corpus in the supreme court, not by writ of error.—People ex rel. Faust v. Calhoun Circuit Judge, 30 Mich. 266.

¶ 65. The discharge by the circuit court on habeas corpus of a prisoner civilly held is a final judgment reviewable on error.—In re Hicks, 20 Mich. 129.

¶ 66. An order of discharge in habeas corpus proceedings of a person held as a criminal is final, unless otherwise provided by statute, and is not open to review on appeal or writ of error.—People v. Conant, 59 Mich. 565; People v. Fairman, 59 Mich. 568.

¶ 67. Certiorari is the proper writ by which the supreme court reviews such habeas corpus proceedings as are reviewable, and error does not lie.—In re Brock, 144 Mich. 42.

¶ 68. Where the supreme court, after examination of the testimony sent up by agreement with the return on certiorari to review habeas corpus proceedings, finds that there is evidence which supports the conclusion of the circuit court, no re-examination of the evidence will be made for the purpose of determining facts.—Smith v. Kiel, 150 Mich. 417.

¶ 69. An order made in habeas corpus proceedings will not be vacated on mandamus where it appears from the record that such defects exist in the proceedings under which defendants were held in custody as would on a new writ justify their discharge. —Township of Fruitport v. Muskegon Circuit Judge, 90 Mich. 20.

¶ 70. An invalid habeas corpus order for discharge from insane asylum may be vacated on certiorari without remanding person discharged, where it appears to be unprofitable to do so.—Palmer v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 83 Mich. 528.

§ 16. Further proceedings and liberation or remand of prisoner.

Remand from improper to proper officer, see ante ¶ 55.

Dismissal without prejudice to future application for custody of child, see ante ¶ 56.

When prisoner may be recommitted after discharge, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXVI, § 47; Comp. L. 1915, § 13499.

Provisions for remand if not bailable or entitled to discharge, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXVI, § 32; Comp. L. 1915, § 13484.

Provision for admission to bail if commitment is irregular, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXVI, § 31; Comp. L. 1915, § 13483.

Fixing bail on hearing certiorari issued in lieu of habeas corpus, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXVI, §§ 42-46; Comp. L. 1915, §§ 13494-13498.

Official liability for recommitting or further detaining prisoner, see Jud. Act, chap. XXXVI, § 48; Comp. L. 1915, § 13500.

¶ 71. One who has been discharged on habeas corpus for a defect in a commitment issued by a justice of the peace on his failure to comply with an order requiring him to furnish sureties to keep the peace, may lawfully be imprisoned upon a second commitment in due form issued by the same justice upon the same order.—In re Reinheimer, 97 Mich. 619.

HARMLESS AND PREJUDICIAL ERROR.

TREATS of the effect of judicial errors in civil cases considered with respect to their harmfulness or harmlessness to the party objecting. It excludes the right to review the judgment or cause and the procedure for such review (see Appeal; Certiorari), the propriety of affirmance or reversal on the whole case or of remand for new trial or further proceedings (see Appeal, XIII), and the necessity and sufficiency of objections, exceptions, requests, and motions to preserve a ruling and objection thereto for review (see Saving Questions). Grounds for New Trial are treated in that topic. The harmless error doctrine in criminal cases is treated in Indictment, XV.

Analysis.

I. General principles; effect of harmlessness.
§ 1. In general; harmlessness or material effect on result.
§ 2. More favorable result or recovery impossible in any event.

§ 156. In general.
§ 157. Errors which might have been corrected if challenged.

V. Cure by affirmance on conditions.
§ 158. In general.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES; EFFECT OF HARMLESSNESS.

[Note. It is not intended to treat in this topic the decisions that any given thing was error or was not erroneous, but only those which have passed on the question whether errors, concededly such, were harmful or harmless in their qualities and effects. Since it is presumed that an error was harmful (see Appeal § 353 et seq.), it follows that nearly all of the cases turn on "harmlessness" of the error.

Whether a given act or practice was error is a question of correctness of the practice and is therefore treated in the topic treating of that practice. Errors, defects and informalities in writings and doings which are not a part of judicial proceedings relate to the requisites and sufficiency of the particular instrument or act under question; and accordingly they are treated in connection with that to which they relate under the appropriate specific topic. The grounds for new trial are treated in New Trial, II. In many instances, however, the court states that the errors are or are not such as to constitute grounds for new trial, where it intends merely to say that the error is or is not prejudicial. Where the harmfulness or harmlessness of error is expressed in such manner, the decisions are kept in this topic.]

Statutory grounds for reversal, error productive of miscarriage of justice, see Comp. L. 1915, § 14565.

¶ 1. Judgment will not be reversed for non-prejudicial error.—Keating v. Retan, 80 Mich. 324; Durfee v. Newkirk, 83 Mich. 522.

¶ 2. A judgment will not be reversed for a mere formal error in the proceedings of the court below which does not affect the merits of the cause.—Lyell v. Sanbourn, 2 Mich. 109; Smith v. Township of Sherwood, 62 Mich. 159.

¶ 3. Judgment will not be reversed for an immaterial error.—Hale v. Houghton, 8 Mich. 458.

¶ 4. Judgment will not be reversed for error that does not prejudice plaintiff in error.—Maxon v. Perrott, 17 Mich. 332; Hammond v. Hannin, 21 Mich. 374; Threadgool v. Litogot, 22 Mich. 271; English v. Caldwell, 30 Mich. 362; Lenox v. Fuller, 39 Mich. 268; Reading v. Beardsley, 41 Mich. 123; Swart v. Kimball, 43 Mich. 443; Barton v. Gray, 57 Mich. 622; Finan v. Babcock, 58 Mich. 301; Mathews v. Phelps, 61 Mich. 327; Lane v. Pere Marquette Boom Co., 62 Mich. 63; Landon v. Comet, 62 Mich. 80.

¶ 5. Rulings upon a point that has no legal foundation and is immaterial to the case do not furnish any ground of complaint to a plaintiff in error who relies on it.—O'Rourke v. O'Rourke, 43 Mich. 58.

¶ 6. Exceptions which refer to questions that, however decided, could work no legal prejudice, will not be considered on error.—Davis v. Bush, 28 Mich. 432.

¶ 7. Judgment will not be reversed on account of any rulings that could not have changed the result.—Eberstein v. Camp, 37 Mich. 176.

¶ 8. If, on examining the facts, the court is satisfied that plaintiff in error was not prejudiced by any ruling or instruction, the judgment will be affirmed.—Township of Monroe v. Whipple, 62 Mich. 560.

¶ 9. The rule that error which does not prejudice should be disregarded means such error as does not prevent a party from obtaining his just rights, and it applies in all cases and in all proceedings had before courts.—O'Donnell v. Connecticut Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 73 Mich. 1.

§ 2. More favorable result or recovery impossible in any event.

Final judgment without new trial where it would be impossible or unavailing, see Appeal §§ 508-511.

¶ 10. Judgment for defendant should not be disturbed if any conclusive reason why no recovery can be had appears.—Lentz v. Teutonia Fire Ins. Co., 96 Mich. 445.

¶ 11. Where there is no cause of action it is not material whether rulings adverse to the plaintiff were or were not correct.—Richards v. Tozer, 27 Mich. 451; Bewick v. Fletcher, 41 Mich. 625; Parker v. Fields, 48 Mich. 250.

¶ 12. An error cannot be held harmless on the theory that in any event the recovery should have been more than the jury awarded, unless the record suffices to show with certainty that this is so by containing all the evidence requisite to such a determination.—Black v. Simon, 116 Mich. 382.

¶ 13. Where it appears, upon the whole case, that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover, the judgment against him will not be disturbed for errors in the rulings of the trial court.—Barnum v. Stone, 27 Mich. 332.

¶ 14. Where the plaintiff below assigns as error that the judgment, which was for defendant, is not supported by the facts found, the assignment will be of no advantage to him unless the facts found entitle him to judgment, for otherwise judgment would necessarily pass against him and in favor of his adversary.—Peabody v. McAvoy, 23 Mich. 526.

¶ 15. A case should not be reversed for errors committed against a party who is not, in any view of the evidence, entitled to succeed.—In re Stockdale's Estate (Appeal of City of Flint), 157 Mich. 593.

§ 3. Technical errors.

See also post ¶ 43.
Disregarding technical form of order of reference, see also Accounting Suits ¶ 35.

¶ 16. The court will not, on appeal, review proceedings for merely technical errors in matters pertaining only to regularity in practice.—Hess v. Final, 32 Mich. 515.

¶ 17. A verdict of no cause of action will not be set aside for technical errors where plaintiff on a new trial can only recover nominal damages with costs against himself. —Mears v. Cornwall, 73 Mich. 78.

¶ 18. Where parties elect to go to trial upon general and informal allegations, and to carry on their controversy upon some point or points of difference tacitly understood, and it appears that the merits have been fairly tried, the judgment will not be reversed upon technicalities.—American Merchants' Union Exp. Co. v. Phillips, 29 Mich. 515.

§ 4. Errors involving nominal or trivial damages only.

Entering final judgment above where only nominal damages could be recovered on new trial, see Appeal § 504.
Dismissal or affirmance on hearing for want of substantial grievance, such as nominal damages that would not carry costs, see Appeal § 481.
Damages for vexatious appeal where assignments are frivolous or dispute trivial, see Costs §§ 125, 126.

¶ 19. A case will not be remanded for failure to award nominal damages where judgment for them would not carry costs.—Haven v. Beidler Mfg. Co., 40 Mich. 286; McLean v. Charles Wright Medicine Co., 96 Mich. 479; Stevens v. Yale, 113 Mich. 680.

¶ 20. A charge that plaintiff who is entitled to nominal damages can recover nothing is not reversible error unless the judgment carries costs to defendant.—Wyatt v. Herring, 90 Mich. 581.

¶ 21. A judgment for defendant will not be set aside where it appears that plaintiff, if entitled to recover, can recover no more than nominal damages.—Wilcox v. Morton, 132 Mich. 68.

¶ 22. A judgment for defendant will not be reversed where, even upon plaintiff's theory, no damages beyond nominal damages were proven.—Laetz v. Tierny, 153 Mich. 279.

¶ 23. Under Comp. Laws 1897, § 10995, permitting a defendant in ejectment to recover for improvements providing there has been six years' actual occupancy, where the amount which the defendant should have been awarded in a trial court is very small, the case will not be reversed, because not allowed.—Sleight v. Roe, 125 Mich. 585.

§ 5. Errors involving costs only.

Denial of costs where errors are technical and unmeritorious, see Costs § 102.

¶ 24. Where a defendant has answered after his plea and demurrer have been overruled, the supreme court will not review the interlocutory proceeding of overruling them, for the sake of passing upon a trifling question of costs.—Van Slyck v. Skinner, 41 Mich. 186.

§ 6. Amount of verdict or outcome as indication of prejudice or harmlessness.

Erroneous admission of evidence cured by amount of verdict, see post § 101.
Harmlessness of instruction indicated by amount of verdict, see post § 130.

¶ 25. A large verdict may be taken as an indication that an error in a charge was harmful in its effect on the jury.—Moers v. Michigan United Rys. Co., 158 Mich. 659.

¶ 26. The smallness of the verdict may be taken as an indication that the jury was not misled by an improper instruction as to the amount to be allowed.—Brockway v. Patterson, 72 Mich. 122.

¶ 27. Where the recovery in an action for personal injuries was for $6,500, it cannot be said that an erroneous instruction permitting a jury to take into consideration loss of earning capacity was not prejudicial.—Pierce v. C. H. Bidwell Thresher Co., 153 Mich. 323.

¶ 28. An instruction based on a claim of damages in recoupment, which stated a rule of damages computed on each thousand feet of lumber sawed by an alleged defective mill, and which was erroneous because not covered by the notice of recoupment, was not cured by a general charge withdrawing it from the jury; where there had been evidence adduced as to such damages and the effect may have been to influence the jury in reducing plaintiff's claim of $1,300 to $76.—Sinker, Davis & Co. v. Davis, 76 Mich. 557.

¶ 28a. The failure of the court to instruct the jury in an action by a passenger against an interurban railroad for damages for personal injuries sustained as a result of collision where officers of the defendant were called for cross-examination under Pub. Acts 1909, No. 307, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 12865, that the plaintiff was bound by the testimony of such witnesses unless the testimony was contradicted by other testimony, is reversible error where plaintiff used unwarranted and prejudicial language concerning such officers and in argument disparaged their credibility in toto and where the verdict was excessive, although on the sole issue respecting which the witnesses were questioned the jury found their testimony to be true.—Rathbone v. Detroit United Ry., 187 Mich. 586. (Bird, J., dissenting.)

§ 7. Errors not harmful to party complaining.

Errors in rulings preliminary to trial or on pleadings, see post § 18.

Errors in admission, retention, rejection or striking of evidence, see post §§ 45, 46.

Irregularities in verdict or judgment, see post § 75.

Rulings as to new trial and subsequent proceedings, see post § 77.

Right of nonappellant to urge matter making error harmless, see Appeal § 220.

Urging one's own error to make other error harmless, see Appeal § 221.

Right of defendant to have attachment dissolved for error affecting other party, see Attachment ¶ 270.

Doctrine that appellant alone can complain of error, and that he cannot complain of those affecting adversary or coparties, see Appeal, XI, D.

¶ 29. Plaintiff in error cannot complain of errors in his own favor or that prejudice his opponent only.—Brigham v. Gurney, 1 Mich. 349; Sleight v. Henning, 12 Mich. 371; Kelso v. Saxton, 40 Mich. 666; Bull v. Brockway, 48 Mich. 523; Hudnut v. Gardner, 59 Mich. 341; Beemer v. Hughes, 179 Mich. 110.

¶ 30. An appellant cannot ask a reversal of the decree for an error in no way affecting his rights.—Martin v. McReynolds, 6 Mich. 70; Warner v. Whittaker, 6 Mich. 133; Griggs v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 10 Mich. 117; Michigan Ins. Co. v. Whittemore, 12 Mich. 427.

¶ 31. On a writ of error the supreme court corrects only such errors as have been committed adversely to the interest of the party suing out the writ.—Berry v. Lowe, 10 Mich. 9.

¶ 32. Rulings cannot be made on error on questions of law that have not been decided against the plaintiff in error.—Marcott v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co., 47 Mich. 1.

¶ 33. A decree that is not prejudicial to the appellants will be affirmed, even though it is not as favorable as it should be to nonappellants.—Hanchett v. McQueen, 32 Mich. 22.

¶ 34. A decree will not be reversed for a mere irregularity not affecting injuriously the interests of the appellants.—Kellogg v. Putnam, 11 Mich. 344.

¶ 35. A plaintiff cannot complain of a verdict in favor of defendant on his claim of recoupment for less than the evidence warrants, where defendant does not appeal.—Sparks v. Lord, 198 Mich. 415.

¶ 36. A defendant cannot on appeal object to a decree below which awards the plaintiff less than a strict enforcement of his rights would give him.—A. M. Campau Realty Co. v. City of Detroit, 162 Mich. 243.

¶ 37. A defendant to an injunction bill cannot object that the suit was revived against the representatives of his deceased codefendant where they themselves have not appealed.—Pratt v. Lewis, 39 Mich. 7.

¶ 38. A rule of damages entitling a defendant to double damages, in that he could take a building erected at its then value, not exceeding the contract price, deducting from that value the difference between such value and what it would be worth if it had been such a building as contracted for, does not give a defendant reason to complain, as it gives him a greater amount of damages than he is entitled to.—Eaton v. Gladwell, 121 Mich. 444.

¶ 39. In an action of trover the fact that a verdict was rendered for an amount of interest less than the amount based upon various rates of interest in force during the time for which interest is to be computed is harmless to the defendant.—Hoffman v. H. M. Loud & Sons Lumber Co., 138 Mich. 5.

¶ 40. Defendant city, by action of its city council and board of review, arbitrarily reduced a valuation for assessment on the property of a certain corporation from $800,000 to $10,000. Plaintiff, another corporation, which was compelled thereby to pay more than its share of taxes, sues to recover back the excess. The court found the property of the said certain corporation to be $1,000,000 instead of $800,000. Held, plaintiff could not complain of this because it was thereby benefited.—Fletcher Paper Co. v. City of Alpena, 160 Mich. 462.

§ 8. Errors cured by other things.

Detailed treatment of errors cured by other things as presented by pleadings, evidence, instructions, judgment and subsequent proceedings, see post, III.

Election of right or adoption of theory not affected by alleged error, see post § 9.

¶ 41. Errors during the progress of a trial are immaterial where the verdict is the only one that could be justified by the undisputed facts and the law applicable thereto.—Robinson v. Charles Wright & Co., 94 Mich. 283.

¶ 42. Errors made in rulings which resulted in a certain determination, are not material where, as a matter of law, the determination should have been made.—People ex rel. Davis v. Campfield, 150 Mich. 675.

¶ 43. Technical errors in the admission of evidence and giving of instructions may not work a reversal where a judgment of $1,200 for the death of a nine-year-old boy is not excessive.—Sykes v. Village of Portland, 177 Mich. 290.

¶ 44. Where a verdict might have been directed for the plaintiff under one count of his declaration, errors committed on the trial, held harmless.—Board Sup'rs of Chippewa County v. Bennett, 185 Mich. 544.

¶ 45. In an action for libel where the evidence clearly supports the verdict that the alleged statements were true, errors in rejecting and admitting testimony, in remarks of counsel, and in the giving and refusing of instructions will not be considered.—Lachman v. Fuller, 125 Mich. 473.

¶ 46. Where, even if there were no defense, the finding of facts would not support a judgment for the plaintiffs, a judgment for the defendant will not be reversed for any errors in rulings as to the validity of the special defense set up.—Shelden v. Dutcher, 35 Mich. 10.

¶ 47. The question of the right of an intending purchaser who had deposited money to bind a contract for the sale of a homestead, which sale became invalidated by the refusal of the wife to join, to intervene in garnishment of such money for a debt of the husband, became immaterial where the garnishee raised the same defense as the intervenor.—H. Stern, Jr., & Bros. Co. v. Wing, 135 Mich. 331.

¶ 48. Where by consent of both parties a case is submitted upon a certain theory as to the rule for damages applicable to the case, a new trial should not be granted on the ground that the rule was not the proper one.—T. Wilce Co. v. Kelley Shingle Co., 130 Mich. 319.

¶ 49. Error in allowing recovery for improvements becomes immaterial where plaintiff in ejectment elects to take the value of the land.—Cook v. Bertram, 86 Mich. 356.

¶ 50. In an action by a minor to recover the amount paid on the purchase price for a motorcycle and counterclaim for the depreciation in the value of the motorcycle during the period of retention by the plaintiff, where it appeared that plaintiff returned the motorcycle for repairs, demanded its return and, upon refusal, demanded the money paid on the purchase price, held that assignments of error based upon the theory that the minor rescinded the contract as claimed by defendant were without merit, where the jury found that the rescission was by defendant.—Jackson v. Haverford Cycle Co., 194 Mich. 286.

§ 10. Errors invited by objector.

Invited errors in pleadings, see post § 81.
Invited errors in evidence, see post § 124.
Invited error in instructions, see post § 149.
Invited findings, see post § 152.

¶ 51. A party cannot complain when a trial judge decides a question correctly from the point of view he is encouraged to take by counsel for such party.—Adkin v. Pillen, 136 Mich. 682.

¶ 52. The supreme court, in reviewing on error after appeal the proceedings of a justice, will disregard mere informalities and technicalities, and will not disturb his judgments upon objections which he was given no opportunity to examine, or which were so blindly stated as not to attract his attention.—Wilcox v. Toledo & A. A. R. Co., 45 Mich. 280.

¶ 53. An accountant cannot complain of an amount charged against him where it appears that at most it is but a relatively small amount for a single year's taxes on one of several lots, and as accountant he failed to state the data of tax payments so that the payments could be apportioned as among different lots.—Cutcheon v. Corbitt, 99 Mich. 584.

§ 11. Erroneous rulings supportable on objections not made.

Correct rulings based on wrong reasons, see post § 12.

¶ 54. A ruling containing error cannot be sustained by raising some different objection on review, which might have brought the same result, but which had it been made below would have been met by amendment.—Douglas v. Marsh, 141 Mich. 209.

§ 12. Correct rulings based on wrong reasons.

Correct admission or exclusion of evidence on wrong ground, see post § 20.
Charging correct rule on wrong theory, see post § 51.
Directing verdict on wrong ground with correct result, see post § 54.

¶ 55. A judgment will not be reversed because a wrong reason is given for a correct ruling, instruction or conclusion.—Wilson v. Wagar, 26 Mich. 452; Wellover v. Soule, 30 Mich. 481; Kellogg v. Lovely, 46 Mich. 131; Hill v. Wright, 49 Mich. 229; Olmstead v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 50 Mich. 200; Hatzenbuhler v. Lewis, 51 Mich. 585; Dunning v. Calkins, 51 Mich. 556; Monaghan v. Agricultural Fire Ins. Co., 53 Mich. 238; Swain v. Baldwin, 54 Mich. 119.

¶ 56. When an issue determinable as a matter of law is correctly decided but a wrong reason given the case will not be reversed, but will be affirmed.—Eames v. Barber, 192 Mich. 1; Saginaw Suburban Ry. Co. v. Connelly, 146 Mich. 395.

¶ 57. This court will not reverse a correct decree because the court below erred in its reasons for granting it.—Ormsby v. Barr, 22 Mich. 80; Tillotson v. Webber, 96 Mich. 144; Board of Supervisors of Kent County v. Board of Supervisors of Mecosta County, 126 Mich. 299; Wolcott v. Tweddle, 133 Mich. 389; Samberg v. American Exp. Co., 136 Mich. 639; Grand Lodge, I. O. O. F. v. Barker, 139 Mich. 701; Van Cleve v. Radford, 149 Mich. 106.

¶ 58. It is no ground for reversal that the court below, in allowing recovery back of an illegal tax, gave a wrong reason for holding such tax invalid.—Fletcher v. Township of Alcona, 72 Mich. 18.

¶ 59. One party cannot complain of a correct ruling in striking out incompetent testimony on motion of the other party because the other party failed to give reasons for his motion.—Sterling v. City of Detroit, 134 Mich. 22.

¶ 60. The points upon which a verdict is directed should be stated by the court in its instructions to the jury, but failure to do so will not be ground for reversal where the record shows that a correct result was reached.—Bergstrom v. Staples, 82 Mich. 654.

¶ 61. Where in defending a suit on an accident policy the company relies on a particular condition which the supreme court holds to have been waived, the judgment for plaintiff should be affirmed although the facts supporting the finding are not those submitted to the jury.—Hause v. Standard Acc. Ins. Co., 172 Mich. 59.

¶ 62. Where, in an action to recover back property assigned under an illegal contract, it appears that the parties are in pari delicto, a judgment in favor of one of the parties will be affirmed, though the trial court gave a wrong reason, where the result was correct.—Benson v. Bawden, 149 Mich. 584.

¶ 63. In a suit by a shipper against a railroad to recover for demurrage charges on potatoes delayed in shipment on account of cold weather, it is not admissible for plaintiff to show by his books that he had sustained loss from freezing on other cars of potatoes which were shipped out at the time in question, and it is proper to exclude such evidence, although objections were raised to it by defendant on other than the true grounds.—L. Starks Co. v. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co., 165 Mich. 642.

¶ 64. Where, under a special count on a void contract, a party recovered under an erroneous rule of damages—no objection being made to the invalidity of the contract or to such rule—the same damages to which he would have been entitled on the ground of an implied promise to pay for services outside of his contract, the judgment was not disturbed.—Burroughs v. Morse, 48 Mich. 520.

¶ 65. Where a justice's judgment has been reversed in the circuit on certiorari there can be no reversal on error, if any objections taken to the proceedings before the justice were such as to warrant the judgment of reversal below and show a correct result though based on wrong reason.—Bigalow v. Barre, 30 Mich. 1.

¶ 66. A decree in equity will not be set aside for containing superfluous reasons for the conclusion reached, if the result is correct, and the decree does not prejudice defendants. So held where a bill to obtain the release of a security was sustained, not only on the ground that the alleged assignment of the security was never operative, but that it was void as against creditors. But in affirming the decree on the first ground it might properly be amended by striking out what related to insolvency.—Hutton v. Cuthbert, 51 Mich. 229.

§ 13. Weakness or strength of case as affecting harmfulness.

Repeated trials with same result, see post § 14.

¶ 67. Where a proper question is put, and objection to it properly overruled, and the witness answers the question and then proceeds to state matters not responsive to the question, and this volunteered testimony is at once stricken out on objection, the fault or mistake of the witness will not justify a reversal of the judgment unless the case is a very peculiar and very strong one.—Hill v. Robinson, 23 Mich. 24.

¶ 68. Remarks of counsel, which would be regarded as prejudicial error in a doubtful case, were held to be cured by the charge of the court to disregard all remarks not based on evidence and that stricken remarks and testimony are no part of the case and to be given no attention at all.—Cameron Lumber Co. v. Somerville, 129 Mich. 552.

§ 14. ——Repeated trials with same result.

¶ 69. A case which has been four times decided by a jury in plaintiff's favor should not be reversed again unless substantial error, resulting in a miscarriage of justice, has been committed.—Seligman v. Estate of Ten Eyck, 74 Mich. 525.

II. ERRORS DEEMED HARMLESS IN THEMSELVES OR NOT HARMFUL TO OBJECTOR.

A. RULINGS PRELIMINARY TO TRIAL AND ON PLEADINGS.

§ 15. In general; pleadings.

In revivor and substitution, see post § 16.
In formation of jury, see post § 17.

Harmfulness to objector, see post § 18.

Harmlessness of formal defects or errors in pleadings, see Pleading, XI.
Sufficiency of demurrer and failure to demur as waiver of errors or defects in pleadings, see Pleading, IV, XI.
Variance of pleadings and proof as harmless error, see also Pleading, X.

¶ 70. Refusal to permit complainant in a creditor's bill, to amend his complaint at the time of hearing, even if error, will not avail him where he failed to make out a prima facie case under his bill of complaint as filed or according to the proposed amendment.—Wilson v. Henry, 137 Mich. 675.

¶ 71. If a plea in abatement was bad defendant is not prejudiced by overruling the objection that it ought to have been disposed of before going into the merits.—East v. Cain, 49 Mich. 473.

¶ 72. In assumpsit for work and labor, the holding of the court that defendant's plea of payment is an admission of the amount plaintiff had earned is of no consequence, where defendant does not question the amount.—Hunkins v. Kent, 151 Mich. 482.

¶ 73. Judgment in a suit to recover taxes paid under protest will not be disturbed on appeal, on the ground of alleged defects in the description of certain parcels of property so taxed, where the decision of the court on that branch of the claim was in favor of appellant.—Diamond Match Co. v. Village of Ontonagon, 140 Mich. 183.

¶ 74. Substitution of plaintiff's administrator to prosecute ejectment rather than the heirs, is not prejudicial error, and is amendable in supreme court.—Cook v. Bertram, 86 Mich. 356.

¶ 75. An objection that an administrator is not entitled to maintain the action of ejectment and that it was error to admit him to sue after plaintiff's death and that verdict and judgment in his favor are erroneous, is technical and not ground for reversal; since the judgment would be amendable in the supreme court.—Cook v. Bertram, 86 Mich. 356.

¶ 76. Where, after death of a joint defendant, suit was discontinued as to him, and judgment was rendered against the other defendant, who, in suing out a writ of error, entitled the case as if deceased were still a party, held, that the irregularity might be disregarded.—Campau v. Brown, 48 Mich. 145.

§ 17. In formation of jury.

¶ 77. Errors assigned upon the proceedings in summoning and striking the jury in justice's court are immaterial if no jury was had on the trial.—Boatz v. Berg, 51 Mich. 8.

¶ 78. Where the parties have obtained a competent and impartial jury, a verdict will not be set aside and a new trial granted because the trial judge erred in retaining a juror who was in fact disqualified, but who was afterwards peremptorily challenged and later excused.—Pearce v. Quincy Min. Co., 149 Mich. 112.

§ 18. Harmfulness to objector.

¶ 79. Suit was brought against joint parties, but summons was served on only one, who stipulated for taking a deposition. The other afterwards appeared, and on the trial the deposition was ruled out on his objection that it was taken without his consent and without notice to him. Held, that the defendant who stipulated could not bring error on this ruling.—French v. Canada Southern R. Co., 42 Mich. 64.

B. ADMISSION, RETENTION, REJECTION OR STRIKING OF EVIDENCE.

Admission or exclusion on wrong ground, see post § 20.
Errors in order or method of proof, see post § 21.
Erroneous admission or retention, see post §§ 22-35.
Erroneous exclusion or striking out of evidence, see post §§ 36-42.
Exclusion or reception in trials by court without jury or on reference, see post §§ 43, 44.
Harmfulness to objector, see post §§ 45, 46.
Cured or invited errors in evidence, see post III, B.
Admission of evidence in proceedings to dissolve attachment, see Attachment ¶ 342.

¶ 80. Errors in the admission and rejection of evidence are immaterial where such evidence did not affect the controlling question.—Thomas v. Bush, 200 Mich. 224.

¶ 81. Where the record shows that the result could not have been different if excluded testimony had been admitted, or vice versa, no new trial will be ordered on such grounds.—Pickard v. Kleis, 56 Mich. 604.

¶ 82. To obtain a reversal, an appellant must show not only that the rules of evidence were violated, but that he was prejudiced thereby.—Belmer v. Boyne City Tanning Co., 160 Mich. 669.

§ 20. Admission or exclusion on wrong ground.

Correct ruling on wrong ground in general, see ante § 12.

¶ 83. Improper reasons for the admission of testimony do not make its admission erroneous if it was admissible at all.—Brown v. Barnes, 39 Mich. 211.

¶ 84. Where incompetent evidence has been rejected upon an objection that it was immaterial and irrelevant, the judgment will not be reversed upon this ground unless it appears that the ruling worked legal prejudice to the party offering the evidence.—Jennison v. Haire, 29 Mich. 220.

§ 21. Errors in order or method of proof.

¶ 85. Where proof of the actual consideration of a purchase is made, it is immaterial, in a case involving the bona fides of the purchase, which party had the duty of introducing it or the order in which it came in.—Stone v. Welling, 14 Mich. 514.

¶ 86. Although a defendant was entitled to have her deposition in reference to which she was being questioned read to her before being examined upon it, the failure to do so was not prejudicial where nothing was drawn out which had any tendency to injure her case.—Vosburg v. Brown, 119 Mich. 697.

¶ 86a. There was no harm, even if there was error, in treating marriage as an established fact, it having been already proved by the certificate, and then receiving proof that the parties lived together as husband and wife for the purpose of showing their harmonious relations prior to the alleged alienation.—Mead v. Randall, 111 Mich. 268.

§ 22. Erroneous admission or retention.

Incompetent, irrelevant or immaterial evidence, see post §§ 23-26.
Evidence merely cumulative in effect, see post § 27.
Evidence of facts admitted or conceded, see post § 28.
Evidence of facts put in proof by party objecting, see post § 29.
Parol or secondary evidence, see post § 30.
Conclusions and opinions of witness, see post § 31.
Hearsay evidence, see post § 32.
Evidence of record in another suit or proceedings, see post § 33.
Evidence affecting credibility or impeachment of witnesses, see post § 34.
Allowance of leading questions, see post § 35.
Admission of irregular proof of title as harmless error in ejectment by dowress who made prima facie case without it, see also Dower ¶ 131.

¶ 87. A judgment will not be reversed for the admission of testimony that could not have changed the result.—McKeown v. Harvey, 40 Mich. 226; In re Mower's Appeal, 48 Mich. 441; Rivard v. Rivard, 109 Mich. 98.

¶ 88. Reversal will not be granted on the ground of improper questions where no harmful testimony was elicited thereby.—Styles v. Village of Decatur, 131 Mich. 443.

¶ 89. The erroneous admission of evidence is harmless error where such admission in no way affects the adverse party or the result.—Edison Illuminating Co. v. Misch, 200 Mich. 114.

¶ 90. It was not prejudicial to ask an expert on cross-examination whether it would be evidence of delirium for a person in her last sickness to ask for some one to draft her will, it being common knowledge that such is not evidence of delirium but of its absence.—McHugh v. Fitzgerald, 103 Mich. 21.

¶ 91. Error in admitting testimony so limited in purpose that it could not have prejudiced plaintiff in error, is not ground for reversal.—Runnells v. Village of Pentwater, 109 Mich. 512.

¶ 92. Plaintiff in ejectment stated that he would show title from the government and that his proofs would be mostly documentary. He introduced a record which was not proper evidence, and was received against objection, and on closing sought to show by the admissions of defendant that the latter claimed under a certain person who had been shown at the outset to be the grantee of the purchaser named in the record, and the grantor of the person under whom plaintiff claimed. The court directed a verdict for the plaintiff. Held, that the credibility of the evidence of admissions was for the jury, and that the error in admitting the record therefore became material.—Newell v. McLarney, 49 Mich. 232.

¶ 93. On a claim for services of a character that might give rise to a presumption that they were rendered gratuitously, but which claimant gave evidence were rendered on a promise of payment by testator, it was not prejudicial to the executor resisting the claim to admit the will to show that there was no provision therein for payment.—Allen v. Field's Estate, 124 Mich. 466.

¶ 94. In an action to recover damages for injuries to plaintiff's automobile from a collision with defendant's automobile, the admission of plaintiff's affirmative answer to the question whether he was able to stop his car in time to avoid hitting people who would walk in front of it, held, if erroneous, not prejudicial to defendant.—Whitman v. Collin, 196 Mich. 540.

¶ 95. Where there is evidence that defendant's title to a substantial portion of timber for the cutting of which he had contracted, was defective, admission of evidence that defendant did not practically own all of the land that the timber was on is harmless error, although such evidence might lead the jury to think that defendant did not own the timber.—Mott v. Penoyar, 153 Mich. 273.

¶ 96. Where in an action for assault and battery, plaintiff brings error for the insufficiency of the verdict in his favor, prejudicial error is established by showing the improper admission of evidence tending to prove plaintiff's malice toward defendant.—Mills v. Warner, 167 Mich. 619.

¶ 97. The court, in a case of assault and battery, having properly excluded evidence of previous threats by the plaintiff, permitted the plaintiff to prove the negative—that at the time in question the plaintiff made no threats. Held to be error, and calculated to prejudice the jury, though ordinarily the admission of negative evidence might have been harmless.—Heiser v. Loomis, 47 Mich. 16.

¶ 98. On case made after judgment on a trial and findings by the court, where it appeared that evidence bearing on the turning point of the merits, and adapted to influence the findings as to a vital part, was improperly admitted against objection, judgment was reversed and a new trial ordered.—Earle v. Westchester Fire Ins. Co., 29 Mich. 414.

¶ 99. Errors in the admission of evidence before a justice will not reverse on certiorari where no injury is done.—Carver v. Detroit & Saline Plank Road Co., 126 Mich. 458.

¶ 100. In an action involving a lien for sawing logs the erroneous admission of testimony as to the customary method of removing lumber from the sawyer's wharves when no lien rights are concerned is prejudicial where the jury is instructed that it may consider "all the evidence in the case" in determining whether or not the lien was waived.—Germain v. Central Lumber Co., 116 Mich. 245.

¶ 101. Where plaintiff's testimony has been admitted to negative a report presumed in law to be false, and the burden of establishing which is upon defendant, who, however, has not introduced evidence tending to establish it, the admission of such testimony is harmless error.—Simons v. Burnham, 102 Mich. 189.

¶ 101a. In an action by a husband for alienation of the affections of his wife, the admission of evidence of plaintiff that he had heard from other people that they had seen her with defendant, when restricted to admission as affecting plaintiff's conduct towards his wife, held to be harmless error.—Hendrickson v. Harry, 200 Mich. 41.

§ 23. Incompetent, irrelevant or immaterial evidence.

In contract actions, see post § 24.
In replevin, see post § 25.
In tort actions, see post § 26.
Mortality table different from American Experience Table and showing shorter expectancy as harmless error, see also Death by Wrongful Act ¶ 91.

¶ 102. The admission of incompetent, irrelevant or immaterial evidence from which no injury could result to the plaintiff in error is no ground for reversal.—Minnesota Min. Co. v. National Min. Co., 11 Mich. 186. Affirmed 3 Wall 332, 18 L. ed. 42; Wright v. Wilson, 17 Mich. 192; Final v. Backus, 18 Mich. 218; Continental Ins. Co. v. Horton, 28 Mich. 173; Hubbardston Lumber Co. v. Covert, 35 Mich. 254; Shipman v. Seymour, 40 Mich. 274; Denton v. Smith, 61 Mich. 431; McCormick v. Olbinski, 132 Mich. 30.

¶ 103. A reversible error in the admission of testimony must relate to some material point, and be such as would naturally tend to mislead or prejudice a jury.—Dawson v. Falls City Boat Club, 125 Mich. 433.

¶ 104. Permitting a witness to answer an immaterial question on cross-examination is not reversible error, where no substantial prejudice results.—Kelley v. Paulsen, 162 Mich. 169.

¶ 105. The admission of incompetent evidence, made the basis of an instruction, cannot be regarded as harmless error.—Bettinghouse v. Bettinghouse, 156 Mich. 169.

¶ 106. The admission of irrelevant testimony is a cause for reversing the judgment on a bill of exceptions whenever its tendency would be to embarrass or mislead the jury.—Pennsylvania Min. Co. v. Brady, 14 Mich. 260.

¶ 107. Where incompetent and immaterial evidence which misled the court, and therefore probably influenced the jury's verdict, was admitted against objection, under counsel's promise to follow it up by other evidence showing its competency and materiality, which he did not do, judgment was reversed and a new trial granted.—Hudson v. Feige, 64 Mich. 142.

¶ 108. The fact that papers having no relation to any issue in the case are introduced in evidence in connection with relevant papers, is not prejudicial where those papers had no tendency to obscure the real issues in controversy, or to lead the jury to decide the issues erroneously.—Bennett v. Greenwood, 151 Mich. 274.

¶ 109. It cannot be said that the answer of a witness over objection that he advised the township authorities to "pay something" to plaintiff was taken to establish a liability of the part of the township, where it appeared that the witness was township clerk and presented the claim for the plaintiff and advised its payment at her request but not because he believed it a legitimate claim.—Smith v. Township of Sherwood, 62 Mich. 159.

¶ 110. Testimony of a plaintiff in a deposition taken upon direct and cross interrogatories, consisting of a conclusion, hearsay evidence, and testimony volunteered so as to deprive the defendant of the benefit of cross-examination, does not warrant the reversal of a judgment for the plaintiff when the error is not prejudicial, the testimony not being material.—Kaempfer v. Lindsay, 121 Mich. 425.

¶ 111. An assignment that the trial court erred in admitting certain evidence, will not be considered where the rejection of such evidence would not have changed the result.—Miller v. Tanners' Supply Co., 150 Mich. 292.

¶ 112. In an action by a wife under the Civil Damage Act, Comp. L. 1897, § 5898, How. 2nd Ed., § 5074 against a saloon keeper and his sureties to recover damages for injury to her person, property, and means of support, where it appeared that the defendant saloon keeper kept a small book with reference to his business, in which was a notation as to the time when notice had been given him by the wife not to sell intoxicating liquors to the husband, held that the cross-examination of defendant as to other entries unconnected with the case, in the course of which it appeared that defendant had been sued two other times under the act, was not prejudicial error.—Baker v. Mohl, 191 Mich. 516.

¶ 113. Admission on behalf of defendant of a letter with verses written on the reverse side from plaintiff to defendant's attorney and reflecting upon defendant was error, where the matter in the letter was outside the issue and the verses tended to prejudice plaintiff's case.—Stevens v. Beardsley, 122 Mich. 671.

¶ 114. In garnishment, the objection by claimant that plaintiff was permitted to show by incompetent testimony that certain prior garnishment suits were no longer pending, was not material where the claims of the creditor prosecuting such suits had been assigned to the claimant and the garnishee had paid him the amount in question.—Burnham v. Home Ins. Co., 119 Mich. 588.

¶ 115. Where a plaintiff in ejectment establishes a prima facie title through conveyances from parties claiming under a deed executed by the apparent owner of the land, who had been in possession for many years, and the title thus established is disputed in no way unless defendant has acquired a title by adverse possession, the erroneous admission in evidence of the record of a deed purporting to have been executed to said apparent owner is error without prejudice.—Hoban v. Cable, 102 Mich. 206.

§ 24. ——In contract actions.

¶ 116. In an action to recover damages for failure to deliver baskets, the admission of testimony that plaintiff had loaned money to defendants, although erroneous, was not harmful.—Dodge v. Reynolds, 135 Mich. 692.

¶ 117. Where in a suit by a city to recover for the services of men supplied by it to watch a water main during the construction by defendant corporation of a private tunnel, defendant's officer testifies over objection on cross-examination that one of the city's pipes was allowed by defendant to burst instead of being protected, and the city's counsel comments on such fact to the jury, no reversible error is committed where the city does not seek to recover for the bursting of said pipe.—Board Water Com'rs, City of Detroit v. Butler Bros. Const. Co., 168 Mich. 137.

¶ 118. In assumpsit for the value of work and materials required to be done by a contractor by fraud on the part of the other party and the engineer of the railroad under construction, testimony of a witness that he would not have considered it prudent to make the contract without a provision for a certain allowance, though not properly in the case, is harmless where the plaintiff prevailed and it was as likely to have favored the objecting defendants as the plaintiffs.—Bush v. Brooks, 70 Mich. 446.

¶ 119. In an action against an estate for the value of services rendered decedent held that the admission in evidence of a promissory note made by claimant in favor of decedent, which had been adjusted by the commissioners on claims, not as an off-set, but for other purposes, though erroneous, was not prejudicial error.—In re Wigent's Estate, 189 Mich. 507.

¶ 120. Where the recovery in an action for breach of covenant of warranty is limited to the amount paid for the premises with interest thereon and costs, it is not substantial error to admit evidence as to improvements made on the premises and lost by eviction.—Webb v. Holt, 113 Mich. 338.

¶ 121. Where a plaintiff sues to collect a loan, evidence admitted showing whether her husband owed any debts at the time of his death, or whether he had children or heirs, is immaterial, but its admission is harmless error.—Leonard v. Piggott, 152 Mich. 436.

¶ 122. The admission of evidence of a custom of a consignee with reference to securing from a carrier notations of shortages upon freight bills was improper, in an action by the assignee of a consignee against the receivers of a railroad company to recover for shortages, where there was no evidence tending to show that defendants knew of such custom, but its admission was not reversible error.—Oceana Canning Co. v. King, 200 Mich. 268.

¶ 123. On the contest of a claim for services claimed to have been rendered on a promise of payment by testator, where the will had been introduced to show that it contained no provision for payment, and where the executor who was residuary legatee was not a relative of the testator, it was not prejudicial to the executor to ask him on cross-examination whether he drew the will, and to refuse to strike his answer.—Allen v. Field's Estate, 124 Mich. 466.

¶ 124. In action for wages defendant is not prejudiced by the admission of testimony by plaintiff in regard to a book of account kept by him even if the book is not competent evidence of the account between the parties where no claim is made for any credit which does not appear by defendants' testimony and plaintiff's account credits defendant with a payment not charged against him on defendants' books.—Keel v. Wilson Fruit Juice Co., 176 Mich. 345.

¶ 125. In an action by a woman to recover loans made her husband, an incompetent represented by his guardian, testimony as to dealings between them before marriage, details of their domestic relations generally and as to loans made other members of his family, is prejudicial; where it was partly irrelevant and partly incompetent as between husband and wife, and tended against a fair and impartial trial.—Stevens v. Stevens, 181 Mich. 449.

¶ 126. In an action to recover for the breach of a building contract the admission of evidence of the owner's future intentions as to the completion of the building being immaterial, is not prejudicial to the defendant.—Newton v. Consolidated Construction Co., 184 Mich. 63.

¶ 127. In replevin by a chattel mortgagee against one claiming the property by virtue of a contract with the mortgagor, it was harmless error to permit the mortgagor to testify that after the contract was delivered to him he returned the contract to defendant to make a copy and that defendant never returned it.—Hood v. Olin, 68 Mich. 165.

¶ 128. In an action of replevin to recover an automobile left in defendant's garage for repairs and on which defendant claimed a lien for additional repairs necessitated by an injury to the car sustained in testing it out after certain repairs had been made, evidence as to the custom of defendant's garage as to trying out cars brought for repairs held to be harmless error.—Slattery v. Tillman, 197 Mich. 349.

§ 26. ——In tort actions.

¶ 129. That the plaintiff in an action to recover damages for a negligent injury has a family and lives with it is immaterial, but admission of such evidence is not prejudicial error.—Hewitt v. Flint & P. M. R. Co., 67 Mich. 61.

¶ 130. In an action by a manufacturer of marble monuments to recover damages caused by the blowing of soot and other substances from defendant's premises upon monuments left out of doors by plaintiff, testimony that it was the custom of marble dealers to leave their work out of doors was inadmissible, as the custom could not limit defendant's rights, but as plaintiff had a legal right to leave his monuments out of doors if he chose, the admission of such evidence did not injure defendant.—Skelton v. Fenton Electric & Power Co., 100 Mich. 87.

¶ 131. Error in admitting rules of a street railway company governing its employees in management of switching in an action for personal injuries growing out of a collision at a switch between a street car and an automobile in which plaintiff was riding held not to have been prejudicial where defendant's theory of the cause of the collision was such that the jury was not misled.—Brown v. Detroit United Railway, 179 Mich. 404.

¶ 132. In an action at common law for the death of a railroad pump operator alleged to be due to the failure of defendant to furnish deceased with a place and machinery reasonably safe in which and with which to work, held that the admission of evidence that the deceased started the machine the same way every time the witness saw him start it, and as to the manner in which it was started was not prejudicial error.—Snowden v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 194 Mich. 87.

¶ 133. After a former employee of defendant testified that, shortly after the accident, his superiors told him to find out by whose car plaintiff was hurt, and that he thought he asked all the motormen who were then at work. Defendant carrier was not prejudiced by permitting the witness further to state that he was unable to ascertain what car caused the injury it not being as claimed susceptible of an inference that the facts were concealed.—Tunnicliffe v. Bay Cities Consol. R. Co., 107 Mich. 261.

¶ 134. Admission in trover of evidence that defendant, claiming by purchase and in hostility to defendant's chattel mortgage, offered to pay the mortgage debt, where immaterial because defendant was not the debtor or in privity of obligation, is harmful, since it tends to show defendant's claim of ownership and also that plaintiff had no right to take the property under his mortgage.—Wright v. Starks, 77 Mich. 221.

¶ 135. An electric light company was sued by an employee for injuries sustained, as alleged, by reason of the improper stringing of its wires, whereby electricity was communicated from live to dead wires, and a witness was allowed to testify to a like condition of the wires some months after the accident, and to their change by him. Held, that, while the condition of the wires immediately before, at the time, and soon after the accident was alone material, the evidence was not so prejudicial as to warrant a reversal solely because of its admission.—Kraatz v. Brush Electric Light Co., 82 Mich. 457.

¶ 136. In an action against a railroad for an injury caused to plaintiff through the throwing of a mail bag from a passing train, the admission of a notice given by the defendant to the mail agent who threw the bag, to the effect that his negligence if any, occasioned the action and that he would be responsible for any verdict rendered and tendering him control of the suit, was not error, as the letter contained no admissions of liability on the part of the defendant.—Shaw v. Chicago & Grand Trunk R. Co., 123 Mich. 629.

¶ 137. In an action for damages consisting in an enforced shut-down of plaintiff's mill due to backing up water on its dam and power plant and in the loss of operating time thereby, it was harmless error to admit evidence of the amount plaintiff had invested in its plant.—Michigan Paper Co. v. Kalamazoo Valley Elec. Co., 141 Mich. 48.

¶ 138. Admission of testimony that plaintiff's intestate was a wealthy man and had money at interest, if error, was not injurious to plaintiffs, where the case must have turned on the question of contributory negligence.—Proper v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 136 Mich. 352.

¶ 139. In a suit by plaintiff vendee of land to recover damages for false representations made by defendant vendor as to the land being good for farming and capable of growing numerous crops, plaintiff was allowed to testify to the extent of the labor and effort made to produce crops and to state that enough could not be raised to support his family; that he had to go elsewhere for work; and that his family had to be assisted by others. Held, while the testimony was remote and might have been properly excluded, its reception did not constitute reversible error.—Yanelli v. Littlejohn, 172 Mich. 91.

¶ 140. In an action for personal injuries, the admission of evidence of plaintiff's poverty, if error, is harmless where admitted in rebuttal of a contention that the action was a speculative one and that counsel were to have a share in the recovery, there being nothing in the record to show that the evidence was used for any other purpose or that the jury because of it enhanced the damages awarded to plaintiff.—Arndt v. Bourke, 120 Mich. 263.

¶ 141. Incompetent testimony as to the changing of dangerous machinery some time after the action, in an action against a mill company for the death of an employee by contact with an exposed gear, and as to defendant's relation to a certain "trust," will be regarded as prejudicial error, where the verdict returned was grossly excessive.—McDonald v. Champion Iron & Steel Co., 140 Mich. 401.

§ 27. Evidence merely cumulative in effect.

Evidence of facts admitted or conceded, see post § 28.

Evidence of facts put in proof by party objecting, see post § 29.

Erroneous exclusion of evidence that is merely cumulative, see post § 38.

¶ 142. An admission of cumulative testimony upon a point conclusively proven by competent testimony, even if improper, is harmless error.—Mott v. Penoyar, 153 Mich. 273.

¶ 143. The unnecessary admission of oral evidence to the same point as written evidence already introduced is harmless error.—Final v. Backus, 18 Mich, 218.

¶ 144. It is error to admit oral testimony to explain a letter where there is no ambiguity, but where it is clear that the testimony was not explanatory but collateral, it could not have prejudiced the other party and is harmless.—Fairfield v. Hart, 139 Mich. 136.

¶ 145. Where a witness has testified on direct and cross-examination what he thought about passengers having alighted at the time of giving a signal to start, his further testimony that at that time he stated to the passenger "I thought you were all off" is not ground for reversal.—Reese v. Detroit United Ry., 159 Mich. 600.

¶ 146. It is fairly presumable that articles ordered to be "sent" will be delivered by a railroad company at their depot, in the absence of any other usage or agreement, and that the vendor will not be required to accompany them and make further delivery. Evidence of a custom of fruit tree sellers to "make delivery" at stations along railroad lines, being in conformity with the legal presumption, could have wrought no injury to the defendant in an action to recover the price of such trees sold and delivered.—Kelly v. Waters, 31 Mich. 404.

¶ 147. Where, in an action to recover damages for defendant's breach of its oral contract to furnish 100 flat cars daily to be loaded with gravel, plaintiff has proved such contract by the uncontradicted testimony of two witnesses, defendant is not injured by plaintiff's testifying that at the time the contract was agreed upon he made a memorandum of its contents, and that in said memorandum no reference was made to flat cars.—Robinson v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 103 Mich. 607.

§ 28. Evidence of facts admitted or conceded.

Evidence of facts put in evidence by party objecting, see post § 29.

¶ 148. A defendant cannot be harmed by the improper introduction of evidence that does not go beyond his own admissions.—Fowler v. Gilbert, 38 Mich. 292.

¶ 149. It seems that a party is not damnified by proofs that agree with his own admissions.—John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Moore, 34 Mich. 41.

¶ 150. Where plaintiff's employment as defendant's attorney is conclusively shown by admitted acts of defendant, the improper admission of testimony as to the fact of such employment is, as to defendant, harmless error.—McCurdy v. New York Life Ins. Co., 115 Mich. 20.

¶ 151. Where an agent's authority to execute an insurance policy is admitted by failing to deny it under oath, the admission of parol evidence of such authority though the authority actually conferred was in writing, is not prejudicial error.—Wooliver v. Boylston Ins. Co., 104 Mich. 132.

¶ 152. It is at most harmless error to permit a witness in an action for personal injuries against a street railway company to testify that he had told a third person in answer to a question that he could tell who the conductor on the street car was when the identity of the conductor is undisputed. —Leach v. Detroit Elec. Ry., 129 Mich. 286.

¶ 153. It being practically conceded, upon the trial of a suit to recover commissions on the sale of logs, that defendant, if liable at all, should pay commissions upon all the logs specified in the contract, the fact that a witness who had seen a part of the logs only was permitted to state his estimate of the quantity was harmless error requiring no reversal.—Burrell v. Gates, 112 Mich. 307.

¶ 154. In an action to recover the value of lumber sold, the admission of books to show the quantity, without evidence that they were correctly kept, was not material where an agreed estimate was prepared showing the number, pieces and sizes required, and a determination of the amount simply required a mathematical calculation. —Rathbun v. Allen, 135 Mich. 699.

¶ 155. In an action to recover the price paid for certain beans, upon the ground that plaintiff had been defrauded by defendant's representations that they were "red kidney beans," it does not constitute reversible error to admit hearsay testimony that the beans were not "red kidney beans," where defendant himself has conceded this fact.—McNitt v. Henderson, 155 Mich. 214.

¶ 155a. Where a man who agreed to furnish a team for farm use signed a note given for a horse, and afterwards, in a suit thereon, defended on the ground that he was incompetent to make the note, it was held that the question whether in order to entitle plaintiff to recover he should make it appear that the purchase was necessary for defendant's use did not arise where the horse was bought for farm use and was actually taken on the farm and used by the defendant.—Shoulters v. Allen, 51 Mich. 529.

¶ 155b. Where, in a suit upon an insurance policy issued by defendant's local agents, the execution of the policy is not denied by defendant under oath at the time of filing its plea, the authority of the agents to execute the policy, as well as the fact of its execution, is admitted, and therefore, though the authority actually conferred was in writing, defendant is not harmed by admission of parol evidence of such authority. —Wooliver v. Boylston Ins. Co., 104 Mich. 132.

§ 29. ——Evidence of facts put in proof by party objecting.

Harmfulness to objector in general, see also post §§ 45, 46.

¶ 156. A party to an action who has himself testified on cross-examination, without objection, that one of his witnesses had stolen certain articles from him when in his employ, is not prejudiced by the admission of testimony to the effect that he had accused such witness of taking other articles. —Hoffman v. Adams, 106 Mich. 111.

§ 30. Parol or secondary evidence.

Parol or secondary evidence cured by admission of other evidence, see post § 84.

Use of copy of survey instead of original to refresh memory as harmless error, see also Examination of Witnesses ¶ 107.

¶ 157. The admission of oral evidence to prove an agreement for the transfer of an interest in lands is none the less error because the agreement itself was void.—Rawdon v. Dodge, 40 Mich. 697.

¶ 158. Immaterial error, such as the incompleteness of secondary evidence of a lost survey referred to in a deed where such evidence conforms to the deed, cannot be complained of.—Heffelman v. Otsego Water Power Co., 78 Mich. 121.

¶ 159. Where the destruction of a note and mortgage is shown, and sufficient parol testimony given of their contents, an objection that the prior introduction of a certified copy of the record of the mortgage disclosed that there was but one witness to its execution becomes immaterial.—Coon v. Bouchard, 74 Mich. 486.

¶ 160. In an action on a life insurance policy where the insured had disappeared and been gone for more than seven years without having been heard from, the admission of a letter written by defendant's superior officer to the local officer of defendant in which it is stated that "if he [insured] does not turn up before seven years, I assume that the order could be held liable for his claim after that time" cannot be said to have been prejudicial because the letter could not have affected the company, and even had the letter been excluded, a different verdict could not have been expected to have been returned.—Heagany v. National Union, 143 Mich. 186.

§ 31. Conclusions and opinions of witness.

Admission of conclusions and opinions cured by other evidence, see post § 88.

¶ 161. Harmless error in questions calling for conclusions of a witness that could not have misled the jury, are not regarded.—City of Detroit v. John Brennan & Co., 93 Mich. 338.

¶ 162. Although the jury should draw all conclusions of fact, where plaintiff, who while driving in a highway was injured by an obstruction, testifies that he was driving as carefully as he could, and gives fully facts upon which his conclusion is based, it cannot be presumed that defendant was prejudiced by his being allowed to make his own conclusion.—Langworthy v. Township of Green, 88 Mich. 207.

¶ 163. In an action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff while driving with a companion in a buggy, where plaintiff was asked whether he observed any carelessness or careless act on the part of his companion while so driving, held that if such question was incompetent as calling for a conclusion, admission of the question and answer was not reversible error.—Hall v. City of Flint, 195 Mich. 638.

¶ 164. Error in allowing the defendant to testify that he had stated to the prosecuting attorney all the facts about the case that he knew is not prejudicial; where, in an action for false imprisonment and malicious prosecution, the undisputed facts of the case clearly establish probable cause for the making of the criminal complaint by defendant, regardless of the advice of the prosecuting attorney.—Lansky v. Prettyman, 140 Mich. 40.

¶ 165. In an action by a lumber company against the owner of a building to recover for materials furnished directly to the defendant and for the balance due on the contract of the contractor which defendant had agreed to pay in consideration of plaintiff not holding defendant's property, held that the admission of the answer of a witness to the question as to what defendant's general manager meant by protecting himself in his conversation with defendant and witness that it was "by a lien" was harmless error, although it constituted the conclusion of the witness.—Monroe Lumber Co. v. Bezeau, 192 Mich. 307.

¶ 166. Where in a personal injury case the accident was caused by the collision of an automobile with a carriage driven by a horse, and there was a sharp dispute on the facts and any testimony showing a reckless rate of speed was well calculated to turn the scale in favor of the plaintiff, the admission in evidence of testimony of an occupant of the carriage run down as to the rate of speed was so prejudicial as to cause a reversal where the person so testifying was not in a position to have a reasonable opportunity to judge of the speed.—Wright v. Crane, 142 Mich. 508.

¶ 166a. In an action to recover damages for fire alleged to have been communicated from defendant's traction engine, error in permitting a witness to answer that he did not know of any way in which the fire could have caught except from the engine, even if a negative conclusion which should have been drawn by the jury, is not prejudicial where there is no suggestion of any other source from which the fire might have started.—Rogers v. Fowler, 151 Mich. 485.

¶ 166b. In an action to recover damages for fire alleged to have been communicated from defendant's traction engine, and traced to the road where it had passed, the statement of a witness that there was at the time of the fire no other source suggested than that it was occasioned by the engine, is not prejudicial where no other source was suggested at the trial.—Rogers v. Fowler, 151 Mich. 485.

§ 32. Hearsay evidence.

Hearsay cured by admission of other evidence, see post § 83.

¶ 167. Even though declarations of the driver of an automobile immediately after a collision with a motorcycle as to the fault of the driver should have been excluded, in an action for damages for injury to the motorcycle, as being hearsay or mere narrative of a past event, such admission was not prejudicial error where no different result would have been reached by the jury if the testimony had been rejected.—Link v. Fahey, 200 Mich. 308.

¶ 168. Erroneous admissions of certain subsequent conversations as to the cause of a collision between an interurban car and a moving van, in an action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained in such collision, held prejudicial error when they probably controlled the result.—Hyatt v. Leonard Storage Co., 196 Mich. 337.

¶ 169. The admission, in an action by the assignee of the consignee of goods against the receivers of a railroad company to recover for a shortage in the shipment, of hearsay evidence that the teamster hauling the goods from the railroad to the warehouse of the consignee told witness that he hauled only a certain number of cases, a number considerably less than that shipped, was reversible error, where defendants introduced positive testimony to the effect that the car was delivered to the consignee upon the team track with the seals unbroken and the only testimony, aside from the statement of the teamster, was based upon the notation of shortage upon the freight bill made by an agent of defendant.—Oceana Canning Co. v. King, 200 Mich. 268.

§ 33. Evidence of record in another suit or proceeding.

Admission of former testimony where witness present testifies again to same effect, see also Evidence ¶ 1878.

¶ 170. Admitting records of other suits between same parties involving same subject-matters, is not prejudicial error.—Baumier v. Antiau, 79 Mich. 509.

¶ 171. It was not error to admit evidence of the proceedings against a fraudulent debtor in an action on the bond, since if such evidence showed that the proceedings were void it defeated the action, and if it did not it was harmless.—Butts v. Davis, 50 Mich. 310.

¶ 172. In an action for a forcible trespass plaintiff was allowed to show that defendant had been convicted of crimes of violence but afterwards released on review of the convictions. Held, that this evidence ought to have been struck out on defendant's motion; though the refusal to strike it out would not, perhaps, warrant a reversal.—Pigott v. Lilly, 55 Mich. 150.

§ 34. Evidence affecting credibility or impeachment of witnesses.

¶ 173. Where a witness on cross-examination testifies that he has not been impeached in previous suits, and denies that he once asked a man if he was going to swear against his (witness') reputation for truth and veracity, the admission of the latter testimony is harmless error where not followed by any contradiction.—Mears v. Cornwall, 73 Mich. 78.

¶ 174. Questions to witnesses as to whether they were spiritualists or mediums cannot be said to have prejudiced the cause of the contestant of a will where it does not appear but that their testimony had been taken as true, and no argument was made to the jury concerning the religious beliefs of the witnesses.—In re Morse's Estate, 146 Mich. 463.

¶ 175. In a suit for personal injury plaintiff's attorney, one Zabel, put defendant's attorney, one Smith, on the stand as a witness, and over his objection asked him whether he was acting as agent for defendant in a certain negotiation for a settlement, and as to a certain conversation between Zabel and Smith relative to an agreement between them for defendant's doctor to examine the plaintiff. Zabel then took the stand and contradicted Smith's evidence. To all this defendant objected, and for taking exception was rebuked by the court. Smith's reputation in the community was good. Held, the proceeding was not so prejudicial in tending to make Smith appear ridiculous before the jury as to call for a reversal of a verdict in favor of plaintiff.—Logan v. Agricultural Society Lenawee County, 156 Mich. 537.

§ 35. Allowance of leading questions.

Leading questions cured by admission of other evidence, see post § 89.

¶ 176. Leading questions which were unimportant are harmless error.—Michigan Paper Co. v. Kalamazoo Valley Elec. Co., 141 Mich. 48.

¶ 177. Allowance of leading questions regarding immaterial matters and working no harm to the other party is not ground for reversal.—Tredway v. Antisdel, 86 Mich. 82.

¶ 178. The objection that questions are leading will not, in general, be noticed on error.—Church v. John Davis & Co., 93 Mich. 477.

¶ 179. Error does not lie on the allowance, by a referee, of leading questions.—Campau v. Brown, 48 Mich. 145.

¶ 180. Failure of the court to rule on objections to leading questions held not prejudicial where the reception of the questions was within the court's discretion.—Nutter v. Colyer, 180 Mich. 107.

§ 36. Erroneous exclusion or striking of evidence.

Deficiency of pleadings to show cause of action, see post § 37.
Facts already proved or admitted, see post § 38.
Matters not in issue, see post § 39.
Exclusion of questions as leading or informal, see post § 40.
Questions without proper foundation, see post § 41.
Exclusion of photographs and real evidence, see post § 42.

¶ 181. The rejection of testimony that could not have affected the result of the case is not prejudicial error.—Smith v. Smith's Estate, 91 Mich. 7; Hollister v. Brown, 19 Mich. 163; People for use of National Sewer Pipe Co. v. Sharp, 133 Mich. 378; Hannula v. Cleveland-Cliffs Iron Co., 188 Mich. 543; Horowitz v. Blay, 193 Mich. 493.

¶ 182. It is not an error affecting the result to strike out evidence that is too indefinite to be considered.—Overall v. Bezeau, 37 Mich. 506.

¶ 183. A reversal will not be granted because of refusal to admit in evidence an unimportant newspaper article.—Hart v. Village of New Haven, 130 Mich. 181.

¶ 184. A new trial will be granted for the error of the court in excluding testimony clearly bearing on the case, and showing the relation of the parties thereto.—Colwell v. Adams, 51 Mich. 491.

¶ 185. It is not prejudicial error to exclude testimony which, in itself, is so vague, inconclusive and insufficient that a verdict which should be based upon it would have to be set aside.—Campau v. Lafferty, 50 Mich. 114.

¶ 186. It is not an immaterial error to exclude evidence where other evidence might have been put in if it had been received.—Ellis v. Spaulding, 39 Mich. 366.

¶ 187. Where the question is whether a debtor's transfer of a stock of goods to his brother in payment of a debt was fraudulent as to creditors, the exclusion of certain orders for the goods given, unknown to the brother, by the debtor, after agreeing to the transfer, is harmless if erroneous at all.—Partlow v. Swigart, 90 Mich. 61.

¶ 188. The exclusion of a list of property owned by a defendant, in an action for conspiracy to defraud due to an attorney inducing a client to loan money to the defendant, on inferior security, is not prejudicial to the defendant where he testifies as a witness that he had no property which was not mortgaged.—Hardy v. Trick, 121 Mich. 251.

¶ 189. Exclusion of evidence of the date of a conversation tending to show an admission of acceptance of goods sold is not prejudicial error when it fully appears such date was subsequent to the vendor's receipt of the goods.—Black v. Delbridge, Brooks & Fisher Co., 90 Mich. 56.

¶ 190. In ejectment by the original owner of land against one who acquired title by adverse possession if at all in 1891 or 1896 it is not reversible error to refuse to permit a purchaser from the latter to be cross-examined as to why certain payments were withheld in order to show good faith of defendant in claiming title in 1907.—Merritt v. Westerman, 180 Mich. 449.

¶ 191. In ejectment, where the testimony all tended to prove, and the court charged the jury that defendant was in possession of the strip in question for more than 15 years before the commencement of the suit, possible error in striking out testimony of matters of public notoriety, was not prejudicial.—Miller v. Shumway, 135 Mich. 654.

¶ 192. Where a breach of contract of employment to cut and manufacture certain timber is alleged, in that defendant did not have title to the timber for the cutting of which he contracted, rejection of deeds and bills of sale which would have established title to merely a small portion of the timber involved is harmless error, since that would not have altered plaintiff's right to regard the contract as broken, nor have affected the measure of damages.—Mott v. Penoyar, 153 Mich. 273.

¶ 193. On the trial of an action of assumpsit for work and labor, an offer made in good faith, of a memorandum of payments made to plaintiff, which was withdrawn on intimation of the court that it was inadmissible, is not error, where no prejudice results to defendant.—Hunkins v. Kent, 151 Mich. 482.

¶ 194. Where, in an action upon an insurance policy, plaintiff has testified that he paid $50 on his contract of purchase of the insured property, the exclusion of testimony on defendant's part that plaintiff in a conversation had after the fire with the adjuster and the local agents claimed he had paid $150 on the contract, does not justify reversal even if the testimony were competent, for whether plaintiff paid one sum or the other could not affect the rights of the parties under an instruction that made the case turn upon the disclosure or nondisclosure of the true condition of plaintiff's title.—Wooliver v. Boylston Ins. Co., 104 Mich. 132.

¶ 195. In an action by a contractor on a building contract, where defendant had offered much testimony tending to show the defective character of the construction, but had introduced no evidence tending to show the cost of remedying defects except the cost of fixing the basement floor, and plaintiff then introduced evidence that the building was completed in accordance with the plans and specifications, the striking out, after both parties had closed, of evidence on behalf of defendant as to cost of remedying other portions of the work, as improper rebuttal, was not reversible error.—McMillan v. Portsmouth Township School District No. 2, 200 Mich. 280.

§ 37. ——Deficiency of pleadings to show cause of action.

¶ 196. A decree of dismissal will not be reversed and the case remanded for failure to afford opportunity to take proofs where the bill fails to state a cause for relief.—Wyandotte Public Schools v. Harding, 157 Mich. 86.

§ 38. ——Facts already proved or admitted.

Erroneous admission of evidence that is merely cumulative in effect, see ante § 27.

¶ 197. It is not prejudicial error to exclude further evidence of a fact already proved and admitted by the other side.—Ward v. Carey, 200 Mich. 217.

¶ 198. The exclusion of a letter admissible only for the purpose of showing the animus of a witness is not prejudicial error where his hostility is already apparent from his testimony.—Burt v. Long, 106 Mich. 210.

¶ 199. It is not prejudicial error to exclude cumulative testimony upon a point that is not disputed.—Little v. Williams, 107 Mich. 652; Miller v. Jurczyk, 109 Mich. 637.

¶ 200. It was not reversible error for the court in an action by a materialman against a contractor and surety upon a bond to strike out the general statement of a witness that all the creditors agreed to an extension of time when the facts had been fully gone into by direct and cross-examination and the witness had then stated that some of the creditors were not present.—People v. Traves, 188 Mich. 345.

¶ 201. Where, in a suit by the owner of a marble shop to recover damages for injury to monuments left out of doors by the blowing of soot thereon from the defendant's premises, a witness for plaintiff has testified on cross-examination that stains upon marble penetrate deeper by time, the rejection of the further question as to when he would do work upon marble that was stained, —at once, or after waiting a year,—is not prejudicial to defendant, as the former testimony amounted to saying that the stains should have early treatment.—Skelton v. Fenton Electric Light & Power Co., 100 Mich. 87.

¶ 202. In the face of evidence of reliance on representations made by means of fictitious leases as to the rental of property it was harmless to exclude evidence that reliance was placed on similar representations made by the lessee, who was alleged to have been a coconspirator in the fraud.—Pinch v. Hotaling, 142 Mich. 521.

¶ 203. Where a witness examined on two trials of a cause is not present at a third trial, the exclusion of his original testimony is not prejudicial error if his testimony, given on the second trial—when he was fully examined—is admitted, and is as favorable as that given on the first trial.—Schindler v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co., 87 Mich. 400.

¶ 204. Where it is admitted that, at the time suit was brought against a township for the support of a poor person, she required more aid than the township was allowing, it is not harmful error to exclude testimony that at a previous time plaintiff told the supervisor that no more help was needed.—Eckman v. Township of Brady, 81 Mich. 70.

§ 39. ——Matters not in issue.

¶ 205. Reversible error cannot arise from excluding testimony immaterial to the issue. —Brown v. Spiegel, 167 Mich. 645.

¶ 206. The exclusion of the record of plaintiff's conviction and sentence on a warrant issued for the offense of being a disorderly person, in an action for damages for illegal arrest and imprisonment without a warrant, is harmless error where they would have been immaterial if admitted.—Larson v. Feeney, 196 Mich. 1.

¶ 207. The right to recover in ejectment depends on the plaintiff's proving title in himself; and the rejection, for insufficient authentication, of a foreign deed offered by defendant is therefore immaterial where plaintiff claims under tax-titles only.—Crooks v. Whitford, 47 Mich. 283.

¶ 208. In an action on a bond, where the defense was that the execution of the bond was conditioned upon its being signed by another party named in the bond, and that such party did not sign, the exclusion from cross-examination of one of the defendants, of statements that he knew that the other defendant who did sign as a surety was interested as a principal, was harmless, where the issue had been narrowed to the question as to whether the name of the party who did not sign appeared in the bond when it was signed by the defendants, or whether it was written in and erased after they had signed.—People for use of National Sewer Pipe Co. v. Sharp, 133 Mich. 378.

¶ 209. The exclusion of the testimony of the assignee of a land contract, in an action against the latter's agent by the representative of the estate of the assignor for breach of trust in failing to pay over money paid to such agent as the alleged agent of the assignor for the purpose of payment of a debt for a furnace placed upon the premises by the assignor, was not prejudicial error, where the controlling question was that of agency, and the assignee was not present at the time of the payment, and such testimony related to irrelevant and immaterial collateral matters.—Cutter v. Powers, 200 Mich. 375.

¶ 210. Where, in an action for goods sold, the jury found for plaintiff and, under the issues, must have found either that the goods conformed to the contract of sale or that they were accepted as conforming to the contract, defendants were not injured by exclusion of evidence tending to prove the amount of their damages, since if admitted such testimony could not have affected the result.—Brown v. Harris, 139 Mich. 372.

¶ 211. The rejection of unimportant impeaching testimony which could not have had a material bearing on the result is harmless. —Bialy v. Krause, 142 Mich. 158.

¶ 212. Exclusion of testimony of the value of goods on the first floor of a store is not prejudicial though pertinent to the value of the whole stock, where it is not contended that this would enable the witness to fix the value of the whole stock, which is the fact in issue and which was fully gone into and proved.—Schloss v. Estey, 114 Mich. 429.

¶ 213. In an action involving the boundary of a certain lot, it is not prejudicial to exclude questions relative to the length of the lot, which was not in controversy, where it appeared that witness had not surveyed to ascertain the depth of the lot.—Freda v. Olschefski, 131 Mich. 201.

§ 40. ——Exclusion of questions as leading or informal.

¶ 214. Where it does not appear that adverse rulings have prevented a party from making a full showing of the case, the supreme court may decline to disturb the judgment for errors in overruling questions on formal objections when their exclusion does not appear to have done injury.—Fraser v. Jennison, 42 Mich. 206.

¶ 215. Error will not lie on the exclusion of a question as leading, where it is apparent that counsel could have elicited the facts desired by changing the form of the question.—Burt v. Long, 106 Mich. 210.

§ 41. ——Questions without proper foundation.

¶ 216. It is not error of which the offering party can complain to exclude a question, "What, in your opinion, did that horse * * * get frightened at?", where the court intimated that the witness ought first to be asked if he knew, and where such knowledge as a foundation was not put in evidence and the entire testimony of the witness was not such as to afford such a foundation.—Foster v. East Jordan Lumber Co., 141 Mich. 316.

§ 42. ——Exclusion of photographs and real evidence.

¶ 217. In an action for personal injuries occasioned by a defective sidewalk the exclusion from the evidence of a photograph showing the condition after the accident had happened was harmless error where there was disputed evidence as to whether the conditions were the same at the time of taking the photograph and at the time of the accident, and the photograph would throw no light upon the disputed questions.—Ness v. City of Escanaba, 142 Mich. 404.

§ 43. Exclusion or reception in trials by court without jury.

On reference, see post § 43.

¶ 218. The striking out and refusal to strike out immaterial testimony, if erroneous, is not prejudicial to the case where the trial is by the court.—Reed v. Whipple, 140 Mich. 7.

§ 44. ——On reference.

Irregularities in findings or report of referee, see post § 74.

Allowance of leading questions by referee, see also ante ¶ 179.

¶ 219. In a divorce suit, the court referred the case to a master to take testimony on the single fact of the husband's being afflicted with venereal disease, and limited the evidence to that of doctors. The wife went outside of this, and called other witnesses. The court found the evidence did not support the charge of disease, but granted a divorce on other grounds. Held, the husband was not prejudiced by the proceedings before the commissioner.—Delor v. Delor, 159 Mich. 624.

§ 45. Harmfulness to objector.

Evidence of facts put in proof by party objecting, see also ante § 29.

Erroneous questions evoking answers favorable to party objecting, see post § 46.

¶ 220. Judgment will not be reversed for the admission of testimony which the verdict shows could not have injured plaintiff in error.—Thomas v. Dansby, 74 Mich. 398; Hollister v. Brown, 19 Mich. 163; Rossman v. Bock, 97 Mich. 430.

¶ 221. A plaintiff who is successful in recovering a judgment cannot avail himself of any error in the rejection of testimony.—Tuttle v. Briscoe Mfg. Co., 190 Mich. 22, 12 N. C. C. A. 909.

¶ 222. Where an improper question is put on cross-examination, and the inquiry is practically excluded by the court, no error arises if the answer given does not injuriously affect the objecting party.—Matla v. Rapid Motor Vehicle Co., 160 Mich. 639.

¶ 223. Judgment will not be reversed for the admission of immaterial or irrelevant testimony that is not of such a character as naturally to prejudice the jury against the party objecting to such admission.—McKinnon v. Gates, 102 Mich. 618.

¶ 224. The admission against objection of evidence that should have been excluded is not ground for reversal if it appears that such evidence was not prejudicial to the rights of plaintiff in error.—Montross v. Eddy, 94 Mich. 100.

¶ 225. Where indorsers sued by a bank defend on the ground of false representations made by plaintiff's president as to the solvency of the maker of the indorsed notes, the admission of a statement of the maker's financial condition after the taking of the notes is not error prejudicial to plaintiff.—Alpena Nat. Bank v. Greenbaum, 80 Mich. 1.

§ 46. ——Erroneous questions evoking answers favorable to party objecting.

Erroneous questions cured by answers, see post §§ 121-123.

¶ 226. Errors in permitting plaintiff to ask improper questions on cross-examination of defendant's witnesses are harmless where the answers given are in defendant's favor. —Johnson v. Grondin, 170 Mich. 447.

¶ 227. Where a witness is improperly permitted to testify as to the danger of running an engine over a crossing without a lookout and a light, defendant cannot assign this as reversible error where the answer given is favorable to him.—Jackson v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 161 Mich. 163.

¶ 228. An improper question in cross-examination is harmless where the answer evoked did not show a fact injurious to the complaining party.—Warren v. City Elec. Ry. Co., 141 Mich. 298.

¶ 229. The admission on cross-examination of questions not strictly admissible is not error for which a judgment will be reversed where the answers could not prejudice the party objecting.—Beebe v. Knapp, 28 Mich. 53.

C. INSTRUCTIONS AND TRIAL PRACTICE.

§ 47. Erroneous instructions in general.

Harmlessness dependent on existence or state of evidence, see post § 48.

Instructions variant from issues, see post § 49.

Errors or ambiguities in parts of charge, see post § 50.

Charging correct rule on wrong theory, see post § 51.

Instructions on subjects presenting no jury question, see post § 52.

Charges on burden of proof, weight and effect of evidence, and misstatements of evidence, see post §§ 55-57.

Instructions on damages, values and prices, see post §§ 58, 59.

¶ 230. An erroneous charge which could not affect the verdict is no ground of error. —Clark v. Moore, 3 Mich. 55; Cummings v. Stone, 13 Mich. 70; Sinclair v. Murphy, 14 Mich. 392; Sheehan v. Dalrymple, 19 Mich. 239; Seymour v. Detroit Copper & Brass Rolling Mills, 56 Mich. 117; Johnston v. Davis, 60 Mich. 56.

¶ 231. A judgment will not be set aside for an erroneous instruction to the jury if the result could not have been different under a proper instruction.—Case v. Dewey, 55 Mich. 116; Morse v. Byam, 55 Mich. 594.

¶ 232. A judgment will not be reversed for an error in the charge that could not have misled the jury.—Continental Ins. Co. v. Horton, 28 Mich. 173.

¶ 233. Where erroneous rulings in giving or refusing instructions to a jury work no prejudice to legal rights, they are immaterial.—McDonough v. Sutton, 35 Mich. 1.

¶ 234. Where a question of fact is properly submitted, and the finding thereon necessarily determines the result, an error of the judge in the theory on which he submits the case may not be such error as to require reversal.—Finan v. Babcock, 58 Mich. 301.

¶ 235. Reversal must follow where the whole charge to the jury was vague and misleading, so that there was not a fair trial.—Loring v. Frue, 104 U. S. 223, 26 L. ed. 713.

¶ 236. In a contested election case an instruction to the jury that if illegal votes were received in a district and the evidence did not show in whose favor they were cast, they being, however, as numerous as the majority received in that district, then the election in such district should be thrown out and disregarded, was held harmless even if erroneous, as the result would have been the same if the illegal votes had been deducted and apportioned.—Attorney-General v. May, 99 Mich. 538.

¶ 237. To charge that an indorsee for collection cannot maintain an action unless he owns the note sued on is not prejudicial error in a case where such indorsee cannot maintain suit because his indorser could not maintain it.—Wintermute v. Torrent, 83 Mich. 555.

¶ 238. That the court by its charge permitted the jury to apply a rule concerning the degree of care required of the defendant that was unwarranted is not reversible error where it does not appear that the result would have been different had the court given a more modified or restricted rule as to the degree of care.—Bishop v. Baldwin, 147 Mich. 22.

¶ 239. An instruction is not objectionable as placing upon plaintiff in an action to recover for injuries occasioned by a collision between vehicles, the duty of maintaining an outlook to discover approaching vehicles, where the jury could not have been misled under the theory of the case as it was tried. —Buxton v. Ainsworth, 153 Mich. 315.

§ 48. Harmlessness dependent on existence or state of evidence.

¶ 240. Defendant sued for negligence is not harmed by an instruction on a question of contributory negligence of which there is no evidence.—Weiden v. Brush Electric Light Co., 73 Mich. 268.

¶ 241. A charge that it would be left to the jury to determine whether they would believe an uncontradicted witness, is harmless error where there was no witness whose testimony wholly uncontradicted.—Rhode v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 132 Mich. 503.

¶ 242. It is not prejudicial error to charge the jury that the burden of proving a point is on the defendant where the only evidence on the question supports the plaintiff's contention.—Michigan Sanitarium & Benevolent Ass'n v. City of Battle Creek, 138 Mich. 676.

¶ 243. A trustee in bankruptcy sued to recover a preferential payment made to defendants by the debtor before his bankruptcy. The evidence clearly indicated that the defendants at the time of the payment to them knew the debtor was insolvent. Held, that in view of this, the error of the court in instructing that the defendants were liable if reasonable men would have been put on inquiry as to debtor's solvency, was not prejudicial.—Matthews v. Joannes Bros. Co., 156 Mich. 663.

¶ 244. Error in an instruction in conclusively imputing to principals knowledge obtained by their agent, is not neutralized by evidence from which it may be inferred that the principal regarded such knowledge as immaterial.—Weaver v. Richards, 150 Mich. 20.

¶ 245. Where the state of the evidence is such that there is no question for the jury as to a given matter, a charge and a refusal to charge in regard to such matter are not erroneous, because they work no injury to the party excepting.—Ames v. Quimby, 106 U. S. 342, 27 L. ed. 100, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 116.

¶ 246. Where, in an action against a village for injuries caused by the defective condition of a bridge, there was testimony which tended to show that such condition was due to a railroad company's negligence, an instruction that defendant, if damages were awarded against it, "might have a remedy" against the company, was held not prejudicial.—Williams v. Village of Petoskey, 108 Mich. 260.

¶ 247. A charge that the principal ratified the act of its agent in licensing the cutting of certain standing timber, in replevin, even though there was no evidence justifying such charge, was not prejudicial, where the authority of such agent was established by undisputed testimony.—Antrim Iron Co. v. Anderson, 140 Mich. 702.

¶ 248. Whether or not a charge on the necessity of ascertaining an agent's authority was correct need not be determined, if it appears that the person had actual knowledge that the agent lacked authority to make a lease and referred it to the directors of the corporate principal for approval.—Berlin v. Belle Isle Scenic Ry. Co., 141 Mich. 646.

¶ 249. In an action on a contract whereby defendant was bound to manufacture logs furnished by plaintiff into lumber, a charge that it was his duty to do so in a workmanlike and economical way only states what the law requires in the case of any contract, and cannot prejudice defendant, especially if no question is raised as to how it was done.—Hopkins v. Sanford, 41 Mich. 243.

¶ 250. In an action for slander, a charge that if defendant used the words alleged the verdict should be for plaintiff, followed by instructions that unless, under the circumstances, the words charged plaintiff with a crime and were so understood by the hearers, then defendant is not guilty, is not reversible error where the court could properly have charged that the words were actionable per se.—Hinchman v. Knight, 132 Mich. 532.

¶ 251. If, on the whole case, it is plain the evidence had no tendency to make out a cause of action, a judgment against the plaintiff will not be disturbed for any error in the charge to the jury.—McDonough v. Sutton, 35 Mich. 1.

¶ 252. In an action to recover damages against a township for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff while driving over a public road, an instruction that a barrier across a road closed from travel is not a positive requirement but that other notice of such closing may be given, as by the situation of the road, held not prejudicial to plaintiff where plaintiff claimed other notice.—Long v. Township of Weare, 195 Mich. 706.

§ 49. Instructions variant from issues.

¶ 253. An instruction that ice on streets coming from natural causes would not create a liability against defendant city, in an action for injuries caused by a defective street, and that if such ice was the cause of the accident, the plaintiff could not recover, was not prejudicial to the city, where the plaintiff did not claim either in the declaration or at the trial that the liability of the city arose because of the unnatural accumulation of ice, but it was the claim of the city that the streets were generally covered with ice, that the horse of the person injured was smooth-shod, and because of these the accident occurred.—Warn v. City of Flint, 140 Mich. 573.

§ 50. Error or ambiguities in parts of charge.

[Note. The doctrine that the charge will be construed as a whole and will be taken to have carried to the jury a meaning as an entirety, and its corollary that detached parts of the charge cannot be singled out and assigned as error because standing alone they might have been erroneous, belong to the law of Instructions. See that topic. There are decisions to the effect that an "error" in the charge is harmless where the other portions of the charge overcome or neutralize it. Such decisions have been treated as exemplifying the general law of Instructions and they are placed in that topic notwithstanding they may sound in terms of harmless error.]

Errors in the charge cured by other actions, rulings or findings, see post III, C.
Construction of the charge as a whole, see Instructions, II, C.
Construction as to conflicts and ambiguities in charge, see Instructions, II, C.

¶ 254. Judgment will not be reversed because the charge was ambiguous if it is apparent that the jury could not have been misled.—Sheehan v. Dalrymple, 19 Mich. 239.

¶ 255. Inconsistencies in the charge of the court are not ground to reverse, where it is apparent that the jury were not misled thereby.—Maier v. Massachusetts Ben. Ass'n, 107 Mich. 687.

¶ 256. The giving of a nonprejudicial conflicting charge is not reversible error.—Kennedy v. Ford, 183 Mich. 481.

¶ 257. Where the locus in quo is well understood as being a strip of land of certain dimensions between the two lots, the fact that the charge to the jury designates it as part of lot six instead of lot five, as claimed in the declaration, is not injurious to plaintiff.—Beecher v. Ferris, 117 Mich. 108.

¶ 258. In a suit by a claimant against an estate for services rendered the deceased, held, that an instruction by the court assuming the period of service in question to be ten years, when in fact it was only eight years and two months, is not reversible error where the defendant, in his requests and otherwise, treated the period as ten years. —In re Johnson's Estate, 100 Mich. 585; Beecham v. Wetherbee, Id.

¶ 259. An instruction that an executor was entitled to $1.50 per day when in fact the statute fixes the rate at $1.00 per day is not prejudicial to the executor, though it was for the jury to find how many days he had spent in the business of the estate, since it cannot be assumed that the jury would have found a greater number of days had the error not occurred.—In re Gallagher's Estate, 120 Mich. 365.

¶ 260. Under a charge directing a verdict in favor of a defendant, it becomes of no importance what special expressions may have fallen from the court, as the only question is whether there was anything to go to the jury.—Karp v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 76 Mich. 679.

§ 51. Charging correct rule but on wrong theory.

Correct rulings based on wrong reasons, see ante § 12.

¶ 261. In a suit against a defendant broker for failure to deliver stocks which he contracted to sell to plaintiff, the trial court instructed the jury on the question of damages on the erroneous theory that plaintiff was entitled to recover for a conversion of the stocks. The rule of damages laid down, however, was the same as if he had instructed on the proper theory of a recovery for breach of contract. Held, the error was not reversible.—Goodspeed v. Smith, 162 Mich. 641.

§ 52. Instructions on subjects presenting no jury question.

Submitting theory or count, see also post § 63.

¶ 262. Contradictory instructions in a suit on an indemnity bond held harmless error where the subject upon which they were given presented no question of fact for the jury.—Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. Maile, 177 Mich. 231.

¶ 263. A trial court in instructing a jury in a cause determinable wholly on questions of law, rather than fact, may err, but the error is not a prejudicial one.—Louden v. East Saginaw, 41 Mich. 18.

§ 53. Directing verdict.

On wrong ground with correct result, see post § 54.

¶ 264. A ruling directing a verdict for defendant will be sustained, irrespective of the reasons for it, if plaintiff made no case on his own showing.—Williams v. City of Grand Rapids, 59 Mich. 51.

¶ 265. A judgment for defendant, based upon the direction of a verdict for erroneous reasons, will not be sustained on the ground that the record shows the action to have been barred by the statute of limitations, where the circumstances of the trial indicate that plaintiff was prevented from making proofs tending to remove the bar.—Garn v. Lockard, 108 Mich. 196.

¶ 266. A verdict was improperly directed for the defendant by the trial court. The case was governed by foreign law, which was not proved in the lower court. Held, the verdict would not be allowed to stand, even though by the foreign law defendant was not liable.—Carnell v. Halpin, 159 Mich. 42.

¶ 267. Even though a breach of warranty was not declared on the defendant in an action in assumpsit on the common counts is not prejudiced by the action of the court in directing a verdict for $150.00 for one of a team of horses traded by defendant to plaintiff, although $200.00 of the agreed price of $300.00 for such team was paid by trading another team therefor, where the testimony of plaintiff that the defendant's horses were each sold at the same valuation, is uncontradicted and one of the horses was returned as unsatisfactory at defendant's request and replaced by another, which, becoming ill, was returned likewise at defendant's request and died while in defendant's possession, defendant refusing to pay plaintiff the value of the horse or to replace it with another.—Taylor v. Belton, 188 Mich. 302.

§ 54. ——On wrong ground with correct result.

See also ante ¶ 264.

General principle as to correct rulings based on wrong reasons, see ante § 12.

¶ 268. Where the result attained by the direction of a verdict is legally right, erroneous reasons given by the court for its action cannot be prejudicial.—Wilson v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 94 Mich. 20; Toomey v. Eureka Iron & Steel Works, 89 Mich. 249; Lentz v. Teutonia Fire Ins. Co., 96 Mich. 445; Illinois Roofing & Supply Co. v. Aerial Advertising Co., 142 Mich. 698.

¶ 269. Where the court below, sustaining an unfounded objection to plaintiff's recovery, directed a verdict for defendant, judgment will not be reversed if any other of defendant's objections was good.—Peet v. Knights of Maccabees, 83 Mich. 92.

¶ 270. Where a verdict should have been directed for defendant as requested on the ground of variance, and the declaration could not have been amended so as to set up the cause of action proved, because of the statute of limitations, a judgment for the defendant will not be reversed despite errors in course of the trial.—Van Cleve v. Radford, 149 Mich. 106.

¶ 271. On an appeal from a directed verdict based on one ground, the parties did not, by stipulating that all the questions included in the motion of defendant might be considered in the supreme court, impose a duty upon this court to examine all the points presented in the motion to direct a verdict; if the reason given by the trial court was insufficient, but the judge reached a correct conclusion, the judgment will be affirmed.—Crawley v. Studebaker Corporation, 183 Mich. 462.

¶ 272. Directing a verdict on a wrong ground is not cause for reversal, where the result was correct.—Kelley v. Davison, 185 Mich. 123.

§ 55. Charges on burden of proof and presumptions.

¶ 273. An instruction in ejectment that the defendants must sustain their claim of adverse possession of their lessor by a "fair" preponderance of the evidence, held harmless error, where the jury was not misled.—Tyler v. Wright, 188 Mich. 561.

¶ 273a. An instruction that plaintiff has to sustain the burden of proof, which does not necessarily mean by the number of witnesses, but that if his testimony has satisfied the jury of the very right of the case, he has done so, is not prejudicial to defendant.—Bennett v. Greenwood, 151 Mich. 274.

§ 56. Charging on weight, credibility or effect of evidence.

¶ 274. In assumpsit for services rendered and moneys expended an instruction that the preponderance of the evidence means that the evidence must be of a little better quality than that opposed to it is held not prejudicial error under the circumstances.—Stoner v. Riggs, 128 Mich. 129.

¶ 275. That the court, in charging the jury, said that defendant's claim was sustained to some extent by the testimony of two witnesses, was not regarded as ground for reversal where the remark could not have prejudiced the jury.—Cartier v. Douville, 98 Mich. 22.

¶ 276. A judgment cannot be reversed upon an instruction to the jury which in itself was correct, whether the reason for it did or did not involve an opinion on facts. —Hatzenbuhler v. Lewis, 51 Mich. 585.

¶ 277. Where in a personal injury action the testimony of the witnesses for the respective parties was in irreconcilable conflict, and the sole issue before the jury involved the credibility of the witnesses, a charge to the effect that there was no room for an honest mistake on the part of the witnesses, and thus intimating that somebody was stating an untruth, while perhaps subject to criticism, was not prejudicial error.—Harrison v. Green, 157 Mich. 690.

§ 57. Assumptions of fact and misstatements of evidence.

¶ 278. Error in giving a contradictory and confusing instruction in regard to defendant's knowledge of, and his neglect to ascertain the falsity of, an article complained of as libellous, is not ground for reversal, where the undisputed testimony shows that the article was published after notice of its falsity.—Hatt v. Evening News Ass'n, 94 Mich. 114, on rehearing 94 Mich. 119.

¶ 279. Where the fact of the injury complained of is established by the undisputed evidence, it is not reversible error for the court to state to the jury in the charge "there is no doubt plaintiff has been severely injured."—Corcoran v. City of Detroit, 95 Mich. 84.

¶ 280. Error in charging that there was testimony of a value of $700 of the property lost, which the proofs of loss showed was worth about $400, the policy being for $400, cannot be held harmless where there was no testimony in the case establishing a value of $400 or more.—Walker v. Western Underwriters' Ass'n, 142 Mich. 162.

¶ 281. In an action of assumpsit where plaintiff claimed that it offered to deliver barrels which had been ordered by defendant, and received instructions from defendant to store them and after having done so defendant's general manager some time later looked them over and indicated his approval and acceptance, an inadvertence by the court in charging the jury and assuming that he accepted the barrels before they were stored was not so prejudicial and erroneous as to require a judgment in favor of the plaintiff to be reversed.—T. W. Snook & Son v. Mt. Clemens Sugar Co., 180 Mich. 691.

¶ 282. The fact that the court predicated a portion of its charge upon the misstatement of the evidence held not prejudicial where the evidence was so short and clear that it was apparent that the jury could not have been thereby misled.—T. W. Snook & Son v. Mt. Clemens Sugar Co., 180 Mich. 691.

¶ 283. Plaintiff was thrown while getting on a street car, and his hand skinned. Later the hand swelled and had to be amputated. A physician testified that the swelling was due to a blow on the hand, and not to being poisoned by Canadian thistles. The court in instructing the jury told them that this physician ascribed the loss of the hand to the accident. Held, that this instruction, though inaccurate, was not, taken in the light of all the evidence, prejudicial error.—Hull v. Detroit United Ry., 158 Mich. 682.

¶ 284. In an action by an agent, who had entered into a contract for the sale of patterns with defendant, to recover an alleged balance for patterns returned, an instruction that defendant's proposal to return the goods and plaintiff's acceptance of them by actually shipping them as directed, constituted a new agreement under which defendant was authorized to appraise the goods and determine their value, but required to act in good faith and allow plaintiff "such credits as the goods were reasonably worth, taking into consideration the kind, nature and character of the same," held not prejudicially erroneous or misleading, although the terms of the correspondence may have been incomplete as an executory contract, as, if defendant accepted and retained the goods plaintiff was entitled to their reasonable worth.—Hines v. Pictorial Review Co., 192 Mich. 256.

§ 58. Instructions on damages, values and prices.

Improper allusions to malice or matters of aggravation, see post § 59.

¶ 285. In an action for the death of a husband, in which proof that deceased was a wealthy man was admitted, the giving of an instruction which limited the widow's damages to the worth of such contributions as she would have received out of her husband's personal earnings, but which did not direct a verdict of not guilty if they found that she received no support from such earnings, was not injurious to plaintiff, where the case must have turned on the question of contributory negligence.—Proper v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 136 Mich. 352.

¶ 286. Plaintiffs sued defendant in case for fraud in making false representations as to land sold by defendant to plaintiffs. The court instructed that the measure of damages was the amount of payments made on the land and a fair compensation for labor and expenditures in improving the land, less the actual value of the land. Held, that this erroneous instruction constituted reversible error despite the fact that plaintiffs under the proper instruction might have recovered much larger damages.—Painter v. Lebanon Land Co., 164 Mich. 260.

¶ 287. A charge leaving the jury to base its verdict on value of sawing and not on the contract price, the judge having first charged that some recovery could be had under the contract despite a plea of limitations, works no error, where there was testimony to warrant finding that the contract was treated as an entirety through its several years during which payments were made, and the appellant's requests conceded that, if the sawing was done on logs delivered under the contract and in a certain year, it was not barred; and where there was no evidence of value but the contract price. In that situation the result would be the same.—Burch v. Woodworth, 68 Mich. 519.

§ 59. ——Improper allusions to malice or matters of aggravation.

¶ 288. Where the damages by trespass are expressly limited to the actual loss, a reference in the charge to malice is not prejudicial.—Keables v. Christie, 47 Mich. 594.

¶ 289. Where punitory damages are not allowable under the charge of the court, an instruction characterizing the alleged trespass as "wilful and negligent" is not prejudicial.—Moret v. Mason, 106 Mich. 340.

§ 60. Denials and modifications of requests.

Requests for special findings, see post § 61.
Modification and refusal of requests in general, see Instructions, III.

¶ 290. A request for an instruction that the jury is not to be influenced by sympathy for either party should be granted in most cases, but a judgment will not be reversed for failure so to instruct in a case, where it is clear that sympathy has not inspired the verdict.—Doyle v. Dobson, 74 Mich. 562.

¶ 291. Refusal to give an instruction that an offer of compromise by defendants sued for negligence cannot be regarded as error without injury even though defendants' negligence is indisputable, where plaintiff's contributory negligence is also involved in the question of liability.—Pelton v. Schmidt, 104 Mich. 345.

¶ 292. Where the only witness, who could have given any testimony as to want of notice to an alleged bona fide purchaser on which the burden was to prove that fact, had no recollection of the facts, there was no evidence thereon to go to the jury; and consequently error, if any, in not charging fully enough on that point will not be considered.—Whitaker Iron Co. v. Preston National Bank, 101 Mich. 146.

¶ 293. In an action for criminal conversation, the refusal of an instruction as to the weight to be given to evidence of the defendant's previous good character is not error where the evidence was wrongfully admitted.—Knickerbocker v. Worthing, 138 Mich. 224.

¶ 294. It is not reversible error for the trial court to modify and change defendant's requests to charge and then give them as though they had been proffered by the defendant, where the instructions as given correctly state the law.—Anthony v. Cass County Home Tel. Co., 165 Mich. 388.

¶ 295. Where defendant vendee of a printing press seeks to defend against a suit for the recovery of the purchase price on the ground that the sale of same was induced by fraudulent representations of plaintiff vendor, and the court in submitting said defense couples it with defendant's other defense that the sale was made conditional upon the press proving satisfactory, no reversible error is committed in failing to present, as requested by defendant, said defenses separately in the charge to the jury, where it appears from defendant's testimony that he did not rely upon the representations made by plaintiff.—Paddock v. Hatch, 169 Mich. 95.

¶ 296. In an action for slander for speaking words charging plaintiff with having burned defendant's house, held that it was not reversible error to refuse a request to charge the jury that they should not consider the intent of defendant in making a complaint in a criminal prosecution for arson.—Rabior v. Kelley, 194 Mich. 107.

¶ 296a. In an action on an insurance policy, error in refusing to instruct that proofs of loss admitted in evidence were not competent to prove ownership or the fact or amount of loss, was not prejudicial, where such facts were otherwise properly and sufficiently established.—Kennedy v. London & L. Fire Ins. Co., 157 Mich. 411.

§ 61. ——Requests for special findings.

¶ 297. Where by the facts as agreed upon by the parties the defendant was entitled to have the law found in his favor, the court's omission to respond to propositions of law submitted for special findings under Circuit Court Rule 87 did not prejudice the plaintiff.—Macomber v. Saxton, 28 Mich. 516.

¶ 298. The refusal of the court in an action against a city, to submit a special question as to whether on the day stated the sidewalk in question was unsafe or unfit for travel, was reversible error; and a substituted question as to whether the city up to and including such date used ordinary care to keep the sidewalk in reasonable repair for reasonably safe and convenient public travel, did not cure the error.—Beaudin v. Bay City, 136 Mich. 333.

¶ 299. The refusal to submit special questions to a jury not controlling of the general verdict, is not reversible error.—Moss v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 182 Mich. 40.

¶ 300. It is not error to refuse a request to find facts where if the facts had been found as requested, the disposition of the case could not have been different.—Kennedy v. Stimming, 192 Mich. 600.

§ 62. Omissions to charge or incomplete charge.

¶ 301. Where the instructions confined the jury to the consideration of certain charges of negligence, of which there was evidence, error in not specifically instructing the jury to disregard other allegations of negligence as to which there was no evidence, is not prejudicial.—Clemens v. Gem Fibre Package Co., 153 Mich. 495.

§ 63. Submitting or withdrawing theory or count.

Instructions on subjects presenting no jury question, see ante § 52.
Withdrawing question or case from jury as cure for erroneous admission of evidence, see post § 98.

¶ 302. A refusal to submit the facts to the jury upon one branch of plaintiff's claim because of defects in the declaration is not an error of which the plaintiff can complain if the record shows a fatal gap in his evidence.—Houghton County Sup'rs v. Rees, 84 Mich. 481.

¶ 303. Where the declaration upon a note contains three counts, a refusal by the court to withdraw, because of a variance, all consideration of the case under one count is not prejudicial error, where the other two are sufficient to allow a recovery.—Roberts v. Hawkins, 70 Mich. 566.

§ 64. Improper comments of court during course of trial.

Comments incident to requests and rulings, see post § 65.

¶ 304. The improper language of a judge in the course of a trial is not ground for reversal where not delivered in presence of the jury.—Van Driel v. Stevens, 200 Mich. 291.

¶ 305. Where an attaching officer sued in trover by a mortgagee attacks the mortgage as fraudulent, and where the evidence shows without conflict that the mortgage was properly filed, it is not error prejudicial to defendant for the court to comment upon entries in the city clerk's record books which are not in evidence.—Keating v. Retan, 80 Mich. 324.

¶ 306. In a trespass case against a brother-in-law who had entered the plaintiff's house contrary to the plaintiff's wish and, as the defendant claimed, aided the plaintiff's wife to carry off the furniture, in which case the only question left to the jury is the assessment of damages, a sarcastic remark of the court as to the conduct of defendant in kicking over a table and breaking the dishes "to save the property, I suppose, for his sister," is not so prejudicial as to justify a reversal.—Burns v. Kirpatrick, 91 Mich. 364.

¶ 306a. In a suit to recover for support and care of defendant's wife, the court in the course of the trial intimated that plaintiff had proved her theory of the case and defendant had failed to establish his theory; stated that defendant had turned the wife over to plaintiff to be taken care of, and was bound to pay for such care; and intimated that defendant had neglected to provide for her. Held, such remarks constituted prejudicial error as indicating the attitude and personal opinion of the court.—Toms v. Vreeland, 167 Mich. 341.

¶ 306b. Plaintiff having rested, defendant argued that plaintiff's testimony did not make out a case, and the court, in necessarily passing upon the question, stated the impression made upon his mind by the proofs. Held, that such statement was not objectionable or prejudicial to the defendant, as the case afterwards went to the jury.—Wiltse v. State Road Bridge Co., 63 Mich. 639.

§ 65. Comments incident to requests and rulings.

¶ 307. A remark by a trial judge, after giving a requested instruction, to the effect that he was unable to see how the request was applicable but if the jury could see any application thereof to the issues they could apply it, held not reversible error.—Detroit United Ry. v. City of Pontiac, 193 Mich. 466.

¶ 308. It was harmless error for the court to say that some of the defendant's requests for instructions he gave only because the attorney for the plaintiff requested him to do so for fear he had made a mistake in declining, where the defendant was not entitled to have them given in the first place.—O'Dea v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 142 Mich. 265.

¶ 309. For the trial court in giving a requested instruction, to preface it with the statement that "I am requested to charge you" and in concluding to modify or qualify the instruction, held not error.—Newton v. Consolidated Construction Co., 184 Mich. 63.

¶ 310. In an action by a husband to recover damages suffered because of an injury to his wife from the collision of plaintiff's buggy with defendant's automobile, including charges for medical services, the action of the court in stating to counsel for defendant, who improperly asked the attending physician on cross-examination whether he did not expect to get his bill out of the litigation, that such question was improper, insulting, and that counsel should be reprimanded for it, and in telling counsel to pay heed to what the court had said, upon his taking exception to the language of the court, held not prejudicial error, where the verdict was not a miscarriage of justice.—Jolman v. Alberts, 192 Mich. 365.

§ 66. Misconduct of counsel.

Misleading or irrelevant argument, see post § 67.
Improper criticism of opposing party, counsel or witness, see post § 68.
Misstatements of facts or law, see post § 69.
Manner, course and conduct of trial in general, see Trial, II.
Desistance from argument on objection followed by avowal of facts stated, see also Argument of Counsel ¶ 118.

¶ 311. Improper remarks of counsel on the argument below are not necessarily ground for reversal unless clearly prejudicial.—Donovan v. Richmond, 61 Mich. 467.

¶ 312. Improper argument of counsel will not reverse where it could not have affected the verdict.—Holcomb v. Alpena Power Co., 175 Mich. 500.

¶ 313. Improper matter in opening statement by counsel held not to have been ground for reversal where not prejudicial.—Ford v. Savage, 111 Mich. 144.

¶ 314. Where counsel use argument which is clearly prejudicial and is unchecked by the court, and court immediately makes a charge closing with a direction "to decide this matter as it affects you" and a large verdict is returned, the error is prejudicial.—Glassbrook v. Lansing Wheelbarrow Co., 177 Mich. 29.

¶ 315. The fact that justice was substantially done in a judgment rendered will not preclude reversal for errors due to the appellee's endeavor to cloud the issue by injecting into the case questions which do not belong there.—Laird v. Laird's Estate, 127 Mich. 24.

¶ 316. Where the court is satisfied that the same verdict would have been rendered in any event, it will not reverse a judgment because a remark of counsel in support of his right to ask a question was improper.—Daniels v. Weeks, 90 Mich. 190.

¶ 317. An improper argument of the plaintiff's counsel to the jury pertaining to the act of the assignor of the cause of action in making the assignment, held not prejudicial to the defendant, where the fact was undisputed and the result was not affected.—Case v. Rudolph Wurlitzer Co., 186 Mich. 81.

§ 67. ——Misleading or irrelevant argument.

¶ 318. Argument of plaintiff's counsel that demurrer after demurrer had been interposed, and difficulty experienced because of appeals, while improper, was not prejudicial, where the testimony led to but one conclusion, the one reached by the jury.—Clement v. Crosby & Co., 157 Mich. 643.

¶ 319. In an action for attorney fees rendered in a garnishment suit the remark of plaintiff's counsel in his argument to the jury that he "could point to some other cases where the defendant had captured men's logs and never paid for them," is improper, and should have been rebuked by the court but is not error requiring reversal.—DeLong v. Muskegon Booming Co., 88 Mich. 282.

¶ 320. In an action for personal injuries against a street railway company where the conductor who was a witness for the plaintiff testified that he was discharged for incompetence and defendant's witness testified that he was discharged for failure to ring up fares, it is not prejudicial error for counsel in his argument to refer to the neglect of the company of its duty to thousands of its citizens in employing an incompetent conductor as this tends toward impeaching the defendant's witness rather than toward the introduction of a new issue into the case.—Leach v. Detroit Elec. Ry., 129 Mich. 286.

¶ 321. Reference by the plaintiff's counsel in his opening statement to the jury, to the fact that his client was a woman while the defendant was a nonresident corporation, held not prejudicial to the defendant, where it did not influence the jury in the outcome.—Case v. Rudolph Wurlitzer Co., 186 Mich. 81.

§ 68. ——Improper criticism of opposing party, counsel or witness.

¶ 322. Remarks of counsel do not constitute prejudicial error where merely discourteous to opposing counsel and of a personal nature.—Goodwin v. Union Ins. Co. of Philadelphia, 163 Mich. 41.

¶ 323. Erroneously permitting counsel to comment upon the fact that certain witnesses who had testified on a former trial for the opposing party were not called, although at the place of trial and under no disability does not warrant reversal where it would have been easy for plaintiff in error to show, if such was the fact, that such witnesses were unimportant and immaterial.—Cook v. Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co., 86 Mich. 554.

¶ 324. A remark by a plaintiff's counsel imputing to opposing counsel a statement, which is denied and resented, as to the defense's theory, is improper, but if not of a tendency to prejudice the jury, and not, as having that tendency, called to the court's attention with the request that the jury be warned against it, is nonprejudicial error.—Kirchner v. Detroit City R., 91 Mich. 400.

§ 69. ——Misstatements of facts or law.

¶ 325. Where a will is contested on the ground of undue influence and mental incompetency the verdict against it should not be set aside merely because counsel for the contestants in his opening to the jury makes statements in regard to the testatrix mental condition which are not fully borne out by the proofs.—Prentis v. Bates, 93 Mich. 234, on rehearing 88 Mich. 567.

¶ 326. A judgment, on verdict directed by the court, against members of an unincorporated church society on obligations incurred therefor, will not be reversed because counsel, in his opening statement, relied on the liability of defendants as agents of a principal having no legal existence, although this ground was not conclusively established, where the declaration was on the common counts, and defendants were clearly liable by reason of their relationship to the society itself; the latter ground of liability being equally within the declaration.—Clark v. O'Rourke, 111 Mich. 108.

¶ 327. Where, in a personal injury suit, counsel for plaintiff indulges, in his argument to the jury, in arguments inflammatory and contrary to the rule of law laid down by the trial judge during the course of the argument upon objection being made by defendant, but neither at that point nor in the charge is the jury told to consider only the law stated by the court, the judgment in favor of plaintiff will be reversed where the verdict seems on the whole to be against the weight of the evidence.—Keeley v. City Electric Ry. Co., 168 Mich. 79.

Submission of improper questions to jury, see post § 71.

¶ 328. A verdict will not be disturbed for an error in a charge which operated to the advantage of the plaintiff in error.—Comstock v. Smith, 20 Mich. 338.

¶ 329. Plaintiff in error cannot complain of an instruction that is erroneous only because too favorable to himself.—Langworthy v. Township of Green, 95 Mich. 93.

¶ 330. A plaintiff in error cannot complain of a charge which favors him too much.—Bull v. Brockway, 48 Mich. 523.

¶ 331. A judgment will not be reversed because inconsistent instructions were given to the jury, if those adverse to the plaintiff in error were all correct.—Niagara Fire Ins. Co. v. De Graff, 12 Mich. 124.

¶ 332. An instruction as to the measure of damages cannot be regarded as prejudicial error where it allows no less than the correct rule would warrant.—Hubbell v. Blandy, 87 Mich. 209.

¶ 333. A party cannot take advantage of an alleged error in an instruction where he does not show that he was prejudiced by it. —Granger v. Darling, 156 Mich. 31.

¶ 334. A party cannot complain of an inconsistency in a cnarge due to the fact that the court gave an instruction preferred by him which was more favorable to him than the law justified.—Hess v. Preferred Masonic Mut. Acc. Ass'n., 112 Mich. 196.

¶ 335. Where defendant in replevin has established a lien for sawing upon a quantity of lumber of which that replevied was only a portion, a ruling which permits the assessment of his damages at such a proportion of his whole lien as the lumber replevied bore to the whole quantity subject to the lien is not one of which plaintiff can complain, the error being in his favor.—Chadwick v. Broadwell, 27 Mich. 6.

¶ 336. Where the parties to an action proceeded upon distinct hypotheses as to their relations to each other, which hypotheses respectively their evidence tends to support, a charge which, while properly presenting the case upon each of these, also submitted to the jury in language accurate in itself a hypothesis different from either and not strictly supported by the evidence, but more favorable to the defendant than the case properly warranted, is not an error of which such defendant can complain after a verdict that, in legal effect, negatived such hypothesis as well as that of the defendant.—English v. Caldwell, 30 Mich. 362.

¶ 337. A charge that a lease was terminated on the cessation of manufacturing operations for which it was made, whereas in fact it was not to terminate until the premises were restored to their original condition, is favorable to the lessee contending that it had terminated with the cessation of operations; and he cannot complain.—Stevens v. Pantlind, 95 Mich. 145.

¶ 338. In an action on a beneficial certificate, a charge to the jury requiring the defendant to establish by more than a preponderance of the evidence that the deceased was reported in open meeting for delinquent dues and at a subsequent meeting suspended is not prejudicial to defendant where the only evidence on this question is parol testimony, and where the deceased if not entitled to notice of such proceedings was at least entitled to insist on a written record of the association's action in the matter.—Wallace v. Fraternal Mystic Circle, 127 Mich. 387.

¶ 339. Where a story told by the court in its charge to the jury was of doubtful propriety, but had no tendency to injure the party complaining, it was not considered ground for reversal.—Cross v. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co., 69 Mich. 363.

¶ 340. Where the conceded loss under a clause of an insurance policy exceeds the sum insured thereunder to an amount greater than the value of certain articles which the court instructs the jury plaintiff can recover for under said claim, the error, if one is committed, is not prejudicial to defendant.—Tubbs v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co., 84 Mich. 646.

¶ 341. It was harmless error to charge that by a practical construction the parties had determined that there was no absolute time limit on a contract, where it appeared that the delay was in any event not to the damage of the objecting party.—Gainor v. Cheboygan River Boom Co., 86 Mich. 112.

¶ 342. In an action for salary claimed by an insurance agent, in which the question of liability for application fees was in issue, where the court stated in the charge that in one case a certain balance would be due plaintiff, and then in stating defendant's theory told the jury "now I give you another set of figures, based on another claim on the part of the defendant," the latter statement was not prejudicial to defendant, where it was more favorable to defendant than the claim of plaintiff.—Lee v. Huron Indemnity Union, 135 Mich. 291.

¶ 343. Where the court erroneously included an item as an element of damages to be awarded in condemnation proceedings, the fact that he expressed his individual opinion that no tangible damages were shown as to this item, is not prejudicial to the party in whose favor the instruction was given.—Village of Plymouth v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 139 Mich. 347.

¶ 344. Instruction as to care and diligence required of an electric railway to prevent killing stock held sufficiently favorable to the defendant railway company, and therefore not subject to objection by it.—Airikainen v. Houghton County St. Ry. Co., 138 Mich. 194.

¶ 344a. In an action for wilfully and maliciously shooting at and wounding plaintiff error in submitting to the jury whether defendant, an officer, was negligent in shooting is favorable to defendant, where he did the shooting without intent to hit plaintiff who was running away in the darkness, but had committed no felony or any other offense in the officer's presence, and where the officer had no warrant to arrest plaintiff.—Johnson v. Mack, 141 Mich. 99.

¶ 345. Where the proponent in a will contest case submitted to the jury the special question as to whether, when testatrix handed to P. a memorandum of her will, written in her own handwriting, and directed him how to dispose of the balance of her property, she knew what she was doing; the court's comment that he supposed that meant "was she mentally competent," was not improper, as proponent had no right to submit a question not calling for an answer which would control the main issue.—Spencer v. Terry's Estate, 133 Mich. 39.

¶ 346. An erroneous instruction that a gift by a father to his daughter (plaintiff) of a chose in action growing out of his son's (defendant) promise to pay the daughter a sum of money on the father's death is a gift in futuro subject to revocation by the father is not prejudicial to the defendant so as to reverse a judgment for the plaintiff.—Ebel v. Piehl, 134 Mich. 64.

§ 71. ——Submission of improper questions to jury.

¶ 347. In action for the price of milk cans where it would have been proper for the trial court to instruct the jury that certain representations made by a vendor were material, it is not error prejudicial to the vendor to leave the jury to determine whether the vendee deemed them to be material.—Davis v. Davis, 100 Mich. 162.

¶ 348. It was not error of which the employer could complain to leave it to the jury to say whether there was a mere postponement of the payment of $1,000 or an agreement that the salary for that year was to be only $5,000, where there was a conflict on that point, though there was an earlier agreement for $6,000 and the services had been performed thereunder.—Chamberlain v. Detroit Stove Works, 103 Mich. 124.

¶ 349. It is not prejudicial error for the court to leave to the jury the construction of a written agreement where such construction if reserved to the court should have been against the party alleging error.—Berry v. Haldeman, 111 Mich. 667.

¶ 350. In an action for breach of contract to furnish "25 carloads" of boxes in shooks in which the buyer had accepted the seller's offer to furnish the 25 carlouds, by writing which states that each car should contain 5,000 boxes, the defendant is not prejudiced by having the question of the number of boxes per car left to the jury.—Lowry v. Saginaw Specialty Co., 128 Mich. 246.

¶ 351. The fact that the court, in an action against the principal for failure to perform a substitute agreement made as alleged beyond an agent's authority, submitted to the jury the question of the agent's authority, instead of reserving to itself the construction of the writing, was not prejudicial to defendant.—Berry v. Haldeman, 111 Mich. 667.

¶ 352. Under Comp. L. 1897, chap. 129, giving a right of action to recover the proportionate share of the expense of running logs where two companies are driving in the same waters at the same time, an instruction leaving it to the jury to determine whether the defendant's services were to balance the plaintiff's or only to be offset to the extent of the value of the services is not prejudicial to the plaintiff where his services exceed the defendant's.—Bellows v. Crane Lumber Co., 126 Mich. 476.

¶ 353. Where action is brought under Act 104, P. A. 1909, How. 2nd ed., § 4110, by an employee of a common carrier railroad for injuries, defendant company is not prejudiced by an instruction that if the parties were equally negligent no recovery can be had though it seems that there is no question of degrees of negligence to submit to the jury.—Fernette v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 175 Mich. 653.

¶ 354. Allowing the jury to pass on the question of plaintiff's reliance on alleged fraudulent statements, is harmless, where there is in evidence a letter received by him imparting notice of the falsity of the statements before he had acted on them.—McEacheran v. Western Transportation & Coal Co., 97 Mich. 479.

D. IRREGULARITIES IN VERDICT, FINDINGS, JUDGMENT OR DECREE.

§ 72. In general; errors in verdict or findings.

Errors in judgment, decree or conclusions of law, see post § 73.

Findings or report of referee or commissioner, see post § 74.

Harmlessness to objector, see post § 75.

Cured or invited errors in verdict, findings or judgment, see post, III, D.

Allowing verdict to stand where interest as damages was same in amount as true measure would have been, see Damages ¶ 233.

¶ 355. A contention on appeal that the court below did not give certain evidence sufficient weight in its decision, is of no merit if that evidence was inadmissible.—Stabler v. Clark, 155 Mich. 26.

¶ 356. A judgment will not be reversed for a defect in the judge's finding which a stipulation in the record supplying the fact shows was pure inadvertence.—Sherrid v. Southwick, 43 Mich. 515.

¶ 357. A judgment will not be reversed in the supreme court because the court below, in a special finding under Circuit Court Rule 87, neglected to pass specifically upon some points of law presented to him which were not material to the case; nor because he found incorrectly upon some preliminary propositions of law relied upon as leading to the ultimate result, where such preliminary findings worked no legal prejudice to the plaintiff in error, and the final conclusion was such as a true view of the facts and law really required.—Easton School Dist. No. 1 v. Snell, 24 Mich. 350.

¶ 358. Where findings in favor of the plaintiff on all points presented could not have established his right to a judgment, the case cannot be treated as one of mistrial for refusal to find on some of them.—Wiley v. Lovely, 46 Mich. 83.

§ 73. Errors in judgment, decree or conclusions of law.

Inapplicability of Statute of Amendments to cure want of jurisdiction to enter default, see also Defaults § 1.

Want of affidavit of default as harmless error to defendant who was in default of appearance, see Defaults ¶¶ 34, 35.

Construction of judgment containing error to ascertain if error was prejudicial, see Appeal § 338.

Omission to enter discontinuance as matter cured by Statute of Amendments, see Discontinuance ¶ 16.

Affirming lower judgment on certiorari because right in result though wrong reasons were assigned, see also Certiorari § 62.

Practice disregarding inoperative discontinuance as harmless to complainant, see also Equity ¶ 791.

¶ 359. If the findings of fact justify the judgment, it is immaterial whether specific legal conclusions are rightly drawn.—Gillam v. Boynton, 36 Mich. 236.

¶ 360. Where the facts found by the court sitting without a jury warrant the judgment rendered, it is immaterial that the court erred in its conclusions of law.—Black v. Miller, 75 Mich. 323.

¶ 361. Error in employing the word "ordered" instead of the word "adjudged," in overruling a demurrer, is harmless.—Prussian Nat. Ins. Co. v. Eisenhardt, 153 Mich. 198.

¶ 362. The objection that a judgment on a school district order embraced more interest than was allowable was not considered on error where the difference was so trifling as to be insignificant.—Bowen v. Rutland School Dist. No. 9, 36 Mich. 149.

¶ 363. Where the wrong measure of damages was given under a special count, but plaintiff would have been entitled under the common counts, on an implied promise to pay for his services outside of the contract, to recover the same damages, a judgment rendered in his favor for such value without objection to the rule of damages was not disturbed.—Burroughs v. Morse, 48 Mich. 520.

¶ 364. An error in a notice of a discontinuance of a suit "discontinuing the same with costs to the plaintiff," instead of defendant, is immaterial, as it could not mislead.—Slocomb v. Thatcher, 20 Mich. 52.

¶ 365. Where a joint defendant knew at the time a case was called for trial that a several judgment against him was the only one possible and the proofs tended to show a liability upon the part of such defendant alone, and he did not object to proceeding with the case, but only sought to be informed whether plaintiff would ask for a judgment against both defendants or against him alone, and the case was actually discontinued after the close of the proofs, any error in failing to discontinue the case at the time the case was called for trial was harmless.—Rimmele v. Huebner, 190 Mich. 247.

§ 74. Findings or report of referee or commissioner.

¶ 366. It is a mere irregularity for a referee to class his conclusion as to intent as one of law, and will not sustain error.—Ferris v. Quimby, 41 Mich. 202.

§ 75. Harmlessness to objector.

¶ 367. A plaintiff in replevin cannot complain that the court awarded nominal damages to him when the jury gave none, the error, if any, being in his favor.—Sleight v. Henning, 12 Mich. 371.

¶ 368. Defendants cannot assert error in that the jury returned a verdict for a less sum than the evidence showed the plaintiff entitled to.—Rogers v. Fowler, 151 Mich. 485.

¶ 369. On an appeal by the owner of a prescriptive right to take water from a lake by means of a pipe laid at certain level from a decree enjoining him from laying or using a pipe laid below the original pipe, it is immaterial that the decree gives such owner rights greater than he is entitled to.—Kennedy v. Niles Water Supply Co., 173 Mich. 474.

¶ 370. A judgment in ejectment allowing improvements to the defendants generally in form, when in fact only one is entitled to such claim, is not an error prejudicial to plaintiff, and therefore is not reversible.—Boucher v. Trembley, 140 Mich. 352.

¶ 371. In an action on several promissory notes, defendant is not injured and cannot complain of the verdict as a compromise because interest on the notes was not included in the verdict which was for an amount equal to the face of all the notes without interest.—Big Rapids National Bank v. Peters, 120 Mich. 518.

¶ 372. Plaintiff is not in a position to complain of a judgment not following the verdict where the departure is in his favor. —D. M. Osborne & Co. v. Waterloo, 138 Mich. 588.

¶ 373. An insurance company sued by the administrator of the assignee of a policy, who was also liable on a mortgage for an equal amount held by the company, to declare the loss payable a fund out of which to satisfy the mortgage cannot complain that the decree did not properly adjust conflicting right between the complainant and the creditors of the estate represented by him, where the terms of the decree will in any event fully protect the defendant insurer.—Vogle v. Union Central Life Ins. Co., 147 Mich. 333.

¶ 374. A verdict in replevin for plaintiff who was the general owner of goods sold under a reservation of title to him until paid for, which verdict was improperly framed to decide the fact of a special property in or lien on the goods according to a statute, was not prejudicial to defendant, where it sufficed to dispose of all issues made in the case most favorably to him.—Guerold v. Holtz, 103 Mich. 118.

¶ 375. A purchaser of standing timber under contract reserving title in the vendor until it is paid for according to contract terms, and who therefore has no title in uncut timber, cannot complain of a decree more favorable than he could ask in that it undertakes, on a suit to enforce the contract by the vendor and to forfeit it, to fix a time within which the price may be paid and the purchaser's rights saved, alternatively decreeing that if payment be not then made the purchaser's rights save as already secured shall be forfeited. In such a suit the purchaser, having no equity in the uncut and unpaid for timber, is not as to that subject to foreclosure, and giving a time to redeem is not harmful to him.—Michigan Land & Iron Co. v. Doherty, 77 Mich. 359.

¶ 376. That the court permitted to each plaintiff a recovery of an undivided seventh instead of an undivided eighth of the land in fee cannot in any way injure the defendants, where the plaintiffs sued jointly and recovered.—Lee v. Livingston, 143 Mich. 203.

E. PERTAINING TO MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL AND SUBSEQUENT PROCEEDINGS.

Harmlessness to party complaining, see post § 77.

Immaterial or cumulative newly discovered evidence as insufficient ground for rehearing, bill of review, or new trial, see Equity §§ 229, 241; New Trial, II, H.

¶ 377. Failure to give, upon request, a reason for denying a new trial, is harmless error not requiring reversal, where the record shows a proper exercise, in such denial, of the court's discretion.—Bowersox v. Bowersox, 115 Mich. 24.

¶ 378. Where by the record it appears that the trial court was right in refusing a new trial, it is immaterial that he failed to give sufficient reasons for such decision.—Rivers v. Bay City Traction & Electric Co., 164 Mich. 696.

¶ 379. Remarks of the trial judge interpreting the charge in the course of his overruling a motion for a new trial will not reverse a cause of action in the absence of prejudicial error in what was said and done during the trial, since it is the charge and not what the judge thought about it that is to be reviewed.—Lauer v. Palms, 129 Mich. 671.

§ 77. Harmlessness to party complaining.

¶ 380. A complainant cannot complain on appeal of the action of the court below in opening a decree by default in his favor, unless it was against his rights, whether otherwise proper or not.—Brewer v. Dodge, 28 Mich. 359.

¶ 381. Plaintiff in error cannot be deprived of the benefit of his exceptions on the ground that he was not injured by the rulings made against him unless it clearly appears that he could not have prevailed in any view of his case.—Toledo & A. A. R. Co. v. Johnson, 49 Mich. 148.

III. ERRORS CURED BY OTHER THINGS OR INVITED BY OBJECTOR.

A. IN PLEADINGS AND PRELIMINARY PRACTICE.

§ 78. In general.

[Note. Defects in process may be waived or the jurisdiction supplied by Appearance, which see, or by proceedings taken to perfect the service or amend the process (see Process). But as the error or defect is a clerical one or one by the party rather than a judicial error, it seems better to treat such matters in the topics above mentioned.]

Pleadings and rulings thereon, see post § 79.

Selection and formation of jury, see post § 80.

Invited error in general, see post § 81.

Errors in pleadings harmless in themselves, see ante, II, A.

Sufficiency of demurrer and failure to demur as waiver of errors or defects in pleadings, see Pleading, IV, XI.

Too short time to plead as harmless error where default was taken after full time indorsed on served copy of declaration, see also Defaults ¶ 5.

§ 79. Pleadings and rulings thereon.

Aider, cure and waiver of defects and objections to pleadings, see Pleading, XI.

Cure of errors in pleading by amendments, see Pleading, VI.
Aider of pleadings by verdict, see Pleading, XI.
Variance between pleadings and proof as cured by other things, see Pleading, X.
Harmlessness of mere formal or technical defects in pleadings, see Pleading, XI.

¶ 382. Whether the trial court erred in compelling an election of counts will not be examined on appeal where the plaintiff recovered as much as if no election had been ordered.—Mattice v. Brinkman, 74 Mich. 705.

¶ 383. Allowance upon appeal from claims commissioners of amendments enlarging claim is not prejudicial error if they were not considered on the trial.—Dayton v. Dakin's Estate, 103 Mich. 65.

¶ 384. A divorce decree and provision as to custody of children will not be disturbed because a condonation and the subsequent breach of its condition was not perfectly pleaded, where the appellant had the benefit of his affidavit setting up such facts and there was evidence to sustain the case.—Ferguson v. Ferguson, 145 Mich. 290.

§ 80. Selection and formation of jury.

¶ 385. A cause will not be reversed for error in excusing a juror, where a trial was had before an impartial jury.—Quay v. Duluth, S. S. & A. Ry. Co., 153 Mich. 567.

¶ 386. The act of excusing a qualified juror is not error warranting a reversal of a judgment against a defendant, on the ground that since the juror was acceptable to the defendant, he was deprived of an equal chance of securing an impartial jury, when it appears that such defendant had not exhausted his peremptory challenges, and the panel of regular jurors had not been exhausted, as in such case the defendant was not prejudiced.—Brennan v. O'Brien, 121 Mich. 491.

¶ 387. Where a juror is excused for cause, the error, if any, in the court refusing to permit a question to be asked him in his voir dire examination, is harmless.—William R. Roach Co. v. Blair, 190 Mich. 11.

¶ 388. The overruling of a challenge for cause, even if error, is harmless where only one peremptory challenge had been used when the panel was completed.—Stowell v. Standard Oil Co., 139 Mich. 18.

§ 81. Invited error in general.

Necessity of raising question in lower court, see Saving Questions, I.

¶ 389. One cannot complain of being denied the right to amend by pleading set-off, where originally relying only on failure to have a guardian ad litem, one was appointed on trial, and defendant then declined a continuance with costs or any upon terms, and refused to put in a plea instanter because proofs were not presently available.—McDonald v. Weir, 76 Mich. 243.

B. IN RULINGS ON EVIDENCE OR EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES.

§ 82. Admission cured by other evidence.

Hearsay as to matters directly proved, see post § 83.
Parol or secondary evidence of writings otherwise in proof, see post § 84.
Evidence without proper foundation, see post § 85.
Evidence of facts equally within knowledge of decedent, see post § 86.
Inadmissible conclusion or opinion cured by evidence of basic facts, see post § 87.
Conclusions and opinions later become immaterial, see post § 88.
Leading testimony as to facts in proof, see post § 89.
Introduction of like or counter evidence by objector, see post § 90.
Errors in evidence harmless in themselves or not harmful to party objecting, see ante, II, B.
Exclusion cured by subsequent admission, see post §§ 108-113.
Harmlessness of instructions dependent on existence or state of the evidence, see ante § 48.

¶ 390. The erroneous admission of testimony is without prejudice where the same testimony has already been received without objection.—Needham v. King, 95 Mich. 303.

¶ 391. Improper evidence of a fact sufficiently proved by other evidence is harmless where it was so limited that the amount of damages was not affected by it.—Grimes v. Bowerman, 92 Mich. 258; Lombar v. Village of East Tawas, 86 Mich. 14.

¶ 392. Errors as to the admissibility of evidence are harmless where the uncontradicted and unimpeached testimony is ample to sustain the findings of fact, and in such case the judgment will not be disturbed by the appellate court.—Boardman v. Boozewinkle, 121 Mich. 320.

¶ 393. Where a fact has been shown without objection it seems that further testimony on the same point will not damnify the party against whom it is given.—Woolston v. Smead, 42 Mich. 54.

¶ 394. Where actual notice of a chattel mortgage is shown, evidence of its filing, though improperly admitted, is error without prejudice.—Stanton v. Estey Mfg. Co., 90 Mich. 12.

¶ 395. Judgment affirmed on certiorari and brought up on error should not be reversed for error in receiving a deposition, where there is proof of the fact deposed to aside from the deposition.—Wattles v. Moss, 46 Mich. 52.

¶ 396. Judgment will not be reversed for the erroneous admission of testimony which, there being abundance of other evidence to the same effect, could not have affected the verdict.—Brooks v. Taylor, 65 Mich. 208.

¶ 397. Where a cause was tried in the circuit court without a jury, and improper evidence received, and it was then taken to the supreme court for review on the whole facts on case made, it was held that that court would not reverse the judgment for the admission of improper evidence if there was sufficient of an unexceptionable character to sustain it.—Rose v. Lewis, 10 Mich. 483.

¶ 398. Where, in an action for breach of contract to cut and manufacture certain timber, there is competent evidence establishing the fact that defendant was not the owner of the timber involved, the admission of improper evidence as to such lack of title may be regarded as harmless.—Mott v. Penoyar, 153 Mich. 273.

¶ 399. Error in admitting a letter is harmless where the witness has previously testified to the same matters as are contained in it.—Weaver v. Richards, 156 Mich. 320.

¶ 400. After the amount due on open account has been proved by the debtor's admissions, it is not prejudicial error to receive in evidence, even if inadmissible, an affidavit of the amount due made and served pursuant to How. St., § 7525.—Bjorkquest v. Wagar, 83 Mich. 226.

¶ 401. A decree in chancery will not be disturbed for errors in the admission of evidence if there was enough, aside from the testimony complained of, to support the findings on which the decree is based.—Michie v. Ellair, 54 Mich. 518.

¶ 402. Where the record shows that but a small part of the evidence is contained in the bill of exceptions, and where such bill nowhere states that it sets forth all the testimony for any given point, the plaintiff in error will not be heard to complain of the admission of evidence which, as appears from a charge that was not excepted to, was rendered nonprejudicial by evidence not in the record adduced by plaintiff on the same point.—Bostwick v. Losey, 67 Mich. 554.

¶ 403. A judgment depending on proof of agency will not be reversed for the error of admitting such evidence thereof as the agent's testimony, or his admissions after the agency ended, if there is conclusive proof besides.—Shutes v. Woodard, 57 Mich. 213.

¶ 404. Upon the trial of an action for injury received from a defective walk, a resolution of the common council, adopted three years before the accident, instructing the marshal to repair the walk in question, was received in evidence against the objection that it was too remote. It was shown conclusively by other evidence that the walk was subsequently out of repair, and that the city had notice thereof. The case went to the jury upon the issue whether the walk had been repaired so soon before the accident that the city was free from negligence. Held, that the evidence objected to could not have prejudiced defendant.—Storrs v. City of Grand Rapids, 110 Mich. 483.

¶ 405. The admission of incompetent evidence is not prejudicial error when the facts are competent to be shown and are afterwards proved by competent evidence.—Lothrop v. Southworth, 5 Mich. 436; Commissioner of Highways of Township of Homer v. Riker, 79 Mich. 551.

¶ 406. The admission of evidence of subsequent repairs to prove a prior defect is not prejudicial error where the existence of such defect is abundantly shown by competent testimony.—Lombar v. Village of East Tawas, 86 Mich. 14.

¶ 407. The admission of incompetent evidence is not reversible error where competent evidence on the same issue was introduced and not controverted, and the jury could not under the evidence have rendered a smaller verdict.—Shane v. Shearsmith's Estate, 137 Mich. 32.

¶ 408. In an action for injuries sustained by a two-year-old child from placing its hand on a wire cable used in moving a house, evidence as to what the custom of defendant's employees was in protecting children. Held, not reversible error where the witnesses also testified as to what was done to protect the children on the occasion in question.—Slack v. Curry, 177 Mich. 437.

¶ 409. Where a witness has, upon his examination, testified that he owned all the property that his son had, error, if any, in a question as to what he knew of his son having deeded to him all the land held by him at a certain time, is harmless.—Buxton v. Ainsworth, 153 Mich. 315.

¶ 410. In an action for malicious prosecution arising from defendant having made complaint and caused plaintiff's arrest under a criminal charge of fraudulently disposing of a certain number of hogs covered by a chattel mortgage he had given defendant, with intent to injure and defraud, the admission of evidence as to agreement between the parties at the time of the execution of the mortgage that the hogs could be sold when in proper condition for market as bearing upon the intent of the defendant, held not prejudicial error where plaintiff himself testified to an understanding that plaintiff would have the right to sell the hogs provided he applied the proceeds on the mortgage. Whittemore v. Walter, 193 Mich. 363.

¶ 411. In summary proceedings for the possession of land sold under an executory contract, the objection to a statement of a witness that there was a mortgage on the premises when the contract was made, which was later discharged, on the ground that it was "incompetent, immaterial, and irrelevant, not mentioned in the contract between the parties" does not state any ground affecting its admissibility, and the admission thereof was not error where the facts were otherwise proved, and are included in appellant's statement of facts and relied upon by him as an infirmity of the case of the complainants.—Gould v. Young, 143 Mich. 572.

¶ 412. An objection to showing similar acts and conduct of an agent in a suit against the principal without establishing the fact of agency in those transactions is cured by subsequent proof of such relationship.—Bullock v. Tompkins' Estate, 125 Mich. 17.

¶ 413. Plaintiff's employer rented a barn of one Crawford. Crawford terminated the tenancy and rented the barn to defendant. Plaintiff was arrested by defendant without a warrant, for breaking into the barn and taking therefrom goods belonging to defendant. In a suit for false imprisonment plaintiff was permitted to introduce evidence that after the institution of plaintiff's suit Crawford sent plaintiff's employer a notice demanding the payment of rent for the month succeeding the time that defendant entered into possession, and that plaintiff's employer sent to Crawford a check for one-half of said month's rent. From other evidence in the false imprisonment suit the facts with reference to the respective rights of plaintiff's employer and defendant to occupy the barn were clearly established. From said other evidence the fact of plaintiff's entering the barn and taking out certain goods was also clearly established. Held, the admission of the evidence concerning the notice and check did not constitute reversible error.—De Vos v. Caplan, 165 Mich. 77.

¶ 413a. In an action on an insurance policy, error in admitting incompetent testimony of ownership of the insured premises was not prejudicial where such ownership was otherwise established by competent testimony.—Kennedy v. London & L. Fire Ins. Co., 157 Mich. 411.

¶ 413b. In an action on a policy of insurance, it is not reversible error to allow the physician who attended the insured to state that her death was caused by heart disease, where it is admitted and proved by other evidence that such was the cause of her death.—Haapa v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 150 Mich. 467.

§ 83. ——Hearsay as to matters directly proved.

Admission of hearsay cured by instruction to disregard, see post ¶ 513.

Hearsay harmless in itself, see ante § 32.

¶ 414. Error in receiving hearsay evidence that defendant did certain acts is rendered harmless by his testifying to the same effect.—Hendricks v. Haskins, 114 Mich. 291.

¶ 415. The erroneous admission in an action for the breach of a contract for the construction of a building, of a notice from the city building department as to its condition at a certain time, being hearsay, is not prejudicial, where the subject was fully covered by competent evidence.—Newton v. Consolidated Construction Co., 184 Mich. 63.

¶ 416. In an action, aided by attachment, to recover rent for the use of a store under a lease providing that the balance of the year's rent should be due and payable if the tenant vacated the premises before the expiration of the term, any error in the admission of evidence of statements made by clerks as to the intention of the defendant to vacate was cured where the clerks, as witnesses on behalf of the defendant, denied that they made such statements.—Spears v. Black, 190 Mich. 693.

¶ 417. The admission of hearsay evidence to prove a fact for a plaintiff which defendant's own evidence and admissions establish, does not constitute reversible error.—Weatherbee v. Byam, 160 Mich. 600.

¶ 418. Admission of a hearsay statement as to an injury is not prejudicial error where there is direct and undisputed testimony to the same specific injury.—La Duke v. Township Exeter, 97 Mich. 450.

¶ 419. The admission of hearsay inadmissible except for impeachment, with no foundation for that, is not cured by subsequently calling the person who made the declaration and asking him if he made it, it having gone to the jury when admitted without any limitation on the use of it for proof; since it could not be regarded as merely introducing it out of order.—Van Alstine v. Kanieckl, 109 Mich. 318.

¶ 420. Hearsay evidence drawn out on cross-examination will not reverse where other evidence is sufficient to establish a fact which is not disputed on the trial.—Willet v. Goetz, 125 Mich. 581.

¶ 421. In an action for personal injuries sustained in a grade crossing accident, it is harmless error to permit a passenger to testify that the railroad station agent told him the train was 23 minutes late where the engineer testifies to the same effect.—Haines v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 129 Mich. 475.

¶ 422. Testimony by plaintiff in an action for injuries caused by an automobile collision, relative to what was said by defendant's superintendent to the driver as to the force with which plaintiff's machine was struck. Held, harmless error when the superintendent testified to the same thing.—Andries v. Everitt-Metzger-Flanders Company, 177 Mich. 110.

¶ 423. Defendant in an action for fraud is not prejudiced by the erroneous admission of declarations with reference to past transactions made by other members of the alleged conspiracy where the facts shown thereby are established by his own testimony.—McDonald v. Smith, 139 Mich. 211.

¶ 424. In ejectment, the admission of improper testimony to prove declarations by plaintiff's grantor asserting his ownership of the disputed strip and that he signed a petition for a resurvey, could not be urged as error where like testimony was introduced by defendant, and defendant's counsel stated that if the court was right in admitting defendant's testimony, he should admit the testimony in question.—Miller v. Shumway, 135 Mich. 654.

§ 84. ——Parol or secondary evidence of writings otherwise in proof.

Parol or secondary evidence harmless in itself, see ante § 30.

¶ 425. The admission of parol testimony to show transfer of real property is not prejudicial where the deed is subsequently introduced in evidence.—McDonald v. Smith, 139 Mich. 211.

¶ 426. Any error in the admission of oral evidence of matters which were in writing is cured by the later admission of the writings themselves in evidence.—Gould v. Young, 143 Mich. 572.

¶ 427. Error in the admission of secondary evidence of the contents of an instrument is cured by the subsequent introduction of the original paper by the opposite party.—Emlaw v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 108 Mich. 554.

¶ 428. Admission of secondary evidence of the contents of a time book to show what work was done is not cured by the fact that the witness had testified without the aid of the copy to the date of the last day's work done, which fact it was essential for him to show in a log lien case.—Dillon v. Howe, 98 Mich. 168.

¶ 429. Mutual receipts for a nominal sum apparently meant to be conclusive evidence of a settlement, necessitate a verdict where no issue remains; hence error in admitting parol evidence to explain them cannot be prejudicial.—Pratt v. Castle, 91 Mich. 484.

¶ 430. Where a trial court, in a suit for commissions for the sale of real estate and the collection of purchase money, sustains the objection made to a question put to the plaintiff broker as to the terms of the agreement between him and defendant, but plaintiff answers said question and no motion is made to strike said answer from the record, said ruling does not constitute reversible error where the plaintiff later on testifies in full as to the terms of said agreement.—Lambrecht v. Stoepel Realty Co., 169 Mich. 81.

¶ 431. It was harmless error, if any, to admit evidence of statements made at the time of the sale showing that the parties understood the property conveyed to be 30 feet; where, in an action for breach of the covenant of warranty in a deed, it appears that the same width was shown by the abstract, and by the public advertisement of the sale.—Seitz v. People's Sav. Bank, 140 Mich. 106.

§ 85. ——Evidence without proper foundation.

¶ 432. The admission of evidence before it has been rendered competent by the admission of other evidence is harmless error, where such other evidence is subsequently introduced.—Superior Drill Co. v. Carpenter, 150 Mich. 262.

¶ 433. The error, if any, in admitting a will in evidence without having called a particular subscribing witness to prove due execution, held cured by calling him afterwards and allowing cross-examination.—Fraser v. Jennison, 42 Mich. 206.

¶ 434. In a personal injury case against a railroad company for injuries to a switchman it was prejudicial error to admit evidence of certain measurements from a spike hole made long after the accident without any showing that the condition of the track was the same as at the time of the accident; but the admission of such evidence was cured by testimony of the plaintiff subsequently introduced that he was injured by catching his shoe between a projecting fish-plate bolt and a spike in a tie, at a joint of two rails, opposite a gap in the right of way fence east of a certain box factory, so that as a result the conditions were not changed for the purpose of measurements.—Culver v. South Haven & E. R. Co., 144 Mich. 254.

¶ 435. The admission of testimony by plaintiff as to what defendant's witness had said to him, objected to because no question had been asked the witness as to the matter, is not prejudicial where its import was the same as that which the witness had denied saying.—Morin v. Robarge, 132 Mich. 837.

¶ 436. In an action against a railroad for killing cattle, it was not error to permit witnesses to state the condition of the cattle guard in question the day after the cattle were killed, where testimony was subsequently introduced tending to show that the guard was practically in the same condition as when the cattle passed over it.—Johnson v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 135 Mich. 353.

¶ 437. Error in admitting in evidence a letter purporting to be signed by a person as agent of a firm, without proof of his authority, is cured by subsequent testimony of one of the partners showing such authority.—Holmes v. Kortlander, 64 Mich. 591.

¶ 438. In an action for wages defendant is not prejudiced by the introduction in evidence of a book kept by plaintiff, showing certain payments received from defendant even if it is not identified as a book of account where all of the payments have been admitted as appears from an account in defendant's books already in evidence.—Keel v. Wilson Fruit Juice Co., 176 Mich. 345.

¶ 439. It is harmless error in an action for alienation of affections to admit letters from the defendant to plaintiff's wife without legal proof that the wife received them, where defendant admitted that he wrote them and that he received replies and it appears that the correspondence was connected.—Mead v. Randall, 111 Mich. 268.

§ 86. ——Evidence of facts equally within knowledge of decedent.

¶ 440. Admission of testimony against objection that the facts were equally within the knowledge of plaintiff's intestate, is not harmful error where such testimony is confined to facts of which such intestate had no direct knowledge and where if not so confined. it was as to a fact fully proven by competent testimony.—Graham v. Alexander, 123 Mich. 168.

¶ 441. In an action by the receiver of an insolvent bank to enforce an assessment on stock against the estate of a deceased stockholder, where evidence admitted by stipulation sustains a decree that the transfer of stock was fraudulent, the fact that testimony which should have been excluded because equally within the knowledge of deceased, was admitted may be disregarded.—May v. Ullrich, 132 Mich. 6.

¶ 442. The objection that testimony called out on the redirect examination of one of plaintiff's witnesses was inadmissible because equally within the knowledge of a decedent, cannot avail on error where, were such testimony excluded, there would still be left sufficient uncontroverted testimony to have justified the circuit court in directing a verdict for plaintiff.—Michigan Sav. Bank v. Butler's Estate, 98 Mich. 381.

¶ 443. Where a witness' testimony is disqualified by the statute as matter equally within the knowledge of a decedent its admission is immaterial, when it is substantiated by another witness, and is uncontradicted.—Chamberlain v. Eddy, 154 Mich. 593.

§ 87. ——Inadmissible conclusion or opinion cured by evidence of basic facts.

Opinion evidence harmless in itself, see ante § 31.

¶ 444. Error in permitting the wife of insured to state that he came home hurt is not prejudicial, where the answer was not called out by her counsel, she was at once stopped and cautioned and afterwards testified at length as to the condition of insured and the visible evidence of injury on his body.—Thompson v. Loyal Protective Ass'n, 167 Mich. 31.

¶ 445. Where in a suit against a railroad company for injuries sustained by being thrown from a cutter, overturned by reason of the horse's running away because frightened at an approaching train, the evidence clearly shows the cause of the fright of the horse, the admission of the testimony of the driver that the horse was frightened by the train, if inadmissible, works no injury to defendant.—McCullough v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co., 101 Mich. 234.

¶ 446. In an action against a township to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff while driving over a public road, where a witness was asked whether a certain end of the road was closed from public travel on that day and answered, over objection that the question was leading and called for a conclusion, that it was not, held that admission of answer was not reversible error, the witness further testifying describing the conditions, that there was no barrier, that he traveled there, and that the track remained the same.—Long v. Township of Weare, 195 Mich. 706.

¶ 447. In an action for injury caused by a defective sidewalk, reversal will not be granted because a witness gave his opinion as to the condition of the walk, where he was at once admonished that this was not proper, and he thereupon proceeded to describe the condition of the walk.—Styles v. Village of Decatur, 131 Mich. 443.

¶ 448. In an action for damages for assault and battery the affirmative answer of plaintiff's wife as to whether plaintiff after the injury had any pain about his head was not reversible error, where the court ruled that the witness could state what she noticed, and she subsequently testified that while in bed he often moaned and groaned and rolled and tossed from side to side.—Matthews v. Lamberton, 198 Mich. 746.

¶ 449. Upon the issue whether or not plaintiff was the unconditional owner of the property insured, a question was asked plaintiff's vice president which called for a conclusion as to the legal effect of a contract. Held, however, that the error committed in allowing the question and answer did not constitute reversible error where there was an abundance of uncontradicted testimony that the title was in plaintiff.—Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. v. Northern Assur. Co., 150 Mich. 311.

¶ 450. It was not error to refuse to strike out as conclusions testimony that a child was in pain and that it was so great that one could hardly touch the child's injured leg, where there was other competent testimony fully establishing the fact that the child suffered great pain.—Boehm v. City of Detroit, 141 Mich. 277.

¶ 451. Whether testimony of the scrivener of a will as to the testator's intention in making certain provisions in his will is admissible or not becomes immaterial and need not be decided where the will and the antenuptial agreement entered into were read together and the provisions contained in them were carried out and resulted in an equal division of the property among those entitled thereto.—In re Gunn Estate, 146 Mich. 615.

§ 88. ——Conclusions and opinions later become immaterial.

¶ 452. In an ejectment trial a witness was allowed to fix certain measurements of which he did not show complete personal knowledge. Held, that this became immaterial when defendant on the stand admitted possession of the premises and identified them with a lease in which the description tallied with that in plaintiff's line of title.—Williams v. Towl, 65 Mich. 204.

¶ 453. In an action for damages for personal injuries received as a result of being overtaken and run into by an automobile while riding a bicycle, held that the admission of testimony of a locomotive engineer who witnessed the accident as to the speed of the engine of the automobile, as indicated by the exhaust, was harmless error where the witness did not use it to determine the speed of the car and testified that the automobile was going at a lesser speed than was indicated by the exhaust.—Harnau v. Haight, 189 Mich. 600, 13 N. C. C. A. 566.

¶ 454. Whether or not there was error in permitting a township clerk to testify that he had no authority to enter the cancellation of a certain chattel mortgage, and that the entry was made through mistake, becomes immaterial on error, where the record itself does not show that the alleged discharge was made in the manner described by How. St. § 6201.—Aultman, Miller & Co. v. Sloan, 115 Mich. 151.

§ 89. ——Leading testimony as to facts in proof.

Leading questions harmless in themselves, see ante § 35.

¶ 455. Allowance of leading questions will not work reversal where it appears that they were without substantial prejudice to plaintiff in error in view of other prior and subsequent questions.—Emlaw v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 108 Mich. 554.

§ 90. ——Introduction of like or counter evidence by objector.

Opening door to opinions as warrant for admission of counter opinion, see Evidence § 208.

¶ 456. Plaintiff sued defendant in an action of deceit for false and fraudulent representations in the sale of stock. Plaintiff's counsel in his opening statement stated that he would prove that one Dr. Kellogg, who was not a party or defendant's agent, made false representations. Plaintiff introduced evidence of such statements by said Dr. Kellogg. Upon cross-examination, defendant brought out similar evidence. Held, the error in admitting such evidence was not reversible, since defendant himself elicited like evidence to sustain his theory of the case.—Steele v. Kellogg, 163 Mich. 132.

¶ 457. Where the business books of a decedent are relied on to charge his estate, it seems to be erroneous to admit, apart from its context and as independent evidence for a particular purpose, a memorandum entry which could only be important when incorporated with the accounts of the decedent; and the false impressions so produced cannot be supposed to be done away with by the subsequent reception of the books on the part of the defense, even though they show that the entry had never entered into the accounts or been regarded in the balance.—Seligman v. Ten Eyck's Estate, 49 Mich. 104.

§ 91. Admission cured by striking out.

See also ante ¶ 67.

By striking with instruction to disregard, see post § 92.

Refusal to strike out cured by later ruling or other evidence, see post § 120.

¶ 458. Admission of an incompetent declaration of defendant's servant is cured by striking out.—Gordon v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 103 Mich. 379.

¶ 459. Where the inevitable result of evidence erroneously admitted would be injurious, the error is not cured by striking out such evidence.—McDuff v. Detroit Evening Journal Co., 84 Mich. 1.

¶ 460. In an action for personal injuries against the owner of a dog which ran into the road and caused the plaintiff to be thrown from his buggy, the question as to whether the defendant came near the plaintiff at the time of the accident is improper but not reversible error where subsequently stricken.—Willet v. Goetz, 125 Mich. 581.

¶ 461. Error in receiving incompetent evidence is sufficiently cured by the court's striking it out on motion; at least where no request is preferred for a specific instruction that it be disregarded by the jury.—Barnett v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 115 Mich. 247.

¶ 462. Error in admitting a certified copy of a deed is cured by striking it out after the original is admitted.—Carpenter v. Carpenter, 126 Mich. 217.

¶ 463. Admission of photographs, if error, is cured by ruling them out.—Close v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 73 Mich. 647.

¶ 464. That immaterial evidence was received over objection and exception is not error where it was stricken as soon as its immateriality developed, there being no request for an instruction on the matter.—Pierson v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 149 Mich. 167.

¶ 465. The striking out of a letter improperly admitted in evidence for plaintiff was not curative of error in admitting it, where it tended to libel defendant if untrue in a collateral matter.—Maxted v. Fowler, 94 Mich. 106.

¶ 466. The fact that a court sitting alone without a jury admitted certain evidence which he afterwards struck out on finding it to be incompetent is immaterial, and the objecting party cannot be prejudiced by the fact that it was not stricken out at once.—Smith v. Smith, 144 Mich. 139.

¶ 467. In a suit by plaintiff vendee of land to recover damages for false representations as to its value by defendant vendor, it is not reversible error to permit plaintiff to testify as to the amount of money expended by him in constructing a house on the land, where the court orders the testimony stricken out and plainly charges that the proper measure of damages is the difference between the actual value of the land at the time of the purchase and what its value would have been had it been of the quality and condition represented.—Yanelli v. Littlejohn, 172 Mich. 91.

§ 92. ——By striking with instruction to disregard.

¶ 468. Admission of improper testimony is cured by striking it out and instructing the jury to disregard it.—McHugh v. Fitzgerald, 103 Mich. 21.

¶ 469. In an action upon a contract for the sale of logs under which each party agreed to furnish a scale and the amount of logs scaled was to be determined by such scalers, the admission of alleged ex parte testimony as to rescaling, was not error where such testimony was struck out and the charge excluded consideration of such rescale.—Boyce v. Barker, 119 Mich. 157.

¶ 470. The error of receiving improper testimony will be cured by striking it out and cautioning the jury to disregard it, unless it clearly appears that the jury were prejudiced.—Dykes v. Wyman, 67 Mich. 236.

¶ 471. A statement by defendant, claiming the note in suit as a gift from plaintiff's testator that plaintiff, as executor, admitted, when the note was produced at his request that it belonged to defendant, does not require the reversal of a judgment in her favor, though being volunteered and improper it was erroneous, where the statement was promptly stricken out with the consent of her counsel, and the jury was cautioned against giving it consideration.—Harris v. Cable, 113 Mich. 192.

¶ 472. Error in admitting the testimony of the husband in an action for alienation of his wife's affections will be considered harmless where such testimony was stricken out by the trial court, the jury being instructed not to consider it, and where defendant was not prejudiced by the admission because the same facts were otherwise proved.—Miller v. Lachman, 117 Mich. 68.

¶ 473. In an action by the wife against a saloon keeper and his bondsmen for illegal sale of liquor to the husband, it is error to admit testimony by the wife that she has a child 3 years old which child remained in the courtroom throughout the trial and which fact was dwelt upon by the counsel for the plaintiff and such evidence is not cured by striking out the testimony and attempting to cure the error by the court's charge.—Boydan v. Haberstumpf, 129 Mich. 137.

¶ 474. Plaintiff sued defendant for trespass with intent to ravish. The court permitted over plaintiff's objection testimony as to defendant's good character. Later the court refused to let in further evidence of this kind, and on plaintiff's motion struck out all such testimony, and instructed the jury to disregard it. Held, plaintiff had no ground of complaint with respect to this evidence.—Walsh v. Gibson, 159 Mich. 312.

¶ 475. When it is clear that the jury was influenced in its verdict by testimony improperly admitted, the error cannot be regarded as having been cured by striking out such testimony and instructing the jury to disregard it.—Feiertag v. Feiertag, 73 Mich. 297.

¶ 476. The striking of testimony by the court of its own motion and directing the jury not to consider it for any purpose, cured error which might have been caused by the inadmissibility of such testimony, particularly where no further allusion was made to the testimony and no request was made for further instructions to the jury upon the subject.—McNaughton v. Smith, 136 Mich. 368.

¶ 477. In an action for a breach of contract to purchase hay wherein it was stipulated in the contract that the defendant should have the right to designate which kind of hay should be first baled, the erroneous admission of evidence tending to vary the terms of the contract in this particular was not prejudicial to the defendant where it was later stricken out, and the court had instructed the jury that the defendant had the legal right to determine which hay should be first baled, and the jury's verdict of no cause of action was inconsistent with the claim that the defendant had first broken the contract by refusing to bale the clover first.—Fowles v. Rupert, 143 Mich. 246.

¶ 478. Where, in an action by a wife for injury to her means of support and to her feelings through defendant's selling liquor to her husband, testimony relative to the husband's death which took place after the action had been brought, and to his life expectancy was received, it was held that the error was not cured by an instruction that the testimony as to the cause and circumstances of the death was stricken out as hearsay, and that there could be no recovery for any injury plaintiff might have suffered by reason of the death, whatever the circumstances were.—Ford v. Cheever, 105 Mich. 679.

¶ 479. Where in an action for a personal injury the declaration avers only an injury to plaintiff's spine, the admission of testimony as to uterine troubles, with which she claimed to be affected, on the supposition that they would be shown to be traceable to the injury alleged in the declaration, is not harmful error, said evidence having been withdrawn by plaintiff's counsel, by permission of the court, upon his statement that he could not furnish said connecting evidence, and defendant having shown by a medical witness that plaintiff's condition of impaired health was due, in part at least, to a uterine difficulty, with which the witness testified plaintiff was affected, and for which defendant was not responsible.—Turner v. Township of Ridgeway, 105 Mich. 409.

¶ 480. Plaintiff declared on a special contract, and also on the common counts, and gave evidence tending to establish both. The defendant offered evidence of a set-off, which was erroneously rejected. On the conclusion of the evidence plaintiff withdrew all evidence on the common counts, and the jury rendered a verdict in his favor. Held, that in the absence of any showing that the jury were instructed to disregard the evidence under the common counts, it did not appear that the error in rejecting the set-off was cured.—Kelly v. McKenna, 18 Mich. 381.

§ 94. Admission cured by instructions.

By instruction to disregard, see post § 95.

By instruction explaining or limiting, see post § 96.

Effect of delayed instruction see post § 97.

Admission cured by taking question or case from jury, see post § 98.

¶ 481. The erroneous admission of testimony which is rendered immaterial by the charge is not prejudicial.—Wreggitt v. Barnett, 99 Mich. 477.

¶ 482. An assignment that the court erred in admitting certain evidence will not be considered where the court, in his charge, took the consideration of such evidence from the jury.—Smith v. Detroit United Ry., 155 Mich. 466.

¶ 483. Error in the admission of evidence showing a changed mental condition of plaintiff after an accident, also showing loss of memory and irritable condition, there being no support therefor in the pleadings, is cured by instructions removing the consideration of such evidence from the jury.—Miller v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 167 Mich. 21.

¶ 484. In an action of trover for cattle distrained held that the admission of evidence of the distraint proceedings taken by defendant for the purpose of showing their regularity was nonprejudicial error where the court, in its charge, told the jury repeatedly that the only question for them to determine was whether the cattle were running at large and did not submit the question of regularity of the proceedings to the jury.—Spiegel v. Straw, 196 Mich. 581.

¶ 485. The admission of testimony for plaintiff as to a certain claim, was harmless, where the court subsequently held and charged the jury against such claim.—Allington & Curtis Mfg. Co. v. Detroit Reduction Co., 133 Mich. 427.

¶ 486. In a case involving the validity of an award by arbitrators, the admission of evidence tending to show that one of the parties to the submission held a chattel mortgage against one of the arbitrators is not prejudicial, where the jury are afterwards instructed that the fact is immaterial and does not affect the validity of the award.—Mather v. Day, 106 Mich. 371.

¶ 487. In an action under the civil-damage act, any error in admitting evidence of the amount of money spent by plaintiff's husband in defendant's saloon for a period of three months prior to the acts upon which the action was based, is cured by instructions that no recovery could be had for such amount.—Manzer v. Phillips, 139 Mich. 61.

¶ 488. Any error in the admission of testimony as to the loss, after suit brought, of the use to plaintiff of an article taken from her, was rendered nonprejudicial by an instruction directing the jury to find no damages for such loss.—Blaisdell v. Scally, 84 Mich. 149.

¶ 489. An error of the court in admitting incompetent testimony on the measure of damages was not cured by a subsequent instruction in the general charge withdrawing the point from the jury's consideration; where it may have had some influence on the verdict.—Sinker, Davis & Co. v. Diggins, 76 Mich. 557.

¶ 490. In an action for selling liquor to plaintiff's minor son any error committed in allowing a witness to testify that he had drunk with the minor at a saloon other than defendant's is cured by instructing the jury that it is immaterial whether anyone else than defendant gave liquor to the minor, and that the damages to which plaintiff is entitled cannot be lessened by reason of that fact.—Sterling v. Callahan, 106 Mich. 128.

¶ 491. In a suit to recover the value of logs, some of which had been manufactured into lumber, evidence was received of the value of the lumber and also of the logs, as to which latter value there was no serious dispute, and the jury was instructed that it could only allow plaintiff the value of the logs. Held, that the jury was not prejudiced by the admission of the testimony as to the value of the lumber.—Busch v. Fisher, 89 Mich. 192.

¶ 492. Plaintiff sued defendant to recover, on the ground of fraud, money advanced to defendant under a certain contract. The court improperly admitted evidence that plaintiff relied on a certain representation, but in his charge refused to let such evidence go to the jury. Held, the error in admitting it was not prejudicial.—Ward v. Cook, 158 Mich. 283.

¶ 493. In an action for damages for the death of plaintiff's intestate by drowning as the result of his boarding a rowboat hired from the defendant at its picnic grounds, where it kept a number of such boats for hire, if the plaintiff has offered evidence tending to show that the particular boat was a defective boat, any error in admitting evidence of defects in the other boats is harmless, provided the court cautions the jury as to considering it.—Lincoln v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 197 Mich. 504.

¶ 494. That plaintiff suing for a negligent injury was asked by his counsel whether he was endeavoring at the time of the accident to use due care and caution was held not prejudicial to defendant in view of the witness' full testimony as to what he did, and of the court's charge to the jury that in determining whether plaintiff was exercising due care and caution the entire circumstances must be taken into consideration.—Gratton v. Village of Williamston, 116 Mich. 462.

¶ 495. Although the practice of admitting proof of acts and directions of a supposed agent before proving his authority was condemned, the failure to subsequently show such authority was not reversible error where the jury were instructed that such supposed agent was a fellow-servant and that the defendant was not responsible for his conduct or statement, and where in view of the smallness of the verdict the jury did not appear to have been influenced by the testimony.—Hume v. Mason & Hoge Co., 122 Mich. 346.

¶ 496. Where the court charged that a child two years old cannot be guilty of contributory negligence or charged with the negligence of others, admission of evidence that its parents intrusted it to the care of a ten-year old child, was harmless.—Slack v. Curry, 177 Mich. 437.

¶ 497. Where, in a suit for a specified commission under a contract for the sale of timber, defendant admits that the sum specified, if anything, is due, error in permitting plaintiff to testify as to the customary commission for procuring sales of timber, is cured by the court's excluding further similar testimony, and by directing the jury that plaintiff, should his version of the contract be found to be true, can recover no more than the sum stipulated.—Holmes v. Fordney, 115 Mich. 135.

¶ 498. In an action for damages for defectively constructing a building, in which the jury was instructed that if the building varied from the plans and specifications so that it would have to be rebuilt to conform thereto, the measure of damages was the difference between the value of the building if constructed according to the contract, not exceeding the contract price, and its value, as constructed, not exceeding the contract price, but that if the contract was substantially performed and the necessary changes could be made without destroying the building, that the measure of damages was the amount which would be necessary to make the particular or several items comply with the terms of the contract, held that the action of the court in allowing the answer of a witness to a question as to what was the difference between the building constructed and the one required under the specifications that it would cost a certain sum to replace the building, to stand, was not prejudicial error, in view of the charge.—Gutov v. Clark, 190 Mich. 381.

¶ 499. The admission of testimony as to what occurred on Sunday relative to a contract, is not prejudicial where the court instructed the jury that all testimony tending to establish a contract on Sunday was withdrawn from their consideration and that unless a contract made on a weekday was shown, plaintiff could not recover.—Wheeler v. Jenison, 120 Mich. 422.

¶ 500. In an action for damages for assault and battery, held that there was no reversible error in permitting counsel for plaintiff to take an answer of plaintiff upon redirect examination as to whether he understood a question put to him by defendant's counsel, and to correct his answer where the court stated that it was for the jury to say whether he in fact misapprehended the question.—Matthews v. Lamberton, 198 Mich. 746.

§ 95. ——By instruction to disregard.

¶ 501. An improper question was asked over defendant's objection, and the plaintiff, after the answer, immediately withdrew the question upon a repetition of the defendant's objection. The court instructed the jury to disregard the testimony. Held, no error resulted.—Hurd v. Northern Acc. Co., 160 Mich. 535.

¶ 502. In an action for injuries to a servant caused by an improperly tempered tool, error in admitting testimony that a tool that was not hard would not chip was obviated by an instruction to disregard it.—Potvin v. West Bay City Shipbuilding Co., 156 Mich. 201.

¶ 503. A jury will not be regarded as having been prejudiced or misled by the admission of evidence, where the court pointedly instructed them that it should not be considered, and that it was out of the case.—Schneider v. Township of Brown, 153 Mich. 454.

¶ 504. Upon a suit on a written contract for a correspondence course, admitted by defendant to have been executed by him, it is error to admit the statements and promises of the soliciting agent, which are at variance with or additions to the contract relied upon, and such error is not cured by the later instructions of the court to disregard said testimony.—International Text-Book Co. v. Roberts, 168 Mich. 501.

¶ 505. The erroneous admission of testimony held cured by the court's instructing the jurors that they were to disregard the testimony objected to.—Butler v. Detroit, Y. & A. A. Ry., 131 Mich. 617.

¶ 506. In a suit under the death act for the death of plaintiff's husband, a locomotive engineer in the employ of defendant, through the settling of an embankment across a ravine, the trial court admitted plaintiff's evidence of a violent storm shortly preceding the accident and of the failure of defendant's section men to inspect the track in question after such storm and prior to the accident. At the close of plaintiff's evidence, the court instructed the jury that he had reached the conclusion such evidence was inadmissible and expressly directed them to disregard it. Held, the error in admitting such evidence was cured by such instruction.—Stolz v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 167 Mich. 300.

¶ 507. In a civil case, after incompetent testimony had been admitted, the court instructed the jury to disregard it wholly as not relevant to the issue and to disabuse their minds of it entirely. Held, that the error in receiving the testimony was cured by the instruction.—Tolbert v. Burke, 89 Mich. 132.

¶ 508. In an action by a tenant against the owner for injuries due to defects in the premises leased, the admission of improper evidence as to the owner's absence from the state at the time of the trial was held harmless where the court instructed the jury that defendant's absence was a matter of no consequence and was not to be considered by them.—Nutter v. Colyer, 180 Mich. 107.

¶ 509. In an action by a trustee in bankruptcy against a preferred creditor to recover a preference, any error in allowing the record of bankruptcy proceedings to be read in the presence of the jury is cured where the court informs the jury that they need not consider any documentary evidence coming from the United States court except as he should permit them to do so later on in the charge.—Johnson v. Gratiot County State Bank, 193 Mich. 452.

¶ 510. Prejudicial error cannot be imputed to the admission in evidence of certain receipts in a case where the court afterwards practically directed the jury that they should not be considered.—Mallory v. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co., 90 Mich. 112.

¶ 511. The admission of testimony as to an item of damage that is inadmissible under the declaration is not prejudicial error where the charge to the jury confines the recovery to other items.—Schneider v. City of Detroit, 72 Mich. 240.

¶ 512. It is not prejudicial error in an action for personal injuries to ask a witness concerning his statement to the effect that he heard the plaintiff got a verdict for $2,500 and that he did all he could to prevent a verdict and that he received $10 and expenses for attending court and testifying, where the court immediately informed the jury to disregard the result on former trial and counsel for the plaintiff stated that that was not the amount of the previous verdict.—Leach v. Detroit Elec. Ry., 129 Mich. 286.

¶ 513. The admission of hearsay evidence held not to be cured by instructing the jury to disregard it; the case being such that it would be likely to influence them.—Detroit & M. R. v. Van Steinburg, 17 Mich. 99.

¶ 514. An instruction to the jury to disregard mischievous and improper testimony will hardly cure the error of allowing it to remain in the case until the close of the trial; and if so allowed the trial judge should remedy the injustice on motion for new trial.—Taylor v. Adams, 58 Mich. 187.

§ 96. ——By instruction explaining or limiting.

¶ 515. It will not be decided whether it was error to admit parol evidence in explanation of a deed, where the entire transaction, written and oral, was placed before the jury under instructions and it allowed some at least of the claims of the plaintiff in error.—Forbes v. Forbes, 112 Mich. 630.

¶ 516. In an action for damages for selling intoxicating liquor to plaintiff's husband, it is prejudicial error to admit testimony as to pain and suffering resulting from injuries received by the husband while intoxicated, though a charge is given to the effect that such evidence bears only on his ability to perform labor.—Spencer v. Johnson, 176 Mich. 278.

¶ 517. There is no reversible error in the allowance of a hypothetical question not reduced to writing where the facts are complicated and confusing, where the jury is instructed that before they can consider a hypothetical question and its answer they must find that the assumed facts have been established by a preponderance of the evidence.—Matthews v. Lamberton, 198 Mich. 746.

¶ 518. In an action of trover for goods seized under a disputed chattel mortgage the admission of testimony of a sale under the mortgage, if erroneous, was cured by an instruction that the measure of damages, if any, would be the value of what was taken, with interest from the time of taking it, less the actual amount of the mortgage.—Doyle v. Mizner, 42 Mich. 332.

¶ 519. The erroneous admission of evidence of the defective condition of other row boats of defendant, in an action against the letter for hire of a row boat for death of an occupant, alleged to be due to the sinking of the boat because of its defective condition, held not cured by the giving of a cautionary instruction.—Clark v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 197 Mich. 489, 15 N. C. C. A. 1033.

¶ 520. Where in a suit for the negligent killing of plaintiff's intestate, the court erroneously admits evidence as to the contribution of money made by the deceased to the support of his father, such error is cured by an explicit instruction in the precise language of defendant's request to the effect that the money so paid could not be regarded as a contribution to the support of the family.—McDonnell v. Central Drug Co., 170 Mich. 291.

¶ 521. Where evidence has been wrongfully received, and has been dwelt upon by counsel in his argument, a mere statement in instructions given by the court, that the jury is not to consider such testimony, is not sufficient to cure the error in actually receiving the testimony, where the charge also states that the judge's recollection is that he had sustained an objection to such evidence, and that it had not been admitted.—Hyman v. Kirt, 153 Mich. 113.

¶ 522. Error in permitting plaintiff, in an action for the purchase-price of logs, to testify that the scale was one agreed upon by the scaler and himself, was cured by a charge that it was not competent for them to agree on a scale which would bind defendant.—Malone v. Gates, 87 Mich. 332.

¶ 523. An erroneous ruling that the defendant was not entitled to charge plaintiff interest on 90-day instalments under the contract in question, and the admission in evidence of an improper computation of interest was mischievous error, although the court properly stated the rule as to computation in the charge.—Foley v. Comstock, 122 Mich. 349.

¶ 524. In a suit involving the bona fides of an assignment of an insurance policy, the erroneous admission of the declarations of the assignor, made subsequent to the transfer, tending to show that the policy had not then been assigned, and of further statements tending to show that the policy had been placed beyond the reach of creditors, is cured by an instruction that the undisputed testimony shows the assignment to have been made, and that, if given to secure an honest debt, it was valid.—Muncey v. Sun Ins. Office, 109 Mich. 542.

¶ 525. In an action to recover damages for the sale to plaintiff of certain corporate stock by fraud and deceit, and also a mortgage bond of the corporation, error in receiving evidence as to the value of real estate given for such stock and bond some time after the stock sale and after the company's factory had closed, was not cured by the court's charge that the price then obtained was not a true criterion of value, but might be considered making allowance for changed conditions.—French v. Fitch, 67 Mich. 492.

¶ 526.—In an action for personal injuries against the owner of a dog which ran into the road and caused the plaintiff to be thrown from his buggy, where testimony as to the reputation of the horse is excluded but subsequently admitted in another form, the error if any, is cured by an instruction making it clear to the jury that the plaintiff cannot recover if the habit and disposition of the horse was the approximate cause of the injury.—Willet v. Goetz, 125 Mich. 581.

¶ 527. In an action for selling liquor to plaintiff's husband, an instruction calling the jury's attention to the necessity of tracing intoxication to defendant's conduct was held to have obviated the error of admitting testimony tending to show merely that the buyer had been in the habit of returning home with whiskey after being gone about long enough to have visited defendant's neighboring saloon.—Kehrig v. Peters, 41 Mich. 475.

¶ 528. The erroneous admission of statements by a partner who has defaulted to prove the partnership relation in an action against the partners is cured by instructions that such statements are not binding on the other partner.—Scholtz v. Freud, 128 Mich. 72.

¶ 529. An instruction limiting plaintiff's claim to moneys arising out of the assignment of a particular contract prevents the admission of evidence of the assignment of other contracts—which evidence is immaterial—from being prejudicial to plaintiff.—Mitts v. McMorran, 85 Mich. 94.

¶ 530. Admission in evidence of tables of mortality showing plaintiff's expectancy of life, in an action to recover damages for personal injuries, where there was evidence tending to show such injuries were permanent and his physical condition, and the jury were instructed not to consider the tables unless they were convinced to a moral certainty that a permanent injury was received, held not to be reversible error.—Jacobs v. Hagenbeck-Wallace Shows, 198 Mich. 73, 16 N. C. C. A. 535.

¶ 531. The improper admission of evidence as to an oral agreement to lease premises to a tenant for a term of years upon the erection of a new building in an action by a tenant against the landlord to recover damages for injury to his business as the result of rendering the premises untenantable in the process of moving the building to the new location is harmless error where the jury were instructed that such agreement was void and that there could be no recovery on that branch of the case.—Kezeli v. River Rouge Lodge, No. 410, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, 195 Mich. 181.

¶ 532. In an action for lumber sold and delivered, any error in permitting the introduction of plaintiff's books of account to show that the lumber was charged to the defendant owner, instead of a contractor, was cured by an instruction to the effect that the fact that the charge was made to the defendant was only important in case the jury should find that it was so charged by authority or with assent of the defendant.—Temple v. Goldsmith, 118 Mich. 172.

¶ 533. There was no prejudicial error by the court where in an action of trespass for the taking of a piano, where the defendant's counsel objected to any testimony as to the loss of the use of the piano after suit, the court said he would take the testimony subject to the objection and cover it with the charge, and if not admissible he would strike it out on motion, and he in his instructions directed the jury to find no damages for the loss of the use thereof.—Blaisdell v. Scally, 84 Mich. 149.

¶ 534. On appeal from disallowance of a claim by commissioners which claim was for services rendered to decedent under an implied promise to pay their reasonable value, error in admitting evidence of declarations and instructions for the making of provision by will, not only to prove that there was an expectation to pay, but also to show that they were worth the amount of the proposed gift or legacy, is not cured by a charge that they are to be considered only as bearing on the intent to pay for the services, when coupled with other expressions from which the jury might have considered them admissible on the question of value; and especially where there was a total lack of direct testimony as to their value.—Luizzi v. Brady's Estate, 140 Mich. 73.

¶ 534a. Where a policy contained a clause of forfeiture for additional insurance, evidence that such insurance was obtained because the insured understood that the original policy was invalid was held irrelevant in an action on the policy. But the error of admitting such evidence was held to have been cured by an instruction that the policy was avoided by the additional insurance unless the breach of the condition had been waived.—Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co. of Philadelphia v. Kittle, 39 Mich. 51.

¶ 535. Plaintiff sued defendant for assault and battery. A doctor who examined plaintiff the day before the trial for a skull fracture, testified that the fracture was the cause of plaintiff's stammering. Defendant moved to strike out this testimony on the ground that it did not connect the assault with the fracture or show that the stammering resulted from the fracture. The motion was overruled, and five days later the court, being of opinion that the evidence was improper, directed the jury to disregard it. Held, that the instruction, so long afterwards, did not cure the error of admitting the improper evidence.—Sulkowski v. Zynda, 160 Mich. 7.

§ 98. Admission cured by taking question or case from jury.

¶ 536. The erroneous admission of testimony is cured by the withdrawal from the consideration of the jury of the question to which it relates.—Bamlet Realty Co. v. Doff, 183 Mich. 694.

¶ 537. It was error, if any, without prejudice to admit testimony as to intent on defendant's part to injure plaintiff by setting out fire on defendant's own land, where the question of intent was taken from the jury by an instruction that it was immaterial, though the declaration alleged that it was "willfully" lighted and allowed to escape.—Bolton v. Calkins, 102 Mich. 69.

¶ 538. The error in the admission, in an action for negligence, of evidence of an insufficient ground of recovery, is cured by the court's withdrawal of such ground from the jury.—Johnson v. Union Carbide Co., 181 Mich. 403.

§ 99. Admission cured by verdict, finding or judgment.

By determinative finding not based on evidence questioned, see post § 100.

By amount of verdict or judgment, see post § 101.

¶ 539. Where evidence improperly admitted is evidently not considered by the jury, the error does not require a reversal of judgment.—Drysdall v. Smith, 44 Mich. 119.

¶ 540. To admit in action on an account stated an account showing dealings covered thereby, if error, is harmless, where plaintiff had judgment.—Albrecht v. Gies, 33 Mich. 389.

¶ 541. The improper admission of a note in evidence is harmless where no recovery was allowed on it.—McDonald v. Smith, 139 Mich. 211.

¶ 542. Erroneous admission of testimony as to special damages is non-prejudicial error where jury's finding excludes them.—Mason v. Partrick, 100 Mich. 577.

¶ 543. A judgment will not be reversed because of the admission of incompetent evidence where it does not appear that the jury was influenced by it.—Busch v. Fisher, 89 Mich. 192.

¶ 544. An order dissolving an attachment will not be reversed because of the admission of immaterial evidence where the judge in his findings states that such testimony was not considered by him in reaching a conclusion.—Dimmock v. Cole, 130 Mich. 601.

¶ 545. The admission of the conclusions of a witness in regard to documentary evidence introduced is not error requiring reversal, where it appears from the record that the findings of the court were based upon his own deductions from such documents, and not upon those of the witness.—Hanish v. Kennedy, 106 Mich. 455.

¶ 546. The error of admitting irrelevant evidence tending to show that a conveyance under which plaintiff claimed was obtained by fraud is not cured by the jury's declaring that they cannot answer the question, "Were said sale and conveyance fraudulent in fact?" This finding is not against fraud, is simply equivalent to "not proved," and, thus guardedly expressed, shows that the testimony on this point somewhat influenced the jury.—Crane v. Reeder, 25 Mich. 303.

¶ 547. Where testimony has been admitted over objections but the admission of the evidence had neither the tendency to divert the attention of the jury from the real issue or to lead them to an erroneous decision on that issue, such rulings were not prejudicial.—Barschow v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 147 Mich. 226.

§ 100. ——By determinative finding not based on evidence questioned.

¶ 548. The admission of irrelevant testimony is no ground for reversing a judgment rendered upon a finding of facts in no way based upon such improper testimony.—Delta Lumber Co. v. Williams, 73 Mich. 86.

¶ 549. The admission of secondary evidence of the execution and contents of an alleged lost written contract before its loss was shown, held not erroneous, where a verdict was rendered on an implied and not on the express agreement.—Case v. Rudolph Wurlitzer Co., 186 Mich. 81.

¶ 550. The admission in evidence of a circular pertaining to a special contract, held not erroneous, where a verdict was based on an implied and not the express agreement.—Case v. Rudolph Wurlitzer Co., 186 Mich. 81.

¶ 551. A determination by the jury that the city was not negligent in an action for injury alleged to have been caused by falling into a hole in a cross-walk, renders it unnecessary to consider assignments of error as to the admission of testimony of oculists in regard to the condition of plaintiff's eyes at the time of the injury, since such assignment of error could not affect the finding that the city was not negligent which was conclusive of the case.—Scheel v. City of Detroit, 130 Mich. 51.

¶ 552. In an action on a contract tried by the court, if an item is allowed to be proved which is not within the contract, this will not be sufficient reason for reversing the judgment if it expressly appears that such item was rejected in making up the judgment.—Turner v. City of Grand Rapids, 20 Mich. 390.

¶ 553. Admission of expert testimony as to the portion of loss due to explosion was harmless, even if error, where the jury found that a fire caused the fall of the building and rendered the loss total.—N. & M. Friedman Co. v. Atlas Assur. Co., 133 Mich. 212.

¶ 554. The admission of evidence as to the price at which cattle which were distrained were sold in an action of trover for animals distrained is not prejudicial error where the question of the value of the animals is not reached by the jury.—Spiegel v. Straw, 196 Mich. 581.

¶ 555. Where the issue was as to whether plaintiff or defendant first broke the contract the admission of hearsay evidence on behalf of plaintiff on the issue was harmless error where the jury found that plaintiff was the one who had broken it.—Fowles v. Rupert, 143 Mich. 246.

§ 101. ——By amount of verdict or judgment.

Amount of verdict as indication of prejudice or harmlessness, see ante § 6.

¶ 556. Where the finding of the jury in an action of replevin confines the damages awarded to defendant to the value of the property, as specifically found by them, the erroneous admission of testimony upon the subject of special damages to defendant resulting from the seizure of the property is error without prejudice.—Mason v. Partrick, 100 Mich. 577.

¶ 557. A verdict for $1,000 damages in favor of an estimable young woman whom defendant's newspaper had libelously charged with gross immorality was sustained in view of the smallness of the award, notwithstanding the erroneous admission of evidence showing defendant's financial condition.—Farrand v. Aldrich, 85 Mich. 593.

¶ 558. Where in trover by a mortgagor for a steam threshing machine, seized under the insecurity clause in the mortgage and sold to the mortgagee, plaintiff recovers judgment for less than the difference between the unpaid part of the purchase price and the sum received on a resale of the machine by the mortgagee, the admission on the trial of incompetent testimony as to the value of the machine, and its depreciation in value on account of its use by the mortgagor, is nonprejudicial error.—Woods v. Gaar, Scott & Co., 99 Mich. 301.

¶ 559. Admission of evidence of loss of trade in a libel suit, as against objection that the names of the customers were not given in the bill of particulars, was not harmful in view of the amount of the verdict and where the court instructed the jury that no damages could be awarded for loss of trade as there was no specific data upon which the jury could base a verdict in that particular.—Field v. Magee, 122 Mich. 556.

¶ 560. Error in the admission of evidence where the issue was as to whether plaintiff's leg was broken, is not prejudicial where the smallness of the verdict shows that the jury did not find that the leg was broken.—Weitzel v. Village of Fowler, 143 Mich. 700.

¶ 561. In an action for libel where the verdict was so small that the erroneous admission of evidence concerning defendant's pecuniary circumstances could not be said to have prejudiced him, judgment was not reversed.—Farrand v. Aldrich, 85 Mich. 593.

¶ 562. In an action against a liquor seller by the wife of one whose earning capacity has been impaired by a person intoxicated by reason of the defendant's selling, although evidence that plaintiff has children is inadmissible for the reason that they may sue on their own account, yet the admission of such evidence is not ground for reversal where the verdict is less than the actual damages shown.—Thomas v. Dansby, 74 Mich. 398.

¶ 563. The permitting of proof, in an action by an administratrix for the death of her minor child under Comp. L. 1897, § 10427, How. St., 2nd ed., § 13702, of specific instances of indebtedness owed by the beneficiaries was not reversible error where the amount of the verdict was such that the testimony could not have had any appreciable effect upon it.—Peklenk v. Isle Royale Copper Co., 187 Mich. 644.

¶ 564. In an action for damages for failure to deliver steel as per contract the admission of evidence as to bids received two months before the time of delivery and breach of the contract held not prejudicial error where the recovery was considerably less than the amount paid by plaintiff to another.—Sauer v. McClintic-Marshall Const. Co., 189 Mich. 577.

¶ 565. It is not assignable error to admit testimony of a witness as to the value of a colt even though the witness is not competent to express an opinion, where such testimony was cumulative and it appears from the amount of the verdict rendered that the testimony did no harm.—Dorris v. Rice, 145 Mich. 216.

¶ 566. No reversible error results from the improper admission of evidence as to a particular item of a defendant's set-off, where by their verdict it appears the jury have rejected said item.—Holser v. Skae, 169 Mich. 484.

¶ 567. Where, in a suit to recover for an elevator destroyed by sparks from a locomotive, the court properly limits the amount of recovery in its charge, the jury is well informed as to the situation, use, age, condition, etc., of the building and its equipment, and the verdict does not appear to be excessive, the judgment will not be reversed, although counsel for both sides include improper elements of damage in their questions put to expert witnesses.—Close v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 169 Mich. 392.

¶ 568. Admission of improper testimony on the question of damages was held not reversible error, where the plaintiff suffered a broken ankle and the verdict was for only $1,000.—Kopelka v. City of Bay City, 125 Mich. 625.

¶ 569. Any error in the admission of evidence on behalf of plaintiff in an action to recover the purchase price of storage eggs was immaterial where plaintiff recovered no more than the contract price.—E. P. Stacy & Sons v. Moher, 200 Mich. 81.

§ 102. Admission cured by comment or argument of opposing counsel.

¶ 570. The introduction in evidence by defendant of plaintiff's bill of particulars cannot be regarded a prejudicial error, inasmuch as defendant's counsel has a right to read and comment upon it to a jury.—Stevens v. Pendleton, 94 Mich. 405.

§ 103. Questions reacting to injury of party asking.

¶ 571. A woman appearing as complaining witness in a case of alleged indecent assault was required to state that she had been undergoing treatment at a medical college. Held, that she ought not to have been asked whether it was in the presence of a class, but that the error of allowing the question was probably cured by the sympathy the jury would naturally feel for her if she were compelled to answer so outrageous a question.—Derwin v. Parsons, 52 Mich. 425.

§ 104. Ruling for admission cured by nonintroduction of evidence.

¶ 572. A ruling that certain records might be admitted is harmless, if erroneous, where the record on error shows that they were not introduced.—Michigan Paper Co. v. Kalamazoo Valley Elec. Co., 141 Mich. 48.

¶ 573. Where a ruling upon evidence is wrong, it is nevertheless harmless unless testimony is given in accordance with it.—Friend v. Dunks, 39 Mich. 733.

§ 105. Premature reading of documents cured by their admission.

¶ 574. The error, if any, in permitting foreign documents to be translated in the jury's hearing before the court has decided on their admissibility, is cured when the court afterwards admits them in evidence.—Hutchins v. Kimmell, 31 Mich. 126.

§ 106. Defective stipulations of facts otherwise proven.

¶ 575. Efforts of counsel to have an oral stipulation admitting the genuineness of certain signatures, are harmless where the fact was otherwise proven and was apparently undisputed.—Sudworth v. Morton, 137 Mich. 575.

§ 107. Hearing unsworn witnesses or going outside of evidence.

¶ 576. Upon a petition by a divorced husband to have the custody of minor children transferred to him, neither the fact that the court examined the children unsworn nor the fact that he is influenced by the conduct of the complainant in or out of court, will justify the reversal of a decree which is plainly right as shown by the record alone.—Stone v. Stone, 161 Mich. 565.

§ 108. Excluded evidence afterwards received.

Effect of later reception as "matter of grace," see post § 109.

Exclusion cured by admission of other evidence, see post §§ 110-113.

Exclusion cured by inability of witness to answer, see post § 114.

Exclusion cured by ruling, instruction or directed verdict, see post § 115.

Exclusion cured by finding, verdict or judgment, see post § 116.

Exclusion cured by stipulation or admission of counsel, see post §§ 117, 118.

Curing restriction of cross-examination by offer to allow it if there was doubt, see also Examination of Witnesses ¶ 196.

¶ 577. Where evidence erroneously rejected is afterwards received and the facts are fully shown, the error is cured.—Cool v. Snover, 38 Mich. 562; McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. McKee, 51 Mich. 426; Kendrick v. Towle, 60 Mich. 363; Stanton v. Estey Mfg. Co., 90 Mich. 12; Wilkins v. City of Flint, 128 Mich. 262; Dailey v. McCarthy, 180 Mich. 473; Luckhurst v. Schroeder, 183 Mich. 487.

¶ 578. Striking out certain testimony of a witness is not prejudicial where the same witness was later permitted to testify to practically the same effect.—Brown v. Harris, 139 Mich. 372; Antosik v. Michigan Alkali Co., 166 Mich. 415.

¶ 579. Error in excluding a witness' answer to a question is cured where the answer is afterwards elicited by further interrogatories.—Ellis v. Whitehead, 95 Mich. 105; Mason v. Partrick, 100 Mich. 577.

¶ 580. Where upon cross-examination, the trial court improperly refuses to permit a certain question, the error is not reversible if the witness in fact answers the question.—Jackson v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 161 Mich. 163.

¶ 581. The exclusion for informality of a hypothetical question put to a medical witness is not prejudicial where the subject-matter is left open to inquiry, and such information as the witness possesses is obtained through another form of question.—Lamb v. Lippincott, 115 Mich. 61.

¶ 582. The fact that a part of a question on cross-examination was stricken out can furnish no ground for objection, where the same statement was made, and in even fuller terms, on redirect examination.—Bartlett v. Jenkins, 150 Mich. 682.

¶ 583. The erroneous exclusion of questions put to plaintiff on cross-examination is not prejudicial where he is asked the same questions when called in rebuttal, and the answers desired by defendant to the excluded questions are drawn from the witness.—Rice v. Rankans, 101 Mich. 378.

¶ 584. The exclusion of an impeaching question based on the contents of a letter is harmless where the letter is later put in evidence and contains no such impeaching statements.—Burt v. Long, 106 Mich. 210.

§ 109. ——Effect of later reception as "matter of grace."

¶ 585. Where competent testimony was excluded but subsequently was admitted upon the suggestion of plaintiff's counsel that while it was incompetent, it was better to put it in and be safe, and the court made comments indicating to the jury that it was admitted as a matter of grace, it is doubtful whether the admission of the testimony would cure the error.—Beard v. Hill, 131 Mich. 246.

§ 110. Exclusion cured by admission of other evidence covering excluded matters.

By subsequent testimony of same witness, see post § 111.
By testimony of other witnesses, see post § 112.
Curing exclusion of proper cross-examination by offer to allow full inquiry in chief, see also Examination of Witnesses ¶ 582.
Admission of expert testimony of cost to cure error in excluding evidence of actual cost, see also Damages ¶ 1129.

¶ 586. The exclusion of evidence is not prejudicial error if its substance is afterwards allowed to be fully inquired into and shown by other evidence.—Locke v. Gross, 48 Mich. 266; Stansell v. Leavitt, 51 Mich. 586; Waldo v. Waldo, 52 Mich. 94; Burt v. Long, 106 Mich. 210; Michigan Shoe Co. v. Paul, 149 Mich. 695.

¶ 587. Though erroneous for the circuit judge in chancery to exclude offered evidence, it is harmless where other testimony clearly shows that no injustice resulted.—Merson v. Merson, 101 Mich. 55.

¶ 588. Error in improperly ruling out a cross-question asked of a witness for complainant which had no relevancy except to show bias of the witness, is harmless, where the interest and bias of the witness were otherwise shown.—Landry v. Landry, 119 Mich. 68.

¶ 589. Rulings to exclude evidence offered to prove agency become immaterial where the agency is afterwards proved by the introduction of the written agreement of agency, which is not disputed.—Reynolds v. Continental Ins. Co., 36 Mich. 131.

¶ 590. In a will contest held that the rejection of evidence of a conversation with a child that a preferred son asked testator about making a will and as to how testator came to talk with witness about the matter, was harmless error in view of convincing and undisputed evidence as to testator's mentality and state of mind at the time he made the will and evidence as to capacity before and after making the will.—In re Fay's Estate, 197 Mich. 675.

¶ 591. In an action for damages for delaying freight in transit, error in the admission of bills of lading to show the date of the reception of such freight by defendant without first proving the genuineness of such bills is cured where freight bills accompanying such bills of lading, receipted in full by defendant, are admitted in evidence without objection, such freight bills covering substantially the same matters included in the bills of lading.—Fremont Canning Co. v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 180 Mich. 283.

¶ 592. Where undisputed testimony in an attachment proceeding showed that defendant had reduced stock and placed the money where it could not be reached by garnishee process, it is not prejudicial error to exclude other testimony tending to establish the same fact.—Dimmock v. Cole, 130 Mich. 601.

¶ 593. Sustaining an objection to a cross-question asking witness if he had not made the remark that he was not clear and definite as to a certain matter when he testified before the justice, is not prejudicial where it already sufficiently appeared that he was not clear and definite as to that matter.—Brown v. Harris, 139 Mich. 372.

¶ 594. In assumpsit for services performed and moneys expended the exclusion of checks not included in the defendant's bill of particulars, and the defendant declining to amend his bill of particulars to make them admissible, is not prejudicial error where they were present and the plaintiff was examined at length concerning most of them. —Stoner v. Riggs, 128 Mich. 129.

¶ 595. The striking out of a witness' answer, though improper, is held not to be error where the ground of the evidence stricken out is substantially covered by other testimony in the case, and it does not appear that the party complaining of it was injured by the ruling.—Chambers v. Hill, 34 Mich. 523.

¶ 596. The refusal of the court to allow a witness to testify as to the contents of a letter is harmless error where the latter was subsequently put in evidence.—Rogers v. Detroit Sav. Bank, 146 Mich. 639.

¶ 597. In an action on a promissory note, where plaintiff claimed that an agreement was made for the exchange of such note for two smaller notes, and that such agreement was invalid because made on Sunday, and that he returned such smaller notes to the defendants, and defendants claimed that the agreement was made after midnight, and denied that such smaller notes were returned, but claimed that they were subsequently paid, held that the exclusion of self-serving statements in a letter from plaintiff to one of the defendants as to why he returned such smaller notes was harmless error, where the vital part of the letter, to-wit, that he inclosed such smaller notes, was admitted in evidence.—Prussia v. Bailey, 193 Mich. 77.

¶ 598. In a suit by a plaintiff on promissory notes purchased from a company, no error was committed in refusing defendant's demand that the articles of association of the company to whom the notes were given be produced, where the court permitted defendant to introduce secondary evidence of their contents.—People's Building & Loan Ass'n Co. v. Rutz, 158 Mich. 440.

¶ 599. In an action for a breach of contract to furnish all the tin cans necessary to the plaintiff's business for a given time, it is not prejudicial error to refuse to permit a witness to testify as to the extent of increased capacity of the plaintiff's canning factory where the changes in the factory were described in detail, the number of cans used before and after the contract was shown, and the plaintiff's books showing its sales were in evidence.—E. G. Dailey Co. v. Clark Can Co., 128 Mich. 591.

§ 111. ——By subsequent testimony of same witness.

¶ 600. The error, if any, in excluding questions, is cured where the witness is subsequently allowed to testify fully upon the subject-matter of such inquiries.—Pigott v. Engle, 60 Mich. 221.

¶ 601. The exclusion of evidence is harmless where the witness was permitted to show the same fact sufficiently by his other testimony.—Stowell v. Standard Oil Co., 139 Mich. 18.

¶ 602. Exclusion of a cross-question calling for matter which the witness subsequently gave is harmless.—Ellis v. Whitehead, 95 Mich. 105.

¶ 603. Where cross-examination has been unnecessarily restricted, but full investigation has been obtained before the witness is dismissed, there is no prejudicial error.—Edwards v. Heuer, 46 Mich. 95.

¶ 604. In replevin against an officer who has attached mortgaged goods, it is error to refuse to allow him to answer whether plaintiff's attorney demanded joint possession of the goods, but such error is cured by his giving subsequently all the conversation with the attorney and testifying that no demand was made before the writ issued.—Rosenfield v. Case, 87 Mich. 295.

¶ 605. Error in refusing to allow a leading question to be asked on cross-examination is cured by the immediate allowance of full cross-examination on the whole transaction.—McBride v. Wallace, 62 Mich. 451.

¶ 606. The exclusion of a question is not reversible error where the answer sought is subsequently substantially obtained on cross-examination.—Airikainen v. Houghton County St.-Ry. Co., 138 Mich. 194.

¶ 607. The exclusion of evidence as to the rental value of property to show its value, is not error that requires reversal, where the witnesses whose answers are excluded are permitted to testify to the actual value.—Byrnes v. Palmer, 113 Mich. 17.

§ 112. ——By testimony of other witnesses.

¶ 609. Error in overruling a question to a witness in an action on the case was afterwards cured by permitting the same question to be put to several other witnesses.—O'Connor v. Hogan, 140 Mich. 613.

¶ 610. Where a question put by a party to his own witness is erroneously overruled, the error is not cured by his being allowed afterwards to put the same question to the witness of the other party on cross-examination.—Flanigan v. Lampman, 12 Mich. 58.

¶ 611. Error in excluding a question put to one of the parties on cross-examination is rendered non-prejudicial where both parties are subsequently permitted to testify upon the subject and opportunity for cross-examination afforded.—Daggett v. Hayward, 95 Mich. 217.

¶ 612. Erroneous exclusion of evidence of the cost to plaintiff of completing a contract after breach by the contractor is not cured by subsequent admission of expert opinions on that point.—Friedland v. McNeil, 83 Mich. 40.

¶ 613. The exclusion of a letter as evidence in behalf of a plaintiff containing nothing more than the plaintiff had been permitted to testify to without objection is not prejudicial error.—Mears v. Cornwall, 73 Mich. 78.

¶ 614. Sustaining of objection to certain questions asked an expert witness, in an action to contest a will on the ground, in part, of mental incompetency of the testator, as to the sufficiency of memory and understanding of a person suffering from senile dementia to make a discriminatory will, held not reversible error, in view of the extended examination of the witnesses permitted.—In re Walsh's Estate, 196 Mich. 42.

¶ 615. Where a plaintiff's testimony shows a certain fact, error cannot be predicated by defendant upon the exclusion of evidence to prove that fact.—Welsh v. Michigan Maple Co., 161 Mich. 16.

§ 113. Exclusion as opinion or conclusion cured by other evidence.

¶ 616. The rejection of the opinion of a witness, in an action for negligence, that a bridge was in good repair, is not prejudicial error where the testimony of the same witness placed before the jury all the facts upon which the opinion would have been based.—Merkle v. Township of Bennington, 68 Mich. 133.

¶ 617. In an action by a bicycle rider against the driver of an automobile to recover damages for personal injuries sustained in a collision at a street intersection, the exclusion of the answer to a question whether defendant had his car under control, on the ground that it called for a conclusion, is harmless error, where, in later examination, the witness states that the car did not run more than six feet after the collision and that defendant put his foot on the brake and the clutch at the same time and stopped the car almost instantly.—Vezina v. Shermer, 198 Mich. 757.

¶ 618. The exclusion of opinion evidence that special assessments were made according to frontage, instead of according to benefits, in an action of assumpsit by a city to collect a special assessment tax is harmless error where the proceedings show affirmatively that the assessments were according to benefits and the witness has no knowledge himself of how they were prepared.—City of Sault Ste. Marie v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. Ry. Co., 192 Mich. 65.

¶ 619. The rejection of questions calling only for the witness' inferences from the facts he has testified to is not error where no facts upon which an opinion could be based are excluded, and where the inference sought to be raised is one the jury could draw as well as the witness.—Whittemore v. Weiss, 33 Mich. 348.

¶ 620. That proper questions propounded to an expert were excluded is not prejudicial where the facts sought to be shown were otherwise established.—Pierson v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 149 Mich. 167.

¶ 621. In an action against a city for injuries alleged to have been caused by falling over a loose plank in the sidewalk, the city is not injured by rulings of the court which attempt to exclude the opinion of witnesses as to the safety of the walk but to admit their testimony in so far as it tended to show the true condition of the walk, where the testimony admitted fairly covered the latter ground.—Brown v. City of Owosso, 130 Mich. 107.

§ 114. Exclusion cured by inability of witness to answer.

¶ 622. A party cannot be injured by the exclusion of a question which his witness, before the objection is made, says he cannot answer.—Miller v. Sharp, 65 Mich. 21.

¶ 623. There is no error in excluding the answer to a question calling for knowledge on a subject and asked for the purpose of refreshing the witness' memory, where he subsequently testifies that he has told all he knows about the matter.—Ellis v. Whitehead, 95 Mich. 105.

§ 115. Exclusion cured by ruling, instruction or directed verdict.

¶ 624. The error of excluding competent testimony may sometimes be cured by treating it in an instruction as if it were in evidence.—Smith's Appeal, 52 Mich. 415.

¶ 625. An erroneous ruling excluding evidence offered to prove a custom as immaterial is held cured by a charge recognizing a general custom of the same character, under limitations as favorable to the party complaining as he was entitled to claim.—Clark v. Cox, 32 Mich. 204.

¶ 626. Where testimony offered to show the real character of an ambiguous instrument might have aided the jury to a better understanding of the matters involved, the erroneous exclusion thereof is prejudicial, even though the court in its charge to the jury subsequently adapts the construction claimed for such instrument by the party who offered the testimony.—Germain v. Central Lumber Co., 116 Mich. 245.

¶ 627. In an action for removing wood from land of which the ownership is disputed by the parties in consequence of a disagreement as to the boundary, rulings relating to the ownership of the land or of the wood, or excluding documentary proof of land contracts under which defendant claimed, become immaterial under a charge that the plaintiff cannot recover if the boundary is where defendant claims it to be.—Beeman v. Black, 49 Mich. 598.

¶ 628. An erroneous rejection of testimony is cured by the withdrawal from the jury of the question to which it pertains.—Bamlet Realty Co. v. Doff, 183 Mich. 694.

¶ 629. Where a question is answered under objection, and the answer is afterwards stricken out on motion of the objecting party, and the charge to the jury is such as to exclude from their consideration the subject-matter of such question and answer, the plaintiff in error has no ground for complaint, whether the exclusion of the evidence was proper or not.—Hill v. Robinson, 23 Mich. 24.

¶ 630. In a former suit against defendant for injury, plaintiff had alleged in his declaration certain permanent injuries. Plaintiff recovered in that suit, but the court directed the jury not to allow damages for the permanent injuries alleged. In the present suit for injury on a different occasion the court allowed defendant to introduce the declaration of the former suit to conclude the plaintiff as to allegations of permanent injury made in that declaration, and refused to permit plaintiff to show that he had no personal knowledge of the contents of said declaration. Held, that in view of the fact that the court made it clear to the jury in the present case that the plaintiff did not recover for the alleged permanent injuries in the former case, the rulings were not prejudicial error.—Beattie v. Detroit United Ry., 158 Mich. 243.

¶ 631. In replevin by a wife, of property seized on execution against the husband, the erroneous exclusion of the record of the suit against the husband and the execution and levy thereunder, was without prejudice where the jury was expressly charged that plaintiff could recover only such things as she had proven to be her property.—Vicborn v. Pollock, 133 Mich. 524.

¶ 632. Defendant, seeking to show that certain logs taken over by him were of no value for the purpose of raising an inference that he did not make a contract for which they were a consideration, is not harmed by exclusion of cross-examination tending to show that they were cut in an unworkmanlike manner and exclusion of his own direct testimony as to how many logs he got, where the court afterward recalled its ruling and signified that the evidence would be admitted, which the defendant's counsel did not follow up.—Howe v. Morey, 141 Mich. 388.

¶ 633. Where a son about to file a claim for services against his father's estate changed it by attempting to erase certain items and did not make affidavit as to such items, in an action on a rejected claim, refusal of the court to permit the erased claim to be read to the jury as showing a different value placed on the services is not reversible error in view of an offer of the court to permit counsel to show any statement made by claimant at other times.—Abel v. Roosenraad, 173 Mich. 93.

¶ 634. It is not material error to strike out evidence if the court afterwards correctly directs a verdict.—Larkin v. Mitchell & Rowland L. Co., 42 Mich. 296.

§ 116. Exclusion cured by finding, verdict, or judgment.

¶ 635. The exclusion of testimony to a certain fact is harmless error where the verdict shows the jury reached the conclusion desired by the party offering such testimony.—Brockway v. Patterson, 72 Mich. 122.

¶ 636. The error, if any, of excluding testimony to impeach a witness who seeks to show that defendant did not act in good faith, is cured by a verdict finding that he did act in good faith.—Clark v. Field, 42 Mich. 342.

¶ 637. Plaintiff's assignment of error, in an action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff by derailment of one of defendant's street cars at a certain switch, on exclusion of testimony that defendant's cars had been derailed at this switch in a similar manner on former occasions, offered to show defendant's knowledge and negligence, held disposed of by verdict in plaintiff's favor.—Griggs v. Saginaw & F. Ry. Co., 196 Mich. 258.

¶ 638. The exclusion of testimony offered in favor of one who has presented a claim against the estate of a deceased person for services rendered, cannot constitute reversible error where the verdict was found for claimant, and a verdict for a larger amount would have been set aside as excessive.—In re McNamara's Estate, 155 Mich. 585; McNamara v. Michigan Trust Co., Id.

¶ 639. Where an objection has been sustained to a question which was put with the view of establishing a fact which the court afterwards found in favor of the party who puts the question, that ruling becomes immaterial and will not be reviewed.—Webber v. Donnelly, 33 Mich. 469.

¶ 640. If testimony goes not to the right but to the extent of recovery, its exclusion is not prejudicial error where the jury finds no cause of action.—Manning v. Bresnahan, 63 Mich. 584.

¶ 641. Where the jury finds for defendant in an action for damages, the contentions of plaintiff that the court erred in excluding testimony which tended to enhance damages, will not be considered in this court.—Hammond v. Porter, 150 Mich. 328.

¶ 642. It is not prejudicial error to refuse offers of evidence to show good faith where such evidence had already been admitted and the jury had found the fact.—Clark v. Field, 42 Mich. 342.

¶ 643. In trover for the conversion of timber evidence that defendant, before cutting the timber, bought the land from one claiming to have a tax-title, was offered to show that defendant in cutting the timber honestly supposed that he owned the land and was acting in good faith. Held that, as punitive damages were not sought or given, but only the value of the logs at the place to which defendant took them, the rejection of such evidence could do no harm.—Grant v. Smith, 26 Mich. 201.

¶ 644. A specific finding that there had been a settlement renders it harmless error to exclude evidence not bearing on that question.—Stevens v. Beardsley, 134 Mich. 506.

¶ 645. The exclusion of cross-examination of the defendant as to her nonperformance of an alleged collateral agreement is not error where the jury subsequently finds that no such agreement existed.—Richmond v. Nye, 126 Mich. 602.

¶ 646. The erroneous exclusion of a letter offered in evidence by plaintiff becomes harmless when the jury finds against the only defendant against whom it would have been competent.—Schloss v. Estey, 114 Mich. 429.

¶ 647. Exclusion of evidence that an insolvent debtor had settled another small claim on a small percentage is harmless to sellers claiming fraud against a bona fide purchaser from the buyer, where the good faith of the purchase by the latter for value is established by the verdict.—Schloss v. Estey, 114 Mich. 429.

¶ 648. In an action for instalments due on a contract to sell all rights in a secret society wherein the plaintiff agreed to translate the ritual into English the exclusion of cross-examination as to the plaintiff's ability to translate ritual is not harmful where the jury must have found that the defendant never offered the plaintiff an opportunity for such translation.—Burt v. Greene, 125 Mich. 328.

§ 117. Exclusion cured by stipulation or admission of counsel.

By withdrawal of theory or evidence, see post § 118.

¶ 649. The exclusion from evidence of a contract that is legally admissible is harmless error where its provisions are fully covered by the admitted facts.—Ellis v. Whitehead, 95 Mich. 105.

¶ 650. Any error in the exclusion of testimony in a personal injury case, as to plaintiff's earning power, was eliminated by the concession of defendant's counsel that plaintiff had been able to work every day up to the time of the accident.—Hamilton v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 135 Mich. 95.

§ 118. ——By withdrawal of theory or evidence.

See also ante ¶ 628.

¶ 651. Declaration upon special contract and on common counts; evidence tending to establish both; error in rejecting defendant's offer to show set-off held not cured by plaintiff's withdrawing all evidence under common counts.—Kelly v. McKenna, 18 Mich. 381.

§ 119. Failure of proof cured by verdict or findings.

¶ 652. The absence from the record of any showing of the amount due on a writ of attachment, under which a sheriff claimed to hold property replevied from him by a vendee of the attachment debtor, is immaterial where the case is submitted to the jury upon the question whether or not the transfer was fraudulent as against creditors, and the jury find that it was not so fraudulent.—Partlow v. Swigart, 90 Mich. 61.

§ 120. Refusal to strike out cured by later ruling or other evidence.

¶ 653. Error in a bastardy trial in refusing to strike out testimony is cured by subsequent ruling striking out such testimony.—People v. Keefer, 103 Mich. 83.

¶ 654. Error in refusing to strike out an answer of a witness as to a matter of which he had not shown full personal knowledge was rendered immaterial where the objecting party's testimony admitted the fact as set forth in such answer.—Williams v. Towl, 65 Mich. 204.

¶ 655. It was not prejudicial to refuse to strike out testimony as to a memorandum of an oral contract made by one of the parties at the time, where the terms of the contract were otherwise proved by two uncontradicted witnesses.—Robinson v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 103 Mich. 607.

¶ 656. It is harmless error to refuse to strike out the answer of a witness as being a conclusion of law, and will not cause a reversal where the subject was fully covered by the same witness showing in detail the circumstances summarized by him and which was technically a conclusion of law.—Churchill v. Mace, 148 Mich. 456.

§ 121. Erroneous questions and rulings cured by answers.

By negative or noncommittal answers, see post § 122.

By failure or refusal to answer, see post § 123.

Erroneous question cured by answer favorable to party objecting, see ante § 46.

Irresponsive answer as harmless in view of other testimony, see also Examination of Witnesses ¶ 157.

¶ 657. Where, in answer to an erroneously allowed question concerning remote expressions of pain, the witness did not testify to such expressions but merely described her appearance and condition, the error was not prejudicial.—Laughlin v. Grand Rapids Street R. Co., 80 Mich. 154.

¶ 657a. Error in asking a witness, not shown to have had any knowledge on which to predicate an opinion as to the soundness of a boy's mind, what the witness believed on that subject is harmless, where the answer simply states that at times he "appeared to be" bright and other times not as bright as other children.—Keyser v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 66 Mich. 390.

¶ 658. Where it is not disputed that plaintiff's right to commissions depends upon the law of custom, evidence as to what is a fair and reasonable compensation is not prejudicial, if admitted, where the answer fixed the same compensation as established by the custom.—Obenauer v. Solomon, 151 Mich. 570.

¶ 659. In an action for trespass on land by cutting timber, held that the asking of a question whether the construction of a logging road was a damage or benefit to the tract was not prejudicial error where the answer of the witness was that it would depend upon circumstances whether the prosective landowner intended to log his land and how he intended to log it and whether the logging road there was a good one or a poor one, and the answer to the other question was that the damage to the land would be the amount of the value of the timber that had been cut in logging the road.—Connor v. McRae, 193 Mich. 682.

¶ 660. In an action of trespass vi et armis, a question put to a medical witness—"if the plaintiff is now suffering pain, etc., what would you say is the cause, which he did not have before this injury"—is cured of its fault in invading the province of the jury by an answer that an injury to the ankle of that kind would cause pain and much weakness for much time and might cause other pains.—Noller v. Wright, 138 Mich. 416.

¶ 661. In an action by a bank against its president for negligence in loaning the bank's funds, it is not prejudicial to ask the borrower, who was the cashier of the bank, why he did not apply to the full board for the loan where he answers that it was customary to discount nearly all paper before the board knew anything about it.—Commercial Bank of Bay City v. Chatfield, 127 Mich. 407.

¶ 662. A medical witness' answer that the injury he found plaintiff suffering from "could be produced" by the cause sued on cures any error in remarking as part of a ruling that the witness might state whether it "would be likely" to produce the injury or "would be natural to contribute to" it.—Boehm v. City of Detroit, 141 Mich. 277.

¶ 663. Judgment will not be reversed for permitting a question to be asked a witness, where the record does not contain the response given, for there is no error if the answer to such question was not prejudicial.—Crane Lumber So. v. Otter Creek Lumber Co., 79 Mich. 307.

§ 122. ——By negative or noncommittal answers.

¶ 664. Where an objection to a question is improperly overruled, and the witness in reply to it says, "I can't say," the answer renders the question immaterial, and an exception to the ruling cannot be sustained on error.—Peck v. Snyder, 13 Mich. 21.

¶ 665. In an action of trespass on land for cutting timber where it appeared that the defendant cut a logging road over defendant's tract to a lake, held that the propounding of question to the plaintiff upon cross-examination as to whether he had any sinister motive in wishing to prevent the defendant from transporting the timber from the shore of lake and whether he wanted to harass them or prevent them from marketing the timber, was harmless error where the witness answered in the negative.—Connor v. McRae, 193 Mich. 682.

¶ 666. Where defendant is cross-examined as to an alleged conversation with plaintiff, and denies the conversation, the questions can do him no harm.—Keables v. Christie, 47 Mich. 594.

¶ 667. Where a booming company was sued for the damages caused by its flowing lands, it was held that it could not have been prejudiced by, and could not complain of the allowance on the cross-examination of its president of, the question whether the company had not paid claims against them for flowing lands, when the answer negatived any such compromise.—Grand Rapids Booming Co. v. Jarvis, 30 Mich. 308.

¶ 668. Where, against objection, an answer is permitted to a question which is objectionable only because it is calculated to draw out incompetent testimony, if the witness knows nothing on the subject, or if his answer is beneficial to the objecting party, it is not an error for which judgment will be reversed even though the ruling be incorrect.—Hill v. Robinson, 23 Mich. 24.

§ 123. ——By failure or refusal to answer.

¶ 669. Where questions are not answered at all, or are answered in a way favorable to the party complaining, no harm can result from their being allowed.—Bartlett v. Jenkins, 150 Mich. 682.

¶ 670. Permitting a question to be put to a witness is not prejudicial error where the question remains unanswered.—Church v. John Davis & Co., 93 Mich. 477.

¶ 671. Where an improper question is asked and objection to it overruled, no error is committed if the witness makes no answer. Larson v. Home Tel. Co., 164 Mich. 295.

¶ 672. In an action for damages for assault and battery, where plaintiff claimed to have sustained a hernia, the putting of a question to a physician as to whether in the treatment which he was required to give plaintiff it was necessary that he make any investigation as to whether or not a patient had a hernia and its answer were not reversible error where the objectionable part of the question, as to whether it was necessary to make such investigation, was not answered.—Matthews v. Lamberton, 198 Mich. 746.

§ 124. Invited errors in evidence.

Necessity of raising question in lower court, see Saving Questions, I.

¶ 673. A party who first inquired as to the contents of a memorandum cannot complain that the other party was permitted to show what it contained.—Robinson v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 103 Mich. 607.

¶ 674. In a suit by plaintiff vendee of land to recover damages for false representations made by defendant vendor to the effect that the land was valuable and suitable for farming and for a home and that a living could be made by suitable cultivation thereof, it is proper to receive evidence not only of climatic or frosty conditions of the farm, but also of other land similarly situated in the neighborhood, and to show that whole sections of land in the vicinity, including the land in question, were so poor in quality as to be abandoned for farm purposes, especially when these questions are gone into by both parties and defendant is treated impartially. —Yanelli v. Littlejohn, 172 Mich. 91.

¶ 675. The defendant cannot complain of the admission of testimony by the companion of the plaintiff in an action for sidewalk injury to the effect that after the accident she stated that she was not thinking of the condition of the walk, where it is brought out on redirect examination consisting of a part of the conversation drawn out by the defendant on cross-examination.—Wilkins v. City of Flint, 128 Mich. 262.

¶ 676. On a contract to sell lambs at a price sheared or a greater price unsheared, the buyer to have the option and the sale having been made unsheared, it is not open to the seller to complain of the refusal to strike out his testimony on cross-examination in the buyer's action as to the amount received for the wool, where he himself went into that matter on his direct examination.—Aulls v. Young, 98 Mich. 231.

C. IN INSTRUCTIONS, ARGUMENTS AND TRIAL PRACTICE.

§ 125. Instructions cured by other instructions.

[Note. There are numerous decisions in terms that an error in one part of the charge is cured by other parts of the charge. These decisions have been treated as precedents on the rule that the charge will be construed as a whole and taken to have carried to the jury such meaning as its entirety conveys. See Instructions, II, C.]

Instruction specifically corrected or retracted, see post § 126.

Failure or refusal to charge, see post § 127.

Erroneous evidence cured by instruction, see ante, III, B.

Instruction as to necessity of certificate to constitute one member in benefit society, rendered harmless by subsequent instruction, see Fraternal Associations § 79.

¶ 677. If an instruction is erroneous, the fact that other instructions are inconsistent with it will not cure the error, as it cannot be known which the jury followed.—Brown v. Marshall, 47 Mich. 576.

¶ 678. Where the jury apparently accepted and acted upon an erroneous instruction given by the trial judge on his own motion, it was none the less damaging error because accompanied by an opposing instruction given on request of one of the parties.—Sterling v. Callahan, 94 Mich. 536.

§ 126. ——Instruction specifically corrected or retracted.

¶ 679. An error in a detached portion of a charge may be specifically corrected by an instruction subsequently given substantially as asked.—Dresser v. Blair, 28 Mich. 501.

¶ 680. One is not injured by the court's incorrectly stating, in the charge to the jury, his theory of the case, where, on attention being called to the matter, the erroneous statement is at once corrected and made to correspond substantially to such theory.—Blumeno v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 101 Mich. 325.

¶ 681. A charge stating the elements of damage for personal injury, and including among others expense of medical treatment and nursing, loss of earning power, etc., which belong to the husband, is purged of the error; where, on being reminded by counsel that plaintiff is a married woman, the court retracts that portion of the charge and tells the jury not to consider it, and restricts the damages to compensation.—Atherton v. Bancroft, 114 Mich. 241.

¶ 682. Where, in an action to recover damages for injury to machinery in removing it from a mill, the jury has been instructed that defendant should have removed the machinery in such a way as not to cause any injury, a further instruction that defendant is only liable if he removed the machinery so improperly that it was injured, prevents misapprehension.—Wreggitt v. Barnett, 99 Mich. 477.

¶ 683. A statement in the charge, that it is the contention of plaintiff that he went to defendant and made a designated statement, is not available error; where the court, on objection being made, withdraws the statement as made in that language and says that the contention of plaintiff is that that was the effect of what was said between the parties.—Wenzel v. Johnston, 112 Mich. 243.

¶ 684. The erroneous statement in a charge that a party claimed a certain thing to have occurred was held not misleading where it was immediately corrected by the court.—Chaddock v. Tabor, 115 Mich. 27.

¶ 685. A correct instruction as to the liability of a member of a nontrading firm with respect to commercial paper executed by his copartner will not cure the error of the circuit judge in ignoring, in the charge as a whole, the distinction between trading and nontrading firms in such manner as to allow the jury to find liability as in case of a trading partnership.—McPherson v. Bristol, 115 Mich. 258.

¶ 686. In an action for libel for publishing that defendant was a thief, the court erroneously instructed the jury that the burden was on plaintiff to prove the falsity of the words complained of. After the jury had been out two and one-half hours, the court called them in and attempted to correct the charge by referring to detached portions thereof. Held, the court's course did not cure the error.—Schattler v. Daily Herald Co., 162 Mich. 115.

¶ 687. In an action for a sidewalk injury, an instruction charging that the city is bound by law to use all reasonable care and caution to keep its streets and sidewalks safe for travel, is cured by a further specific instruction that the law only imposes upon the city the duty to keep its sidewalks reasonably safe for travel.—Gilson v. City of Cadillac, 134 Mich. 189.

¶ 688. An error in a charge, which was subsequently corrected by further instructions so that the jury could not have been misled thereby, is not ground for reversal.—Whoram v. Township of Argentine, 112 Mich. 20.

¶ 689. An instruction explaining preponderance of evidence as meaning that the testimony shall weigh more, is not prejudicial error as making evidence and testimony synonymous where immediately cured by the court's statement that the verdict must be found from the preponderance of the evidence.—Padgett v. Jacobs, 128 Mich. 632.

¶ 690. Where, upon failure of the jury to agree, the special instructions given them are recalled, and, being charged to find for the defendant, they return a verdict accordingly, the special instructions are superseded and will not be reviewed on error; as the verdict was not found on them, they do not prejudice the plaintiff.—Kelly v. Hendrie, 26 Mich. 255.

¶ 691. Where, after giving an erroneous instruction in the words of a request, the court immediately proceeds to explain what is meant by such instruction, so modifying it that the jury cannot fail to understand correctly the law applicable to the case, the error is cured.—Westra v. Westra's Estate, 101 Mich. 526.

¶ 692. In an action by a son on a claim for labor and services against his father's estate, the court in his charge to the jury inadvertently made reference to a certain sum of money that tended to operate as suggesting a verdict to the jury. The remark was corrected at once, and in other parts of the charge the amount to be found, if any, was fully left to the jury. Held, the remark was not reversible error.—Abel v. Roosenraad, 173 Mich. 93.

§ 127. ——Failure or refusal to charge.

[Note. The rule, so stated, that erroneous refusal of a request is cured by giving the substance of it in a correct charge is treated as merely an equivalent of the rule that it is sufficient to give the substance of a request without giving it in the exact words requested. The cases representing the doctrine will be found in Instructions, III.]

¶ 693. The error committed in refusing a request to charge is not cured by an instruction which is so far argumentative as to be well calculated to impress upon the jury the views of the trial judge upon the question of fact involved in the request.—Warren v. Carpenter, 99 Mich. 287.

¶ 694. Where a request for a proper instruction has been refused and one given which might tend to the very error the requested instruction was designed to avoid, the error is not cured by giving the matter in another part of the charge disassociated from the theory under which requested, unless it also clearly appears that the jury could not have been misled.—McDonald v. City Elec. Ry. Co., 137 Mich. 392.

¶ 695. In a suit to enforce an insurance policy the failure of the court to state to the jury what facts would constitute a waiver, and permitting them to find it as matter of fact from insufficient evidence, is nonprejudicial error, where, the facts being undisputed, the jury should have been charged that waiver was shown.—Towle v. Ionia, Eaton & Barry Farmer's Mut. F. Ins. Co., 91 Mich. 219.

¶ 696. Where the court in its charge to the jury makes an incorrect statement which is corrected by counsel and the court subsequently falls into the same error without its attention being called thereto, it cannot be said that this is reversible error when the former correction was fresh in the minds of all concerned.—Houser v. Carmody, 173 Mich. 121.

§ 129. Instructions cured by verdict, finding or judgment.

By amount of verdict or judgment, see post § 130.
By determinative finding independent of the instruction, see post § 131.
Refusal or failure to instruct cured by verdict or finding, see post § 132.

¶ 697. Error in submitting an issue to the jury is cured by a verdict in favor of the objecting party on that point.—Gates v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 147 Mich. 523.

¶ 698. Judgment will not be reversed for erroneous instructions to the jury cured by the verdict.—Clark v. McGraw, 14 Mich. 139.

¶ 699. Language in instructions, though improper, which in view of the whole charge and the evidence and the verdict did not appear to have improperly influenced the jury will not work a reversal.—People ex rel. Esper v. Detroit & S. Plank-Road Co., 131 Mich. 30.

¶ 700. Where the verdict shows that the jury could not have applied an instruction which was alleged to have been erroneous the supreme court will not review on appeal the correctness of the instruction.—Major v. Brewster, 148 Mich. 623.

¶ 701. Where the question of the negligence of a street car company in an action brought by the parents for damages for the death of a child was one for the jury, and they found for the plaintiff, he cannot complain of the charge given, as the error, if any, was harmless.—Sceba v. Manistee Ry. Co., 189 Mich. 308.

¶ 702. The proof of loss stated that one cause of death of the insured was a self-inflicted wound. The court instructed that this admission was an item of evidence to bind the plaintiff, widow of the insured, but did not bind the minor son, who was also a beneficiary. The jury found for the plaintiff. Held, that the instruction, though erroneous, was harmless error, since the jury held that the admission did not prove the suicide of the insured.—Ferris v. Loyal Americans of the Republic, 152 Mich. 314.

¶ 703. The court's omission to limit recovery to cash value of property insured, that being limit of insurer's liability under its charter, in a suit upon an insurance policy, is error without prejudice where value specially found by jury necessitates verdict for insurance and interest.—Russell v. Detroit Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 80 Mich. 407.

¶ 704. Where defendants to an action on a note relied upon the recoupment of damages for an alleged breach of warranty, and there was no evidence to show a warranty, and the jury did not find that there was any, a modification of the defendant's request to charge on the subject of damages was immaterial.—Worth v. McConnell, 42 Mich. 473.

¶ 705. On writ of error by plaintiff in an action of assumpsit for money had and received, it being alleged that, of $1,500 admittedly turned over by plaintiff to defendant for the purchase of a saloon, defendant paid only $1,200 therefor, held that the trial court might properly have directed a verdict for defendant, and, as the jury found for the latter, any errors in the court's charge could not be said to have been prejudicial.—Hauser v. Goebel Brewing Co., 199 Mich. 168.

¶ 706. An erroneous instruction on the burden of proof as to the delivery of a deed by a deceased grantor to the defendant in an action of ejectment does not constitute a miscarriage of justice so as to authorize a reversal of the case under Pub. Acts 1915, No. 89, and Pub Acts 1915, No. 314, where a verdict was rendered for defendant, and, if a verdict had been rendered for plaintiff, it would have been necessary to set it aside as against the great weight of testimony.—Barras v. Barras, 192 Mich. 584.

¶ 707. A judgment will not be reversed on the ground that the charge of the trial court obscured the issue and presented improper theories of recovery, where the issues were simple and were argued to the jury; where both parties refrained from suggesting amendments; and where the verdict was not clearly against the weight of the evidence.—Baxter v. Cowhey, 168 Mich. 144.

¶ 708. Plaintiff having been injured on the evening of December 10, because of the removal of a plank from a sidewalk, of which defect it was not claimed defendant city had notice, the court as requested by defendant should have instructed the jury that if the plank was in place December 8 or 9, verdict should be for defendant; but as the jury, in answer to a special question, found that the plank was not in place on either of the days named, the error was without prejudice.—Germaine v. City of Muskegon, 105 Mich. 218.

¶ 709. An erroneous charge cannot be treated as harmless because of a special finding negativing the contract which was the subject of the charge, where the finding itself may have been influenced by the error. Letts v. Letts, 91 Mich. 596.

¶ 710. Errors in the charge will not be considered, where on plaintiff's own showing a verdict should have been directed for the defendant and the jury arrived at the correct conclusion under the instructions given.—Jensen v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 102 Mich. 176.

¶ 711. In a suit over a disputed account, plaintiff cannot predicate error on the remarks of the court about certain items where those items are determined in plaintiff's favor.—Harper v. Concrete Pub. Co., 166 Mich. 429.

§ 130. ——By amount of verdict or judgment.

Amount of verdict as indication of harmlessness, see ante § 6.

¶ 712. A jury will not be deemed to have been misled by an instruction open to the construction that it permitted a recovery for loss of earning capacity where, from the amount of the verdict, it is apparent that such loss of earning capacity was not considered.—Buxton v. Ainsworth, 153 Mich. 315.

¶ 713. A judgment for plaintiff in an action of trespass on the case will not be reversed because of an erroneous instruction allowing exemplary damages, where it is clear from the testimony that the verdict does not exceed plaintiff's actual damages.—Durfee v. Newkirk, 83 Mich. 522.

¶ 714. A widow's damages for loss of support by reason of her husband's death cannot be measured solely by her expectancy of life without considering his life expectancy and his ability to support her during the time he might have lived; but a charge which failed to make this clear to the jury was not deemed prejudicial where the verdict was so small that it was evident that the probabilities of the husband's life must have been considered in fixing the amount.—Brockway, v. Patterson, 72 Mich. 122.

¶ 715. The giving of erroneous instructions permitting a recovery for improper items is harmless error under Pub. Acts 1915, No. 89, where the verdict of the jury is for a sum equaling, if not exceeding, the amount to which plaintiff is entitled.—Montgomery v. Montgomery's Estate, 191 Mich. 398.

¶ 716. An instruction that a farmer was entitled to the usual commission of real estate agents in the vicinity for selling a neighbor's farm, when the measure of damages should have been the reasonable value of his services, is harmless error, where the amount awarded was less than such commission would have been, and the defendant did not offer to show that it was worth less than what the plaintiff claimed.—Morehouse v. Shepard, 183 Mich. 472.

¶ 717. In an action on rescission of a sale of horses the fact that an instruction, after correctly stating the rule as to the defendant's liability, erroneously describes the measure of damages is not prejudicial where the verdict is for the purchase price thus showing rescission found by the jury and the purchase price as the measure of damages.—Housding v. Solomon, 127 Mich. 654.

¶ 718. In an action of trespass where plaintiff was only entitled to the value, with interest, of the article wrongfully converted, an erroneous instruction as to the damages on account of the loss of the use of the article was not considered ground for reversing a judgment amounting to a less sum than competent testimony showed the value to be.—Blaisdell v. Scally, 84 Mich. 149.

¶ 719. Any error in giving an instruction giving the impression that the jury might be governed by sympathy in reaching a verdict, held harmless error in view of the character of the injury and amount of recovery.—Pool v. Township of Montague, 194 Mich. 476.

¶ 720. Erroneous instruction allowing exemplary damages is not ground for reversal where it is clear from the testimony that verdict did not exceed plaintiff's actual damages.—Durfee v. Newkirk, 83 Mich. 522.

¶ 721. In trespass by an electric street railway company against a railroad company for cutting plaintiff's wires, defendant is not prejudiced by the court's mentioning in its instructions the inconvenience that resulted to the public from the cutting and stoppage of car traffic, the jury giving no damages to the public but simply allowing plaintiff's items as claimed.—Saginaw Union Street v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 91 Mich. 657.

¶ 722. In an action for conversion of corporate stock, an instruction as to the measure of damages was held not error where it led to a recovery no greater than would have followed had the rule been laid down that plaintiff could recover the highest price reached by the stock within reasonable time after he had learned of the conversion, and within which he could go into the market and repurchase it, with interest.—Hubbell v. Blandy, 87 Mich. 209.

¶ 723. Where, in an action for assault and battery, the declaration alleges an assault without cause, provocation, or excuse, and the damages awarded are only a moderate compensation for the injuries suffered, a failure to instruct against the recovery of punitive damages is not reversible error.—Robinson v. Stimer, 154 Mich. 244.

¶ 724. Erroneous instruction for nominal damages held not prejudicial where substantial verdict returned.—Hitchcock v. Supreme Tent of Knights of Maccabees, 107 Mich. 391.

¶ 725. Any error in an instruction allowing interest in addition to the amount claimed in the declaration is harmless where a verdict is rendered for the amount claimed in the declaration.—Miller v. Du Val, 191 Mich. 386.

¶ 726. Any error in the charge of the court in an action on a fire insurance policy was harmless where the amount of the verdict was less than the proofs showed the loss to have been.—Veenstra v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Ottawa and Allegan Counties, 195 Mich. 55.

¶ 727. In a suit for injuries by an automobile the trial court instructed that plaintiff was entitled to recover damages for the loss of sense of smell and taste during the rest of her life, where there was evidence of said loss at the time of the trial, but none that said loss would be permanent. Plaintiff recovered only a small verdict, and the testimony clearly indicated that the damages were not excessive. Held, said instruction, not having resulted in injury to defendant, did not constitute reversible error.—Bouma v. Dubois, 169 Mich. 422.

¶ 728. An erroneous instruction authorizing a verdict for nominal damages is not prejudicial, where a verdict is returned for a substantial amount.—Hitchcock v. Supreme Tent Knights of Maccabees, 107 Mich. 391.

¶ 729. Error in charging that in slander for imputing larceny from defendant's premises the jury should be careful to avoid awarding "excessive" damages, if only a trespass was imputed as the words were understood, which charge might have induced the jury to give some damages where none was allowable, is not ground for reversal; where a charge that the words were actionable per se would have been justified, and where only $60.00 was allowed.—Hinchman v. Knight, 132 Mich. 532.

§ 131. ——By determinative finding independent of the instruction.

¶ 730. Instructions to the jury are rendered immaterial where the jury find that the case does not turn upon the matters discussed.—Marcott v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co., 49 Mich. 99.

¶ 731. An instruction in an action for false imprisonment against two defendants, that the jury would be limited in its award of exemplary damages to such sum as would constitute a just verdict against the least culpable, is harmless where the jury found in favor of one of the defendants and assessed damages only against the other.—Love v. Halladay, 139 Mich. 575.

¶ 732. Where the jury finds for defendant in an action for damages, the contentions of plaintiff that the court erred in charging the jury respecting the measure of damages will not be considered in this court.—Hammond v. Porter, 150 Mich. 328.

¶ 733. Error in instructions on the liability of defendant for treble damages for cutting timber is harmless where the jury relieved the defendant from liability beyond single damages.—North Michigan Land & Live Stock Co. v. Kneeland, 149 Mich. 495.

¶ 734. An erroneous instruction that is rendered unimportant by jury's finding upon a special question of fact is error without prejudice.—Cook v. Canny, 96 Mich. 398.

¶ 735. A charge erroneously ascribing to an agent the power to extend the liability of the principal on a lease is harmless where the jury found that the alleged act of the agent did not extend it but disclaimed any authority to do so and left the lease in force.—Stevens v. Pantlind, 95 Mich. 145.

¶ 736. If no negligence is found the question of contributory negligence, raised on the instructions, is immaterial.—Scheel v. City of Detroit, 130 Mich. 51.

¶ 737. A defendant in replevin is not prejudiced by an instruction which, as he claims, fixes the value of the property as the measure of plaintiff's damages, where the jury assess no sum as damages.—Guerold v. Holtz, 108 Mich. 118.

¶ 738. Where the jury found the full amount of defendant's claim of set-off, an erroneous instruction allowing a certain deduction from such claim became error without prejudice.—Gutta-Percha & Rubber Mfg. Co. v. Wood, 84 Mich. 452.

¶ 739. An instruction that under an agreement for the purchase of an interest in a patent defendant must pay a certain sum whether the invention is a practical success or not is rendered non-prejudicial by the jury's finding that the invention is such a success.—Cook v. Canny, 96 Mich. 398.

¶ 740. A determination by the jury that the city was not negligent, in an action for injury alleged to have been caused by falling into a hole in a cross-walk, renders it unnecessary to consider assignments of error as to instructions on the measure of damages, contributory negligence and the cause of the injury, since none of such assigned errors could affect the finding that the city was not negligent which was conclusive of the case.—Scheel v. City of Detroit, 130 Mich. 51.

¶ 741. An instruction as to the measure of damages even if erroneous is not prejudicial to the plaintiff where the verdict shows the jury found no cause of action.—Sterling v. City of Detroit, 134 Mich. 22.

¶ 742. Errors in charging as to alleged fraudulent representations on the part of the owner of a farm, in an action for breach of contract of purchase, are harmless, where, the jury find that the representation upon which defendant relied was as a matter of fact true.—Calbeck v. Ford, 140 Mich. 48.

¶ 743. The fact that the instructions authorized the jury to find in favor of the plaintiff notwithstanding that the mortgage under which plaintiff claimed the property was seized was fraudulent is of no importance where the record shows that the jury found specially that the mortgage was not fraudulent.—Curtiss v. Curtiss, 143 Mich. 676.

¶ 744. In trover for property seized to satisfy a tax, the court charged that the defendant was entitled to seize the property if it belonged to the third person whose tax it was taken to satisfy but that if plaintiff was owner at the time of the seizure he was entitled to recover, held that the verdict for the defendant was conclusive against the ownership of plaintiff and that any error in the ruling or charge of the court as to rights of the third person was immaterial, if erroneous, and was of no effect as to plaintiff's rights.—Sutton v. Green, 51 Mich. 118.

¶ 745. In an action to recover on a policy of insurance where it was contended that there was misrepresentation as to the state of the assured's health, and the evidence showed that assured was in good health at the time of signing the application, unless she had heart disease, and the jury found she did not have heart disease, it was harmless error for the court to instruct the jury in substance that if the deceased at the time of making the warranty of sound health, did not know of her unsoundness and answered the question honestly it would not avoid the policy where he also explicitly charged that if the assured was not in sound health, if she had any disease when she made the warranty that affected her general health, it would be a breach of warranty and would avoid the policy.—Perry v. John Hancock Mut. Life Ins. Co., 147 Mich. 645.

§ 132. Refusal or failure to instruct cured by verdict or finding.

¶ 746. Refusal to charge on an issue found by the verdict for appellant is harmless.—Schloss v. Estey, 114 Mich. 429.

¶ 747. Where the court has failed to instruct the jury that the burden of proof is on defendant to prove a set-off, its omission is not prejudicial error when such set-off has not been allowed by the jury.—American Seed Co. v. Cole, 174 Mich. 42.

¶ 748. It is harmless error to have refused to give requested instructions where the jury reached the desired result without hearing them.—Fowles v. Rupert, 143 Mich. 246.

¶ 748a. A refusal to charge a correct abstract proposition is cured by the refusal of the jury to find any fact to which it could relate.—Gallaway v. Burr, 32 Mich. 332.

¶ 749. Where the only instruction as to damages was that if the jury considered the question of damages, they should award plaintiff such an amount as would fairly compensate him for the injuries resulting from the accident, error if any in refusing an instruction that the jury should not include any amount for loss of earning power, because it did not appear that plaintiff's injuries had affected his ability to earn money, is not prejudicial, where the amount awarded by the jury is not an unreasonable compensation for plaintiff's injuries, aside from any loss of earning power.—Clemens v. Gem Fibre Package Co., 153 Mich. 495.

¶ 750. In an action against a city for damage to a foundation to a building caused by a pressure of an embankment, a refusal to instruct that the plaintiff cannot recover for the cost of a new brick foundation is not prejudicial where the court did instruct the jury to consider two elements, the damage to the building and the loss of rents, and the verdict shows that the cost of a new foundation was not taken into consideration.—Abrey v. City of Detroit, 127 Mich. 374.

¶ 751. Refusal to charge in an action under the Civil Damage Act on the question of exemplary damages is harmless where the verdict under proper instructions that plaintiff was entitled to no damages at all has found for defendant.—Johnson v. Johnson, 145 Mich. 586.

¶ 752. In an action for criminal conversation the plaintiff is not prejudiced by a refusal to instruct the jury that collusion could not be inferred from certain facts where the instruction made the whole case turn on the sole question of whether the defendant was guilty of the act of intercourse and the defendant disclaimed any theory of conspiracy, and the jury had found for the plaintiff.—Smith v. Hockenberry, 146 Mich. 7.

¶ 753. Refusal of the court to strike out an item of damage is not prejudicial where the verdict shows that the jury disregarded it.—Commercial Bank of Bay City v. Chatfield, 127 Mich. 407.

¶ 754. Where the jury has found a fact adversely to the plaintiff, a refusal of the trial court to give a requested instruction that plaintiff is entitled to recover if said fact is found in his favor, is harmless error.—Belknap v. Township of Benton, 169 Mich. 58.

¶ 755. In an action for negligent injury, testimony that defendant refused to go with plaintiff to a surgeon after the accident was introduced without objection. Held, that a refusal to instruct the jury that this was immaterial could not be considered prejudicial error where the damages were not excessive and were for the same amount upon two trials of the cause.—Kinney v. Folkerts, 84 Mich. 616.

¶ 756. The refusal of a request that knowledge of facts sufficient to put an ordinarily prudent man on inquiry as to fraud would be sufficient to avoid a sale without active participation in the fraud by the purchaser, is not harmful error where the general charge covered the question and the jury would not have arrived at the verdict which it gave without finding that the sale in question was not fraudulent.—Gordon v. Alexander, 122 Mich. 107.

¶ 757. In a suit to recover against defendant for negligently permitting fire to escape upon plaintiff's premises, the failure of the trial court to instruct fully as to the rule of damages involved is not prejudicial error where no request for such a charge is made by defendant and where the verdict is many times smaller than the total value given to the property destroyed in the testimony of the plaintiff.—Ripley v. Priest, 169 Mich. 388.

¶ 758. Error in refusing requests on phases of want of probable cause in an action for malicious prosecution is not cured by verdict for defendant after submission of the question of malice, which if found lacking would have disposed of the case, where after charging on advice of counsel as a factor in malice the court so charged on the rights of the prosecuting complainant as to indicate a criminal infraction of right amounting to probable cause. The effect of so charging was that the jury might have found probable cause and no liability, though they also found that the advice of counsel was not made on such a disclosure as to eliminate malice.—Tryon v. Pingree, 112 Mich. 388.

¶ 759. The refusal of an instruction in an action against a township for personal injuries sustained by falling upon a defective bridge, stating that if a large majority of the people of the township who passed over the bridge did not observe any defect, it could not be said that the defect was so apparently visible as to give the township notice of its existence, and the giving of an instruction warranting the jury to find defendant liable for a latent defect, was not harmful even if erroneous, where the jury by answers to special findings found that the defect was visible to persons traveling over the bridge, and was generally known to the township prior to the accident in question.—Pearl v. Township of Benton, 136 Mich. 697.

¶ 760. In an action on a policy providing for nonliability for explosion unless fire ensued and then for the damage by fire only, the question whether the evidence warranted the submission of plaintiff's claim that the building in question fell in consequence of an explosion, did not require discussion, where the verdict was for a proportion of the entire amount and not the proportion of a smaller amount, as it would have been had the jury found that the building fell because of an explosion.—N. & M. Friedman Co. v. Atlas Assur. Co., 133 Mich. 212.

¶ 761. In an action for personal injuries to a passenger on a street car where there was nothing in the record outside of the declaration to indicate that the plaintiff was claiming for a permanent injury, held that though it would have been well for the court to have told the jury that there was no evidence of permanent injury it was not reversible error not to do so, it being apparent that the verdict would not have been less if the charge had been given.—Jozefiak v. Detroit United Ry., 193 Mich. 318.

§ 133. Submission or withdrawal of question cured by finding or verdict.

Submission or withholding of exhibits cured by other things, see post § 134.

¶ 762. It is not error to submit a case to the jury, which finds in favor of plaintiff, where the trial court might have directed a verdict for plaintiff.—Gallant v. Miles, 200 Mich. 532.

¶ 763. In an action for breach of contract it was harmless error in submitting plaintiff's claim to the jury where the verdict was one of no cause of action.—Fowles v. Rupert, 143 Mich. 246.

¶ 764. Where a rule of law is in accord with the finding of a jury the verdict may be allowed to stand even though the question was improperly left to them.—Allen v. Duffie, 43 Mich., 1.

¶ 765. The error of the trial court in submitting contracts to the jury for construction is harmless where the jury construes them rightly and renders a verdict in favor of the party entitled thereto.—Cutler v. Spens, 191 Mich. 603.

¶ 766. In an action against a carrier to recover damages for injury to a car of horses held that the submission of the question of whether a provision in the contract for the verification of the claim for damages was waived to the jury was harmless error where the jury found for the plaintiff and the court could have disposed of the question adversely to defendant on the ground that defendant did not plead plaintiff's failure to give such notice in accordance with the contract.—Slider v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 194 Mich. 581. (Ostrander, J., dissenting.)

¶ 767. In a will contest it is harmless error to submit the question of undue influence to the jury, in the absence of evidence warranting such submission, where the jury makes a special finding of mental incompetency.—In re Thayer's Estate, 188 Mich. 261.

¶ 768. The error of leaving the legal effect of a written instrument to be determined by the jury will not warrant reversal if a proper construction of the instrument in the light of the other facts determined by the verdict must lead to the same result.—Stadden v. Hazzard, 34 Mich. 76.

¶ 769. Leaving to the jury as a disputed fact, the question of compensation for certain extra articles, which plaintiff had conceded to be a proper charge, was not reversible error, where the verdict showed that the item was allowed.—Allington & Curtis Mfg. Co. v. Detroit Reduction Co., 133 Mich. 427.

¶ 770. One cannot complain of action by which he has not been injured; as where a defendant corporation's claim that it cannot be sued for false pretenses has been left to the jury which finds no cause of action. —McEacheran v. Western Transp. & Coal Co., 97 Mich. 479.

¶ 771. Error in submitting to the jury the question of defendant's negligence in the use of water in putting out a fire in a carload of matches when discovered, was harmless, in an action against a carrier for damages to such goods while in transit, it appearing that the fire was caused by the rough handling of the car, and that an excessive amount of water was used in extinguishing such fire, where the jury did not award damages for negligence in such use of the water. —Modern Match Co. v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 140 Mich. 570.

¶ 772. In an action for damages for alleged illegal sales of intoxicating liquors to an habitual drunkard, it cannot be urged that the question of exemplary damages was erroneously submitted, though the court read the statute providing for such damages to the jury, where no mention was made of exemplary damages in the instructions, and such damages were not allowed.—Spencer v. Johnson, 176 Mich. 278.

¶ 773. In an action on a series of three notes claimed to be in the hands of a bona fide holder, the action of the court in withdrawing the note maturing first from the jury on the ground that it was not transferred until after maturity, if error, cannot be said to be prejudicial where the jury found as to the other two that plaintiff was not a bona fide holder.—Westinghouse Co. v. Gainor, 130 Mich. 398.

§ 134. Submission or withholding of exhibits cured by other thing.

¶ 774. It is not prejudicial error for the court to refuse to allow exhibits to go into the jury room where their contents were plainly produced before the jury upon large sheets of manila paper in heavy writing hung upon a blackboard, so that the jury fully understood them, and one of the attorneys devoted the time allowed him for argument to a discussion of such exhibits.—Silverstone v. London Assurance Corporation, 187 Mich. 333.

§ 135. Failure to direct verdict cured by verdict.

¶ 775. The failure of the court to decide the question of probable cause where the facts were undisputed in an action for damages for false imprisonment, instead of submitting it to the jury, is harmless error where a favorable verdict is returned.—Schneider v. Shepherd, 192 Mich. 82.

¶ 776. A judgment for plaintiff upon verdict directed by the court will not be disturbed on error if his case at least entitled him to go to the jury, and where the only assignment of error relates to the refusal of the court to direct a verdict for defendant.—Michigan Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Mather, 113 Mich. 357.

¶ 777. Where a plaintiff is entitled to a directed verdict, the errors, if any, contained in the charge of the court, are without prejudice, the jury having found in her favor.—Carver v. Sherman, 172 Mich. 264.

§ 136. Cure of irregularities or misconduct in trial.

Of improper comments or remarks by court, see post § 138.
Of improper admonition to jury after retirement, see post § 139.
Manner, course and conduct of trial in general, see Trial, II.

¶ 778. The conduct of the plaintiff, a woman, in a personal injury action, after she has left the stand and cross-examination has been finished, in screaming in the hall outside the court room, to which she immediately goes upon leaving the stand, so as to attract the attention of the court and jury, and that of the next witness, a trained nurse, in leaving the stand at request of plaintiff's counsel to attend plaintiff, is not ground for reversal because of a miscarriage of justice, where the court carefully instructs the jury to give no attention to anything that happened outside the court room, and the verdict was not excessive.—Goldman v. Detroit United Ry., 200 Mich. 543.

¶ 779. On appeal from a decree properly dismissing a bill for want of jurisdiction, questions of regularity of practice will not avail the appellant.—Attorney General ex rel. Foster v. Lake County Sup'rs, 33 Mich. 289.

¶ 780. If it is clear that a decree is not too large the appellate court will not consider the data and the mode of computation used in the court below.—Chadwick v. Chadwick, 59 Mich. 87.

§ 137. ——Continuances and refusals to continue or adjourn.

¶ 781. The action of the court, in an action by an insurance company to compel a railroad company to reimburse it for the amount paid on fire insurance policies on buildings alleged to have been destroyed by fire originating from one of defendant's engines and due to the failure of defendant to keep the engine and machinery in repair, in refusing to grant an adjournment on the ground of surprise, upon application of defendant, because of an amendment to the declaration so as to allege negligent operation of the engine, is harmless error where the plaintiff offers no proof of negligent operation, and does not finally claim it.—Michigan Mut. Home Ins. Co. v. Pere Marquette Ry. Co., 193 Mich. 429.

§ 138. ——Of improper comments or remarks by court.

¶ 782. On the record of a trial of an action of trover brought by an administrator against his decedent's father for the value of property alleged to have been wrongfully converted by defendant, it appeared that much bitterness and hard feeling existed between the parties, and during the cross-examination of one of the parties the court remarked. "Now, this is not a very pleasant affair. Taking the thing altogether, it is a shocking affair—an unpleasant affair on both sides." Held, that while this remark was uncalled for, it could not be deemed prejudicial, especially as the court in charging the jury explained that what he said did not indicate that he had any feeling on either side, but merely that it was sad to see such bitterness between relatives, and stated that the controversy was perfectly legitimate.—Ransom v. Bartley, 70 Mich. 379.

¶ 783. In an action for personal injuries improper remarks of the court held to be harmless error where no injury to the defendant was apparent in the verdict, and none was pointed out.—Murphy v. Manistee Ry. Co., 194 Mich. 595.

¶ 784. Interruption by the court of argument of defendant's counsel held not prejudicial where the only question was as to the amount of damages and the verdict was for only $33, in an action to recover damages for illegal arrest and imprisonment.—Larson v. Feeney, 196 Mich. 1.

§ 139. ——Of improper admonition to jury after retirement.

¶ 785. The action of a trial court, after a jury, which had been out thirty-six hours without being able to reach a verdict, announcing that they are unable to agree, in reminding the jury of the cost of trials to the county and sending them back to consider the case again, as the result of which they reached a verdict, held not to constitute a miscarriage of justice under the Judicature Act, Pub. Acts 1915, No. 314, chap. 50, § 28, so as to necessitate a reversal of such case, in view of the size of the verdict.—Snowden v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 194 Mich. 87.

¶ 786. The statement of the court after the jury had agreed as to the defendant's liability but not as to the amount of damages to be awarded, that they should compromise their differences if possible, is not reversible error, although the use of the word "compromise" was unfortunate, where the verdict rendered does not seem to have been the result of compromise, or that any attempt was made to induce a change of judgment of the jurors against their judgment.—Richardson v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 182 Mich. 206.

§ 140. Argument or misconduct of counsel cured by ruling or instruction.

¶ 787. Objectionable argument by counsel is not ground for reversal where the court instructs the jury to give no consideration to it.—Jackson v. Haverford Cycle Co., 194 Mich. 286.

¶ 788. Where an improper statement is made by counsel in his argument to the jury, it is not reversible error where it had been withdrawn and corrected by the court.—Pruner v. Detroit United Ry., 173 Mich. 146.

¶ 789. Improper conduct and remarks of plaintiff's attorney during the trial does not amount to reversible error where the court promptly interfered and reprimanded him, and did not allow him to complete his statement, and in his charge to the jury instructed it to disregard the remarks of the attorney.—Brockmiller v. Industrial Works, 148 Mich. 642.

¶ 790. Argument of counsel not clearly improper, and which, at the time it was made, occasioned a statement by the trial court to the jury that it was improper and that counsel should not have made it, will not be considered on error.—Robbins v. Magoon & Kimball Co., 193 Mich. 200.

¶ 791. Where improper statements, made by counsel in argument before the jury, are immediately corrected and censured by the court, the injurious effect is counteracted.—Township of Deepriver v. Van Antwerp, 174 Mich. 19.

¶ 792. On appeal to the circuit court from a justice of the peace a remark of counsel as to judgment below is not ground for reversal where an objection was sustained by the court before the sentence was completed.—Millspaugh v. Schultz, 180 Mich. 310.

¶ 793. Where the trial court by addressing the jury corrects specifically the improper argument of plaintiff's counsel and the reviewing court is not convinced that defendant was in any way prejudiced, no reversal can be had.—Rivers v. Bay City Traction & Electric Co., 164 Mich. 696.

¶ 794. Even if the counsel for plaintiff in an action by a switchman against a railroad for personal injuries is guilty of misconduct in referring to the fact that certain persons were fortunate enough to receive their pay from the railroad company, meaning plaintiff's attending physician in particular, such misconduct is not ground for reversal, where the testimony, relating to who had paid plaintiff's medical bill, on which the statement was based, was stricken out by the court and the jury instructed to disregard it.—Sergeant v. Grand Rapids & I. Ry. Co., 198 Mich. 885.

¶ 795. Plaintiff's counsel in an action for libel was allowed, under objection, to read in his opening to the jury various articles which had appeared at different times in the paper that had published the alleged libel, the purpose being to introduce them as tending to show malice. Some of these, being afterward so introduced, were excluded from evidence; others were not offered at all. The judge charged that counsel had, "in his opening, read several articles which at the trial were finally excluded. These should also be withdrawn from your consideration." Held, that the charge was insufficient, as, in saying nothing of the articles which had been read, but not afterward offered in evidence, the jury were left to give them such weight as they chose; and, as extrinsic matters not properly before them, they vitiated the verdict.—Scripps v. Reilly, 35 Mich. 371.

¶ 796. A charge was held insufficient to cure the error of permitting improper matters to be read to the jury by counsel during his opening of the cause.—Scripps v. Reilly, 35 Mich. 371.

¶ 797. An intemperate argument by plaintiff's counsel in an action under the Civil Damage Act, calculated to inflame the jury against the defendant, held cured by the admonition of the court.—Spencer v. Johnson, 185 Mich. 85.

¶ 798. Reversal cannot be had on the ground of remarks of counsel addressed to the court urging the admissibility of a certain line of evidence, where the evidence itself is excluded.—Pelton v. Mayhew, 166 Mich. 546.

¶ 799. Though counsel in opening refers to evidence which was held to be improperly admitted on a former trial, the error is cured where the court warns the jury to disregard such statements.—B. Marx & Son v. King, 177 Mich. 662.

¶ 800. The error committed in permitting counsel in opening his case to read to the jury publications not afterwards offered in evidence, and not admissible, is not cured by subsequent instructions to the jury to disregard them.—Scripps v. Reilly, 35 Mich. 371.

¶ 801. The improper conduct of counsel for plaintiff, in an action by a tenant against his landlord for damages for obtaining possession after termination of the tenancy, under an unlawful writ, in stating to the jury in his argument that plaintiff must have more than $100 damages, for in case he did not get that much, costs would be charged against him and he would obtain nothing, is not reversible error, where objection was made to the argument at the time, and the court immediately stated that the jury should not consider the argument and should not take into consideration the costs or who were to pay them, and also likewise covered the question in his general charge.—Gallant v. Miles, 200 Mich. 532.

¶ 802. In an action by an employee for personal injuries, a statement by plaintiff's counsel in his opening to the jury that he proposed to prove that defendant did not go near plaintiff after the accident, as bearing on the measure of damages, and a subsequent offer of testimony to that effect, are not error requiring reversal, where the court in both instances promptly held the proposed testimony to be incompetent, and nothing appears to show that counsel did not act in good faith.—Hoffman v. Adams, 106 Mich. 111.

¶ 803. The statement of plaintiff's counsel in his opening address to the jury, that the plaintiff had recovered in justices' court, is not reversible error, where the court instructed the jury that the case must be decided from the proof before them, and that they were not to be governed by what occurred in the lower court.—Crawl v. Dancer, 180 Mich. 607.

¶ 804. Erroneous argument imputing to defendant's medical witness craft and unfairness in taking from the womb of an injured woman a sample of pus, and needlessly examining it under the microscope in order to find out if she had any venereal diseases, and imputing to him a reluctance on the stand to admit that such was his real purpose, such argument being wholly unwarranted by the facts and nothing having occurred to direct attention to those diseases, was held not to have been cured by the court's admonition to the offending counsel and such counsel's request that the jury be charged in accordance with the ruling, and the court's reply that he had said all that he deemed essential.—Remey v. Detroit United Ry., 141 Mich. 116.

¶ 805. The statement of counsel for plaintiff in his argument in a personal injury case in the form of a question as to whether there was "a gentleman on this jury who would take that for all the money that could be given" was not reversible error, where the court, at the time the statement was made, stated that the argument was improper, and directed the jury to pay no attention to it, and correctly charged them as to the measure of damages.—Goldman v. Detroit United Ry., 200 Mich. 543.

¶ 806. Where plaintiff called defendant as a witness under the statute, held that the action of counsel for plaintiff in his argument in asking the jury what the inference would be due to the failure of counsel for defendant to call defendant to testify on his own behalf was not reversible error where the court stated that there was no obligation on the part of counsel for defendant, after examining defendant when called by plaintiff, to call him again as a witness.—Buell v. Siderman, 197 Mich. 126.

¶ 807. In a suit for personal injuries against the owner of a building for a failure to provide automatic gates at the elevator shaft, plaintiff's counsel stated in his opening that he would prove defendant painted the elevator shaft and provided an automatic gate after the plaintiff's injury. The statement was excepted to and plaintiff's counsel stated that it would not be proper as bearing upon the question of defendant's negligence but would be offered to prove where the legal duty rested. The court excluded the evidence when offered. Held, defendant was not prejudiced by the statement or by the offering of the testimony in view of the subsequent action.—Barfoot v. White Star Line, 170 Mich. 349.

¶ 808. In an action by a street car passenger against a street car company for damages for personal injuries alleged to be due to the negligent starting of the car, after it had come to a full stop, while plaintiff was in the act of alighting, a statement by counsel for the plaintiff that in all his forty years' experience during which he had tried many cases for a certain railroad company he had never known of a single instance where the conductor and brakeman admitted that they had been at fault if an injury occurred because of their negligence, held to be highly prejudicial where there was a sharp conflict in the evidence, especially where the court refused to rule upon the objection at the time, and not to have been cured by the court in his charge to the jury.—Seabury v. Detroit United Ry., 194 Mich. 423.

¶ 809. Where, in a minor's action for an injury inflicted upon him by defendant, plaintiff's counsel, in opening to the jury and in offering testimony, says that the subject-matter of the suit was submitted to arbitration by plaintiff's father and defendant, and that a certain compensation to plaintiff was agreed upon, the exclusion of testimony to such effect, and the court's instruction that the jury must not take the matter into account, must be regarded as preventing the jury's being influenced improperly.—Talmage v. Smith, 101 Mich. 370.

¶ 810. In an action to recover for the services of physicians in attending victims of a wreck on defendant's railroad, the statement of plaintiff's attorney in referring to the wreck, that some one had blundered, did not constitute error, where the court stated that the remark was improper, and counsel who made the remark withdrew it and asked the jury not to consider it.—McKnight v. Detroit & M. Ry. Co., 135 Mich. 307.

¶ 811. An improper statement of counsel for plaintiff in his opening argument to the jury, in an action against a city for injuries to a traveler from a defective street, that he could not show to the jury the scene of the accident, as such defective street had been closed since the time of the accident and had been filled in at the defective place, was not ground for a new trial, where the court reprimanded such counsel by saying that he should not state anything to the jury he considered incompetent to prove, and where, opposing counsel, although objecting to such improper statement, made no request for further instructions.—Warn v. City of Flint, 140 Mich. 573.

¶ 812. A judgment against a street-railway company for injuries received while alighting from a car will not be reversed because of a statement by plaintiff's counsel in his closing argument, that, as to defendant's conduct of its business, one would break his wagon in going across a certain street at any place, where the court at once rebuked counsel for making the statement.—Tunnicliffe v. Bay Cities Consol. R. Co., 107 Mich. 261.

¶ 813. For counsel for plaintiff, in an action to recover from a hotel keeper for valuables stolen while a guest, to remark to the jury that they know that if a robbery is committed in a house, nine times out of ten the person who did it is a servant or agent in the house is uncalled for and improper, but is not reversible error where there was testimony indicating the culpability of the servants.—Kerlin v. Swart, 143 Mich. 228.

¶ 814. A statement by defendant's counsel that "defendant is a poor man, and he has been obliged to mortgage his home, all the property he has in the world to pay for this piano," is error, where the action is replevin for the piano sold reserving title and paid for to one with no authority, but not ground for a reversal, where the court sharply rebuked counsel for his conduct, and instructed the jury to disregard the statement.—Warren v. Halley, 107 Mich. 120.

¶ 815. In a suit for lumber sold and delivered, plaintiff's counsel in his argument to the jury stated that the case was one of the many where lumber corporations delay payment in order to compel jobbers to settle at their own terms. Exception was taken to this remark, and plaintiff's counsel asked the jury to disregard it. Plaintiff stated at another point that his client was not asking aid because he was hard up and poor. The court in his charge referred to some of these prejudicial remarks, and directed that all such statements should be disregarded. Held, the improper remarks of plaintiff's counsel did not constitute reversible error.—Person v. J. H. Worden Lumber & Shingle Co., 160 Mich. 1.

¶ 816. In a suit against defendant saloon keeper and his bondsman for the death of plaintiff's husband from intoxication, an assignment of error merely alleged that the plaintiff's counsel in his argument to the jury spoke of a "bond of a $500,000 corporation," giving nothing more of the context. Plaintiff's counsel also asked the jury to deal with the widow as they would have their daughters or wives dealt by. The court immediately corrected the latter statement and in his charge told the jury to disregard the former one. Held, these remarks did not constitute reversible error.—Merrill v. Tinkler, 160 Mich. 575.

¶ 817. Where counsel for plaintiff in his closing argument remarks that defendant can spare the amount of a judgment better than the plaintiff can, the remark is improper, but is cured by a charge of the court coming immediately afterwards which rebukes counsel, and directs the jury to disregard the remark.—Beauerle v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 152 Mich. 345.

¶ 818. Error on the part of counsel for plaintiff in a personal injury action in his argument in referring to plaintiff as a man who had hewn his way out of a forest and stating that he would give him more consideration than a man born with a silver spoon in his mouth, who had perhaps a college education, is cured when the court instructs the jury to disregard such argument. —Kasprzak v. Chapman, 197 Mich. 552.

¶ 819. In an action against a railway company for personal injuries it is improper for counsel to urge the jury not to defeat the honest claim of a poor man by a corporation which will resort to lies and perjury to maintain their case, and to censure defendant for making a motion to take the case from the jury, and where such improper argument is persisted in against the admonition of the court, the mischief is not cured though the court admonished counsel and stated that defendant had a perfect right to make the motion.—Hillman v. Detroit United Ry., 137 Mich. 184.

¶ 820. For counsel in a personal injury case against a city to draw the attention of the jury to the contrast between the financial situation of the parties is objectionable but cannot be considered reversible error where the court counteracted it by a charge that the parties must be regarded as upon an equal footing.—Davis v. City of Adrian, 147 Mich. 300.

¶ 821. The fact that on the trial, plaintiff's counsel called defendant a liar, does not constitute a good cause for reversal where it appears that counsel was reprimanded, and specific remedial instructions were given the jury.—Muncie Wheel & Jobbing Co. v. Finch, 150 Mich. 274.

¶ 822. Reversal will not be had for improper remarks about opposing counsel made in argument, where a rebuke was administered by the court and where the record contains only detached statements, leaving it impossible for the reviewing court to determine whether such remarks were provoked or were on the whole prejudicial.—In re Du Bois' Estate, 164 Mich. 8.

¶ 823. A remark of counsel that considering the smallness of the amount involved on an appeal from justices' court, the plaintiff's counsel was consuming too much time, held not prejudicial, where the court admonished the jury to disregard such remark.—Brown v. Mitts, 187 Mich. 469.

¶ 824. In an action for malicious prosecution, where defendant upon being asked how many acres were in a farm which was being testified about and which he had owned for many years, stated that he did not know, disparaging comments by plaintiff's attorney upon such want of knowledge of his own farm were not harmful, where defendant subsequently explained that he could not remember accurately the number of acres, because it bordered on a lake and was fractional.—Gould v. Gregory, 133 Mich. 382.

¶ 825. In a breach of promise suit, plaintiff's counsel in his argument to the jury referred to his client as a poor woman, and to the defendant as a villain, a cur, and a libertine. There was no evidence of these imputations. Held, the language constituted error, despite the fact that the court sustained objections thereto, and asked the jury not to consider it.—Spencer v. Simmons, 160 Mich. 292.

¶ 826. The fact that plaintiff's counsel, in his closing argument, improperly criticised the witnesses for the defendant, does not require a reversal, where the court stated in his charge that the defense made was legitimate, and that there was no occasion for the criticism.—Phippen v. Bay Cities Consol. R. Co., 110 Mich. 351.

¶ 827. A statement of counsel to a witness that he must have rehearsed his testimony held not reversible error where immediately ordered stricken out by the court, though counsel making it was not rebuked as requested by opposing counsel.—Collin v. Kittelberger, 193 Mich. 133.

¶ 828. Remarks of counsel characterizing the witnesses as cattle were held not prejudicial in the light of a rebuke retraction and remedial remarks by the court and associated counsel.—Leslie v. Jackson & Suburban Traction Co., 134 Mich. 518.

¶ 829. The supreme court declined to reverse a judgment because of objectionable remarks of counsel, made in the course of the examination of witnesses and the argument to the jury, where the trial court promptly informed counsel that the remarks were improper and should not have been made.—Ford v. Cheever, 113 Mich. 440.

¶ 830. Improper language or aspersion used by counsel in cross-examination is not ground for reversal where upon objection counsel was reprimanded and the jury instructed not to consider the objectionable language.—Grenier v. Hild, 124 Mich. 222.

¶ 831. A judgment will not be reversed for offers of testimony by counsel and remarks in his argument, where the testimony was promptly ruled out and the improper argument was stopped and counsel reprimanded. —Hume v. Mason & Hoge Co., 122 Mich. 346.

¶ 832. The fact that counsel, in offering incompetent testimony, makes highly improper statements of his purpose is not ground for a reversal, where the testimony is promptly excluded, and it appears improbable that the jury were prejudiced by the remarks.—Provost v. Brueck, 110 Mich. 136.

§ 145. ——Erroneous statements of law or facts.

¶ 833. Where plaintiff's counsel in a personal injury suit makes erroneous statements to the jury on points of law, reversible error is not committed where the court promptly corrects the same.—Reese v. Detroit United Ry., 159 Mich. 600.

¶ 834. On action by an employee under Act No. 104, § 2, Public Acts 1909, providing that contributory negligence of an injured employee of a common carrier railroad does not bar recovery where the negligence of the employee was less than that of the company, against a carrier to recover for an injury received while he was in a cinder pit because of the alleged moving of an engine without ringing the bell, alleged improper remarks of counsel tending to inflame the jury against a railroad company and in stating that the plaintiff's negligence did not bar recovery unless grosser than that of the company, will not reverse where the remarks were withdrawn on objection and the jury was charged that if the plaintiff's negligence was equal to or greater than that of the company, its officers, agents or employees, he cannot recover.—Bruce v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 172 Mich. 441.

¶ 835. Misconduct of plaintiff's attorney in making improper use, as an admission of liability, of a notice given by the defendant to the mail agent to the effect that his negligence in throwing a mail bag caused the action against the defendant and he would be held responsible and tendering him control of the suit, will not reverse where the court in its charge took pains to remove any false impression from the minds of the jury. —Shaw v. Chicago & Grand Trunk R. Co., 123 Mich. 629.

¶ 836. Any error in an erroneous argument to the jury that the expert witness for the defense, in an action for injuries sustained by an employee from the explosion of a boiler, had never seen a boiler, was cured by the admonition of the court that the jury would remember what the facts were.— Eberts v. Mt. Clemens Sugar Co., 182 Mich. 449.

¶ 837. A statement by plaintiff's counsel, in his argument to the jury in an action for negligence, that "we know that the accident occurred, from defendant's own agent," although not warranted by the testimony, is not prejudicial error where the fact of the occurrence of the accident is not disputed.—Harris v. Detroit City R. Co., 76 Mich. 227.

¶ 838. In an action for slander in which it is shown that the plaintiff was conducting business in his wife's name, remarks by counsel in argument that the plaintiff is prevented from recovering on account of a technicality, etc., if erroneous, are cured by an instruction that there can be no recovery for injury to the business when the verdict shows affirmatively that no damage was given for such injury.—Savlan v. Ayer, 129 Mich. 545.

§ 146. ——Argument or misconduct provoked by opposing counsel.

Invited error in misconduct of counsel, see post § 149.

¶ 839. Remarks of counsel provoked by opposing counsel held not to justify a reversal in the light of explicit instructions by the court.—Hammond v. Pullman, 129 Mich. 567.

¶ 840. Argument of counsel in an action for personal injuries urging the jury not to reduce the amount of their verdict in order to keep defendant from appealing, will not be held reversible error where the trial court called attention to the impropriety of such argument, and it appeared that the jury were properly instructed and heeded the instructions.—Quirk v. Rapid Ry., 137 Mich. 493.

¶ 841. In an action for personal injury the remark of counsel in argument to the jury that "you, gentlemen of the jury stand between this plaintiff and the poorhouse" is improper but not reversible error where the defendant's argument may be said to have encouraged such remarks and the jury is instructed to disregard them.—Leach v. Detroit Elec. Ry., 125 Mich. 373.

¶ 842. Argument of counsel based on matters outside the record, while reprehensible, is not sufficient ground for reversal where at least in part provoked by opposing counsel and where the court told counsel of its impropriety whereupon the remarks were withdrawn.—Wheeler v. Jenison, 120 Mich. 422.

¶ 843. Improper conduct and argument by counsel cannot be complained of by opposing counsel who was equally at fault in the same particulars, where the court rebuked both during the trial and instructed the jury not to consider the prejudicial statements.—Brown v. Evans, 149 Mich. 429.

¶ 844. Action of counsel in accusing witness of falsifying about a material fact held cured by the action of the court in rebuking counsel, particularly where the accusation was brought upon the witness by his own conduct.—Grimme v. General Council of Fraternal Aid Ass'n, 167 Mich. 240.

¶ 845. Improper argument to the jury which is to a degree elicited by the irritating manner of opposing counsel, which is immediately corrected by the trial judge, and later referred to in his charge, and upon which the opposing counsel requests no particular instruction, does not constitute reversible error.—O'Connor v. City of Detroit, 160 Mich. 198.

§ 147. Arguments withdrawn or explained by counsel.

¶ 846. A judgment will not be reversed because of the remarks of the counsel in argument to the jury, where they are not of such a nature as to be prejudicial, and where the counsel has made an honest attempt to correct any wrong impressions which his remarks might have made.—Groat v. Detroit United Ry., 153 Mich. 165.

¶ 847. In an action for labor done and material furnished an unwarranted remark of plaintiff's counsel, in his argument to the jury, "he sends to the slums down here and gets his bond," having been immediately withdrawn, and the record failing to show in what connection it was made, it was held not ground for reversal.—Evans v. Montgomery, 95 Mich. 497.

§ 148. Argument or misconduct of counsel cured by verdict.

¶ 848. Any error in the argument of counsel for plaintiff in an action on a fire insurance policy held harmless where the amount of the verdict was less than the proofs showed the loss to have been.—Veenstra v. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Co. of Ottawa and Allegan Counties, 195 Mich. 55.

¶ 849. Improper remarks in the argument of counsel in regard to the testimony of one opposing witness and usurping the function of the trial judge in stating the law of the case, held not prejudicial in the light of immediate rebuke and correction by the trial judge, a very lucid, clear and full statement of the law by him and a verdict showing that the jury followed the directions of the court.—Glasier v. City of Ypsilanti, 127 Mich. 674.

¶ 850. The plaintiff's counsel, in an action for personal injuries, may not, in his argument to the jury, make reference to the amount of damages allowed in another action; but the reference is not ground for reversal where the amount of the verdict indicates that the jury was not influenced by it.—Finn v. City of Adrian, 93 Mich. 504.

¶ 851. The fact that after counsel has made an erroneous argument as to the elements of damages and the court has corrected him, he continues in such a way as to intensify rather than to abate any prejudice which his former argument had created, will not require a reversal where the verdict does not appear from the evidence to be excessive.—Bates v. Kitchel, 166 Mich. 695.

¶ 852. The conduct of counsel in making an improper argument to the jury in an action for damages for personal injuries is not reversible error where the jury is cautioned by the trial court, and the verdict is not excessive.—Rogers v. Ford, 188 Mich. 62.

¶ 853. Misconduct of plaintiff's counsel in making intemperate and ill-chosen remarks in the argument, and failure of the court to interfere will not reverse where plaintiff was clearly entitled to recover and the only question was the amount of damages and these were not large as determined by the verdict.—Chamberlain v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 122 Mich. 477.

§ 149. Invited error.

Argument or misconduct provoked by opposing counsel, see ante § 146.

Necessity of raising question in lower court, see Saving Questions, I.

¶ 854. Remarks of the trial judge cannot be urged as error where they are in confirmation of statements made by complaining counsel.—Huff v. Cole's Estate, 127 Mich. 351.

¶ 855. Plaintiff in error cannot complain of an instruction given in language substantially like an instruction requested by himself and given.—Alberts v. Village of Vernon, 96 Mich. 549.

¶ 856. Error cannot be assigned on a charge that is given as desired, or on a detached portion of a charge, the error in which is specifically corrected by an instruction subsequently given substantially as asked.—Dresser v. Blair, 28 Mich. 501.

¶ 857. A party cannot complain of a part of a charge that is identical with an instruction requested by him.—Silsby v. Michigan Car Co., 95 Mich. 204.

¶ 858. An instruction that, if defendant was negligent in any of the particulars charged in the declaration, plaintiff should recover, cannot be complained of where defendant has submitted requests upon that theory which have been given.—Needham v. King, 95 Mich. 303.

¶ 859. Appellant cannot complain of an instruction which is in accordance with his contention.—Mt. Clemens Sugar Co. v. Grand Trunk Ry. Co., 200 Mich. 33.

¶ 860. Where an instruction asked for was given with a modification containing an element of error, the request containing precisely the same error, the court did not reverse the judgment on an exception to the modification made by the party who had asked the charge, it being unlikely that it could have misled the jury.—Continental Ins. Co. v. Horton, 28 Mich. 173.

¶ 861. It is not reversible error for the trial court in bastardy proceedings to submit to the jury the question of the residence of the child without explaining the facts that they should first find to constitute such residence and the law in relation thereto, where the defendant presents no request to the court to instruct the jury as to the essential elements of residence.—People v. Oppenheimer, 170 Mich. 595.

¶ 862. A plaintiff in ejectment, claiming under an assignee in bankruptcy, gave such proofs of title as he chose. Defendant, claiming as bona fide purchaser by a later deed from the alleged bankrupt, and also as a holder of tax-titles, proved his purchase and his occupancy in good faith. Before attempting to show that the tax-titles were invalid, plaintiff requested the court to pass upon his own proofs of title, and the court instructed the jury that he had made no case. Held, bad practice to pass on plaintiff's case by itself after defendant's proofs were in, but as plaintiff had asked the court to do so he could not complain.—Wisner v. Herring, 49 Mich. 626.

¶ 863. In an action by the receiver of a bankrupt estate to recover the value of goods sold by the bankrupts to defendant, held that argument of counsel for the plaintiff that the bankrupts were indicted evidently for the purpose of endeavoring to dispose of their stock to defraud creditors and, referring to the sale, whether, if a "man came to your house in this mysterious way, having said nothing about it prior to that time" it would not call for an investigation of his financial circumstances, was not reversible error, where the evidence as to the indictment got into the case by concession of counsel and the evidence was contradictory as to what was said when the goods were sold.—Buell v. Siderman, 197 Mich. 126.

D. IN VERDICT OR FINDINGS, AND JUDGMENT OR DECREE.

§ 150. In general.

Errors in assessment of damages, see post § 151.

Invited findings, see post § 152.

Errors in verdict or judgment harmless in themselves or harmless to objector, see ante II, D.

Instructions, argument or trial practice cured by verdict or judgment, see ante III, C.

Failure of proof cured by verdict or findings, see ante § 119.

Erroneous admission of evidence cured by verdict, finding or judgment, see ante §§ 99-101.

¶ 864. A special finding of the jury contrary to undisputed testimony becomes immaterial where the charge makes the liability of defendant turn on a question independent of the answer found, and the verdict follows the charge.—Botsford v. Plummer, 67 Mich. 264.

¶ 865. If the judge fails to make a finding of facts, but the record shows that no possible finding could have been of service to the plaintiff in error, judgment will not be reversed.—Slocomb v. Thatcher, 20 Mich. 52.

¶ 866. A party to a case tried by a judge without a jury is not damnified by the rulings of the judge upon separate questions of law if the findings of fact do not entitle the party to relief.—Kane v. Stowe, 50 Mich. 317.

¶ 867. Where, upon a trial by the court without a jury, judgment has passed for defendant, and it appears from the facts found that plaintiff was not entitled to recover, the reasons stated by the court for its conclusions become immaterial.—Botsford v. Simmons, 32 Mich. 352.

¶ 868. Where a special finding has been filed in a trial before the court without a jury, error in the reasons assigned, among the conclusions of law, for giving judgment for defendants, will not warrant a reversal of the judgment when the facts found are not sufficient to support a judgment for the plaintiff.—Hamblin v. Warner, 30 Mich. 95.

§ 151. Errors in assessment of damages.

¶ 869. Technical errors in the assessment of damages are cured after judgment by the statute of amendments, Comp. L. 1871, ch. 190 (How. St. § 7635).—Whittemore v. Stephens, 48 Mich. 573.

§ 152. Invited findings.

Necessity of raising question in lower court, see Saving Questions, I.

¶ 870. Plaintiff invested money in a "business" which he did not at the time know to be incorporated. He sued to recover the money on the ground of having been fraudulently induced to invest it. The defendants, in making their defense, testified and claimed throughout the trial that the plaintiff bought an interest in the corporation. Held, they could not complain that the jury believed them, although he did not in fact know there was a corporation, it being known to all as a "business."—Massey v. Luce, 158 Mich. 128.

Cure by affirmance on conditions, see post V.

Remission of part of recovery to avoid reversal, see Appeal § 485.

Exclusion of items from judgment on labor claim as removing objection going to such item, see also Corporations ¶ 1264.

¶ 871. Where a count under Comp. Laws 1897, § 5254, How. St., 2nd Ed., § 6699, for the statutory penalty for failure to announce a station, submitted to the jury in connection with a common-law count for damages caused by the exposure of a passenger to the elements as the result of carrying her past her destination, the remission of the statutory penalty on a motion by the defendant for a new trial, cures any error.—Duffiny v. Detroit & Mackinac Ry. Co., 186 Mich. 40.

¶ 872. Plaintiff sued as administrator for the death of his child, twenty-seven months of age, under the Survival Act, Comp. L. 1897, § 10117, and recovered a verdict of $3,850. Motion for new trial was denied upon plaintiff's consent to remit $850. Under section 7220, Comp. Laws 1897, a mortality table giving no expectancy of life for any age under ten years was introduced to show the probability of life on the part of the child after reaching twenty-one years of age. The trial court recognized the error in admitting said table and attempted to cure same by ordering the remission of $850 from the verdict. Held, said error was not cured by said reduction of the verdict since in making said reduction the trial court was invading the province of the jury.—Morse v. Detroit, G. H. & M. Ry. Co., 168 Mich. 99.

¶ 873. In an action for negligent injury under the Survival Act, Comp. L. 1897, § 10117, it is harmless error to introduce evidence that the deceased had a family in view of a disclaimer of damages upon that ground and a very careful charge by the court.—Olivier v. Houghton County St. Ry. Co., 138 Mich. 242.

¶ 874. Error in submitting to jury count for statutory penalty with common-law count, held cured by remission of judgment for the penalty.—Duffiny v. Detroit & Mackinac Ry. Co., 186 Mich. 40.

¶ 875. Failure to instruct the jury that in case they found for plaintiff in an action on an insurance policy they should deduct the amount tendered into court, is harmless and the credit may be given on appeal.—Thompson v. Loyal Protective Ass'n, 167 Mich. 81.

¶ 876. In an action upon a promissory note defendant was not allowed to prove a part payment of the note because it was not contained in his bill of particulars of set-off. Held, that this error was not cured by permitting plaintiff, after recovering judgment, to remit the amount of such payment from the judgment; for defendant had, in effect, been denied the right of proving any payment without notice, and it could not be said what other payments might have been excluded by this ruling.—Olcott v. Hanson, 12 Mich. 452.

§ 155. Remission upon application for new trial.

See also ante ¶ 871.

Sufficiency of error to warrant granting of new trial, see New Trial, II.

Mode and sufficiency of objections on motion for new trial, see Saving Questions, II, B.

¶ 877. The admission in an action of assault and battery of evidence as to the number and age of plaintiff's children is not reversible error, where it could have no bearing except upon the measure of damages and the trial judge, upon an application for a new trial required a reduction in the amount of the judgment.—Gungrich v. Anderson, 189 Mich. 144.

§ 157. Errors which might have been corrected if challenged.

¶ 878. Defendant in error cannot urge in support of a verdict and an order denying a new trial that certain evidence essential to plaintiff's case was ineffectual, after obtaining a directed verdict on a specific ground which passed over such objection, which might have been met if seasonably made.—Wineman v. Fisher, 135 Mich. 604.

¶ 1. The legislature may confer large discretionary powers on boards and commissions charged with the protection of the public health.—City of Detroit v. Village of Highland Park, 186 Mich. 166. (Equally divided court.)

¶ 2. A rule of the state board of health which does not make it a prerequisite to the inspection authorized by Laws 1893, Act No. 47, amendatory of Laws 1885, Act No. 230, that the baggage in course of transportation comes from a locality where the dangerous, communicable disease exists, as ascertained either by the board or inspector, is broader than the statute, and cannot be sustained.—Hurst v. Warner, 102 Mich. 238.

§ 2. Penalties for violation.

Actions for penalties, see post § 3.

¶ 3. Comp. L. 1897, § 4453, requiring physicians to report cases of diseases which are dangerous to public health, includes cases of consumption if such disease is in fact dangerous to public health.—People v. Shurly, 131 Mich. 177.

¶ 4. A delay of eight days by a physician in reporting a case of diphtheria to the proper health officer is unreasonable.—People v. Brady, 90 Mich. 459.

§ 3. Actions for penalties.

Judicial knowledge of communicableness of diseases, see Evidence § 2, ¶ 14.
General law relative to penal actions, see Penalties and Forfeitures.
Indictments or informations and procedure thereon, see Indictment.

¶ 5. An action in justice's court against a physician to recover the penalty imposed by How. St. § 1676, for neglecting to notify the health officer of dangerous diseases, etc., is properly brought by the prosecuting attorney "on behalf of the people."—People v. Brady, 90 Mich. 459.

¶ 6. In a prosecution for failure of a physician to report a case of consumption it is error to permit an inquiry as to whether patients afflicted with consumption would be likely to give their consent to having their cases reported, since this opened up a question having no bearing upon the issues being tried.—People v. Shurly, 131 Mich. 177.

¶ 7. In a prosecution for failure of a physician to report a case of consumption, it is error to instruct the jury that the statute generally prohibits a physician from disclosing any information acquired while attending a patient, since such statute could furnish no defense in such prosecution.—People v. Shurly, 131 Mich. 177.

¶ 8. Where in a prosecution under Comp. L. 1897, § 4453, which requires physicians to report cases of diseases dangerous to public health, for failing to report a case of consumption, the jury found that consumption is a disease dangerous to public health, it was error to submit to the jury whether such disease should be classified with smallpox, scarlet fever, cholera, etc., since if the disease is contagious and dangerous to public health, the law classifies it and requires that it be reported.—People v. Shurly, 131 Mich. 177.

¶ 9. In a prosecution for failure to report a case of consumption, it is misleading to instruct the jury that a verdict for the people meant that the statute had been "enlarged" to include consumption, since if the latter is a disease dangerous to public health, it is within the statute as enacted by the legislature.—People v. Shurly, 131 Mich. 177.

¶ 10. In a prosecution against a physician for failing to give notice to the public health officer of a case of consumption under Comp. L. 1897, § 4453, requiring the giving of notice in cases of enumerated diseases or "any other disease dangerous to the public health," the question whether consumption was a disease dangerous to public health was to be determined by the evidence and should have been submitted to the jury.—People v. Shurly, 124 Mich. 645.

¶ 11. The existence of diphtheria is sufficiently shown in a prosecution to recover the statutory penalty imposed upon physicians for failing to report its existence by the physician's admission that certain children he was attending had diphtheria, and the testimony of the fathers of the children to such attendance, and that defendant, as well as the witnesses, who described the disease as attacking the throat, pronounced it diphtheria.—People v. Brady, 90 Mich. 459.

Statutory officers and their duties and powers, see Comp. L. 1915, chaps. 94-96.

¶ 12. The Health Board of the City of Detroit is a state agency.—Detroit Civil Service Commission v. Engle, 184 Mich. 269.

¶ 13. Since the Board of Health of Detroit is a state agency, the control thereof was not conferred on the city by sections 21 and 22 of art. VIII of the Constitution of 1909, so as to bring its employees within the civil service laws of the city.—Detroit Civil Service Commission v. Engle, 184 Mich. 269.

¶ 14. Laws 1895, Act No. 10, entitled "An act to establish a board of health for the city of Detroit," is not open to the objection that it fails to provide for the means of carrying out its requirements, or for any revenue for the board, since, under section 3 of the act, the board is to prepare annual estimates of its expenditures, and file the same with the city controller, and when such sums "are raised as provided in this act," they are to be appropriated by the board. Under the charter of the city (Local Acts 1887, No. 488, chap. 8, § 1), in the light of which said section 3 must be construed, the controller is to report such estimates to the common council, to go, subject to revision and alteration by that body, into the budget for that year.—Davock v. Moore, 105 Mich. 120.

¶ 15. Where a city charter provides for a board of health, the provisions of Comp. L. 1871, §§ 1702, 1740, How. St. §§ 1643, 1681, as to destruction of nuisances by the township board of health, and as to who shall constitute the board in a city, do not apply.—Shepard v. People, 40 Mich. 487.

¶ 16. Township boards of health have large discretionary powers, the exercise of which will not be interfered with until a clear case is made out. It must be intended until the contrary is shown that they are acting in good faith and in the line of their duty.—Upjohn v. Richland Tp. Board of Health, 46 Mich. 542.

¶ 17. Any action of the board of health of a city is not affected by a change of personnel of its members.—Dawe v. Board of Health of City of Monroe, 146 Mich. 316.

§ 5. Clerks and subordinate employees.

Civil service system, see ante ¶ 13.
Employment of physicians and nurses, see post § 6.

¶ 18. The Detroit charter of 1893, § 382, gave to the local board of health exclusive power to appoint clerks for the health office, and to prescribe their duties and determine their compensation. The regular hours of work in such office, as fixed by the health commissioner, were from 8 a. m. to 4 p. m. Relator, who was accustomed to work after 4 o'clock and into the evening, was told by the commissioner that he should be paid for his extra services. At the expiration of his term of employment, he sought to compel the board of health to make such payment. Held, that the board was not bound by the action of the commissioner.—Goodson v. Detroit Board of Health, 114 Mich. 345.

§ 6. Employment of physicians and nurses.

Liability for services, see post § 11 et seq.
Power of board to employ and charge county, city or township, see post § 12.
